A tilt-a-whirl is a merry-go-round with a college education. It is a circular platform, which revolves like a merry-go-round. But instead of going round and round on a horizontal plane, it goes up and down at the same time it goes round and round. Some of the witnesses said that it undulates. The faster the table revolves the more rapidly it undulates.

Seven two-wheeled, two-passenger cars are affixed with swivels at the front end thereof to this revolving, undulating table. As the table goes round and round and up and down, the cars gyrate on the swivels, right or left, or left or right, haphazardly, like spinning, bobbing corks on a turbulent whirling pool.

The backs of the cars are high enough to shield and to hold the whole body of a rider. Under normal operations the backs of the cars absorb strange gravity pulls and keep passengers from flying off at a tangent.

When a rider seats himself in the car, a U-shaped safety bar is let down to a horizontal position over his lap. The safety bar is attached to the front of the car at the bottom by two cast iron discs rubbing against each other which act as a clutch. While the bar is down, the car runs freely. If the bar is raised, it sets brakes on the wheels and stops the car.

When the girls got into the car they were to ride on this occasion, the bar was lowered over their laps, and they were told to hang onto it. Mr. Tomei started a gasoline engine which provided the power. The engine was adjacent to a narrow walk-way surrounding the platform. The table commenced to revolve and undulate and the cars to gyrate.

Then Mr. Tomei "gunned the engine," increasing the revolutions of the table, the gyrations of the cars, and the up-and-down motion of the whole contraption. This is said to give an extra thrill to riders, especially if it is done just as a car is at the crest of a hill as the table revolves.

Unfortunately, the bar in front of plaintiff flew up. She was thrown out of the car and against a steel post.

She was seriously and painfully injured. She had a comminuted fracture of the right femur. This was set and in traction for six weeks. Then her leg was placed in a plaster cast for another six weeks. After twelve weeks in the hospital, she was allowed to go home, and spent two weeks more in bed.

Her final recovery has been good, but there will always be a bulge on her leg and a stiffness of her leg. And she cannot run, or dance, or play tennis, as she used to.

Action for damages against the three defendants named, and others who have gone out of the case, was commenced by guardian ad litem, resulting in a jury's verdict for plaintiff of $10,185. Judgment notwithstanding the verdict was granted in favor of the defendants. From this judgment plaintiff appeals.

An expert witness for defendants testified that in his opinion the accident could only have happened by the girl standing up in the car. He admitted, however, that a sudden jerk, or jolt, would have thrown her out of the car.

The operator did not see the girl actually thrown out. He said he cautioned her twice to keep her hands on the bar, as the car passed him. And that he stopped the table on its third revolution, but before it stopped and while the girl was on the opposite side of the table she fell out.

Plaintiff, her sister who did not ride, her girl friend who was with her, and a sailor standing by, all testified that the safety bar flew up and the girl was thrown out. The sailor also testified that the operator of the tilt-a-whirl "gunned it" just before the accident.

Plaintiff said: "* * * the car gave a sudden jerk, and the handle went forward and I was thrown out." The girl with plaintiff said that while the car was going extremely fast the bar flew open and plaintiff was thrown out over the top of the bar. This witness saved herself by grabbing hold of the side of the car.

[1] It is difficult to see upon what theory the judgment notwithstanding the verdict was granted. The evidence as stated is substantial, and an inference of negligence follows. Upon that inference the verdict of the jury is based. As stated in Estate of Flood, 217 Cal. 763, 768, 21 P. 2d 579, 580, a judgment notwithstanding the verdict "'* * * may be granted "only when, disregarding conflicting evidence and giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, herein indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of plaintiff if such a verdict were given."'"

[2] In determining the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, we cannot weigh, nor was the trial court authorized to weigh, the evidence or judge of the credibility of witnesses. Estate of Arnold, 16 Cal.2d 573, 576-577, 582, 107 P. 2d 25; Shannon v. Thomas, 57 Cal.App.2d 187, 192-193, 134 P.2d 522.

[3, 4] The proprietor of a public place of amusement is required to maintain in a reasonably safe condition, every contrivance used in its premises, and to properly inspect and supervise the same. Chardon v. Alameda Park Co., 1 Cal.App.2d 18, 36 P.2d 136; Whyte v. Idora Park Co., 29 Cal.App. 342, 155 P. 1018; Engstrom v. Huntley, 345 Pa. 10, 26 A.2d 461 (involving a tilt-a-whirl). The jury found that the car used by plaintiff was not in a reasonably safe condition and was not properly inspected or supervised. Upon this finding the defendant pier company is liable. Restatement, Torts, sec. 344.

[5] In addition to the duties of maintenance, inspection, and supervision, with which the operator was likewise charged, it was his further duty to use reasonable care to see that the girls were not injured while the tilt-a-whirl was running. Potts v. Crafts, 5 Cal.App.2d 83, 42 P.2d 87.

[6] And it is elementary law that Mr. Valere, who employed Mr. Tomei, and who owned the instrumentality, was liable for the latter's want of reasonable care in every respect.

[7, 8] The trial court refused to instruct the jury upon the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. This was error. When a thing which causes injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who had the management used proper care, res ipsa loquitur applies. Ales v. Ryan, 8 Cal.2d 82, 64 P.2d 409; Ybarra v. Spangard, 25 Cal.2d 486, 154 P.2d 687, 162 A.L.R. 1258; Metz v. Southern Pacific Co., 51 Cal.App.2d 260, 124 P.2d 670.

The judgment is reversed, and the Superior Court is directed to make and enter judgment for plaintiff for $10,185, in accordance with the verdict of the jury, together with costs in the trial court and in this court.

Civ. 17478.

Sept. 18, 1950.

Oliver S. Frederiksen brought action against Albert Ross Costner and others, doing business as Costner Bros. Egg Company, a copartnership, to recover damages for alleged wrongful death of plaintiff's three year old child when struck by defendant's truck. A judgment of nonsuit was entered by the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Edward N. Brand, J., and the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that evidence presented question for jury as to whether truck driver, having once observed three year old child playing within a few feet of his truck while it was still motionless, was negligent in starting the truck without any further effort to ascertain conduct and whereabouts of the child.

A greater degree of care is required of a driver of a vehicle where he knows a small child is at play than in a case where a person of mature discretion is involved.

If evidence shows that driver has knowledge of presence of children, he may be held to be responsible for their safety, although it appears that he did not see injured child in time to prevent the injury.

3. Automobiles ⇐245(4)

Evidence was sufficient to present question for jury as to whether truck driver, having once observed three year old child playing within a few feet of his truck while it was still motionless, was negligent in starting truck without making further effort to ascertain the conduct and whereabouts of the child, so as to be liable for death of child when struck by truck.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of nonsuit in an action for damages for the alleged wrongful death of a child named Cheryl, three years and two months old at the time of her death. Plaintiff is the father of Cheryl. The motion for judgment of nonsuit was granted on the ground there was no evidence from which an inference of negligence reasonably could be drawn.

The evidence is stated in accord with the rules applicable to a motion for a judgment of nonsuit which need not be repeated.

Defendants, as partners conducted a wholesale egg business in a structure which consisted of a building (the egg house) and a dock. A small office adjoined the egg house. On March 28, 1948, defendant Albert Costner parked a GMC ton-and-a-half truck owned by himself and Ford Costner at the dock. The truck was backed up to the dock, its front facing south. Plaintiff parked his car to the east of the truck and next to it, its front headed to the dock. The dock was elevated, with steps to the west of the parked truck leading from the street to the top of the dock.

Plaintiff was at the property to buy four cases of eggs. As he left his car, he carried Cheryl, who was 38 inches tall in her bare feet, toward the office. Cheryl wore rain boots with about an inch heel. Plaintiff and Cheryl went up the steps to the dock. Albert Costner was on the dock. He talked to Cheryl. Plaintiff, Ford Costner and Cheryl went into the egg house for eggs. When they returned outside Cheryl played on the dock. Albert Costner was on the platform talking to Cheryl, "keeping her entertained" while she played. Albert loaded eggs onto the truck and then proceeded to its cab. When he got into the cab there was a note hanging from the ignition key, which he read. He pulled the note off, crumpled it, dropped it, turned on the motor and started forward. As he did so he heard screaming and stopped. The truck traveled between 25 and 30 feet from the time it started until it stopped. When it stopped, Cheryl was lying to the rear of the left dual wheels on the driver's side.

Plaintiff was in his car arranging the third case of eggs when he heard the truck door slam. He immediately backed out between the truck and his car, observed that Cheryl was not in sight and yelled in a loud voice, "Hey, I got a little girl some place." He swung to the ground to see if Cheryl was on the other side of the truck. Before he could see under the truck, it started forward and as it did he saw Cheryl running in front of it. She was two to four feet in front of the truck to the left of the front hood. Her left arm was caught by the front bumper; the front wheel and both rear dual wheels ran over her.

Albert Costner testified that after he loaded the truck with a few cases of eggs, he put the rear gate in, went to the office, got a sales book and immediately went to the truck to drive it away.

"Q. Did you make any observation at all as to where the little girl was at the time you left the office? A. I believe she was on the dock. She couldn't have been in front of me or I would have had to go around her.

"Q. Do you have a present memory of her on the dock close to the steps? A. No, sir. I didn't observe exactly where she was. * * *

"Q. Did you give any further thought at all to the location of the girl from the time that you left the office until you got to the truck? A. No, sir. * * * I don't recall whether I noticed her definitely as I went up around the truck or not.

"Q. And you are not able to tell us with any certainty as to how close she was to the steps at the time you last noticed her? A. No, sir.

"Q. Are you able to tell us whether she was standing still, running or walking, what she was doing? A. No, I wouldn't be able to tell that.

"Q. Did you notice whether or not she had anything in her hand? A. Well, as she came up she had Easter eggs in her hands. * * *

"Q. Did you talk to her at all? A. Yes.

"Q. Where were you when you talked to her? A. On the dock.

"Q. Where on the dock were you, Mr. Costner? A. Right by the steps.

"Q. Would you say, then, that during all the time that you saw the child you were near the steps? A. No, I had loaded some eggs. I had put the gate on my truck.

"Q. Was she by the steps all this time? A. I was not watching her.

"Q. You did talk to her? A. Yes.

"Q. Did you play with her or anything like that? A. Oh, I just talked to her like anyone would to a child.

"Q. And you say at this time she was at the steps; is that correct? A. She was on the dock by the steps. * * *

"Q. Is it true, Mr. Costner, that as you left the office and passed the little girl and started for your truck that you said good bye to her and waved at her and made some movement toward her? A. I wouldn't tell that."

He also testified that it was about 10 feet from the steps to the truck; he passed Cheryl on the dock as he left his truck to go into the office; he got in the truck from the left side, and at that time Cheryl was up in back of the truck; the cab windows were up and the cab closed; they could have been opened; the weather was clear; when he started from the office to the truck he knew plaintiff was loading cases between the truck and his car; he knew then that from time to time customers came to the place with children; he had seen young children around there a number of times.

A witness, Kuretich, testified that Albert Costner told him "he left the office and walked out to where the little girl was on the platform near the stairs and talked to her and then walked around in front of the truck and got into the truck and drove off."

Ford Costner testified that after putting the cases of eggs on the dock for plaintiff, he went to the office; when the motor of the truck started, he glanced up and Cheryl was just disappearing in front of the fender of the truck; this was when the motor started, not when the truck started; she was running; the left front fender struck her.

[1, 2] The conduct of small children is unpredictable and their propensity to run in any direction is a matter of common knowledge. A greater degree of care is required of a driver of a vehicle where he knows a small child is at play than in a case where a person of mature discretion is involved. Parra v. Cleaver, 110 Cal. App. 168, 171, 294 P. 6. As was said in Lampton v. Davis Standard Bread Co., 48 Cal.App. 116, 118, 191 P. 710, 711, "[t]he proximity of the place where Graham was driving to the adjacent school grounds, and the hour, at which children might, with certainty, be expected to be using the street, imposed upon him a greater degree of caution than he might be required to use under ordinary circumstances. That which would be but ordinary negligence in reference to a grown person may be gross negligence as respects a child." In Conroy v. Perez, 64 Cal.App.2d 217, page 224, 148 P.2d 680, page 684, it was said: "[I]f the evidence shows that a driver has knowledge of the presence of children he may be held to have been responsible [for their safety] although it appears that he did not see the injured child in time to prevent the injury. See 2 Cal.Jur. Ten Yr.Supp. p. 454."

In Cambou v. Marty, 98 Cal.App. 598, 277 P. 365, the defendant parked his car in gear on an incline near plaintiffs' house. When he got back into his car he hurriedly started it down the incline without looking to see if a child were nearby, although he knew that the plaintiffs had children who were accustomed to playing in the yard and could have seen the child if he had looked. It was held that a finding that defandant was negligent in running over plaintiffs' son was supported by the evidence. The facts here present a much stronger case. The same also may be said with respect to the facts in Parra v. Cleaver, 110 Cal.App. 168, 294 P. 6, in which a finding of negligence was held to be supported by the evidence.

The author of the annotation "Liability for injury to child playing on or in proximity to automobile" in 44 A.L.R. 434, says, p. 434: "The tendency of the later cases would seem to indicate that the courts are requiring a higher degree of care on the part of the operators of automobiles towards children playing on or in proximity to their automobiles than was announced in the original annotation [1 A.L.R. 1385], particularly in those cases in which the driver had notice of the children's presence on or about the machine." See also Gackstetter v. Market Street Ry. Co., 130 Cal.App. 316, 20 P.2d 93; Gorzeman v. Artz, 13 Cal.App.2d 660, 57 P.2d 550; Harrison v. Gamatero, 52 Cal.App.2d 178, 183, 184, 125 P.2d 904; Graf v. Harvey, 79 Cal.App.2d 64, 179 P.2d 348; Waid v. Smith, 87 Cal.App.2d 32, 195 P.2d 862.

Albert Costner knew of Cheryl's presence on the premises near the truck. He talked to, and played with, her. The jury reasonably could have concluded from the testimony of Kuretich that just before Albert got into the truck to drive away, he played with her near the steps, about 10 feet from the truck and immediately got into the cab. The jury could also have reasonably concluded that Albert, without making any observation at all to see where Cheryl was, started the truck forward; that he read the note hanging from the ignition key, turned on the motor and started forward without looking ahead or about him, and that if he had done so he would have seen Cheryl.

[3] Whether Albert Costner, having once observed the child within a few feet of his truck while it was still motionless, was negligent in starting the truck without making any further effort to ascertain the conduct and whereabouts of Cheryl, was a question of fact. Springer v. Sodestrom, 54 Cal.App.2d 704, 709, 129 P.2d 499. It cannot be said, as a matter of law, that he exercised the degree of care which a reasonable person would have exercised under similar circumstances to protect Cheryl from harm. The case presents a question of fact which should have been left to the jury.

Cr. 4477, 4478.

Hearing Denied Oct. 16, 1950.

Ruth Boyce was convicted for grand theft, and she moved for a new trial and for arrest of judgment. From the judgment of conviction and the order of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, John J. Ford, J., denying the motion, and from an order revoking probation and judgment sentencing defendant to the California Institution for Women on a prior conviction for issuing checks without sufficient funds, defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that the order denying defendant's motion in arrest of judgment was nonappealable, that the order revoking probation was made before judgment and was therefore nonappealable, and that evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction for grand theft of a diamond ring.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal law ⇐1023(12)

Order denying defendant's motion in arrest of judgment was nonappealable.

2. Criminal law ⇐1023(10)

Where prior to pronouncement of judgment proceedings were suspended and defendant was placed on probation, order revoking probation was made before judgment and therefore was not appealable. Pen.Code, § 1237, subd. 3.

3. Criminal law ⇐1144(13)

Following a guilty verdict, appellate court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution.

Where court cannot justly conclude that the entire testimony of the witness is per se unbelievable, court cannot disturb the findings of the triers of facts. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1847, 2061.

5. Criminal law ⇐1159(3)

Neither variances, inconsistencies nor contradictions in the proof of a crime are of avail on appeal.

6. Criminal law ⇐260(11)

The finding of guilt by the trial court will not be disturbed by the reviewing court unless it can reasonably be held as matter of law that there was no evidence against the accused.

7. Larceny ⇐65

Evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction for grand theft of a diamond ring.

8. Criminal law ⇐569

In prosecution for grand theft, evidence did not establish existence of any conspiracy to deprive defendant of her liberty, nor that efforts were made to extort money from her to dismiss charges against her, coupled with threat that failure to comply with demands would result in her being convicted, though innocent, and sent to penitentiary.

Where trial judge, notwithstanding defendant's statement that she would be happy to represent herself, directed her own counsel and the public defender to sit with the defendant and to consult with her to the extent that she desired, defendant was not denied the assistance of counsel.

10. Witnesses ⇐2(1)

Where defendant presented 37 witnesses in her behalf, and attention of court was not directed to any witness whose presence she desired and as to whom process of court to compel attendance was denied defendant, defendant's claim that her witnesses were not subpoenaed was not supported.

11. Criminal law ⇐569

In prosecution for grand theft, claim that district attorney's office deprived defendant of certain documents needed for her defense was not supported by evidence.

In prosecution for grand theft, defendant's contention that trial judge was guilty of prejudicial misconduct in denying her motions to have jury placed in custody of sheriff during trial, to have separate trial of three counts, and for mistrial, and in permitting prosecution to ask defendant whether she had theretofore been convicted of felony and to ask leading questions, was not supported by record.

13. Criminal law ⇐27

Where defendant had been convicted of issuing checks without sufficient funds, but prior to pronouncement of judgment proceedings had been suspended and she had been placed on probation, and following her subsequent conviction for grand theft, court entered order revoking her probation, and pronounced judgment sentencing her to California Institution for Women, defendant's conviction for issuing checks without sufficient funds amounted to felony conviction. Pen.Code, §§ 17, 476a.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

We are here confronted with two appeals (Superior Court case numbered 127562—numbered in this court 4477—hereinafter referred to as case "A", and Superior Court case numbered 116216—numbered in this court 4478—hereinafter referred to as case "B").

As to case "A" defendant was accused in an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County containing three counts of the crime of grand theft. It was also alleged therein that defendant had suffered a prior conviction upon a charge of issuing checks without sufficient funds, a felony. Penal Code, Sec. 476a. Defendant duly entered her plea of not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity. She denied the prior conviction charged against her. The cause proceeded to trial before a jury, resulting in a verdict of guilty as to the offense charged in Count I of the information and not guilty of the crimes charged in Counts II and III. Following a subsequent trial on the plea of not guilty by reason of insanity, the jury returned a verdict finding the defendant was sane at the time the offense charged in Count I was committed. The allegation of a prior conviction was found to be true. Defendant's motion for a new trial and for arrest of judgment was denied. From the judgment of conviction, the order denying her motion for new trial and for arrest of judgment, defendant appeals.

In case "B" the record reflects that defendant had previously been convicted on two counts of issuing checks without sufficient funds. Prior to pronouncement of judgment proceedings were suspended and defendant was placed on probation. In this case the order denying her motion for a new trial was affirmed and the purported appeal from the judgment was dismissed by Division II of this court. People v. Boyce, 87 Cal.App.2d 828, 197 P.2d 842. Subsequent to her conviction under Count I of the information in case "A", defendant was charged with a violation of the terms of probation granted her in the instant case "B". After hearing had before the court on a charge of violation of probation, the court entered its order revoking probation and judgment was pronounced sentencing defendant to the California Institution for Women, said sentence to be served concurrently with the sentence in case "A". From the order revoking probation and the judgment thereupon pronounced defendant appeals.

[1] The attempted appeal in case "A" from the order denying defendant's motion in arrest of judgment must be dismissed because such an order is nonappealable. People v. Okada, 14 Cal.App.2d 660, 664, 58 P.2d 967; People v. Rodgers, 94 Cal.App.2d 166, 168, 210 P.2d 71.

We shall first give consideration to the appeal taken in case "B". The notice of such appeal reads: "Please Take Notice that the defendant, Ruth Boyce, in the above entitled matter, hereby appeals to the District Court of Appeal, State of California, from the order and judgment revoking probation therein entered by the Superior Court on the 12th day of December, 1949."

[2] While subdivision 3 of Section 1237 of the Penal Code provides for an appeal "From any order made after judgment, affecting the substantial rights of the party" (emphasis added), the order here in question revoking probation was made before judgment and is therefore, not appealable and must be dismissed. The validity of appellant's conviction in case "B" was reviewed and upheld upon her appeal from the order denying her motion for a new trial therein. People v. Boyce, supra.

[3] Coming now to the appeal taken in case "A", viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution as we are required to do following a guilty verdict (People v. Carothers, 77 Cal.App.2d 252, 253, 175 P.2d 30), the record discloses that Olivia Herzberg, a "personal worker" in the ministry, took appellant into her home upon the latter's release from the Los Angeles County Jail on December 20, 1948, after service by appellant of a term of imprisonment therein pursuant to and as a condition of probation granted in case "B". Miss Herzberg had in her possession several rings. At the trial of appellant a certain ring was introduced into evidence as People's Exhibit 4. Miss Herzberg testified that she recognized this exhibit as one of her diamond rings.

On December 21, 1948 appellant asked Miss Herzberg if she could wear Exhibit 4, to which the latter replied that she was averse to permitting anyone to wear her ring. Upon appellant's assurance that she would be careful of the ring and wear it only in Miss Herzberg's presence, the latter consented. Appellant wore the ring (Exhibit 4) or had it in her possession until December 24 when the complainant requested its return. Thereafter it remained in the possession of Miss Herzberg until January 3, 1949. On this date appellant asked for, received the ring and wore it during lunch, after which time the complaining witness requested its return and again placed it in her ring box. Thereafter Miss Herzberg, according to her testimony, at no time gave appellant permission to take the ring into her possession. On January 4, 1949, appellant made a trip to San Francisco. Concededly, appellant removed the ring (Exhibit 4) from the owner's ring box and took it with her to San Francisco. On January 15, 1949 appellant wrote the complainant from San Francisco, advising that she had lost the ring down the basin in her hotel and offering to make restitution for the loss in the sum of $500—but her promise in this regard was never fulfilled. The ring in question was valued at $700.

On January 11, 1949, the ring in question was pawned at a loan office in San Francisco by appellant, who received $135 in the transaction. A representative of the San Francisco loan office where the ring was pledged, and who qualified as a jewelry appraiser with 24 years' experience, appraised Exhibit 4 as worth $500. Miss Herzberg next saw the ring when it was produced in court at the preliminary examination. To regain its possession she paid a representative of the San Francisco loan office $135 loaned the appellant when she pledged the ring as security for such loan to her.

Mrs. Charlotte Johnson testified that she sold the ring (Exhibit 4) to Miss Herzberg in May or June, 1947, and that prior thereto she had it for some 24 years. Miss Herzberg paid the equivalent of $275; $200 in cash and services estimated by Mrs. Johnson at $75. Mrs. Johnson's husband had the ring made and it cost about $475.

Appellant testified that she and Miss Herzberg traded rings; that Exhibit 4 was the one so traded; that the ring which was lost was a different one. That when she moved away from Miss Herzberg's reisdence she left a 3-stone ring as security for the one lost. The complainant however denied that she then had any of appellant's rings and denied that the latter left with her a 3-stone ring when she moved out as security for the one allegedly lost.

[4] In her brief entitled "Appellant's Transcript on Appeal", appellant urges that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict of guilty as to Count I of the information. It is her contention that the testimony of the complaining witness was in many respects untrue. While claimed variances, inconsistencies or contradictions in the testimony of a witness may afford opportunity for a persuasive argument to the jury against the reliability of such witness, we cannot disturb the findings of the triers of fact unless we can justly conclude that the entire testimony of the witness is per se unbelievable. No such situation is here presented. Because reviewing judges are obviously in no position to determine the credit which should be accorded to witnesses or to weigh their testimony, our State Constitution provides that appellate tribunals are not authorized to review evidence except where on its face, it may justly be held that it is so lacking in substantiality as to be insufficient to support the ultimate issue involved, in which case it is not a review of a question of fact, but purely one of law. And in accordance with the spirit and intent of the constitutional mandate, the legislature has ordained that the jury are the exclusive judges of the credibility of witnesses, Code Civ. Proc., Sec. 1847, and are the judges of the value and effect of evidence addressed to them, except in those instances where it is declared by the law that it shall be conclusive proof of the fact to which it relates, Code Civ. Proc., Sec. 2061. It was therefore the right of the jury to accept the testimony of the people's witnesses and to disbelieve the testimony of appellant and any other witnesses as to the circumstances surrounding the disappearance of the ring here in question, if they conscientiously felt warranted in so doing after a full and fair consideration thereof.

[8] Appellant next urges that there existed a conspiracy on the part of certain persons to send her to the penitentiary, deprive her of counsel, and that those who would aid her by their testimony were threatened and coerced. While investigating officers and deputies in the office of the District Attorney interviewed witnesses, there is no showing that they threatened any person unless they testified against appellant. While there is much surmise and conjecture indulged in by appellant concerning the claimed animosity of certain officials and others against her, there is a total lack of evidence to show the existence of any conspiracy to deprive appellant of her liberty. The same is true of appellant's contention that efforts were made to extort money from her to dismiss the charges against her, coupled with the threat that a failure to comply with these demands would result in her being convicted though innocent, and sent to the penitentiary.

[9, 10] Appellant's contention that she was denied the assistance of counsel is absolutely refuted by the record, which shows that the trial judge, notwithstanding appellant's statement that she "would be happy" to represent herself, nevertheless, directed her own counsel and the public defender to "sit with the defendant and to consult with her to the extent that she desires." Insofar as appellant's claim that her witnesses were not subpoenaed is concerned, the record shows that she presented 37 witnesses in her behalf, and our attention is not directed to any witness whose presence she desired and as to whom the process of the court to compel attendance was denied her.

[12] Appellant's contention that the trial judge was guilty of prejudicial misconduct in denying her motion to have the jury placed in the custody of the sheriff during the trial, denying her motion for separate trial of the three counts of the information in case "A", denial of her motion for a mistrial, permitting appellant to be interrogated while on the witness stand as to whether she had theretofore been convicted of a felony, permitting counsel for the prosecution to ask leading questions, and several other matters urged, are wholly without merit. The foregoing charges find no support whatever in the record.

[13] Appellant's attack upon the legality of the proceedings had on the motion for a new trial in case "A" and in connection with the revocation of her probation in case "B" are also without support in the record. The proceedings on revocation of probation were had in strict conformity with Section 1203.2 of the Penal Code. Appellant's assertion that her conviction in case "B" amounted only to a misdemeanor conviction cannot be sustained. While the applicable section of the Penal Code, Section 17, provides that where a crime is punishable by imprisonment in the State Prison, or also by fine or imprisonment in a county jail, in the discretion of the court, it shall be deemed a misdemeanor for all purposes after a judgment other than imprisonment in the State Prison is pronounced, unless the court commits the accused to the California Youth Authority, in the instant proceeding no judgment other than imprisonment in a State Prison (California Institution for Women) was pronounced.

For the foregoing reasons, in Superior Court case numbered 127562, herein referred to as case "A", the attempted appeal from the order denying defendant's motion for arrest of judgment is dismissed. The judgment and order denying defendant's motion for a new trial in said case is affirmed.

In Superior Court case numbered 116216, herein referred to as case "B", the purported appeal from the order revoking probation is dismissed and the judgment pronounced therein is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Hearing Denied Oct. 16, 1950.

Ray Cullen was convicted in the Superior Court of Riverside County, John G. Gabbert, J., of forging payee's name upon back of Government check and passing check with intent to cheat and defraud the payee, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that evidence sufficiently established corpus delicti of the offense.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Forgery ⇐35

Upon charge of forgery of a check the prosecution has burden of proving the corpus delicti and must show both that person whose name is alleged to have been forged is a real person and that his name was signed to check without his authority, Pen. Code, § 470.

2. Criminal law ⇐406(1), 517(4)

To authorize reception and consideration by jury of evidence of extrajudicial confession or admission of a defendant, it is not required that prosecution establish a corpus delicti by proof of a clear and convincing character, slight proof being all that is required.

3. Forgery ⇐42

Fact that payee's name endorsed on check, although not a true replica of payee's signature, was disguised and clearly distinguishable from defendant's natural handwriting, was a circumstance that jury was entitled to consider in determining question of defendant's authority to endorse payee's name on check. Pen.Code, § 470.

In prosecution on charge of forging payee's name upon back of a Government check and passing check with intent to defraud payee, evidence sufficiently established corpus delicti, so that various statements and admissions of defendant were admissible not only for purpose of impeachment but to furnish further evidence of fact that defendant was not in fact authorized to endorse payee's name to the check. Pen.Code, § 470.

5. Criminal law ⇐351(10)

False declarations made by an accused for purpose of misleading or warding off suspicion, though not conclusive of guilt, may strengthen the inference arising from the facts.

In prosecution on charge of forging payee's name upon back of Government check and passing check with intent to defraud payee, where various statements and admissions of defendant were introduced in evidence for purpose of proving that defendant was not authorized to endorse payee's name to check, fact that defendant testified at the trial that he was so authorized merely created a conflict in evidence for determination of trier of facts, and trial court's finding on such issue could not be disturbed on appeal. Pen.Code, § 470.

In prosecution on charge of forging payee's name upon back of Government check and passing check with intent to defraud payee, where payee was not seen alive after check had been cashed by defendant, trial court was not bound by defendant's self-serving statement that he turned the money over to payee after cashing check. Pen.Code, § 470.

8. Criminal law ⇐351(10)

False statements made by one who has been confronted with an accusation of the commission by him of a criminal offense constitute proper evidence of consciousness of guilt.

The intent to do a wrongful act is provable by extraneous circumstances, that is, by some physical act or acts which with sufficient clearness disclose the operation of the mind with respect to the wrongful act.

10. Forgery ⇐44(1)

A person, without authority, signing name of another to a check was itself conclusive evidence that his intent was to defraud the person whose name he signed. Pen.Code, § 470.

J. David Hennigan, Riverside, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Atty. Gen., Elizabeth Miller, Dep. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

It is charged in the first count of the information that defendant Ray Cullen did on January 3, 1949, knowingly, falsely and fraudulently forge the name of Daniel T. Boyer upon the back of a $120 government check and passed it with intent to cheat and defraud said Boyer. Defendant was also charged in a second and third count with violating sec. 2 of Dangerous Weapons Control Law, Stats. 1923, chap. 339, pp. 695, 696, Gen.Laws, Act 1970, and with a prior felony conviction of counterfeiting, as well as a prior felony conviction of assault with a deadly weapon. Defendant admitted the prior convictions, and counts two and three were separated from count one for the purpose of trial on the first count. A jury trial was waived. A plea of not guilty was entered as to the first count. The court proceeded to trial upon that count and it found defendant guilty of forgery as charged. Defendant was committed to state prison on count one. Judgment ran concurrently with the judgment theretofore pronounced on counts two and three. Defendant appealed and only questions the sufficiency of the evidence to justify his conviction on the forgery count.

The evidence shows that defendant lived near Blythe, in a cabin on the bank of the Colorado River with his wife Mary. They were married in August, 1948, and on December 9 of that year Mr. Boyer, stepfather of Mary, came to live with them. Boyer was a veteran, about 80 years of age, and was drawing a pension of $120 a month. On January 3, 1949, defendant presented a pension check in said amount, dated December 31, 1948, and made payable to Daniel T. Boyer, to a bank in Blythe, where defendant was known and had an account. The back of the check carried the endorsed names "Daniel T. Boyer" and under it "Ray Cullen" when it was presented for payment and cashed. Boyer was not seen alive after January 4, 1949. In the early afternoon of that day defendant stated that Boyer had gone out on the Colorado River in a boat that morning and that the empty boat was later found. Various relatives of Mrs. Cullen went to defendant's house on the night of January 4, in response to telephone calls that Mrs. Cullen and Mr. Boyer had mysteriously disappeared. One witness asked defendant if Mr. Boyer had received his pension check. Defendant replied that it came on January 1st but Boyer was too sick to go and cash it so he took Boyer with him to town on January 3d and cashed his check; that he tried to help Boyer step from the curb but Boyer insisted he needed no help. On January 6 defendant told certain relatives that he had taken Boyer to town and that he (Boyer) cashed the check and put the money in his wallet. Later in the same day he stated that Boyer had been too ill to go to the bank so he, defendant, took the check in, got the cash for him, and turned the money over to Boyer. Later the same night, defendant told the police officers that when Boyer gave him the check to cash, it was already endorsed by Boyer and that the endorsement was not made in his presence. The police officer later told defendant he believed he had signed Boyer's name as the endorser. Defendant said he had not but that it was signed in his presence. He asked defendant to write some words for him so he could compare the handwriting but defendant refused. On February 27 defendant told Mrs. Cullen's sister that he had not taken Boyer in to cash the check but that he (defendant) had taken the check in and cashed it himself. In March, defendant told another witness that he had taken Boyer to the bank to get the check cashed. This witness then reminded defendant that he had previously told her that he had cashed the check and that Boyer was not taken to the bank. Defendant stated that he was mistaken as to the previous occasion. Defendant then told her that on January 3, he had "baptized"

Mary Cullen, his wife; that "she was ready to go". The witness then asked if he had "baptized" Mr. Boyer, too, and he remarked: "You can't baptize anybody that is dead." She then asked him how he could have taken Boyer to get the check cashed on January 3, in the morning, if he was dead, and he told her he could not tell her any more because if he did he would incriminate himself. In another conversation defendant told her that either Mrs. Cullen or Mr. Boyer had endorsed the check and he did not know which one.

During the course of the investigation, a police officer asked the defendant why the endorsement on the check was so different from Mr. Boyer's regular signature. He stated that Mr. Boyer had cut his finger and could not write too well with a bandage on it. The officer then stated that he did not believe it and that the defendant would have been better off if he had said he had signed Mr. Boyer's name with his permission; that the defendant said he would not say that because it was not so; that Mr. Boyer sat at the desk in the house and signed the check himself, and that he had taken it to the bank to get it cashed for him, turning over the proceeds to Boyer when he returned to the house. Defendant later told a witness that it was not true that his wife and Boyer went out in a boat on the river on January 4th, but that Boyer had met his death in a different manner. In another conversation, claimed to have been made under duress, defendant said Boyer died on January 4 from a gunshot wound.

It was stipulated at the trial that Boyer had not been seen since January 4, and that it may be presumed that he was dead and therefore unable to testify at the trial. Six previous monthly pension checks had been endorsed by Boyer in his own handwriting and exemplars of his handwriting were received in evidence. An examiner of questioned documents testified that Boyer did not write his name on the check in question; that it was written by defendant; that the capital letters in the name "Daniel T. Boyer" were disguised and the slant of the writing was changed from the normal slant which appeared in defendant's signature, and there were many other variations in an endeavor to disguise that signature; that although it did not resemble Boyer's signature, there was little, if any, disguise of Ray Cullen's signature.

At the conclusion of the people's case the defendant moved for an acquittal on the ground that there was no proof of the corpus delicti. The motion was denied. Defendant then took the stand as a witness and testified that the check arrived in the mail on the morning of January 3; that, at his home, he signed Boyer's name to the check at the request of Boyer, who was ill; that he signed his own name to the check at the bank, and after cashing it he returned home and gave the money to Boyer, who gave $20 to Mrs. Cullen, and that Boyer placed the remainder in his wallet.

Although defendant admitted making some false statements to the witnesses described, he denied telling certain other stories related by them. On cross-examination he gave conflicting testimony about the check transaction. He stated that he was at the bank when he signed Boyer's name and at his home when he signed his own name to it; that his wife and not Boyer told him to go and cash the check.

On appeal defendant now argues first, that under sec. 470 of the Penal Code, defining forgery, there are three elements necessary to establish the crime; (a) Signing the name of another; (b) with intent to defraud; and (c) without authority to do so. It is then argued that since the prosecution had not met the burden of showing lack of authority of defendant to sign Boyer's name there was no corpus delicti established; that under the presumption of innocence rule defendant was presumed to have had Boyer's authority to sign his name until that presumption was overcome by competent evidence; and that defendant's motion for a verdict of acquittal upon the close of the people's evidence should have been granted, citing such cases as People v. Mitchell, 92 Cal. 590, 28 P. 597, 788; People v. Whiteman, 114 Cal. 338, 46 P. 99; People v. Lundin, 117 Cal. 124, 48 P. 1024; People v. Maioli, 135 Cal.App. 205, 26 P.2d 871; People v. Hidalgo, 128 Cal.App. 703, 18 P.2d 391; People v. Wade, 57 Cal.App. 2d 36, 133 P.2d 646; People v. McWilliams, 117 Cal.App. 732, 4 P.2d 601; People v. Stoddard, 85 Cal.App.2d 130, 192 P.2d 472; and 12 Cal.Jur. p. 666, sec. 16.

[1] The rule elicited from the cases cited is that upon a charge of forgery of a check the prosecution has the burden of proving the corpus delicti and must show both that the person whose name is alleged to have been forged is a real person, that his name was signed to the check without his authority, and that to prove an accused person signed the name of another to an instrument and that he passed such instrument as genuine does not prove the commission of a crime. It must still be shown that it was a false instrument and this is not proven until it is shown that the person who signed the other's name did so without authority, and until this proof is met it is not shown to be a false instrument and the defendant is not put to his proof at all.

[2] Conceding the rule thus established, the first question is whether or not there was sufficient evidence, independent of the admissions of defendant, to establish the corpus delicti. It is conceded by the defendant that he did in fact endorse Boyer's name on the back of the check for the purpose of cashing it. His only contention is that the people failed to show he did not have authority so to do. The rule is that to authorize the reception and consideration by the jury of evidence of an extrajudicial confession or admission of a defendant, it is not required that the prosecution establish the corpus delicti by proof of a clear and convincing character, as is required to support a conviction. Slight proof is all that is required. Slight evidence is sufficient where an attempt to prove a negative is being made. People v. Macbeth, 104 Cal.App. 690, 693, 286 P. 448. In People v. McWilliams, supra, it was held that under a charge of issuing a fictitious check the city directory was sufficient evidence to show there was no such individual as the person whose name was signed to the check. People v. Terrill, 133 Cal. 120, 65 P. 303, was a forgery case, charging the issuance of a fictitious city warrant, wherein the people were called upon to prove that no such person as the one named as payor of the check existed, and the court held that a showing that the only other person in the employ of the city bearing that name on a city warrant did not write nor authorize to be written his name was sufficient negative proof that the signature was unauthorized. See, also, 12 Cal.Jur. sec. 16, p. 666. It is not necessary to be proven by evidence of the owner or maker of an instrument that authority was not given. In the absence of such owner or maker as a witness, lack of authorization may be proven circumstantially. People v. Stoddard, 85 Cal.App.2d 130, 192 P.2d 472; People v. Cline, 79 Cal.App.2d 11, 179 P.2d 89.

[3] Here, for six months previous, Boyer was able to and did endorse his own signature to his pension checks. Defendant's varied stories as to why Boyer did not sign the check on this occasion raises considerable suspicion as to whether Boyer was in fact alive at the time defendant claims he was authorized by Boyer to sign the check for him. (According to defendant's counsel, stated in open court, defendant has subsequently been convicted of the murder of Boyer and that case is now pending on appeal.) The fact that Boyer's name, although not a true replica of Boyer's signature, was disguised and was clearly distinguishable from defendant's natural handwriting, was a circumstance that the jury was entitled to consider in determining the question of authority. Nothing was said by defendant to the bank clerk about Boyer's purported signature, as to whether defendant signed his name under some claimed authority or whether Boyer himself signed it. Apparently the disguise was for the purpose of leading the bank clerk to believe that Boyer did in fact endorse it rather than suffer an examination by the bank clerk as to defendant's authority to endorse it for him. There seems to be no other logical inference concerning the authority to be drawn from the fact of such disguise.

that no significance may be here attached to the evidence of disguise in the handwriting, is readily distinguishable. That case merely held that an agent who had authority to sign the name of his principal to an endorsement, did not commit forgery by signing it in imitation of the maker's signature. In the instant case there is no evidence that the defendant had any authority to sign the name of Boyer to the check except the impeached testimony of the defendant. Under the circumstances it is obvious that the disguise has significance as evidence of lack of authority.

[4-6] We conclude that the corpus delicti was sufficiently established. There was a sufficient inference of lack of authority which the trier of fact was entitled to draw from the circumstances established. Unless such inferences do violence to reason an appellate tribunal is not permitted to interfere. People v. Stoddard, 85 Cal.App. 2d 130, 137, 192 P.2d 472. Under this conclusion the various statements and admissions of defendant were admissible not only for the purpose of impeachment but to furnish further evidence of the fact that defendant was not in fact authorized to endorse Boyer's name to the check. He first claimed that Boyer himself signed the endorsement. When he refused to write an exemplar, defendant was told by an officer that he did not believe Boyer had signed the check because the handwriting indicated that defendant himself signed Boyer's name to it. The officer then told him it would have been better for defendant to have said said that Boyer authorized him to sign the check. Defendant replied that he would not say that because it was not so, and if he told any more it would incriminate him. This last statement, if true, was in effect a clear admission by the defendant that he was not authorized to endorse Boyer's name to the check. False declarations made by an accused for the purpose of misleading or warding off suspicion, though not conclusive of guilt, may nevertheless strengthen the inference arising from the facts. People v. Peete, 54 Cal.App. 333, 202 P. 51. Defendant was impeached as a witness by proof of prior convictions of felonies and prior inconsistent statements. The fact that defendant subsequently testified at the trial that he was so authorized merely created a conflict in the evidence for the determination of the trier of facts, and under the well-known rule the finding of the trial court cannot be disturbed on appeal. Mitchell v. Excelsior Water & Mineral Co., 41 Cal.App. 240, 246, 182 P. 326.

In addition, the attorney general also argues in support of this finding, that the so-called rule of convenience or necessity applies in a forgery case under the circumstances here related, and accordingly, where the subject matter of a negative averment in the information, or a fact relied upon by the defendant as a justification or excuse, relates to him personally or otherwise lies peculiarly within his knowledge, the general rule is that the burden of proof of such averment or fact is upon him, citing People v. Agnew, 16 Cal.2d 655, 663, 107 P.2d 601; People v. Cline, 79 Cal.App. 2d 11, 14, 179 P.2d 89; and People v. Caldwell, 55 Cal.App.2d 238, 251, 130 P.2d 495.

Defendant contends otherwise and cites such authorities as People v. Frey, 165 Cal. 140, 131 P. 127; People v. Quarez, 196 Cal. 404, 238 P. 363; and 8 Cal.Jur. p. 167, sec. 248; and cases there cited.

In view of the previous determination it will be unnecessary to discuss this contention.

[7-10] The only remaining argument is that there was no evidence of defendant's intent to defraud. The claim is that since defendant testified he turned over to Boyer the $120 received, no one was defrauded by the transaction. Under the circumstances of this case the court was not bound by the self-serving statement of the defendant that he did turn the money over to Mr. Boyer. People v. Freer, 104 Cal. App. 39, 44, 285 P. 386. Defendant made several conflicting statements as to the disposition of the money. In one instance he stated that Boyer himself went to the bank with defendant and cashed the check. In another statement he related that he cashed the check and turned the money over to Boyer at his home, and in still another he stated he turned the money over to Boyer and that Boyer in turn gave Mrs. Cullen a twenty-dollar bill from the proceeds for Boyer's board. The mysterious disappearance of the two persons about that time might well give rise to the inference that the defendant never did turn over to Boyer the proceeds of the forged check. False statements made by one who has been confronted with an accusation of the commission by him of a criminal offense have been repeatedly held to constitute proper evidence of consciousness of guilt. People v. Sampsell, 104 Cal.App. 431, 286 P. 434. Since there was sufficient evidence to show defendant wrongfully forged Boyer's name to the check, without authority, the trial court had the right to infer, from the circumstances established, that defendant intended to defraud someone. The intent to do a wrongful act is always provable by extraneous circumstances, i. e., by some physical act or acts which, with sufficient clearness, disclose the operation of the mind with respect to the wrongful act, and a person, without authority, signing the name of another to a check is itself evidence, quite conclusive, that his intent was to prejudice or damage that person. People v. Collins, 60 Cal.App. 263, 268, 212 P. 701.

ESCOBEDO v. STATE DEPARTMENT OF MOTOR VEHICLES, et al.

Sept. 13, 1950.

Original proceeding by Pedro Escobedo against the State, Department of Motor Vehicles, and another for a writ of mandate directing reissuance or reinstatement of petitioner's motor vehicle operator's license. The Supreme Court, Schauer, J., held that financial responsibility statute effective July 1, 1948, does not violate due process of law provisions of Federal or State Constitutions, does not delegate judicial power to an administrative body in violation of State Constitution and does not create an arbitrary discrimination in violation of equal protection of laws clause of Federal Constitution or uniform operation of laws provision of State Constitution.

Alternative writ of mandate discharged and petition for peremptory writ denied.

Carter and Edmunds, JJ., dissented.

Suspension of operator's license for failure to deposit security for payment of damages resulting from a motor vehicle accident was mandatory under statute effective July 1, 1948, and hence operator was not necessarily entitled to a hearing before motor vehicle department determined the amount of security required and notified him that license would be suspended unless he deposited such sum. Statute effective July 1, 1948, providing for suspension of operator's license for failure to deposit security for payment of damages resulting from a motor vehicle accident without prior hearing but subject to subsequent judicial review does not violate due process of law clauses of federal or state Constitution, since requiring a prior hearing would substantially burden and delay if not defeat the operation of statute. The statute effective July 1, 1948, providing for suspension of operator's license for failure to deposit security for payment of damages resulting from motor vehicle accident does not create an arbitrary discrimination in violation of equal protection of the laws clause of federal Constitution or uniform operation of laws provision of state constitution by permitting a person in whose name more than 25 motor vehicles are registered to qualify as self-insurers, since such classification on basis of probable financial ability to respond in damages is reasonable. Vehicle Code, §§ 419–420.9, 420(b) (4), 420.7, St.1947, pp. 2738, 2739, 2742; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, § 1; Const. art. 1, § 11.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Walter L. Bowers, Assistant Attorney General, and E. G. Funke, Deputy Attorney General, for respondents.

SCHAUER, Justice.

Petitioner asks that this court by mandate direct respondents, the Department of Motor Vehicles and the Director of Motor Vehicles of this state, to "re-issue, return or reinstate Petitioner's operator's license and/or driving privileges to operate a motor vehicle in this State." In September, 1948, respondents, without according petitioner a hearing, suspended his operator's license under the then provisions of sections 419 through 420.9 of the Vehicle Code (Stats. 1947, ch. 1235). These provisions constituted chapter 3 of division VII of the Code, entitled "Security Following Accident"; they became operative July 1, 1948.[1] It is petitioner's position that the application of this law to him denied him due process and equal protection (U. S. Const., Amdt. XIV, § 1; Cal. Const., art. I, §§ 11, 13) and vested judicial power in "a purely ministerial 'department'" in violation of the state Constitution (art. III, § 1; art. VI, § 1). We have concluded that petitioner's contentions should not be sustained and that upon the showing made the suspension of his license is legally tenable.

On July 1, 1948, petitioner held a valid license to drive a motor vehicle in California; on that date he operated a vehicle which was involved in a collision with another such vehicle at an intersection of public highways in this state. In August, 1948, petitioner received from respondents a written notice stating that because of the July 1 accident and because petitioner had "failed to otherwise meet the security requirements of Section 420 of the Vehicle Code," he was required to deposit with respondent department, on or before September 11, 1948, security in the sum of $2,800. The notice further stated that petitioner's "driving privilege and all licenses evidencing such privilege is [sic] hereby suspended as of" September 11, 1948, unless the deposit was made prior to that date, and that the suspension would "remain in effect until evidence satisfactory to the Department has been filed indicating that the security requirements of Section 420.2 of the Vehicle code have been met." Petitioner is a gardener by occupation and "requires the use of his automobile" and his license to operate it in order to "transport himself and his tools between his different places of employment * * * and to earn a livelihood for himself and his family [dependent wife and 9 minor children]." He does not have $2,800 "or any like sum" to post as security, is unable to and did not post the security demanded by respondents and, pursuant to the provisions of section 420 of the Vehicle Code, his operator's license was and now is suspended. The Highway Patrol has notified petitioner "that they intend to arrest and prosecute" him under the provisions of subdivisions (a) and (d) of section 338 of the Vehicle Code, which forbid possession of, and failure to surrender to the department on lawful demand, a suspended license.

The applicable provisions of chapter 3 of division VII of the Vehicle Code (Stats. 1947, ch. 1235) which were in effect at the time of petitioner's accident and the suspension of his license are as follows:

Section 419 required that the operator of a motor vehicle involved in an accident in this state which resulted in personal injury, death or property damage exceeding $100 report the matter in writing to the Department of Motor Vehicles within 10 days after the accident. Section 420 (subd. (a)) provided that "The department shall, within 60 days after the receipt of a report of [such] a motor vehicle accident * * * suspend the license of each operator * * * involved in such accident * * * unless such operator shall deposit security in a sum which shall be sufficient in the judgment of the department to satisfy any judgment or judgments for damages resulting from such accident as may be recovered against such operator. Notice of such suspension shall be sent by the department to such operator not less than 10 days prior to the effective date of such suspension and shall state the amount required as security." The deposit of security and suspension of license requirements did not apply if the operator or owner of the vehicle had an automobile or other public liability policy or bond covering $5,000 for injury or death of one person, $10,000 for injury or death of more than one person, and $1,000 property damage (Veh. Code § 420, subds. (b), (c), or to a person who had more than 25 vehicles registered in his name and qualified as a self-insurer (Veh. Code, § 420, subd. (b), par. (4), § 420.7); other situations in which the requirements did not apply are not here material. Suspension of license was to continue until security was deposited, or one year had passed without filing of an action for damages arising out of the accident, or until release from or satisfaction of liability, or final adjudication of non-liability. (Veh. Code, § 420.2.)

1. Effective July 7, 1949, the chapter was completely recast although its general plan remains the same) by amendment of section 419, repeal of sections 420 through 420.9, and addition of new sections 420 through 423.1 (Stats.1949, ch. 834).

Specifically, petitioner urges that the above quoted or summarized sections of the Vehicle Code were unconstitutional in the following respects:

1. The statute violated the due process provisions of the federal Constitution (Amendment XIV, § 1) and the state Constitution (art. I, § 13) in that no provision was made for hearing before the department, or for recourse to the courts, before suspension of a license.

2. Judical power was delegated to an administrative body in violation of the state Constitution (art. III, § 1; art. VI, § 1), in that no sufficient standard was provided to guide the department in determining the amount of security.

3. The effect of the statute was an arbitary discrimination in violation of the equal protection clause of the federal Constitution (Amendment XIV, § 1) and the uniform operation of laws provision of the state Constitution (art. I, § 11) in that: (a) The posting of security by a driver who might not be culpable was required, before his liability was judically determined. (b) Those who were financially able to carry insurance or post security were favored as against those who were not. (c) The provisions permitting any person in whose name more than 25 motor vehicles were registered to qualify as a self-insurer created an arbitrary classification.

Hearing, Due Process

[1] There was no express provision in sections 419 through 420.9 of the Vehicle Code (Stats. 1947, ch. 1235) concerning hearing before determination by the department that security must be deposited or the operator's license suspended. At the time petitioner's license was suspended without hearing, section 315 of the Vehicle Code (Stats. 1947, ch. 431) provided that "A person shall be entitled to demand in writing a hearing before the director or his representative whenever the department * * * [h]as given notice of the suspension * * * of his privilege of operating a motor vehicle upon a highway or of an operator's * * * license issued to such person," but it further provided that "The * * * licensee shall not be entitled to a hearing under this section whenever such action by the department is made mandatory upon the department by the provisions of this code."[2] Since suspension of petitioner's license for failure to deposit security was mandatory (Veh. Code, § 420) whenever it had been determined that a motor vehicle accident had occurred and damages exceeding $100 ensued which probably might result in "a judgment or judgments for damages * * * recovered against such operator," it is apparent that it was not contemplated that the department necessarily should give an operator opportunity to be heard before it determined the amount of security required and notified

[2-4] Fundamentally it must be recognized that in this country "Highways are for the use of the traveling public, and all have * * * the right to use them in a reasonable and proper manner, and subject to proper regulations as to the manner of use." (13 Cal.Jur. 371, § 59.) "The streets of a city belong to the people of the state, and the use thereof is an inalienable right of every citizen, subject to legislative control or such reasonable regulations as to the traffic thereon or the manner of using them as the legislature may deem wise or proper to adopt and impose." (19 Cal.Jur. 54, § 407.) "Streets and highways are established and maintained primarily for purposes of travel and transportation by the public, and uses incidental thereto. Such travel may be for either business or pleasure * * *. The use of highways for purposes of travel and transportation is not a mere privilege, but a common and fundamental right, of which the public and individuals cannot rightfully be deprived * * *. [A]ll persons have an equal right to use them for purposes of travel by proper means, and with due regard for the corresponding rights of others." (25 Am.Jur. 456-457, § 163; see also 40 C.J.S., Highways, § 233, pp. 244-247.) Notwithstanding such general principles characterizing the primary right of the individual, it is equally well established (as is recognized in the cases above cited) that usage of the highways is subject to reasonable regulation for the public good. In this connection, the constitutionality of various types of financial responsibility laws has been often upheld against contentions that they violated the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. "The use of the public highways by motor vehicles, with its constant dangers, renders the reasonableness and necessity of regulation apparent. The universal practice is to register ownership of automobiles and to license their drivers. Any appropriate means adopted by the states to insure competence and care on the part of its licensees and to protect others using the highway is consonant with due process." (Reitz v. Mealey (1941), 314 U.S. 33, 36, 62 S.Ct. 24, 86 L.Ed. 21, 24; see also State ex rel. Sullivan v. Price (1937), 49 Ariz. 19, 26; 63 P.2d 653, 108 A.L.R. 1156; Surtman v. Secretary of State (1944), 309 Mich. 270, 15 N.W.2d 471, 474.)

[5] The state, in the exercise of its police power, could constitutionally have required deposit of security by the owners of all vehicles as a condition to licensing them. (In re Opinion of the Justices (1925), 81 N.H. 566, 129 A. 117, 39 A.L.R. 1023; In re Opinion of the Justices (1925), 251 Mass. 569, 147 N.E. 681; Brest v. Commissioner of Insurance (1930), 270 Mass. 7, 169 N.E. 657; Ex parte Poresky (1933), 290 U.S. 30, 54 S.Ct. 3, 78 L.Ed. 152.) Instead, the state chose to allow financially irresponsible licensed operators to drive until they became involved in an accident with the consequences described in sections 419 and 420 of the Vehicle Code and their financial irresponsibility was thus brought to the attention of the department, and then to require suspension of their licenses.

[6, 7] Suspension of the license without prior hearing but subject to subsequent judicial review did not violate due process if reasonably justified by a compelling public interest. (Bourjois, Inc., v. Chapman (1937), 301 U.S. 183, 189, 57 S.Ct. 691, 81 L.Ed. 1027, 1032; see also Phillips v. Commissioner (1931), 283 U.S. 589, 596-597, 51 S.Ct. 608, 75 L.Ed. 1289.) The compelling public interest here appears from the obvious carelessness and financial irresponsibility of a substantial number of drivers and from the following allegations of the petition: There are 3,879,931 motor vehicles registered in California. During the first four months after the effective date of the law now under consideration, 19,808 persons were ordered by the department to establish that they were adequately insured or deposit security. More than 6,567 operators' licenses were suspended under the applicable law, and more than 1,300 "citations per month for suspension of license" were issued by the department. In these circumstances it is apparent that to require a hearing in every case before suspension of a license would have substantially burdened and delayed if not defeated the operation of the law. The requirement of due process was recognized and accepted by section 317 of the Vehicle Code, which declared that "Nothing in this code shall be deemed to prevent a review or other action as may be permitted by the Constitution and laws of this State by a court of competent jurisdiction with reference to any order of the department refusing, canceling, suspending or revoking a license." Such review can be had by application to the superior court for writ of mandate (Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1085, 1086). Also, an action for declaratory relief has been used in a comparable situation (Ratliff v. Lampton (1948), supra, 32 Cal.2d 226, 195 P.2d 792, 10 A.L.R.2d 826). General language concerning the requirement of a hearing in Carroll v. California Horse Racing Bd. (1940), 16 Cal.2d 164, 168, 105 P.2d 110; Ratliff v. Lampton (1948), supra, page 230 of 32 Cal.2d, 795 of 195 P.2d; and People v. Noggle (1935), 7 Cal.App.2d 14, 18, 45 P.2d 430, is not controlling here, for each of those cases concerned a statute which was construed to require opportunity to be heard before discretionary revocation of a license became effective.

Delegation of Power

[8, 9] Giving to the Department of Motor Vehicles the power and duty to find the facts on which suspension of license depended, and to exercise limited "judgment," did not violate section 1 of article III or section 1 of article VI of the state Constitution (see Suckow v. Alderson (1920), 182 Cal. 247, 250, 187 P. 965; Dominguez Land Corp. v. Daugherty (1925), 196 Cal. 453, 483, 238 P. 697, 44 L.R.A. 1.) Although the Legislature did not provide detailed directions as to the manner in which the department was to reach a "judgment" as to the amount of security required, it specified as a guide the probable size of "any [court] judgment" which "may be recovered." (Veh.Code, § 420.) The facts and legal principles governing the recovery of judgments for damages are a matter of public knowledge and provide a reasonable sufficiently certain standard to be followed by the department. (Cf. Dominguez Land Corp. v. Daugherty (1925), supra, pp. 485-486 of 196 Cal. pp. 709-710 of 238 P.; Jersey Maid Milk Products Co. v. Brock (1939), 13 Cal.2d 620, 652-657, 91 P.2d 577; Housing Authority of Los Angeles County v. Dockweiler (1939), 14 Cal.2d 437, 461-462, 94 P.2d 794.)

Culpability

[10] The statute did not require security of every operator who might be involved in an accident, but only of those against whom, in the opinion of the department, a judgment might be recovered. Inasmuch as the recovery of a judgment depends, in theory at least, upon culpability, it would seem that the statute, presumptively properly administered, was not open to the objection that under it the nonculpable were subject to arbitrary discrimination.

Financial Ability, Equal Protection

[11, 12] Financial responsibility laws such as this do not unconstitutionally discriminate against the poor. (See Watson v. Division of Motor Vehicles (1931), 212 Cal. 279, 284, 298 P. 481; Rosenblum v. Griffin (1938), 89 N.H. 314, 319, 197 A. 701, 115 A. L.R. 1367.) Those damaged by the negligence of indigent drivers may be indigent also, and as little able as the drivers to bear the cost of such negligence. The fallacy of the argument that the law favored the rich over the poor "lies in the failure to distinguish between equality of opportunity and ability to take advantage of the opportunity which is offered to all. The equality of the Constitution is the equality of right, and not of enjoyment." (Watson v. Division of Motor Vehicles (1931), supra, p. 284 of 212 Cal., p. 483 of 298 P.) Those who cannot afford to possess automobiles are as little able to enjoy the opportunity of driving on the public highways as those who cannot afford insurance or security.

[13] Objection is made by petitioner that suspending his license after the accident did not make him more financially responsible; indeed, in his case, suspending his license made him less financially responsible, for it deprived him of his means of livelihood for himself, his wife and nine children. This contention constitutes no more than an argument that the Legislature acted unwisely in selecting a financial responsibility law of a lock-the-barn-door-after-the-horse-is-stolen type instead of a compulsory pre-insurance law or some other method of treating the problem (see 1 Stanf.L.Rev. 263). Our concern, however, is with the validity of the law under attack and not with whether a better law could be devised. (See Watson v. Division of Motor Vehicles (1931), supra, pp. 285-286 of 212 Cal., pp. 483-484 of 298 P.)

Self-Insurers

[14] The provisions permitting persons in whose names more than 25 motor vehicles were registered to qualify as self-insurers (Veh.Code, § 420, subd. (b), par. (4), § 420.7) did not create an arbitrary discrimination. Inasmuch as the provisions were patently based upon the probable financial ability of such persons to respond in damages, the classification was one which the Legislature could reasonably make.

For the reasons above stated, the alternative writ of mandate heretofore issued is discharged, and the petition for the peremptory writ is denied.

CARTER, Justice (dissenting).

On the main issue, the majority hold (citing as authority Bourjois v. Chapman, 301 U.S. 183, 57 S.Ct. 691, 695, 81 L.Ed. 1027; Phillips v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 283 U.S. 589, 51 S.Ct. 608, 611, 75 L.Ed. 1289,) that due process of law requiring notice and hearing is satisfied because a court review may be had after the suspension of a license without a hearing by the department. In the Bourjois case a Maine statute authorized the public official to issue permits for the sale of cosmetics and refuse such permits where they "* * * contain injurious substances in such amounts as to be poisonous, injurious or detrimental to the person." Pub. Laws 1935, c. 109, § 2. The court states: "And neither constitution requires that there must be a hearing of the applicant before the board may exercise a judgment under the circumstances and of the character here involved. The requirement of due process of law is amply safeguarded by Section 2 of the statute, which provides: 'From the refusal of said department to issue a certificate of registration for any cosmetic preparation appeal shall lie to the superior court in the county of Kennebec or any other county in the state from which the same was offered for registration.'"

In the Phillips case the issue involved was the payment of taxes, and was based on the principle that: "Property rights must yield provisionally to governmental need. * * * The underlying principle in that case was not such relation, but the need of the government promptly to secure its revenues." In the instant case it is said that the rule that a hearing in court after the suspension is sufficient to satisfy due process, is limited to cases where there is a "compelling public interest," and such interest in this case is: "* * * the obvious carelessness and financial irresponsibility of a substantial number of drivers and from the following allegations of the petition: There are 3,879,931 motor vehicles registered in California. During the first four months after the effective date of the law now under consideration, 19,808 persons were ordered by the department to establish that they were adequately insured or deposit security. More than 6,567 operators' licenses were suspended under the applicable law, and more than 1,300 'citations per month for suspension of license' were issued by the department. In these circumstances it is apparent that to require a hearing in every case before suspension of a license would have substantially burdened and delayed if not defeated the operation of the law." (Emphasis added.)

Assuming that the above rule stated by the majority is sound, there is no "compelling public interest" here. In Bourjois v. Chapman, supra, the vital interest was the necessity for immediate protection of the public health. In Phillips v. Commissioner, supra, it was the immediate necessity that the government receive its tax revenue in order to function. We have no comparable pressing need in the instant case. There is no issue of immediate danger to the public health involved nor is there any question of indispensible government revenue. The sole need is that a private person shall have security for the payment of any damages caused to him by another individual. Certainly that presents no urgency for immediate action which will justify depriving a person of the use of his automobile, his sole means of livlihood. The majority opinion states, as seen from the above quotation, that obviously careless persons' licenses were suspended for failure to post security. That is a non sequitur. It does not follow from the failure to post security that the drivers were careless. Nor does it follow from the fact that they were in accidents that they were careless drivers. They may have been wholly blameless. But even more important, there is no connection between careless drivers and posting of security, that is, the statute is not designed to keep seemingly careless drivers off the highways. That is true because they are permitted to drive, careless or not, if they post security. Hence the purpose of the statute is only security for payment of damages to the innocent person.

The recent U.S. Supreme Court case of Ewing v. Mytinger & Casselberry, Inc., 339 U.S. 594, 70 S.Ct. 870, 872, 94 L.Ed. 1088 involved a statute authorizing the administrator to determine whether probable cause existed for the seizure of goods on the basis that they were falsely labelled. That determination did not result in an immediate seizure. Such could only be accomplished if the attorney general, in his discretion, brought an action to seize and confiscate the goods. Only upon the commencement of such an action could the goods be seized pending the court proceeding. The court stated: "We have repeatedly held that no hearing at the preliminary stage is required by due process so long as the requisite hearing is held before the final administrative order becomes effective. (Emphasis added.) * * * But this case does not go as far. Here an administrative agency is merely determining whether a judicial proceeding should be instituted. Moreover, its finding of probable cause, while a necessary pre-requisite to multiple seizures, has no effect in and of itself. All proceedings for the enforcement of the Act or to restrain violations of it must be brought by and in the name of the United States. § 307 [21 U.S.C.A. § 337]. Whether a suit will be instituted depends on the Attorney General, not on the administrative agency. He may or may not accept the agency's recommendation. If he does, seizures are made and libels are instituted. But the seizures and suits are dependent on the discretion of the Attorney General." In the instant case the person's license is suspended. Moreover, stress is laid upon the general public interest involved as distinguished from rights between individuals.

It should be noted that the U. S. Supreme Court has said since the Bourjois and Phillips cases: "The demands of due process do not require a hearing, at the initial stage or at any particular point or at more than one point in an administrative proceeding so long as the requisite hearing is held before the final order becomes effective." (Emphasis added.) Opp Cotton Mills v. Administrator, 312 U.S. 126, 152, 61 S.Ct. 524, 536, 85 L.Ed. 624.

In the case at bar no hearing has ever been accorded petitioner. His operator's license has been suspended.

Since his right to operate an automobile on the public highway is essential to his livelihood, I am constrained to hold that he has been deprived of property without due process of law, and the statute here involved is unconstitutional.

I would therefore issue the peremptory writ prayed for.

EDMONDS, Justice. (dissenting).

In my opinion, if the Department of Motor Vehicles may, without a hearing, summarily suspend the license of a person to operate a motor vehicle, the provisions of the Vehicle Code purporting to give that authority violate constitutional gurantees. As the court here construes the statute, one may lose a valuable property right without the opportunity even to show that the reported accident did not occur or, if there was such an accident, he was not the driver of an automobile causing personal injury or property damage.

The Vehicle Code as it read in 1948 when Escobedo's license was suspended, provided that the Motor Vehicle Department shall "* * * within 60 days after the receipt of a report of a motor vehicle accident within this State which has resulted in bodily injury or death or damage to the property of any one person in excess of one hundred dollars ($100), suspend the license of each operator * * * involved in such accident * * *." Section 420(a), Vehicle Code. The causes for suspension, therefore, are (1) the licensee was the operator of the vehicle involved in the accident; (2) less than 60 days have elapsed since the accident report was received; and (3) bodily injury resulted or property was damaged to an amount in excess of $100.

The license may not be suspended if the operator deposits security "in a sum which shall be sufficient in the judgment of the department to satisfy any judgment or judgments for damages resulting from such accident as may be recovered against such operator or owner." Sec. 420(a), Veh. Code. An operator who alone suffers damage or injury or one who was driving a vehicle which was "* * * stopped, standing, or parked, whether attended or unattended * * *" at the time of the accident (unless he was doing so illegally or the vehicle lacked lighted lamps as required by law), does not have to meet this requirement. And suspension shall not be imposed upon one who has been released from liability, or has been finally adjudicated not liable, or has executed a confession of judgment or has executed an acknowledged agreement in writing providing for the payment of the amount of the damages resulting from the accident, Sec. 420.1.

Self-insurers are exempted from certain requirements of the law and other conditions are exacted of them. Sec. 420.7. Under some circumstances the license of a self-insured operator may not be suspended.

By these provisions, the Legislature has directed the Department of Motor Vehicles to suspend the license of an operator under specified circumstances or for certain causes, but only if his conduct, either at the time of the accident or subsequently, does not bring him within one of the stated exemptions which bars that action. This constitutes statutory authority to suspend an operator's license for enumerated causes only. Certainly the law contemplates a determination that the operator against whom action is proposed to be taken is the person who was involved in the accident reported as having occurred.

The administrative agency must also find whether personal injury occurred or property was damaged in extent of $100; whether the security demanded in the alternative to suspension is "sufficient in the judgment of the department"; whether any other policy on bond held by the driver is "* * * in the judgment of the department * * *" sufficient; whether the vehicle was stopped, standing, or parked, and if so whether it was properly lighted; and finally, whether the operator is a self-insurer.

It is a well established principle that, under a statute providing for dismissal of an employee or revocation of a license "for cause", there must be notice and a hearing before such action may be taken. The rule has been applied to a teacher, Keenan v. San Francisco Unified School District, 34 Cal.2d 708, 214 P.2d 382; automobile operator, Ratliff v. Lampton, 32 Cal.2d 226, 195 P.2d 792, 10 A.L.R.2d 826; liquor licensee, Covert v. State Board of Equalization, 29 Cal.2d 125, 173 P.2d 545; horse trainer, Carroll v. California Horse Racing Bd., 16 Cal.2d 164, 105 P.2d 110; and civil servants generally, La Prade v. Department of Water & Power, 27 Cal.2d 47, 162 P.2d 13; Steen v. Board of Civil Service Comm'rs, 26 Cal.2d 716, 160 P.2d 816. There is at least as much reason for requiring notice and hearing under a statute providing for deprivation of a license for any one of specifically enumerated causes as under legislation which allows such action "for cause" generally. Where the Legislature has enumerated the causes or conditions for which a license may be suspended, the requirement of notice and a hearing to determine the existence of those causes will be implied. Section 420 (a) must be construed accordingly.

Moreover, section 420(a), under which Escobedo's license was suspended, should be read in conjunction with section 314, which is the general provision governing the suspension and revocation of an operator's license. The latter section provides for suspension or revocation of a license where, among other things, "* * * the licensee has been involved as a driver in any accident causing death or personal injury or serious damage to property [or where] the safety of * * * persons upon the highway requires such action * * *."

Section 314 embodies express provision for notice and hearing, in that it requires an "investigation" and "reexamination of the licensee [upon] 10 days' written notice of the time and place thereof * " and also provides for modification of any probation " * * whenever good cause appears therefor." In Ratliff v. Lampton, supra, this court held that section 314 as then worded required "* * * an investigation and hearing conducted by the department which would afford the licensee an opportunity to present evidence under the rule in the Carroll and Steen cases." [32 Cal.2d 226, 195 P.2d 796.] At the time of the Ratliff decision, section 314 provided for a determination after investigation "that good cause exists" for suspension. The causes enumerated by the statute then, as now, included the determination that the licensee was "* * involved as a driver in any accident causing death or personal injury or serious damage to property" and the rule of the Ratliff case in this regard remains unchanged. In fact, subsequent amendment providing for "reexamination" and "written notice" makes it all the more evident that the Legislature intended to continue in effect this court's construction of that section.

Cases such as Surtman v. Secretary of State, 309 Mich. 270, 15 N.W.2d 471; Nulter v. State Road Commission, 119 W.Va. 312, 193 S.E. 549, 194 S.E. 270; LaPlante v. State Board of Public Roads, 47 R.I. 258, 131 A. 641; and Sullins v. Butler, 175 Tenn. 468, 135 S.W.2d 930, which hold that the operation of a motor vehicle upon a public highway is 'merely a personal privilege, and is not a property right, either concerned that right in connection with the use of a pleasure vehicle or failed to recognize the evolution of modern transportation. Today the social and economic circumstances of many persons have placed a motor vehicle in the category of a necessity. Escobedo's situation is a typical example.

He is a gardner living at San Gabriel. By taking care of lawns and gardens there and in Pasadena, he supports himself, his wife and nine children. While driving his automobile from one place of his work to another, his vehicle collided with another one. The state can and does prescribe the qualifications which one must have to obtain a license allowing him to operate a motor vehicle. Failure to meet those requirements justifies denial of the license. But after it has been issued and one is relying upon it as a means of livelihood, a license to operate a motor vehicle attains the status of a property right. The suspension or revocation of such a license must meet the same requirements of procedural due process which have been applied in connection with a license to practice a profession.

The Motor Vehicle Department makes no claim that Escobedo was given a hearing. In an order of the department served upon him, he was told: "Since you have failed to otherwise meet the security requirements of section 420 of the Vehicle Code, you must now deposit security or have your driving privilege suspended." Such suspension was made effective 15 days after the date of the demand unless, in the meantime, security in the amount of $2,800 was deposited with the department. The attorney general does not contend that the department has made any determination of the respective liabilities of the operators of the two cars nor of the amount of damage caused by the crash. As far as the record shows, the order of suspension is based entirely upon the statements made in an "accident report" filed in one of its offices.

This is far from procedural due process. As succinctly stated in the Ratliff case, "It is contrary to commonly accepted principles of justice to revoke a license for cause without giving the person charged an opportunity to be heard before a decision is made, since the determination necessarily requires a fair consideration of any evidence offered by the licensee." [32 Cal.2d 226, 195 P.2d 796.]

"Subsequent judicial review" of the department's action is no adequate substitute for a hearing in which the licensee would have an opportunity to present evidence tending to prove that he was not subject to the drastic sanction prescribed by the statute. This inadequacy is graphically illustrated by the present record. Escobedo was summarily ordered to surrender his license in September, 1948. When he declined to do so, he was advised that the authorities intend to arrest and prosecute him for having a revoked license in his possession. On January 18, 1949, he filed in this court his petition for writ of mandate. During the 20 months which have since elapsed, presumably he has been unable to carry on his work.

Sept. 19, 1950.

Action by Ralph M. Davenport, as administrator of the estate of Levi M. Davenport, deceased and others, against the Davenport Foundation, a corporation, and others, to have a declaration of trust declared invalid, and a bank account held to be property of the heirs of the decedent. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, David Coleman, J., rendered judgment in favor of the defendant, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that the portion of trust instrument creating charitable trust to establish a department of philosophy and religion at college and which enabled trustee to devote income to noncharitable purposes after statutory period had run was invalid as an unreasonable restraint on alienation.

As modified that part of judgment adjudicating disposition of joint bank accounts affirmed, and in all other respects judgment reversed.

Parol evidence is admissible to prove a document was not intended to take effect until the happening of a condition precedent.

2. Wills ⇐91

Where settlor conveyed property to a corporation as trustee and vested management in a foundation to distribute certain amount of income to settlor for life and an amount for annuities and made balance payable to a college to establish a new philosophy and religion department and trustees appointed settlor manager of foundation and allowed him to deal with property in same manner after declaration of trust was executed as he had before, but there was no evidence that college understood declaration of trust was not intended to be presently operative and college was a party to declaration and operated under its terms and received payments, trust was not invalid on ground that it was not intended to be operative during settlor's lifetime.

3. Perpetuities ⇐4(22)

An irrevocable trust, although partially charitable, is invalid to extent that under its terms trustees may apply income or corpus to noncharitable purposes after lapse of statutory period of lives in being or 25 years from its creation. Civ.Code, §§ 715, 716.

4. Charities ⇐4

Where settlor conveyed property to a corporate trustee and vested management in foundation to distribute certain amount of income to settlor for life, and amount for certain annuities with balance payable to college to establish a philosophy and religion department, and an agreement was executed by settlor and trustees whereby one of settlor's grandchildren was to receive $100 per month for life after death of her mother, and trust provided that all of the rest of the undistributed income could be used by trustee for such purposes consistent with purposes of trust as were determined in sole discretion of trustees, finding was justified that trustees had power to devote income to noncharitable purposes after 25-year statutory period had run and provision was invalid. Civ.Code, §§ 715, 716.

5. Trusts ⇐52

Valid trusts should not be disregarded because in instrument creating them one particular invalid trust is declared, unless the latter is so inseparably blended with the others that it cannot be eliminated without destroying main intent of trustor or without working manifest injustice to other beneficiaries. Probate Code, § 101.

6. Charities ⇐25

Where settlor conveyed property to corporate trustee and vested management in a foundation to distribute a stated amount of income to settlor for life, and an amount for certain annuities, and made balance payable to a college, and trust agreement provided that all of residue of undistributed income could be used by trustee for purposes consistent with purposes of trust as determined in sole discretion of trustee, it would be assumed that settlor intended trustees to have discretion to apply remainder of income for benefit of settlor's relatives whether in being or not at time of creation of trust, or for charitable purposes, and valid and invalid powers under provision were inseparably blended, and whole provision would fall as an unreasonable restraint on alienation. Civ.Code, §§ 715, 716.

Where an express charitable trust was invalid to extent to which trust instrument permitted trustees in their sole discretion to apply residuary income to either charitable or noncharitable uses, to extent that trust failed because of such invalid restraint on alienation, trustees would hold legal title to property on a resulting trust for settlor and his heirs.

8. Limitation of actions ⇐102(6), 103(2)

Ordinarily the trustee of a resulting trust is considered a voluntary trustee, and statute of limitations does not begin to run in favor of voluntary trustee until he repudiates the trust.

9. Limitation of actions ⇐102(2), 103(2)

Generally it is immaterial whether a trustee intends to hold for resulting beneficiary or for intended beneficiary of an invalid express trust, and with respect to statute of limitations trustee is treated as a voluntary trustee so long as he does not repudiate trust.

10. Limitation of actions ⇐103(2)

Where otherwise valid charitable trust was invalid to extent that it imposed invalid restraint on alienation, and trust was never repudiated by trustee, statute of limitations did not start running in favor of trustee, and action by settlor's administrator and heirs to have trust declared invalid and property distributed to them was not barred by statute of limitations.

Where settlor's administrator and heirs brought action to set aside as invalid a trust instrument which conveyed property to a corporation as trustee with ministerial duties and vested management in a foundation to distribute a stated amount of income to settlor for life and a stated amount for certain annuities, with balance payable to a college to establish a department of philosophy and religion, and a judgment of nonsuit was entered in trial court, in reviewing judgment of nonsuit, alleged fact that plaintiffs were estopped by laches from bringing action on ground that college had seriously changed its position in reliance on validity of trust could not be considered.

Where depositor placed fund from personal bank account in joint account with another, and at time issued a directive that joint account should be held in trust for benefit of persons named should they be in special need, and second person accepted trust, joint account created a valid trust when account was opened.

Where depositor placed funds from personal bank account in joint account with another and at same time issued directive that joint account should be held in trust for benefit of persons named should they be in special need, and depositor provided that remainder should be vested in trust foundation created by another trust instrument, interest created in life beneficiaries of bank account was severable from remainder, and even if foundation trust named as remainderman should be found to be wholly or partially invalid it would not affect validity of life interests, and trust bank account would be sustained to extent it provided for named life beneficiaries.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

On May 23, 1939, Levi M. Davenport, then 78 years of age, conveyed certain property to La Verne College, a corporation, as trustee. The trustee was given only ministerial duties. The management of the trust, to be known as the "Davenport Foundation," was committed to a board of directors of five named persons who were to constitute the board of trustees of the foundation. The trust provided:

"Before distribution is made of any of the net income reserves shall be set aside as follows to-wit:

"(1) 25% of the gross income for taxes, supervision and upkeep.

"(2) 12% of the gross income for replacements and betterments.

"Distribution of Income

"All the net income available for distribution shall be paid in monthly installments, as follows:

"(1) To the Trustor, Levi M. Davenport, the sum of Four Hundred Dollars ($400.00) per month, for and during the term of his natural life.

"(2) To La Verne College, a corporation, the sum of Three Hundred Dollars ($300.00) per month for the purpose of establishing a department of Philosophy and Religion, which department shall be established at the beginning of the school year 1939–1940.

"(3) To make suitable and proper provisions for the support and maintenance of J. R. Davenport, my brother, as his needs may require, not to exceed however, One Hundred Dollars ($100.00) per month, all of which shall be at the sole discretion of the Board of Trustees. In the event that any of my children should come to want, the Board of Trustees shall use a portion of the income to care for them in so far as their needs may require, all of which shall be solely within the discretion of the Board of Trustees.

"(4) To American Bible Society, with its principal office at Bible House, New York City, the sum of Three Hundred Dollars ($300.00), per annum, payable annually at the discretion of the Board.

"(5) To the payment of annuities in such amounts as may be agreed upon between the Board of Trustees and the annuitants, who may add to this Trust.

"(6) All of the rest and residue of undistributed income shall be used by the Board of Trustees for such purposes consistent with the purposes of this trust as may be determined in the sole discretion of said Board of Trustees."

The trust then specified in detail the type of religious education that should be provided at La Verne College and the manner in which successors to the Board of Trustees should be selected. The trustees had to subscribe to certain enumerated religious beliefs, and the Elders Body of the Church of the Brethren was given power over their selection and removal. The declaration of trust conferred usual administrative powers on the Board of Trustees and also provided:

"Others may add to this Foundation, provided the additional income shall be used in maintaining the Doctrines and Principles of our church, as herein set forth, provided, however, that the donor may reserve a portion of such income for himself or herself, or for relatives during his, her, or their lifetime. * * *

"In the event that any provision or provisions of this instrument are or are adjudged to be for any reason unenforceable the remainder hereof, disregarding such provisions, shall subsist and be carried into effect.

"This trust may not be revoked nor, except as otherwise herein provided may any of the corpus of the trust estate be withdrawn."

The Davenport Foundation was incorporated in 1940, and title to the property held by La Verne College that had been conveyed to it by the trustor was deeded to the Davenport Foundation.

Levi M. Davenport died January 6, 1947, and this action was then commenced by the administrator of his estate and his heirs to have the trust declared invalid and the property distributed to them. The complaint also stated a cause of action to have an alleged trust in a bank account declared invalid. This cause of action raises distinct issues and will be treated separately.

Plaintiffs attack the validity of the trust, first on the ground that its provisions suspend the power of alienation of the trust corpus in perpetuity and that its purposes are not wholly charitable, and secondly on the ground that the declaration of trust was not intended to be operative during the lifetime of the trustor and is therefore void as an attempted testamentary disposition. Defendants contend, however, that the noncharitable provisions are operative only for a period measured by lives in being, that the declaration of trust is nontestamentary in character, and that in any event plaintiffs' cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations. At the close of plaintiffs' case the trial court granted a nonsuit as to the causes of action attacking the validity of the declaration of trust establishing the Davenport Foundation. It is necessary to determine, therefore, whether there is evidence in the record that would support findings in plaintiffs' favor on the question of the validity of the trust, and if so whether their action is barred by the statute of limitations.

[1] The declaration of trust provided that Davenport should receive $400 per month and the use of his home rent free during his lifetime. The board of trustees were given power to consult with Davenport and absolved of any responsibility for loss resulting from following his requests, recommendations or advice. Plaintiffs do not contend that the reservations of these interests in the trustor would render the trust invalid as an attempted testamentary disposition. See, Tennant v. John Tennant Memorial Home, 167 Cal. 570, 576, 578–579, 140 P. 242; Restatement, Trusts, § 361. They contend, however, that there is evidence in the record that would support a finding that the trustor did not intend the declaration of trust to be operative at all during his lifetime. They rely on the facts that the trustees appointed Davenport manager of the foundation and allowed him to deal with the property in the same manner after the declaration of trust was executed as he had before. These facts, they contend, will support an inference that it was understood between Davenport and the trustees that the trust was not to become operative during his lifetime. They rely on the rule that parol evidence is admissible to prove that a document was not intended to take effect until the happening of a condition precedent. See, P. A. Smith Co. v. Muller, 201 Cal. 219, 222, 256 P. 411.

[2] Plaintiffs' contention overlooks the fact, however, that the declaration of trust constituted a tripartite agreement among Davenport, the board of trustees, and La Verne College. There is no evidence that La Verne College understood that the declaration of trust was not intended to be presently operative. It was a party to the declaration of trust and operated under its terms. It received the payments provided for it and used the money according to the directions set forth in the declaration of trust. Under these circumstances, any secret intent of Davenport and the trustees that the declaration of trust should not be presently operative would be immaterial. Brant v. California Dairies, Inc., 4 Cal.2d 128, 133–134, 48 P.2d 13; Watson v. Peyton, 10 Cal.2d 156, 158, 73 P.2d 906. Accordingly, plaintiffs' contention that the trust is invalid because it was not intended to be operative during the trustor's lifetime cannot be sustained.

The third paragraph provides for payments to the children of the trustor. If the word "children" includes children who might be born after the creation of the trust, this paragraph would permit distribution of income for noncharitable purposes for longer than the statutory period. Defendants contend, however, that in view of the advanced age of the trustor the word "children" may properly be interpreted as referring only to then living children. See, Restatement, Property, § 243, illus. 4.

The fifth paragraph provides for the payment of annuities to persons who may add to the trust. Plaintiffs contend that under this paragraph the trustees could use income from the original trust corpus to pay annuitants who later contributed to the trust but who were not yet in being at the time of its creation. Defendants, on the other hand, contend that paragraph five is governed by the later provision providing that "Others may add to this Foundation, provided the additional income shall be used in maintaining the Doctrines and Principles of our church, as herein set forth, provided however, that the donor may reserve a portion of such income for himself or herself, or for relatives during his, her, or their lifetime." As so limited, they contend paragraph five only provides for the later creation of separate trusts whose noncharitable purposes will terminate within lives in being at the time of their creation.

Paragraph six provides that "All of the rest and residue of undistributed income shall be used by the Board of Trustees for such purposes consistent with the purposes of this trust as may be determined in the sole discretion of said Board of Trustees." Plaintiffs contend that under this paragraph income could be used for any purpose consistent with the purposes of the foregoing five paragraphs. They contend that payments to descendants or other relatives of the trustor born after the creation of the trust would be for a purpose consistent with payments to himself or his brother or his children. Thus under their interpretation the trustees would have power under paragraph six to devote income to noncharitable purposes for longer than the statutory period. Defendants, on the other hand, contend that when the instrument is read as a whole it is clear that the words "purposes consistent with the purposes of this trust" can properly be construed as meaning only purposes consistent with the religious purposes of the trust. They rely on the extensive provisions dealing with the type of religious education to be provided at La Verne and the religious qualifications required of the trustees. They also point out that income from the property of others who add to the trust must be used to "maintain the Doctrines and Principles of our church."

[4] It would serve no purpose, however, to attempt to resolve these conflicting contentions from an examination of the declaration of trust standing by itself. The record contains relevant extrinsic evidence bearing on the question of interpretation that would support findings in favor of plaintiffs on at least some of their contentions. The trust was administered by the trustees with the assistance of the trustor for eight years before his death. The practical construction they placed upon the document is entitled to great weight in its interpretation. Woodbine v. Van Horn, 29 Cal.2d 95, 104, 173 P.2d 17. The most cogent evidence that a primary purpose of the trustor was to provide for descendants of his, whether or not they were living at the time the declaration of trust was executed, is the fact that an agreement was executed by the trustor and trustees whereby one of the trustor's grandchildren was to receive $100 per month for life after the death of her mother. Given full weight the execution of this agreement would sustain a finding that under paragraph six the trustees had power to devote income to noncharitable purposes after the statutory period had run. Granting a motion for nonsuit was therefore erroneous unless the severability clause may be given effect to eliminate the invalid powers or the statute of limitations bars plaintiffs' action. We have concluded that the severability clause may not be given such broad effect and that the statute of limitations does not bar the action.

[5, 6] The trust provision that "In the event that any provision or provisions of this instrument are or are adjudged to be for any reason unenforceable the remainder hereof, disregarding such provisions, shall subsist and be carried into effect" states essentially the same rule as that laid down in Probate Code section 101. That section provides that "Where [the testator's] intention cannot have effect to its full extent, it must have effect as far as possible." Under its terms the rule has been established that "'valid trusts should not be disregarded because in the instrument creating them one particular invalid trust is declared, unless the latter is so inseparably blended with the others that it cannot be eliminated without destroying the main intent of the trustor, or working manifest injustice to the other beneficiaries.'" In re Estate of Micheletti, 24 Cal.2d 904, 909, 151 P.2d 833, 835. It is assumed for the purposes of applying this rule in reviewing the judgment of nonsuit that under paragraph six the trustor intended the trustees to have discretion to apply the remainder of the income for the benefit of relatives of his, whether in being or not at the time of the creation of the trust, or for charitable purposes. The choice is stated to be in the sole discretion of the trustees. Under these circumstances the valid and invalid powers under paragraph six are inseparably blended and the whole paragraph must fail. In re Estate of Sutro, 155 Cal. 727, 734–735, 102 P. 920; In re Estate of Kline, 138 Cal. App. 514, 520, 32 P.2d 677; In re Estate of Vance, 118 Cal.App. 163, 164–165, 4 P.2d 977. Since the nonsuit must therefore be reversed, no purpose would be served by attempting to determine at this time in the absence of findings based upon all the evidence the extent to which other provisions of the trust may be severable from the invalid provisions, if any. See, Restatement, Trusts, § 398.

[7, 8] To the extent that the express trust may be found to have failed because of an invalid restraint on alienation, La Verne College and its successor trustee, the Davenport Foundation, will have held the legal title to the property on a resulting trust for the trustor and his heirs. See, Bainbridge v. Stoner, 16 Cal.2d 423, 428, 106 P.2d 423. Defendants do not dispute the rules that ordinarily the trustee of a resulting trust is considered a voluntary trustee and that the statute of limitations does not begin to run in favor of a voluntary trustee until he repudiates the trust. See, Berniker v. Berniker, 30 Cal.2d 439, 447–448, 182 P.2d 557. They contend, however, that in this case the trustees were involuntary resulting trustees because they intended to hold under the express trust rather than under the resulting trust. They thus seek to distinguish the purchase money resulting trust cases where the trustee not only voluntarily holds in trust but intends to hold for the resulting beneficiary. It is generally held, however, that it is immaterial whether the trustee intends to hold for the resulting beneficiary or for the intended beneficiary of the invalid express trust. With respect to the statute of limitations, he is treated as a voluntary trustee so long as he does not repudiate the trust. See, 3 Scott on Trusts, § 409, pp. 2173–2174; 1 Nossaman, Trust Administration and Taxation, § 117, pp. 111–113, and cases cited. Any other rule would allow a trustor to evade prohibitions against restraint of alienation and perpetuities by establishing an invalid trust and merely refraining from attacking it until the statute of limitations had run.

[9] Defendants contend, however, that the cases of Page v. Page, 143 Cal. 602, 77 P.2d 452, and Mackenzie v. Los Angeles Trust, etc., Bk., 39 Cal.App. 247, 178 P. 557, establish the rule in California that in the case of a resulting trust arising because of the failure of an express trust, as distinct from the case of a purchase money resulting trust, no repudiation is necessary to start the statute of limitations running in favor of the trustee. The basis of the decision in the Page case is not entirely clear, and the statement relied upon in the Mackenzie case is dictum. Neither of these cases has been followed by later decisions of the California courts that have consistently classified resulting trusts of both types as voluntary trusts for the purposes of the statute of limitations. Steiner v. Amsel, 18 Cal.2d 48, 54–55, 112 P.2d 635; Bainbridge v. Stoner, 16 Cal.2d 423, 428–429, 106 P.2d 423; see, Ruddick v. Albertson, 154 Cal. 640, 643, 98 P. 1045. Thus to the extent that they are inconsistent with the generally prevailing rule, the Page and Mackenzie cases must be deemed to have been overruled. Since defendants never repudiated the trust, plaintiffs' action is not barred by the statute of limitations.

[10] On the basis of facts pleaded in their answer defendants finally contend that plaintiffs are estopped by laches from bringing this action. They contend that La Verne College has seriously changed its position in reliance on the validity of the trust. This defense may not properly be considered in reviewing the judgment of nonsuit, and in any event it would be obviated if on retrial it were determined that the provisions for the benefit of the college are severable from the remainder of the trust.

Shortly before his death Davenport decided that he should make some provision for ten or twelve nephews and nieces. He considered the possibility of adding $10,000 to the Foundation and giving the trustees discretionary power to provide up to $1000 for each nephew or niece if he or she should have special need for it. Instead, however, on November 23, 1946, he went to his bank with defendant Steinour, treasurer of the Foundation, to make arrangements with the bank to hold an account he had in such a way that Steinour could dispose of it after his death for the benefit of the nieces and nephews and the Foundation. An officer of the bank told Davenport that the bank could take no responsibility and suggested that Davenport open a joint account with a person whom he trusted to carry out his wishes. Davenport then transferred the money in his account into a joint account in his and Steinour's names. After he and Steinour left the bank, Davenport executed the following document:

"I am directing the Davenport Foundation Inc. to set apart funds sufficient to hold $1000.00 in the interest of the following: [List of twelve relatives of Davenport.]

"This $1000.00 for each shall be set apart from funds derived from a personal bank account now in the Security-First National Bank at 230 Ea. Colorado St. Pasadena, Calif.

"The purpose is to have this, $1000.00 to be a part of Foundation except that if any of these above named persons are in special need, he or she shall appeal for a portion to the $1000. to their interest, and the Foundation may allot to such person for their need from this personal fund.

"Signed L. M. Davenport."

The trial court did not grant a nonsuit on the cause of action by which plaintiffs sought to secure title to the joint bank account, but at the close of the trial made findings in defendants' favor. The court found that in opening the joint account and executing the directive Davenport created a trust of which Steinour was trustee. The beneficiaries were the named relatives during their lifetimes and thereafter the Davenport Foundation. The purpose of the trust was to provide funds for the named relatives if they should be in need and to add to the assets of the Foundation. The Foundation, however, filed a disclaimer of any interest in the fund.

[11] Plaintiffs contend that no trust was created because Davenport did not intend a trust to arise until after his death; that he merely appointed Steinour his agent to carry out his wishes after his death. They rely on the use of the future tense in the directive to show that no trust was created at the time of its execution. There was substantial evidence, however, to support an inference that by opening the joint account Davenport effectively created the trust. He had expressed his wish that the Foundation should immediately become the trustee. Opening the joint account was a substitute scheme adopted because of uncertainty over the tax consequences of giving the money directly to the Foundation. The use of the future tense in the directive is not inconsistent with the present creation of a trust of which Steinour was trustee. Steinour wished to have directions in writing as to what his duties should be. The directive indicated that the Foundation should become the trustee when the bank account was transferred to it. It does not compel the conclusion that no trust was to arise until that transfer was made. Accordingly, the trial court was justified in concluding that a trust arose when the joint bank account was opened.

[12, 13] Plaintiffs also contend, however, that the remainder interest in the Foundation is void because the declaration of trust setting up the Foundation is invalid for the reasons discussed above. They contend that because the remainder interest is void the whole trust in the bank account must fail and that the invalidity cannot be cured by the disclaimer of its interest by the Foundation. It is clear, however, that the interests created in the life beneficiaries are severable from the remainder. Thus even if the Foundation trust should be found to be wholly or partially invalid it would not affect the validity of the life interests. The life interests and the remainder are not inseparably blended. The invalid interest may be eliminated without destroying the main intent of the trustor or working injustice to other beneficiaries. Accordingly, under the rule set forth in Re Estate of Micheletti, 24 Cal.2d 904, 909, 151 P.2d 833, the trust in the bank account must be sustained to the extent it provides for the named beneficiaries.

Since defendant Davenport Foundation filed a disclaimer of any interest in the fund, the judgment should be modified to award the remainder interest in the joint bank account to the heirs at law of Levi M. Davenport. As so modified that part of the judgment adjudicating the disposition of the joint bank account is affirmed. In all other respects the judgment is reversed.

BROWN v. SAN FRANCISCO BALL CLUB, Inc.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 19, 1950.

Myrtle R. Brown sued San Francisco Ball Club, Inc., a corporation, for injuries sustained by plaintiff when plaintiff was struck by an object while plaintiff was attending a professional baseball game. The Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, Sylvain J. Lazarus, J., entered a judgment upon a directed verdict for defendant and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that plaintiff had assumed the risk.

Judgment affirmed and appeal from order denying new trial dismissed.

Generally, the owner of property, in so far as an invitee is concerned, is not an insurer of safety but must use reasonable care to keep his premises in a reasonably safe condition and give warning of latent or concealed perils and he is not liable for injury to an invitee resulting from a danger which was obvious or should have been observed in the exercise of reasonable care.

2. Theaters and shows ⇐6(18)

A spectator at a professional baseball game, by voluntarily entering into the sport as a spectator, knowingly accepts the reasonable risks and hazards inherent in and incident to the game.

3. Theaters and shows ⇐6(2, 11)

The management of a professional baseball team does not insure patrons against injury resulting from being struck by batted or thrown baseballs, and management need only exercise ordinary care to protect patrons against such injuries, and in so doing, is not obliged to screen all seats, and may provide screened seats only for as many patrons as may be reasonably expected to call for them on any ordinary occasion.

4. Theaters and shows ⇐6(18)

A spectator at a professional baseball game who chooses to occupy an unscreened seat, or is unable to secure a screened seat and consequently occupies an unscreened seat, assumes the risk of being struck by thrown or batted balls and if injured thereby he is precluded from recovering damages therefor.

It is common knowledge that in baseball games hard balls are thrown and batted with such great swiftness they are liable to be thrown and batted outside the lines of the diamond.

6. Theaters and shows ⇐6(18)

The owner of professional baseball stadium performed duty toward patrons of professional game played at such stadium and sponsored by others than owner to whom owner had rented stadium, when owner provided screened seats affording protection from batted and thrown baseballs for all who might reasonably be expected to request them, and a mature patron who was struck by baseball when game had been in progress about an hour, and who had voluntarily occupied an unscreened seat, assumed risk of injury notwithstanding patron's limited experience with baseball.

Edward D. Mabson, San Francisco, for appellant.

S. A. Ladar, Jesse H. Steinhart, and John J. Goldberg, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment entered upon a directed verdict for the defendant in an action against San Francisco Ball Club, Inc., for damages for personal injuries sustained while attending a professional baseball game at Seals' Stadium, San Francisco.

The appeal is also from an order denying plaintiff's motion for new trial. That phase of the appeal should be dismissed, for such an order is not appealable.

Appellant, a woman of 46 years, attended the game as the guest of friends, one of whom furnished and purchased the tickets which were for seats in an unscreened portion of the stadium near the first-base line. The game was in progress when they arrived and about an hour later the accident occurred while the players were changing sides. Appellant was struck by some object and sustained serious injury. Evidence is lacking whether or not it was a baseball, or from what direction it came. However, the motion for directed verdict appears to have been made, and the issues discussed by the parties upon this appeal, upon the assumption that appellant was hit by a baseball, possibly thrown from second to first base, touching the first baseman's glove and passing thence into the stand.

Respondent owned and operated the stadium which had a seating capacity of 18,601, divided into screened and unscreened areas. Approximately 5,000 seats were behind a screen back of the home plate. The remainder were unscreened and in two sections behind the first-base and third-base lines respectively. Tickets for seats were sold at separate windows, one window for each of these three sections, each window marked for a particular section. Patrons decided where they would sit, and went to the appropriate window for their seats. It is generally true of all the games held in this stadium that a great majority of the patrons are situated in the unscreened sections, because they prefer an unobstructed view.

The attendance at this particular game was approximately 5,000. There were many vacant seats in each seating area. Most of the spectators were seated in the first-base and third-base unscreened sections, very few in the home-plate screened area.

For this game, held October 14, 1945, after the close of the Pacific Coast League season, respondent rented the stadium to others and had no control over the conduct of the game or the players; nor did it publicize the game or fix the admission price. Ticket sales at the stadium were handled by respondent's employees and the ushers who escorted patrons to their seats were its employees. The rental charged was a percentage of the gross receipts, not of the profits.

Accordingly, the duty of care, if any, which respondent owed to appellant was that of proprietor, toward a patron, of the stadium at which this game was played.

[2] In baseball, one of these factors is that the patron participates in the sport as a spectator and in so doing subjects himself to certain risks necessarily and usually incident to and inherent in the game; risks that are obvious and should be observed in the exercise of reasonable care. This does not mean that he assumes the risk of being injured by the proprietor's negligence but that by voluntarily entering into the sport as a spectator he knowingly accepts the reasonable risks and hazards inherent in and incident to the game.

[3-5] The duty of the proprietor or operator of a baseball stadium toward his patrons is specifically defined, as follows: " 'With respect to the law governing cases of this kind, it has been generally held that one of the natural risks assumed by spectators attending professional games is that of being struck by batted or thrown balls; that the management is not required, nor does it undertake to insure patrons against injury from such source. All that is required is the exercise of ordinary care to protect patrons against such injuries (Edling v. Kansas City Baseball, etc., Co., 181 Mo.App. 327, 168 S.W. 908), and, in doing so, the management is not obliged to screen all seats, because, as pointed out by the decisions, many patrons prefer to sit where their view is not obscured by a screen. Moreover, the management is not required to provide screened seats for all who may apply for them. The duty imposed by law is performed when screened seats are provided for as many as may be reasonably expected to call for them on any ordinary occasion (Wells v. Minneapolis Baseball, etc., Ass'n, 122 Minn. 327, 142 N.W. 706, 46 L.R.A., N.S., 606, Ann.Cas.1914D, 922; Brisson v. Minneapolis Baseball, etc., Ass'n, 185 Minn. 507, 240 N.W. 903); and if as in the cases of Wells v. Minneapolis Baseball, etc., Ass'n, supra, and Kavafian v. Seattle Baseball Club Ass'n, 105 Wash. 215, 177 P. 776, 181 P. 679, a spectator chooses to occupy an unscreened seat, or, as in the Brisson Case, supra, is unable to secure a screened seat and consequently occupies one that is not protected, he assumes the risk of being struck by thrown or batted balls; and, if injured thereby, is precluded from recovering damages therefor. As aptly said in Cincinnati Baseball Club Co. v. Eno, 112 Ohio St. 175, 147 N.E. 86, it is common knowledge that in baseball games hard balls are thrown and batted with such great swiftness they are liable to be thrown or batted outside the lines of the diamond, and spectators occupying positions which may be reached by such balls assume the risk of injury therefrom.'" Quinn v. Recreation Park Ass'n, 3 Cal.2d 725, 729–730, 46 P.2d 144, 146.

[6] It would seem necessarily to follow that respondent fully discharged its duty toward appellant, as concerns the risk to her of being hit by thrown or batted baseballs, when it provided screened seats for all who might reasonably be expected to request them, in fact many more screened seats than were requested. Hence, the injury suffered by her when struck by a thrown ball, while voluntarily occupying an unscreened seat, did not flow from, was not caused by, any failure of performance by respondent of any duty owed her, and did not give rise to a cause of action in her favor against respondent for damages for such injury.

Appellant seeks to take this case out of the application of the rule upon the theory that she was ignorant of the game of baseball and the attendant risks, hence cannot be said to have knowingly assumed the risk. The point is not well taken. Although she had a limited experience with baseball, she was a mature person in possession of her faculties with nothing about her to set her apart from other spectators and require of her a lower standard of self-protection from obvious, inherent risks than that required of other spectators. She was, at the time of the accident, 46 years of age; had lived in the San Francisco area since 1926; was about to go to a school for training and to have a job as saleswoman in a real estate office; had seen one baseball game prior to this, in 1928, played in a big field, not a ball park, when she observed the game from an automobile and did not see balls thrown or knocked into the crowd; and had seen kids in the street pitching balls. At the game at which this accident happened she knew there was no screen in front of her seat but failed to notice if any of the seats were behind a screen. She was in attendance for about an hour before the accident, which should have apprised her of the risk of being struck by a ball. Instead of observing, she paid no particular attention to the game and spent her time visiting with a friend. We find nothing here to take appellant outside the usual rule, whether it be said that this "common knowledge" of these obvious and inherent risks are imputed to her or that they are obvious risks which should have been observed by her in the exercise of ordinary care.

Similarly, in the Quinn case, plaintiff urged that because she was a minor of fourteen years and went to the game alone, the question whether she sufficiently understood the risk of being hit by a ball when sitting in an unscreened section was necessarily for the jury. In overruling this contention, the court observed that the evidence showed that Quinn was a "high school student, strong, mentally alert, weighing about 125 pounds, and active in several kinds of athletics, including baseball." 3 Cal.2d at page 730, 46 P.2d at page 146. She had been interested in baseball for about two years, attending such games about twice a week during the baseball season. She was entirely familiar with the rules of the game, the manner in which it was played, the frequency with which foul balls were batted into the grandstand, and the danger to spectators of being struck thereby. This evidence demonstrated actual knowledge of the risk. The significant feature of the case is that in directing a verdict for the defendant the trial court determined from this evidence and from its observation that Quinn had sufficient capacity and understanding of the situation to be governed by the same rule as an adult. By affirming the judgment, the Supreme Court decided that such a question is one proper for the trial court to determine. In respect to the defense of contributory negligence, the Supreme Court said: "* * * it is held generally that, in the absence of a clear showing of abuse of discretion, reviewing courts will not interfere with the rulings of trial courts in submitting or refusing to submit to juries the question of whether the contributory negligence of children of the age of fourteen years and under was such as to prevent their recovering for injuries sustained by them" and that "there are a number of cases involving injuries to minors about the age of the girl in question here wherein it was held as a matter of law that they were guilty of contributory negligence * * *." 3 Cal. 2d at page 731, 46 P.2d at page 147.

Even more like the instant case on its facts is Brisson v. Minneapolis Baseball & Athletic Ass'n, 185 Minn. 507, 240 N.W. 903, cited with approval in the Quinn case. Brisson, an adult spectator, hit by a ball while occupying an unscreened seat at a league game, asserted ignorance of the risks to which he was exposed by the game, with which he said he was unfamiliar, although as a small boy he had witnessed ball games and as an adult had recently witnessed at least one league game and in this game had witnessed some six innings. Such ignorance he claimed took him outside of the usual rule in regard to spectators in his situation at such games. In overruling that contention the court made the following significant observation: "In our opinion no adult of reasonable intelligence, even with the limited experience of the plaintiff, could fail to realize that he would be injured if he was struck by a thrown or batted ball, such as are used in league games of the character which he was observing, nor could he fail to realize that foul balls were likely to be directed toward where he was sitting. No one of ordinary intelligence could see many innings of the ordinary league game without coming to a full realization that batters cannot, and do not, control the direction of the ball which they strike and that foul tips or liners may go in an entirely unexpected direction. He could not hear the bat strike the ball many times without realizing that the ball was a hard object. Even the sound of the contact of the ball with the gloves or mitts of the players would soon apprize him of that. It is our opinion that the plaintiff, notwithstanding his alleged limited experience, must be held to have assumed the risk of the hazards to which he was exposed." 185 Minn. at page 507, 240 N.W. at page 904. The cause was remanded with directions to the trial court to enter judgment for defendant notwithstanding the verdict.

Another case quite like the instant case upon its facts is Keys v. Alamo City Baseball Co., Tex.Civ.App., 150 S.W.2d 368. Plaintiff, a woman of 42 years, injured by a baseball while occupying an unscreened seat as a spectator at a game, testified she knew nothing of the game or the dangers lurking in and about playing fields, claiming that, therefore, it was the duty of the defendant to warn her of those dangers. The issue was submitted to the jury, which found that the failure to warn plaintiff constituted negligence of the defendant proximately causing the accident and that she did not assume the risk of being hit by a baseball. The court held that both of those findings were conclusively refuted, both by the evidence and by common knowledge, quoting and applying the rule announced in the Quinn case. It further appeared that this was the second baseball game plaintiff had ever witnessed. Her son who accompanied her at this game was fourteen years of age. It was deemed inferable from the record that he was a baseball "fan," as is nearly every normal American boy. He was in the habit of attending games at this field. It was deemed further inferable as a matter of course, and not denied by the plaintiff, that for years the son had handled baseballs in and around his home under the watchful eye of his mother. Said the court: "This history, coupled with a universal common knowledge, was bound to have acquainted plaintiff with the potential dangers inherent in a baseball in play; with the fact that a flying baseball is capable of inflicting painful, sometimes serious and even fatal, injury; and that when in play it may fly in any direction and strike any bystander not on the alert to evade it. The knowledge of those characteristics of a baseball must be imputed to every reasonable person having the admitted experience and opportunities of plaintiff to know these things. Added to that imputed knowledge, plaintiff had sat through five or six innings in this very game, and her son, sitting by her side, noticed that several foul balls had been batted into the grand stands and within the range of his observation. We think the record conclusively refutes the jury finding that plaintiff did not 'assume the risk' of the very accident which befell her, and that the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in rendering judgment against plaintiff, notwithstanding that finding." 150 S.W.2d at page 371.

Continuing, the court held that the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in disregarding the jury finding that defendant was guilty of negligence in failing to warn plaintiff of the dangers incident to occupancy of the unscreened area, saying in that regard: "Plaintiff was a mature woman, presumably possessed of average intelligence, with nothing about her manner or appearance to set her apart from the thousands of other patrons entering the park on this occasion, or to indicate her claimed inexperience or lack of appreciation of the perils of the game. Her own son, sitting at her side, with full knowledge of those perils and of the extent of his mother's awareness, did not warn her. It would have been absurd, and no doubt would have been resented by many patrons, if the ticket seller, or other employees, had warned each person entering the park that he or she would be imperiled by vagrant baseballs in unscreened areas. And yet that would have been defendant's duty, if plaintiff's contention is sound. We overrule that contention." 150 S.W.2d at page 371.

Of the cases relied upon by appellant herein, only one, Ratcliff v. San Diego Baseball Club, etc., 27 Cal.App.2d 733, 81 P.2d 625, relates to the peculiar liability to their patrons of operators of baseball stadiums. That case involved a plaintiff who had elected to occupy a seat within a screened section and was injured while approaching her seat through an unscreened passageway. That case called for the application of a rule of liability materially different from that available to a person injured while occupying a seat in an unscreened section.

We conclude that the evidence herein, viewing it most favorably to the appellant, does not take her outside the application of the rule announced in the Quinn case; that she assumed the risk of injury in respect to which she complains; that the injury was not caused by any negligence upon the part of the respondent; and that determination thereof was a proper function of the trial court upon motion for directed verdict.

In the absence of negligence upon the part of the respondent, it is unnecessary to consider the question of contributory negligence upon the part of the appellant.

The judgment is affirmed and the appeal from the order denying a new trial is dismissed.

CLARY v. BASALT ROCK CO., Inc.

Sac. 6092.

Sept. 18, 1950.

Elmer D. Clary brought action against the Basalt Rock Company, Inc., a corporation, to recover the amount of the sales tax, on machinery and equipment sold to defendant. From an order of the Superior Court, Tehama County, H. S. Gans, J., denying a motion for change of place of trial to the county of defendant's principal place of business, defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, J., held that in the absence of an agreement, made or to be performed in Tehama County to pay the sales tax, the defendant corporation was entitled to have the place of trial changed.

Order appealed from reversed, and trial court directed to enter order changing place of trial.

Riggins, Rossi & King, Napa, for appellant.

C. A. Stromsness, Corning for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Justice.

This appeal is from an order of the trial court denying a motion by defendant for a change of the place of trial. The action was begun in Tehama County Superior Court. The complaint alleges the corporate capacity of the sole defendant; the making of a written contract between plaintiff and defendant effecting a sale of a business and certain machinery and equipment used therein; that no provision was made in the agreement of sale relative to the payment of any State sales tax which might accrue to the State; that plaintiff, as seller, had been notified that there was due to the State of California a sales tax upon the sale of the equipment; that plaintiff had requested defendant to pay the tax which defendant had refused to do; that plaintiff had not paid the tax, and interest and penalties were accruing; that the tax should be paid by the defendant to plaintiff to be transmitted to the State. After referring to various provisions of the Sales Tax Act of this State, the complaint then alleges that there is an actual controversy between plaintiff and defendant as to liability to pay the tax assessed and judgment is prayed declaring the rights and duties of the parties under the agreement relative to the payment of sales taxes and declaring that defendant should pay the same to plaintiff, together with penalties and interest accrued to be by plaintiff in turn paid to the State.

The defendant, Basalt Rock Company, Inc., a corporation, noticed a motion for change of place of trial and supported the same by an affidavit of its president. That officer averred the corporation's office and principal place of business at all times had been and still was in the County of Napa. He averred nothing further factually concerning the proper county for the trial of the action and his affidavit concluded with the usual statement of merits.

An affidavit in opposition to the motion was filed for plaintiff declaring that the sales contract was to be performed in Tehama County and was completed and performed therein. The affidavit contained the conclusion that by reason of the foregoing the "obligation was incurred in said county * * * and the venue should be retained therein."

The principal place of business of appellant is in Napa County, which fact was established without dispute in the trial court, and therefore appellant was entitled to have the cause moved unless the action is upon a contract made or to be performed in Tehama County or unless an obligation or liability arose or a breach occurred in that county. Hammond v. Ocean Shore Dev. Co., 22 Cal.App. 167, 133 P. 978; Ward v. Great Western Power Co., 135 Cal.App. 687, 27 P.2d 937; Byrum v. Stockton Comb. Harv. & Agr. Works, 91 Cal. 657, 27 P. 1093; Calif.Const., art. XII, Sec. 16.

When appellant proved that its principal place of business was in Napa County the question arose whether or not the county of original venue was still the proper county. Appellant contends that it was not for the reason that no facts permitting it to be sued in Tehama County existed. With this contention we agree.

[1] Respondent, while not stating the matter directly, assumes that when he sold machinery and equipment to appellant the transaction was taxable under the Sales Tax Act of this State. We make the same assumption. The essence of respondent's suit, therefore, based upon defendant's asserted obligation under the Sales Tax Act of this State, is to compel appellant to pay to respondent the amount of this tax. So far as the State of California be concerned, it has and had no claim against appellant arising out of the sale. The State Sales Tax Act "contemplates the imposing of the fixed rate of the tax on the gross receipts, as defined by the act, and not on the individual sale of merchandise; * * *. 'That in ultimate effect the fund out of which payment [of the tax] is made may be or in fact has been obtained by the dealer from his customers does not make the tax a levy upon the consumer.' * * * the act creates the relationship of sovereign power and taxpayer between the state and the retailer, and not between the state and the consumer. * * * The method of listing the price and the tax separately and defining taxable gross receipts as the amount received less the amount of the tax added, merely avoids payment by the retailer of a tax on the amount of the tax. Under such provisions the effect stated in the case last cited still obtains, namely, that 'the purchaser does not pay the tax. He pays or may pay the seller more for the goods because of the seller's obligation, but that is all,' and 'the amount added because of the tax is paid to get the goods and for nothing else. Therefore it is part of the price.' The tax being a direct obligation of the retailer and, so far as the consumer is concerned, a part of the price paid for the goods and nothing else, it is neither in fact nor in effect laid upon the consumer. It does not become a tax on the sale nor because of the sale, but remains an excise tax for the privilege of conducting a retail business measured by the gross receipts from sales." Western Lithograph Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization, 11 Cal.2d 156, 163, et seq., 78 P.2d 731, 735, 117 A.L.R. 838. The court further said in the cited case 11 Cal.2d at page 162, 78 P.2d at page 735, of the reported opinion: "In every case in which that question has arisen under the California Retail Sales Tax Act, the courts have uniformly and consistently recognized the legislative intent and adhered to the construction that the tax is upon the retailer and not upon the consumer." See, also, National Ice & Cold Stor. Co. of California v. Pacific Fruit Exp. Co., 11 Cal.2d 283, 287-288, 79 P.2d 380.

[2, 3] It is true that the act provides, as the complaint alleges, that the taxes thereby imposed shall be collected by the retailer from the consumer in so far as it can be done; and that a retailer is forbidden to advertise or hold out or state that he will absorb the tax, or not add it to the purchase price or refund it if added. See Sections 6052, 6053, Rev. & Tax.Code. But these provisions give the retailer no right of action against the consumer unless the consumer has agreed to pay the tax as a part of the price and has failed to do so, thus in part failing to pay the agreed price. We think that when a retailer and a consumer have agreed upon a price, saying nothing of a sales tax, no implied obligation arises on the consumer's part to pay a tax in addition thereto. The question of what, if any, addition for taxes shall be a part of the sale price is a matter to be agreed upon when the whole price is fixed. When that price is fixed and the consumer agrees to pay it "to get the goods" the retailer can no longer have any demand upon him because he may not in fact have passed to the consumer the resultant sales tax. In Roth Drug, Inc., v. Johnson, 13 Cal.App.2d 720, 736, 57 P.2d 1022, 1029, it was held that the section of the Sales Tax Act we are now considering "merely authorizes the retail merchant to reimburse himself from the consumer in so far as it may be consistently done. He is not required to do so. He may waive that right."

[4] Turning now to the transaction which respondent by his complaint alleges had occurred between himself and the appellant corporation, we find a direct allegation that when the bargain was made no provision was made for the payment by appellant of any sum referable to the sales tax, but of course it is alleged that the sale price agreed upon was a fixed sum. If ultimately this transaction enhanced respondent's liability to the State government as a retailer it is no concern of appellant. It is not alleged to have contracted to pay that sum. It is alleged appellant agreed to pay a certain price for that which it bought and it is further alleged that it has paid that price. The contract, therefore, was by that performance completely discharged and this suit cannot be said to be based upon the contract. It is, therefore, quite immaterial, so far as venue is concerned, that a contract was made and was to be performed in Tehama County. For the same reasons it must be said that the action is not one upon an obligation or liability to pay a tax arising in Tehama County, for no such obligation or liability arose by reason of the occurrences referred to in the complaint and of course it likewise follows that the suit is not upon the breach of such obligation, since there must be an obligation before there can be a breach thereof.

Respondent argues that "If there is any obligation on the part of defendant to pay a sales tax, that obligation is the result of a transaction which took place in Tehama County and as a direct result of a contract entered into in Tehama County. If there is such an obligation, then suit may be brought in Tehama County." We can concede the validity of the foregoing statements, but respondent is not advantaged thereby. As we have said, the obligation referred to never existed.

We conclude that this action, brought against a corporation with its principal place of business in a county other than that in which the action was begun, is not upon a contract made or to be performed or upon an obligation or liability arising or for a breach occurring in Tehama County and therefore that the trial court should have granted the appellant's motion to change the place of trial to the county wherein is located the principal place of business of the corporation.

face of the complaint which he filed, he cannot state a cause of action against it. Nevertheless, the sole question before this court is whether or not the motion for change of place of trial should have been granted and what we have said is for the purpose of answering that question only. We answer it from the record as now made up. It is not for this court to sustain a demurrer or order a dismissal. That function, including permission to amend if amendment can be made, is to be performed by the court in which the further proceedings in the cause occur. Abbott v. Peoples' Nat. Fire Ins. Co., 132 Cal.App. 357, 359, 22 P.2d 544.

The order appealed from is reversed and the trial court is directed to make and enter an order changing the place of trial of this action to the Superior Court in and for the County of Napa.

STATE v. BROTHERHOOD OF RAILROAD TRAINMEN et al.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 18, 1950.

Hearing Granted Nov. 16, 1950. *

Suit by the State against Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, an unincorporated association, and another for a declaration of rights and duties under a contract between Board of State Harbor Commissioners and defendant Brotherhoods respecting rates of pay, rules, and working conditions affecting employees of state-owned belt railroad. The Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, Andrew R. Schottky, J., entered a judgment in favor of defendants and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Goodell, J., held that state-owned belt railroad was subject to Federal Railway Labor Act, that State Harbor Board had power to negotiate contracts fixing rates of pay of employees of such railroad without approval of state Personnel Board or State Department of Finance and that contract was valid and binding, but that certain conclusions of trial court should be rewritten so as not to conflict with such holding of validity.

Conclusions of law modified in accordance with opinion and judgment affirmed.

* Subsequent opinion 232 P.2d 857.

1. Master and servant ⇐15(19)

Belt railroad engaged as common carrier in interstate commerce along waterfront of San Francisco harbor, though owned and operated by state, was subject to Federal Railway Labor Act, and state must deal with employees of such railroad on the same basis and in the same way as would a privately owned carrier. Railway Labor Act, §§ 1 et seq., 2, 45 U.S.C.A. §§ 151 et seq., 152; U.S.C.A.Const. art. 6.

2. Commerce ⇐27(2)

If any action of State Harbor Board in connection with contract regulating rates of pay, rules and working conditions of employees of state-owned and operated belt railroad engaged as a common carrier in interstate commerce should collide with some conflicting provision of state law, Board must follow the course of conduct called for by Federal Railway Labor Act. Railway Labor Act, §§ 1 et seq., 2, 45 U.S.C.A. §§ 151 et seq., 152; U.S.C.A.Const. art. 6.

3. Navigable waters ⇐14(2)

Legislation relating to powers and jurisdiction of State Harbor Board is special in its very nature and character and in its application to the subject matter within its particular provisions such legislation must prevail over general statutes. Harbors and Navigation Code, §§ 1705, 1900, 1990, 3150.

4. Statutes ⇐162

Where both special and general statutes treat of the same subject, unless they are irreconcilably inconsistent, the general statute, though later in date, does not repeal the special, but the special act will prevail in its application to the subject matter coming within its particular provisions.

The power of State Harbor Board under special legislation to fix the compensation of its employees was not affected by provisions of general statute making salary fixed by any state agency for an employee or officer and payable out of state funds subject to approval of Department of Finance. Harbors and Navigation Code, §§ 1705, 1900, 1990, 3150; Government Code, § 18004.

6. Statutes ⇐185

Where statute gives power to perform an act, the authority to employ all necessary means to accomplish the end is implied.

7. Railroads ⇐18

The power of State Harbor Board under special legislation to maintain and operate belt railroad along San Francisco waterfront and fix the compensation of board's employees carried with it the authority to negotiate contracts fixing the rates of compensation for employees of belt railroad to the exclusion of any exercise of such powers by State Personnel Board, Department of Finance, or any other state agency. Railway Labor Act, §§ 1 et seq., 2, 45 U.S.C.A. §§ 151 et seq., 152; Harbors and Navigation Code, §§ 1705, 1900, 1990, 3150; Government Code, §§ 18004, 18706, 18707.

8. States ⇐67

The functions of State Personnel Board are purely administrative and it has no powers of management or of operation such as those expressly vested in State Harbor Board. Harbors and Navigation Code, §§ 1705, 1900, 3150; Government Code, §§ 18706, 18707; 18500–19765; Const. art. 24, §§ 2, 3.

9. Navigable waters ⇐14(2)

As applied to state-owned belt railroad along San Francisco waterfront, a special law authorizing State Harbor Board to fix compensation of its employees prevails over provisions of general civil service law authorizing State Personnel Board to establish and adjust salary ranges for each class of position in the State Civil Service. Harbors and Navigation Code, §§ 1705, 3150; Government Code, §§ 18500–19765, 18850.

10. Declaratory judgment ⇐347

In suit by state for a declaration of its rights and duties under collective bargaining contract with brotherhoods representing employees of state-owned belt railroad, apparent conflicts between state law and contract provisions with respect to dismissals, demotions, suspensions, sick leave, leaves of absence, promotions, lay-offs and duration or emergency employees could not be determined in absence of sufficient detailed information in the record to show how various employees were affected either individually or by groups. Harbors and Navigation Code, §§ 1705, 1900, 3150; Government Code, §§ 18500–19765; Code Civ.Proc. § 1060; Const. art. 24, §§ 1–4.

The Railway Labor Act does not so pre-empt the field of regulation of working conditions as to entirely foreclose state action respecting carriers within such Act. Railway Labor Act, § 1 et seq., 45 U.S.C.A. § 151 et seq.

12. Master and servant ⇐15(9)

The Railway Labor Act does not undertake governmental regulation of wages, hours or working conditions, but seeks merely to provide a means by which agreements may be reached with respect thereto. Railway Labor Act, § 1 et seq., 45 U.S.C.A. § 151 et seq.

13. Master and servant ⇐15(9)

The Railway Labor Act does not fix or authorize any one to fix generally applicable standards for working conditions, but seeks to compose differences that threaten continuity of work in order that disagreements about conditions will not interfere with interstate commerce. Railway Labor Act, § 1 et seq., 45 U.S.C.A. § 151 et seq.

14. Master and servant ⇐15(8)

The Railway Labor Act leaves open a field of regulation of working conditions wherein civil service provisions for the benefit of state employees may co-exist with a collective bargaining agreement affecting employees of state agency operating a railroad subject to the act without colliding with such agreement or with Railway Labor Act. Railway Labor Act, § 1 et seq., 45 U.S.C.A. § 151 et seq.

15. Master and servant ⇐3(1)

Contract between State Harbor Board and brotherhoods of railway employees respecting rates of pay, rules and working conditions affecting employees of belt railroad along San Francisco waterfront owned by the state and operated by Harbor Board was valid and binding. Railway Labor Act, §§ 1 et seq., 2, 45 U.S.C.A. §§ 151 et seq., 152; Harbors and Navigation Code, §§ 1705, 1900, 1990, 3150; U.S.C.A. Const. art. 6.

Trial court's conclusions that, in negotiating with employees of state-owned belt railroad respecting increases in rates of pay, etc., State Harbor Board must consult with Personnel Board and Department of Finance and that any agreement with such employees must in proper cases be subject to approval of such agencies were inconsistent with holding that contract entered into by Harbor Board respecting rates of pay, rules and working conditions of such employees was valid and such conclusions should be rewritten by appellate court so as to negative any necessity for such consultation or approval. Railway Labor Act, §§ 1 et seq., 2, 45 U.S.C.A. §§ 151 et seq., 152; Harbors and Navigation Code, §§ 1705, 1900, 3150; Government Code, §§ 18004, 18500–19765; Code Civ. Proc. § 956a; U.S.C.A.Const. art. 6.

GOODELL, Justice.

The State sued under § 1060, Code of Civil Procedure, for a declaration of its rights and duties under a contract entered into on September 1, 1942 by the Board of State Harbor Commissioners with the defendant Brotherhoods respecting the rates of pay, rules, and working conditions affecting certain employees of the State Belt Railroad. From a judgment in favor of the defendants this appeal was taken on an agreed statement under rule 6a.

The State Belt Railroad is owned by the State of California, and its management, control and operation have always been committed by statute to the Harbor Board. The Railroad operates on the waterfront of San Francisco and its functions and the scope of its activities are fully described in several decisions, including Sherman et al. v. United States, 282 U.S. 25, 51 S.Ct. 41, 75 L.Ed. 143; United States v. State of California, 297 U.S. 175, 56 S.Ct. 421, 80 L.Ed. 567, and Maurice v. State of California, 43 Cal.App.2d 270, 110 P.2d 706. The Railroad has between 125 and 225 employees, depending on the volume of business on hand, and the Harbor Board has approximately 425 other employees engaged in its other harbor activities at San Francisco.

The principal question presented is whether the Railroad is subject to the provisions of the Federal Railway Labor Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 151 et seq. Section 152 thereof provides that "It shall be the duty of all carriers, their officers, agents, and employees to exert every reasonable effort to make and maintain agreements concerning rates of pay, rules, and working conditions, and to settle all disputes, whether arising out of the application of such agreements or otherwise, in order to avoid any interruption to commerce or to the operation of any carrier growing out of any dispute between the carrier and the employees thereof." Other questions in the case are whether, if the Railroad is subject to the Act, the duty of representing it in making and maintaining such agreements is that of the Harbor Board or of the State Personnel Board, and whether such agreements must be approved by the State Department of Finance. The appellant claims that state statutes on these subjects are conflicting.

The contract in question was negotiated and signed by the Harbor Board, and neither the Personnel Board nor the Department of Finance had any hand in it.

The case of United States v. State of California, supra, 297 U.S. 175, 56 S.Ct. 421, 80 L.Ed. 567, is decisive of the main question. That case arose out of a violation by the same State Belt Railroad, of the Federal Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C.A. ch. I, § 6. The United States sued the State for a $100 penalty for the violation; the State resisted payment on the ground that the Belt Railroad was not subject to the Act; the District Court held that it was. The Circuit Court of Appeals reversed, 75 F.2d 41, on a jurisdictional ground, but the Supreme Court reversed the latter court. In holding that the Railroad was an interstate carrier the Supreme Court said that "California, by engaging in interstate commerce by rail, has subjected itself to the commerce power, and is liable for a violation of the Safety Appliance Act, as are other carriers, unless the statute is to be deemed inapplicable to state-owned railroads because it does not specifically mention them. * * * The danger to be apprehended is as great and commerce may be equally impeded whether the defective appliance is used on a railroad which is state-owned or privately-owned. No convincing reason is advanced why interstate commerce and persons and property concerned in it should not receive the protection of the act whenever a state, as well as a privately-owned carrier, brings itself within the sweep of the statute, or why its all-embracing language should not be deemed to afford that protection." [297 U.S. 175, 56 S.Ct. 424.]

In answer to the argument that California in operating the Belt Railroad was performing a public function in its sovereign capacity hence could not constitutionally be subjected to the provisions of the federal act, the court said: "Despite reliance upon the point both by the government and the state, we think it unimportant to say whether the state conducts its railroad in its 'sovereign' or in its 'private' capacity. That in operating its railroad it is acting within a power reserved to the states cannot be doubted. [Citations.] The only question we need consider is whether the exercise of that power, in whatever capacity, must be in subordination to the power to regulate interstate commerce, which has been granted specifically to the national government. The sovereign power of the states is necessarily diminished to the extent of the grants of power to the federal government in the Constitution. * * *"

The sovereignty question was later set at rest by our own Supreme Court in People v. Superior Court, 29 Cal.2d 754, 763, 178 P.2d 1, 6, where it said that "The fact that the service is conducted for the benefit of commerce and without profit is insufficient to take it out of what otherwise would be an industrial and commercial character."

Maurice v. State of California, supra, 43 Cal.App.2d 270, 110 P.2d 706, followed United States v. California, supra, in holding that the State Belt Railroad was subject to the Federal Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq. It held also that it was likewise subject to the Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C.A. ch. II, § 51 et seq.

State of California v. Anglim, 9 Cir., 129 F.2d 455, held that it was subject to the Federal Carriers' Taxing Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 261 et seq.

In United States v. California, supra, the court said that the State Belt Railroad's service did "not differ in any salient feature from that which this Court, in United States v. Brooklyn Terminal, supra, 249 U.S. 296, 304, 305, 39 S.Ct. 283, 63 L.Ed. 613, 6 A.L.R. 527, held to be common carriage by rail in interstate commerce within the meaning of the Federal Hours of Service Act", 45 U.S.C.A. § 61. The analogy just drawn forecasts what the holding would be if the State Belt Railroad's status should come before that court under the latter Act.

The source of the Federal Safety Appliance Act, the Federal Employers' Liability Act, the Federal Carriers' Taxing Act and the Federal Hours of Service Act is the commerce clause and that, too, is the source of the Railway Labor Act. If the State Belt Railroad is within the purview of all those pieces of interstate legislation it is certainly subject to the Railway Labor Act.

In United States v. California, supra, the court attached no importance to the fact that the Safety Appliance Act was silent as to its applicability to states or state-owned carriers. In several places in the opinion that subject is mentioned and discounted, hence appellant's argument that Congress could not have intended the Railway Labor Act to apply to states or state-owned railroads, is not persuasive despite the citation of four statutes where Congress took pains to expressly exclude states.

[1, 2] Under the authorities it must be held that the State Belt Railroad is subject to the Federal Railway Labor Act and that in dealing with its employees who are themselves within that act the State of California is bound to deal on the same basis and in the same way as would a privately-owned carrier. If, as a consequence, some action or other of the Harbor Board in connection with the contract should collide with some conflicting provision of state law, there simply would be nothing the Board could do about it but follow the course of conduct dictated or called for by the Railway Labor Act, wheresoever that might lead, since the latter act is "the supreme Law of the Land". Const. Art. VI. It is the plain duty of this and every other state court in such cases to see that the supremacy clause is obeyed.

The State next contends that "the Harbor Board did not have and does not have authority to collectively bargain or to make a collective bargaining contract providing for rates of pay and working conditions in conflict with state civil service laws."

The State also contends that there is a direct conflict between § 1705, Harbors and Navigation Code and § 18004, Government Code.

Section 1705 reads: "* * * The [Harbor] board shall fix the compensation of its officers and employees other than the commissioners." When the contract was made in 1942 the section read substantially the same.

Section 18004 reads: "Unless the Legislature specifically provides that approval of the Department of Finance is not required, whenever any State agency or court fixes the salary or compensation of an employee or officer, which salary is payable in whole or in part out of State funds, the salary is subject to the approval of the Department of Finance before it becomes effective and payable * * *." When the contract was made in 1942 this was § 675.1, Pol.Code, which read substantially the same.

These doubts as to the agency wherein the contractual authority resides and this apparent conflict in legislation, call for an inquiry into the Harbor Board's powers and jurisdiction.

We shall not attempt to give a complete chronological history of the legislation relating to the Harbor Board, but merely enough of it to show that such part thereof as bears on the present problems has followed one definite and uniform pattern with singular consistency for almost nine decades.

By an act of the legislature approved April 24, 1863, the Board of State Harbor Commissioners was created, and called by that name. Stats.1863, p. 406. It is so named today.

The act of 1863 provided for three commissioners and the board is still composed of three commissioners.

The act of 1863 directed that the commissioners should take possession of and hold all that portion of the Bay of San Francisco lying along the water front and for the distance of 600 feet into the waters of the bay. The jurisdiction of the Board so vested has never been narrowed but has been materially enlarged. The section dealing with the Board's jurisdiction became § 2524, Pol.Code, and eventually found its way into several sections of the Harbors and Navigation Code.

The same act of 1863 provided in § 12 that "No contract or obligation entered into by the Commissioners under this Act, which creates a liability, or authorizes the payment of money, shall be valid and of binding force unless the same shall be signed by all three of said Commissioners, and countersigned by the Secretary of the Board * * *." This became § 2527, Pol.Code, then § 1990, H. & N. Code, which reads substantially the same today as did the Act of 1863.

As early as 1876, § 2524, Pol.Code, provided that "The commissioners shall have power to make reasonable rules and regulations concerning the control and management of the property of the state, which is intrusted to them by virtue of this article * * *." Section 1900, H. & N.Code, now reads substantially the same.

Sixty-one years ago § 2552, Pol.Code, was amended, Stats.1889, p. 388, to fix the salaries of the president of the board, the other two commissioners, other officers and certain employees. It also provided that "The Board must fix the compensation of the other employees." When § 1705, H. & N.Code, was enacted in 1937, it contained substantially the same provision. In 1945 § 1705 was amended and now reads: "* * * The board shall fix the compensation of its officers and employees other than the commissioners."

In 1889 the legislature adopted "An Act to authorize the Board of State Harbor Commissioners to construct railroads over State lands, and lands within their jurisdiction, along the exterior waterfront line of the City and County of San Francisco, and to regulate the use of the same." Stats.1889, p. 388. This apparently was the birth of the State Belt Railroad. In 1913 the board's powers were enlarged with respect to the "state railroad", Stats.1913, p. 383, and in 1937, § 3150, H. & N.Code, restated those powers.

[3, 4] The foregoing sketch suffices to show that the Harbor Board legislation is special in its very nature and character. However, authority is not wanting, for in Bateman v. Colgan, Controller, 111 Cal. 580, 585, 44 P. 238, 240, the court, speaking of § 2524, Pol.Code, which as we have just seen dealt with the Harbor Board's jurisdiction, said: "section 2524 is a part of a special act, applicable to one particular board". The Bateman case held that the Harbor Board, in contracting for the construction of the Ferry Building in San Francisco, correctly resorted to the legal machinery provided by its own legislation, § 2524, in apparent disregard of the provisions of a statute called the "Public Buildings Act". The force of Bateman v. Colgan in its applicability to the instant case is manifest when it is pointed out that the "Public Buildings Act" required "the plans, estimates, etc., to be submitted for approval to the governor, treasurer, and secretary of state, and the contracts thereunder to be certified by the attorney general, before commencing construction." Despite these clear requirements the Harbor Board went ahead under its own contract-making powers as prescribed in § 2524, without submitting anything to the four officials named in the other statute. In upholding the Board's action the court, discussing the two statutes and the dates of their adoption, said, 111 Cal. 586, 44 P. 240: "It is not pretended that there is any express repeal, and it is an established rule of construction that the law does not favor a repeal by implication, but that, where there are two provisions relating to the same subject-matter, they must, if possible, be construed so as to maintain the integrity of both. And, where two statutes treat of the same subject, one being special and the other general, unless they are irreconcilably inconsistent, the latter, although latest in date, will not be held to have repealed the former, but the special act will prevail in its application to the subject-matter so far as coming within its particular provisions."

The rule (see 23 Cal.Jur. pp. 706–709) is well settled and has been repeatedly applied, two recent cases being In re Shull, 23 Cal.2d 745, 146 P.2d 417, and Division of Labor Law Enforcement v. Moroney, 28 Cal.2d 344, 170 P.2d 3.

[5] In the instant case the contract of 1942 was negotiated and signed by the Harbor Board without any approval by the Department of Finance, and despite the provisions of § 675.1, Pol.Code, now § 18004, Gov.Code. It was made under the authority and within the framework of the Harbor Board's own legislation. The parallel is perfect between this and the Bateman case since in both instances the apparently conflicting legislation required the approval of other state officers. On the authority of that case, and others like it dealing with conflicts between general and special acts, we must hold that the provisions of § 675.1, now § 18004, being statewide and general in their scope, do not touch or affect compensation fixed by the Harbor Board for its employees under the special provisions of the Harbor Board legislation as a whole, and of § 1705 in particular.

[6, 7] Bateman v. Colgan happens, incidentally, to state another familiar rule, namely, that "where power is given to perform an act, the authority to employ all necessary means to accomplish the end is always one of the implications of the law * * *." Section 3150, Harbors and Navigation Code, gives the Board authority to maintain and operate the State Belt Railroad. A railroad cannot be maintained or operated without hands, and hands have to be paid. Section 1705 expressly provides that the board shall fix their compensation. Certainly, then, the power to maintain and operate the railroad and to fix the compensation of its employees carries with it the authority to negotiate contracts which fix the rates of such compensation.

The vesting of these powers in the Harbor Board necessarily excludes the exercise of the same powers by the State Personnel Board, the Department of Finance, or any other state agency. Again, see the Bateman case, supra, 111 Cal. at page 583, 44 P. at page 239, holding that the Harbor Board is vested with the "control and management exclusively, with certain exceptions not pertinent here, in said harbor commissioners."

[8] Appellant's contention that the power to enter into agreements respecting wages, hours and working conditions of Belt Railroad employees resides in the State Personnel Board, not the Harbor Board, is set at rest by the failure of the Civil Service Act to vest in the Personnel Board any such power either expressly or by implication. That Board has purely administrative functions. It and its executive officer are charged with the duty of administering the Civil Service Act throughout the State. It is vested with no powers of management or operation such as those expressly vested in the Harbor Board.

Moreover, the Harbor Board has always had broad contract-making powers, while those of the Personnel Board are extremely narrow and limited. Appellant has directed our attention to none, and the only ones we have found are in §§ 18706, 18707, Gov. Code, which relate to agreements with personnel agencies in other jurisdictions, political subdivisions, State agencies excepted from State civil service, counties, cities, districts and other subdivisions of the State—all of which might be said to be inter-departmental.

The remaining problems relate to provisions of state law which are seemingly inconsistent with the contract.

In 1934 Article XXIV dealing with State Civil Service was added to the State Constitution. Section 1 provides that "Permanent appointments and promotion in the State Civil Service shall be made exclusively under a general system based upon merit, efficiency and fitness as ascertained by competitive examination." Section 2 creates the State Personnel Board and § 3 vests it with all "the powers, duties, purposes, functions and jurisdiction" formerly vested in any State officer or agency under the old 1913 Civil Service law. Section 4 provides that State civil service shall include every officer and employee of the State, with fourteen specified exceptions, but the employees of the Belt Railroad are not among them.

In pursuance of those constitutional provisions the legislature in 1937 adopted the present Civil Service Act which replaced the Act of 1913. The new act, Stats.1937, p. 2085, has been codified in §§ 18500 to 19765 of the Government Code. Stats.1945, p. 539.

[9] Appellants draw attention to seven of the principal conflicts apparently existing between our Civil Service Act and the contract of September 1, 1942. The first of these is with respect to rates of pay and overtime. Section 18850, Gov.Code, provides that "The [Personnel] board shall establish and adjust salary ranges for each class of position in the State civil service. * * *" Since Belt Railroad employees are civil service employees the language of § 18850 would be broad enough to include them but for § 1705, H. & N.Code, supra. We have already seen, in discussing § 18004, Gov.Code, ex. 675.1, Pol.Code, that one law is general and the other special. So it is with respect to § 18850. That section does not control § 1705, H. & N.Code, for that section, which is a special law, exclusively governs the fixing of compensation for Harbor Board employees. It follows that there is no conflict between § 18850 and the contract executed pursuant to the Railway Labor Act, or the Act itself.

The other six instances are: (1) dismissals, demotions and suspensions; (2) sick leaves; (3) leaves of absence; (4) promotions; (5) lay-offs, and (6) duration or emergency employees.

[10] Granting that the Civil Service Act contains provisions in conflict with the contract of September 1, 1942, still nothing will be gained by making a detailed comparison of these differences since there are from 125 to 225 employees affected by the contract and it may be safely assumed that the civil service status of the members of such a large group will present perhaps as many variations as there are railroad men. Moreover, there is not in this record sufficient detailed information to show how the various employees are affected either individually or by groups. For these reasons we deem it not only prudent but fairer to the employees to refrain from saying anything (beyond what we have already said) which might be invoked later on if and when specific problems arise in individual disputes.

[11-13] It is perfectly clear that the Railway Labor Act does not so pre-empt the field of regulation of working conditions as to entirely foreclose state action respecting carriers within that Act unless Congress has occupied the field in question to the exclusion of such state action, Terminal Railroad Association of St. Louis v. Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, 318 U.S. 1, 63 S.Ct. 420, 87 L.Ed. 571; see, also, People of the State of California v. Thompson, 313 U.S. 109, 61 S.Ct. 930, 85 L.Ed. 1219. In the Terminal case the court said: "The Railway Labor Act, like the National Labor Relations Act [29 U.S.C.A. § 151 et seq.], does not undertake governmental regulation of wages, hours, or working conditions. Instead it seeks to provide a means by which agreement may be reached with respect to them. The national interest expressed by those Acts is not primarily in the working conditions as such. So far as the Act itself is concerned these conditions may be as bad as the employees will tolerate or be made as good as they can bargain for. The Act does not fix and does not authorize anyone to fix generally applicable standards for working conditions. The federal interest that is fostered is to see that disagreement about conditions does not reach the point of interfering with interstate commerce." [318 U.S. 1, 63 S.Ct. 423.] While that case deals with working conditions, the rule must be the same with respect to such questions as the six instanced by appellant.

[14] It would seem, therefore, that there is still an open field wherein civil service provisions for the benefit of State employees may coexist with such a contract as that of September 1, 1942, without colliding with it or with the paramount federal legislation under which it was made. Indeed it appears that the contract in question contains several provisions dove-tailing it with the State Civil Service Act and giving the Personnel Board certain functions.

[15] We are satisfied that the contract of September 1, 1942 is valid and binding. We are satisfied, also, that we have answered all the other questions propounded in this case, both by the appellant and the intervenor.

Appellant contends that "the trial court failed to adequately deal with the submitted question concerning the validity of the present contract", in that the holding that the contract is valid is inferentially contradicted by two of the conclusions of law.

The first conclusion (numbered III) is "That in negotiating increases in rates of pay the Board * * * is acting as an agent of the State, * * * and of necessity must confer and counsel with the State Personnel Board and State Department of Finance, and any agreement reached with the employees must in proper cases be subject to the approval of both these agencies."

[16] We have held that the power and authority of the Harbor Board was and is exclusive and independent of both the Personnel Board and the Department of Finance. If that holding is correct, then the emphasized portion of the conclusion is not consistent therewith.

The second conclusion (numbered IV) is "That the Board * * * and its president should represent the State in negotiating with the employees working on the State Belt Railroad. Of course, it must counsel and confer with the State Personnel Board and the State Department of Finance, and ultimately the resulting agreement must be such an agreement that meets with the approval of these agencies."

For the reasons just stated, the emphasized portion of the latter conclusion is likewise subject to the same criticism.

Accordingly, under the power granted by § 956a, Code Civ.Proc., we are rewriting the first conclusion to read:

"III.

"That in negotiating under the Railway Labor Act respecting rates of compensation for employees of the State Belt Railroad the Board of State Harbor Commissioners was and is acting as the agent of the State of California, and was and is the only agent or agency of said State authorized and empowered to so act. That in negotiating, making, maintaining and performing all contracts respecting the compensation of said employees said Board is not required by law to confer or counsel with the State Personnel Board or the State Department of Finance, and the contract or contracts so negotiated and entered into, and the rates of compensation so fixed by said Board of State Harbor Commissioners are not in any case subject to the approval of said Personnel Board and said Department of Finance, or either of them."

We are also rewriting the second conclusion to read:

"IV.

"That the Board of State Harbor Commissioners and its President should represent the State in negotiating with the employees working on the State Belt Railroad."

With the conclusions of law modified in the foregoing respects the judgment is affirmed.

BLACHE v. BLACHE et al.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 12, 1950.

Hearing Granted Nov. 9, 1950.*

Action by Anna J. Blache against her husband, Maurice J. Blache, also known as Jean J. M. Blache, and Jeanne C. Pedebidou, also known as Jeanne Blache, wherein plaintiff sought separate maintenance, recovery of certain community property conveyed by the husband to his codefendant, determination of plaintiff's interest in the community property, and allocation of such interest to her. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Edward Molkenbuhr, J., entered judgment ordering Maurice to pay Anna $50 per month for one year for maintenance, and disposing of the community property, but made no disposition as to the increment of the community property. From the judgment entered all three parties filed separate appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that the evidence was sufficient to support the trial court's judgment, but that the trial court had erred in holding that the determination of whether there were increments from the community property and the disposition thereof was not before it.

* Subsequent opinion 233 P.2d 547.

1. Appeal and error 1202, 1214

Where appellate court ordering new trial had directed that whether new additional evidence should be presented was question to be decided by trial court and respective attorneys, it was within discretion of trial court to permit either counsel to try his case anew or to submit it on record of previous trial, either with or without new or additional evidence and trial court did not err in admitting transcript of testimony given at first trial.

Where transcript of evidence in first trial was admitted in evidence on second trial, and at no time during second trial was correctness of transcript questioned or objection made to fact that it had not been certified by reporter, objection to absence of certification could not be made on appeal. Code Civ.Proc. § 273.

3. Husband and wife ⇐298¾

In separate maintenance action by wife against husband and woman with whom husband had contracted voidable second marriage wherein husband filed cross-complaint for divorce and annulment of marriage, evidence sustained trial court's judgment dividing property of parties.

4. Husband and wife ⇐249

Property acquired by spouse during marital relationship but while actually separated from other is community property. Civ.Code, § 164.

5. Judgment ⇐568

While defaulting constitutes admission of truth of material averments of complaint, it is for court in subsequent action to weigh such admission against defaulting party's testimony and determine which to follow.

In wife's separate maintenance action against husband, where it appeared that wife had defaulted in original divorce proceedings instituted by husband on grounds of desertion, but that no judgment of divorce had been entered, trial court could find that wife's admission of desertion by defaulting was contrary to truth where there was corroborated testimony as to acts of physical violence and cruelty by husband when parties last lived together.

A default judgment, if court has jurisdiction, is waiver of one's right to subsequently litigate adjudicated issues.

8. Divorce ⇐172

Where there was default in original divorce proceeding instituted by husband, but no judgment of divorce was entered, issue as to whether husband deserted wife or vice versa was not previously adjudicated.

9. Estoppel ⇐53

To constitute waiver there must be manifest, clear, and unmistakable intention to waive.

10. Husband and wife ⇐297

In separate maintenance action by wife against husband and woman with whom husband had contracted voidable second marriage, evidence sustained trial court's finding that wife had not waived claim to support or to her community interest by her conduct or in her correspondence.

11. Appeal and error ⇐996

Where facts established are such as to reasonably permit opposing inferences to be drawn therefrom and trial court has adopted one and rejected other, appellate court will not disturb findings.

12. Estoppel ⇐55, 56

One of the elements necessary to constitute estoppel is that silence of person sought to be estopped has been relied upon by other party or has caused such party to change his position.

13. Husband and wife ⇐297

In separate maintenance action by wife against husband and woman with whom husband had contracted voidable second marriage, where it appeared that wife had first learned in 1932 that no judgment of divorce had been entered in proceedings instituted by her husband but that she had not brought her action until 1939, evidence sustained trial court's findings that wife had not been guilty of laches and was not estopped to claim support or her community interest. Civ.Code, §§ 124, 125.

14. Limitation of actions ⇐197(1)

In separate maintenance action by wife against husband and woman with whom husband had contracted voidable second marriage, evidence sustained trial court's finding that cause of action, in so far as it related to recovery of both real and personal property and other relief, was not barred by statute of limitations. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 338, subd. 3, 4, 343.

15. Husband and wife ⇐270(8)

In separate maintenance action by wife against husband and woman with whom husband had contracted voidable second marriage, evidence sustained trial court's findings that certain transfers of real and personal property made by husband to "other woman" had been fraudulent because made without consideration, not in good faith, and for purpose of depriving wife of her community interest therein, notwithstanding that transfers were made pursuant to written agreement and purportedly in settlement of "other woman's" right to damages against said husband because of his action in purporting to marry her when he was legally unable to do so. Code Civ.Proc. § 1962, subd. 2; Civ.Code, § 172a, 3439.07.

16. Fraudulent conveyances ⇐163

Where transferee participates in fraudulent intent, transfer is void as to transferor's creditors, even though valuable consideration may have been paid. Civ.Code, § 3439.07.

17. Husband and wife ⇐265

Where husband transferred certain property to "other woman" after informing her of his valid pre-existing marriage, wife, who had not joined in conveyance and who brought her action within one year, could avoid transfers. Civ.Code, § 172a.

Where divorce has already been granted, or husband has died, conveyance of community property by husband without wife's consent may be set aside only as to her community one-half interest, but where community still exists conveyance may be set aside in its entirety.

Where divorce or separate maintenance proceeding is pending, court has power to set aside entire transfer of community property made by one spouse without other's consent awaiting its disposition of community property.

In separate maintenance action by wife against husband and woman with whom husband had contracted voidable second marriage, it was proper for court to set aside entire transfer of community property made by husband to "other woman" so that husband's share might also be subject to court's order.

21. Husband and wife ⇐270(7)

In separate maintenance action by wife against husband and woman with whom husband had contracted voidable second marriage, where wife sought cancellation of husband's transfers of property to codefendant, and one count of complaint alleged fraud on information and belief but later paragraph of complaint alleged that transfer had been made with intent to conceal ownership of property and to prevent wife from obtaining any part of it and in order to defraud wife, complaint was sufficient and demurrer was properly overruled.

In separate maintenance action by wife against husband and woman with whom husband had contracted voidable second marriage, where complaint alleged the marriage and that plaintiff and her husband were still husband and wife, and aside from "other woman's" denial of allegation by her answer there was no claim made that marriage had been dissolved, so far as proceedings at trial was concerned, dissolution of first marriage or validity of second marriage was not issue and therefore could not be raised on appeal.

23. Appeal and error ⇐1214

On retrial of separate maintenance action by wife against husband, trial court did not err in awarding payment of $50 per month for one year as support money where such award was supported by her showing of need at time of first trial, notwithstanding failure of wife to testify at second trial as to her present need and regardless of whether that need continued to time of second trial. Civ.Code, § 137.

In separate maintenance action by wife against husband and woman with whom husband had contracted voidable second marriage, where husband filed cross-complaint for divorce and annulment of marriage, husband's failure to appeal from judgment denying his cross-complaint left judgment final as to him and on issues set forth in cross-complaint, and therefore court did not err, on re-trial of action, in not considering issues raised in such cross-complaint, notwithstanding that in reversing judgment on first trial appellate court had used language "in other respects judgment is reversed".

25. Husband and wife ⇐272(4)

Spouse who was entitled to be awarded share of community property was also entitled to be awarded increment from that share.

26 Husband and wife ⇐298¾

In separate maintenance action by wife against husband and woman with whom husband had contracted voidable second marriage, where wife sought share of community property and alleged that rentals, issues and profits of certain real property were community property, determination of whether there were increments from community property and disposition thereof was before court.

David Livingston, Louis F. DiResta, San Francisco, for appellant.

BRAY, Justice.

Action started in 1939 brought by Anna, wife, against defendant Maurice, her husband, and defendant Jeanne, with whom Maurice had contracted an illegal marriage, and in which Anna sought separate maintenance, the recovery of certain community property conveyed by Maurice to Jeanne, and a determination of Anna's interest in the community property and an allocation of such interest to her. This case was before this court in Blache v. Blache, 69 Cal. App.2d 616, 160 P.2d 136[1] and in Blache v. Blache, 78 Cal.App.2d 168, 177 P.2d 345. From the judgment rendered on the retrial, all three parties have filed separate appeals.

Facts.

A detailed statement of the history of the parties appears in the opinion in the Blache case. Only such facts as are necessary to this opinion will be set forth here. Anna and Maurice were married in 1912. In the following two years they separated three times, the final separation occurring in Canada. Maurice came to California, and in 1916 sued for divorce, alleging that Anna had deserted him. She defaulted. When the case came on for trial the court refused to grant the divorce without further corroboration. Later the action was dismissed by the court. In 1918 Maurice (although still not divorced from Anna, but believing that he was) married Jeanne.

Anna started this action in 1939. Maurice cross-complained for a divorce on the grounds of cruelty and desertion, and also for an annulment of the marriage, based upon alleged fraud in obtaining his consent to the marriage contract. The trial court denied Maurice any relief on his cross-complaint, and denied Anna a monthly sum for separate maintenance, but awarded Anna $7,989.13 in lieu of her rights in the community property, ordering it to be paid by Jeanne to Anna for the account of Anna, also allowing her attorney's fees, and setting aside transfers of real and personal property made by Maurice to Jeanne on the ground that they were the community property of Anna and Maurice.

Anna appealed, primarily from the court's failure to assign her half of the community property and to award support and maintenance. Maurice did not appeal.

1. Hereinafter referred to as "the Blache case."

Jeanne appealed from the judgment insofar as it affected her. On the appeal, this court held that "The action of the court in striking out the finding of 'wilful neglect,' coupled with the insertion of the provision giving Anna less than one-half of the community property, and the evidence in the case, make it necessary to reverse the judgment. * * *

"In view of the conclusions reached herein it does not seem necessary to consider further questions raised by appellant Jeanne. Whether the property described in the complaint was the separate property of Jeanne is a question of fact which may be tested again on a retrial." 69 Cal.App.2d at page 631, 160 P.2d at page 144.

"The judgment in so far as it refers to attorney fees and all provisions of said judgment protective of those fees are affirmed; the portions of the judgment adjudicating Maurice's ownership of one-half of the real and personal property, and vacating and setting aside certain transfers of his interests in such properties to Jeanne, insofar as such transfers affect his one-half interest, and the provisions of the judgment granting an injunction against Maurice until the rights of the parties can be determined, are also affirmed; in other respects the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial in accordance with the views herein expressed." 69 Cal.App. 2d at page 633, 160 P.2d at page 145.

At the retrial judgment was rendered (1) ordering Maurice to pay Anna for maintenance $50 per month for one year, (2) setting aside the transfers of real and personal property by Maurice to Jeanne, (3) awarding Anna one-fourth of the bank account and one-fourth of certain stock which Maurice had transferred to Jeanne, (4) awarding Maurice one-fourth of this bank account and stock, (5) awarding Anna and Maurice each one-fourth of the real property theretofore conveyed by Maurice to Jeanne, and ordering the latter to make deeds thereof accordingly, (6) impressing liens in favor of Anna and her attorneys upon the interests of Maurice in the properties and on the obligations of Jeanne to Maurice under the judgment, (7) granting Jeanne a $10,000 lien on Anna's interest in the property and assets and a similar lien on Maurice's interest, (8) enjoining Maurice and Jeanne from disposing of any of the property until the judgment in favor of Anna has been satisfied in full (not applying, however, to Jeanne's residual one-half interest), (9) reserving to the court the power to make further orders as may be necessary to carry the judgment into effect, and (10) granting Anna $584.37 costs against Maurice and Jeanne.

The appeals of each party will be considered separately, except where two parties make the same contention, as—

Use of Prior Trial Testimony.

[1] The opinion of this court, 69 Cal. App.2d at page 631, 160 P.2d at page 144, said: "Whether the factual questions on a new trial should be submitted on the same record, or whether new or additional evidence should be presented, is a question to be decided by the trial court and the respective attorneys." (Emphasis added.) At the second trial Anna did not appear personally. Over the determined objections of both Maurice and Jeanne, the transcript of testimony of Anna and five other witnesses given at the first trial was admitted. Both Maurice and Jeanne complain of this as error, and point out that ordinarily the prior testimony of a party or witness can only be used where the foundation is laid by showing that the witness is absent, infirm, dead, etc., or where it is used for impeachment purposes. The court's ruling in permitting use of the transcript was based upon the above-quoted sentence in the Blache opinion. A careful study of that sentence justifies the position taken by the trial court. It means that on the new trial it was in the discretion of the court to permit either counsel to try his case anew or to submit it on the record of the previous trial either with or without new or additional evidence. The construction contended for by both defendants, to the effect that the sentence means that if all counsel and the court agree, the new trial could be had on the previous record alone or with new or additional evidence, makes the sentence unnecessary and meaningless. This would be true of all retrials, whether the appellate court mentions the subject or not. Defendants claim they were at a disadvantage as their witnesses were present in person and the major portion of Anna's case was submitted on the cold record, and therefore the court did not have an opportunity, as it did with defendant's witnesses, of observing the demeanor of Anna and her witnesses to determine their credibility. Actually, as a general rule, the person who submits his case on a cold record is at a disadvantage as against the one who presents the witnesses. Defendants must have been poor witnesses, indeed, when the trial court refused to believe them. While both defendants contend that they were deprived of the opportunity of cross-examining Anna, it must be pointed out that at the previous trial, Maurice's attorney cross-examined her for approximately 245 pages of the transcript and Jeanne's attorney waived his right to examine. Moreover, if defendants desired to further examine Anna, they could have taken her deposition.

Cases like Kuehn v. Carlos, 32 Cal.App. 2d 295, 89 P.2d 672, and Kuck v. Raftery, 117 Cal.App. 755, 4 P.2d 552, are not applicable here. The use of the transcript in this case was on the direct mandate of the appellate court, which undoubtedly had in mind the great length of the previous trial and desired to provide a method of shortening the new trial.

[2] Defendants make a point of the fact that the transcript used was not certified by the reporter as provided in section 273 of the Code of Civil Procedure. At no time during the trial did they raise this objection nor question the correctness of the transcript, nor do they now question its correctness. It is too late to object to it now.

Sufficiency of the Evidence.

[3] Both defendants contend that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment, insofar as it affects each. This requires a consideration of the particular findings of the court and will be discussed together with other questions if raised as to such findings. Generally, the language of the court in the Blache case, 69 Cal.App. 2d at page 624, 160 P.2d at page 141, applies to the claim here that the evidence is insufficient: "There appear enough contradictory and inconsistent statements in the transcript of the testimony of each of the three principal parties to justify this court in sustaining a finding contrary to the testimony of any one of the parties. Arguments in the briefs that one party should be believed and not the other will not be considered in detail."

Community or Separate Property?

As did the trial court at the first trial, the trial court at the new trial found that one-half of all property which had been accumulated by defendants during their putative marriage was the community property of Anna and Maurice, even though Anna in no wise contributed to its accumulation. Except as it is affected by the transfers by Maurice to Jeanne, which will be considered later, the evidence is strong that the property was accumulated, as found by the court, by the joint efforts of Maurice and Jeanne, and is the property of Maurice and Jeanne in equal shares. While defendant Jeanne contends that the accumulation grew from a sum of about $10,000 which Jeanne claimed to have had at the time of her marriage, plus her skill and efforts, the evidence well supports the conclusion to which the trial court came. The judge succinctly expressed it in his opinion: "There is some evidence that Jeanne invested some of her own money—the total amount of which is not too convincing—into the business. Counsel for plaintiff are willing to concede it to be the sum of $10,000.00 and that Jeanne is entitled to this sum plus a reasonable return on her investment. Because of the rapidity in which money was made by Maurice and Jeanne, I believe that Jeanne is entitled to have $20,000.00 returned to her. I am definitely of the opinion that it was not the investment of any sum of money by Jeanne which caused the accumulation of so much in so short a time but that it was the technical and business ability of Maurice in a specialized field coupled with the thrift and help of Jeanne." The trial court obviously did not believe Jeanne's story that there was an agreement between her and Maurice that the business of the Blache Film Laboratory, and the profits therefrom, were to be her separate property. This is the testimony upon which both defendants base their claim that placing the property in joint tenancy constituted a gift from Jeanne to Maurice.

[4] Defendants contend that in order for the property acquired by the husband to be community property the spouses must be actually living together. We can find no such requirement. Section 164 of the Civil Code defines community property as all property acquired during marriage by either husband or wife, other than that mentioned in certain code sections not applicable here. There is no requirement that the husband and wife must be living together at the time of acquisition. There are any number of cases in California holding that property acquired by a spouse during the marital relationship but while actually separated from the other is community property. Britton v. Bryson, 216 Cal. 362, 14 P.2d 502, is one. There the spouses did not live together during a period of over thirty years.

[9–11] Again, they contend that Anna by her conduct and in her correspondence waived and is estopped from making any claim to support or community interest and was guilty of laches. This is based partly upon the claim that by an express oral agreement made in 1914 Anna agreed to make no claims on Maurice. Although Jeanne's brief states that Maurice's testimony as to the conversation in which this agreement is claimed to have been made was not contradicted by Anna, the record shows that it was. Anna at first stated that she did not recall any such conversation, and later flatly denied that it had taken place. It was the trial court's province to determine whether to believe Maurice or Anna. The judge at the first trial as well as the one at the second trial refused to believe Maurice. See the Blache case, supra, 69 Cal.App.2d at pages 621 and 624, 160 P.2d at page 136. This point is also based upon the fact that from 1916 to 1932 she made no effort to locate Maurice, although she knew the address of the attorney who represented him in the divorce suit which he brought against her, and that in 1932 when she learned of the Blache Film Laboratory in San Francisco she did not immediately pursue the matter after phoning once and learning that he was not in. It is based also upon the correspondence. While from these facts and statements in the letters the conclusion could be drawn that Anna did not intend to hold Maurice responsible for her support or to claim any interest in the community property, there was no express waiver of either. To constitute a waiver the courts have held that there must be manifest a clear and unmistakable intention to waive. See Jones v. Lamont, 118 Cal. 499, 50 P. 766, 62 Am.St.Rep. 251; Estate of Minier, 215 Cal. 31, 8 P.2d 123, 81 A.L.R. 689. Moreover, while the letters are susceptible to the above-mentioned conclusion, they are also reasonably susceptible to a contrary conclusion, which is the one the court drew. As said in the Blache case, supra, 69 Cal.App.2d at page 632, 160 P.2d at page 144: "Whether Maurice deserted Anna or vice versa is entirely a question of fact. The same statement may be made in reference to letters subsequently written by Anna to Maurice." "The rule is well settled that where the facts established are such as to reasonably permit opposing inferences to be drawn therefrom and the trial court has adopted one and rejected the other, an appellate court will not disturb the finding." Baylis v. Baylis, 48 Cal.App.2d 674, 679, 120 P.2d 89, 91.

[12, 13] In May, 1932, Anna learned for the first time that the Los Angeles divorce proceeding had not been completed. Both defendants claim that because of her failure to bring action until 1939, Anna is estopped to make any claims. One of the elements necessary to constitute an estoppel is that the silence of the person sought to be estopped has been relied upon by the other party, or has caused the latter to change his position. See Burgess v. California Mutual B. & L. Ass'n, 210 Cal. 180, 290 P. 1029. The evidence shows that substantially all of the property had been accumulated before May, 1932, and hence Jeanne was not misled by the failure of Anna to act promptly. The evidence discloses no change of position by Jeanne, based on her lack of knowledge of the validity of her marriage, after that date. Anna's letters show that she was withholding action because of Maurice's representations that Jeanne was ill and that the shock of learning the truth might prove injurious or even fatal. The case of Hensgen v. Silberman, 87 Cal.App.2d 668, 197 P.2d 356, cited by Jeanne, is clearly distinguishable from our case. There the wife and husband went to Mexico and made the necessary arrangements for a Mexican mail-order divorce, in which the wife was granted a final decree of divorce. Thereafter in good faith and relying upon this divorce, one Rose married the ex-husband and lived with him for five years as his wife. In the meantime the first wife, with knowledge of the remarriage, herself remarried. Even though she visited at the home of the husband and his new wife several times, at no time did she claim the invalidity of the Mexican divorce nor Rose's marriage, until the death of the husband about five years after his marriage to Rose, at which time she made claim to joint savings accounts and other property of Rose and her husband. The court held that the first wife was estopped from claiming any interest in the property as she permitted Rose to hold herself out as the lawful wife and to "incur the benefits and obligations incident to a valid marriage", 87 Cal.App.2d at page 673, 197 P.2d at page 359, and also to work and pool her earnings with his. There was no such situation here. Practically all of the pooling had been done prior to Anna's discovery of the true situation, and Anna's permitting Jeanne to continue thereafter to hold herself out as Maurice's wife was in the interests of Jeanne's health. We cannot say that under the evidence, as a matter of law the court's findings on laches and estoppel were erroneous.

[14] The court found that Anna's cause of action for maintenance was not barred by sections 124 or 125 of the Civil Code. In other words, it found that there was no unreasonable lapse of time before the commencement of the action nor such lapse of time as to establish the presumption that there was condonation of the offense or full acquiescence therein. The court found Maurice guilty of desertion, failure to provide for Anna for more than one year prior to the commencement of the action, and adultery. While there is evidence upon which the court could have found that Anna's cause of action was so barred, there was contrary evidence, and we are bound by the court's finding thereon. The same thing applies to the court's finding that the cause of action as it related to the recovery of both real and personal property and other relief was not barred by subdivisions 3 and 4 of section 338, and section 343, of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[15] On May 25, 1939, shortly after Maurice told Jeanne of his marriage to Anna, Maurice and Jeanne signed a withdrawal slip and the latter withdrew the entire bank account of $15,978.26 from their joint tenancy account and redeposited it under the name of "Lucille Codo" and shortly after withdrew it from that account and redeposited it under the fictitious name of "Mary White." About the same time Maurice transferred to Jeanne his interest in 100 shares of Pacific Gas and Electric Company stock issued in the names of Maurice and Jeanne as joint tenants. On June 1, 1939, both defendants signed a document called a settlement and release of claims, which set forth that Jeanne had "presented certain claims" against Maurice "to real property standing in * * * [their] joint names * * * as well as for damages resulting from misrepresentations and concealments of * * * [Maurice] which caused * * * [Jeanne] to believe that she was * * * [his] legal wife * * * and which resulted in damages and losses to" her, "and also for services and for monies had and received," and that Jeanne had a good cause of action against Maurice based upon said claims and had indicated her intention of suing him unless satisfactory adjustments were made; that Maurice had admitted the justice of the claims and desired to remedy the wrong and to restore "to her that which is actually hers." Maurice then agreed, in settlement, to convey to her by deed all his interest in the five parcels of real estate then standing in the names of Maurice and Jeanne as joint tenants. The same day he executed deeds to Jeanne of his interest in said real property. The trial court found that these transfers of both personal and real property were fraudulent because they were made without consideration, not in good faith, and for the purpose of depriving Anna of her community interest therein. Both defendants contend that the court's finding is not supported by the evidence and that there was ample consideration, as Jeanne was foregoing her right to damages against Maurice, because of his action in purporting to marry her when he was legally unable to do so, citing Lazzarevich v. Lazzarevich, 88 Cal.App.2d 708, 200 P.2d 49. While it is true she had such right, the court found that in obtaining the transfers she, in effect, was not asserting or enforcing such right, but was attempting to defraud Anna. In spite of the presumption of consideration from the execution of the written instruments, the conclusive presumption of section 1962, subdivision 2, Code of Civil Procedure (which binds only the parties to the agreement) and Jeanne's testimony on the subject, there was substantial evidence to support the court's finding to the contrary. The circumstances of the case, the transfer by Maurice of his interest in the bank account, and Jeanne's redeposit of it in another name, before the so-called settlement of claim was made, the contradictory testimony of Maurice and Jeanne that the property was hers alone and had been placed in joint tenancy on a banker's advice to avoid probate expense, Jeanne's refusal at first to account for the money, are evidence to the contrary, or at least raise reasonable inferences to the contrary.

[16] Moreover, assuming that there was consideration for the transfers, they nevertheless were fraudulent under section 3439.07 of the Civil Code as being conveyances made to hinder, delay or defraud a creditor (here, Anna). "Where the transferee participates in the fraudulent intent, the transfer is void as to creditors, even though a valuable consideration may have been paid. [Citations.]" Rossen v. Villanueva, 175 Cal. 632, 635, 166 P. 1004, 1005.

[17] Again, Anna, the legal wife, had the right to have the transfer of the real property set aside under the provisions of section 172a of the Civil Code, which provides: "The husband has the management and control of the community real property, but the wife * * * must join with him in executing any instrument by which such community real property or any interest therein * * * is sold, conveyed, or encumbered; * * *." The exception that the section does not apply to a purchaser in good faith without knowledge of the marriage relation is not applicable here, as, of course, Jeanne knew of the marriage relation at the time the transfer was made. The suit to avoid the transfer was brought within the year prescribed by the section.

Maurice's One-Fourth.

[18–20] Jeanne claims that in any event the court erred in setting aside that portion of the transfers which included Maurice's one-half of the community interest or a one-fourth interest in the whole property. She points out that Maurice did not ask for the setting aside of the transfers. She cites authorities such as Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. California Development Co., 171 Cal. 173, 152 P. 542, to the effect that a transfer may be good as between the parties even though void as to creditors, and cases such as Taylor v. Russell, 8 Cal.App.2d 61, 47 P.2d 305, to the effect that a decree avoiding a deed as to creditors of the grantor leaves the deed operative between the parties. These principles are applicable in the event that Maurice should attempt to assert adverse claims against Jeanne. They do not apply, however, to the action of the court in setting aside the transfer of the entire community interest so that it may be available in the maintenance action for disposition by the court. Under certain circumstances it could award the entire community interest to the wife, or, as here, could award her merely half and require the other half to be subject to payment of its order for support. Heuer v. Heuer, 33 Cal.2d 268, 201 P.2d 385, does not apply to this situation. In that case the divorce had already been granted. Where such is the situation or the husband has died, it has been held that conveyances by the husband without the wife's consent may be set aside only as to her community one-half. Pretzer v. Pretzer, 215 Cal. 659, 12 P.2d 429; Trimble v. Trimble, 219 Cal. 340, 26 P.2d 477. But where the community still exists, the conveyance may be set aside in its entirety. Ballinger v. Ballinger, 9 Cal. 2d 330, 70 P.2d 629; Britton v. Hammell, 4 Cal.2d 690, 52 P.2d 221. Where there is pending either a divorce or maintenance proceeding the court has the power to set aside the entire transfer to await its disposition of the community property. Therefore, here, it was proper for the court to set aside the transfer as to the whole of the community property and to require Jeanne to convey one-fourth to Maurice as well as one-fourth to Anna, so that Maurice's one-fourth may be subject to the court's orders. Moreover, as said in Blache v. Blache, supra, 78 Cal.App.2d 168, 177 P.2d 345, referring to the opinion in the Blache case: "The transfers were held to have been correctly set aside to protect that half of the property which, if on retrial is found not to be the separate property of Jeanne, may be treated as if it were the community property of Maurice and Anna. Blache v. Blache, supra, 69 Cal.App.2d 624, 160 P.2d 136." 78 Cal. App.2d at page 170, 177 P.2d at page 346.

Demurrer.

[21] Jeanne contends that the court's action in overruling her demurrer to the complaint is erroneous because the complaint alleges fraud on information and belief and in general terms. An examination of the first amended complaint fails to support the charge. In one paragraph plaintiff did allege on information and belief that Maurice, with intent to conceal the ownership of all the property from plaintiff and to prevent her from obtaining any part of it, quitclaimed it to Jeanne. However, later, plaintiff positively alleged that Maurice attempted to give all of the community real property to Jeanne, that Maurice and Jeanne conspired with each other to transfer title to the community property to Jeanne for the purpose of defrauding plaintiff with intent to conceal its ownership and to prevent plaintiff from obtaining any interest in it, that in furtherance of the conspiracy Maurice did cause to be made, executed and recorded quitclaim deeds of it to Jeanne. The complaint (while hardly a model of pleading) was sufficient.

Presumptions.

[22] Based upon Mazzenga v. Rosso, 87 Cal.App.2d 790, 197 P.2d 770, both defendants contend that the presumption of the validity of the second marriage overcomes the presumption as to the validity of the first marriage, and then claim that there is no evidence that the first marriage had not been terminated. The finding of continued marriage is not based upon the presumption following from the first marriage, but on the positive testimony that it had not been dissolved. In the amended complaint Anna alleged the marriage and that she and Maurice ever since were and now are husband and wife. Maurice, by failure to deny, admitted it. Jeanne's answer denied the allegation. Anna positively testified that other than the Los Angeles divorce action which was dismissed, she had never been either a plaintiff or defendant in a lawsuit. Maurice testified that in 1932 he found out that he had not obtained a divorce. Except for the formal denial in Jeanne's answer there never was any claim at any time, including the other appeal, that the marriage had been dissolved. The language used by the court shows that "There can be no community property in the absence of a valid marriage. * * * However, Maurice's share of the property acquired during his association with Jeanne may be the community property of himself and Anna in the absence of evidence that their marital status has been legally dissolved * * *." 69 Cal.App.2d at page 624, 160 P.2d at page 140. So far as the proceedings at the trials were concerned, the dissolution of the first marriage or the validity of the second marriage was not an issue. To attempt to raise the question now is trifling with the court.

Necessity for Support.

[23] Maurice also contends that the order for support was invalid because Anna was not present at the trial to testify as to her present needs (her testimony at the prior trial showed her need as of that time). The award of $50 per month for one year is well supported by her showing of need at that time, regardless of whether that need continued to the time of the second trial. There is nothing in section 137, Civil Code, which prohibits the making of such order.

Maurice's Cross-Complaint.

[24] Maurice contends that the court erred in not considering the issues raised in his cross-complaint. The court found: "The issues presented by Maurice's cross-complaint for divorce and annulment were disposed of at the previous trial of this case, and the decision at said trial on said issues is embodied in [certain] Findings * * * filed in this case at the conclusion of said previous trial. Maurice did not appeal from the judgment entered pursuant to said findings, and said decision upon said issues became final." This finding is correct. Maurice's failure to appeal from the judgment denying his cross-complaint left the judgment final as to him on the issues set forth in the cross-complaint. Anna's appeal, of course, was not from that part of the judgment denying Maurice relief under his cross-complaint. Nor did Jeanne appeal therefrom. (It is doubtful if she could have done so.) Therefore, the issues under the cross-complaint were not before the appellate court, and it had no power to reverse the judgment thereon, had it wished to do so. The language used in the opinion, 69 Cal.App.2d at page 633, 160 P.2d at page 145, "in other respects the judgment is reversed," cannot be stretched to cover that portion of the judgment which was not before the appellate court. The judgment against Maurice on his cross-complaint is separate from the rest of the judgment in the case. The situation here is somewhat similar to that in Neill v. Five C. Refining Co., 79 Cal.App.2d 191, at page 194, 179 P.2d 818, at page 820, where the court said:

"Maguire contends that the judgment which it consented to against itself is not binding in this case, because it was thereafter reversed by the District Court of Appeal. Coates v. Maguire etc. Corp., 47 Cal. App.2d 275, 117 P.2d 898.

"However, the judgment which was reversed by the District Court of Appeal was against another defendant in the same action. No appeal was perfected by Maguire, and the two judgments are separate. Code of Civil Procedure sec. 579. Therefore, the judgment against Maguire was not considered by the District Court of Appeal, and remained final despite the reversal of the judgment as to the other defendant. Lake v. Superior Court, 187 Cal. 116, 200 P. 1041; Smith v. Anglo-California Trust Co., 205 Cal. 496, 271 P. 898."

Moreover, the trial court in effect found on the matters set up in the cross-complaint. It specifically found that Anna was not guilty of extreme cruelty towards Maurice. Its finding that Maurice deserted Anna negatives Maurice's allegations that she deserted him, or was guilty of fraud in marrying him with the intent not to live with him. The refusal of the trial court to consider Maurice's cross-complaint in no wise prevented Maurice from asserting and presenting to the court, as he did, all of the defenses he claimed to have against all matters raised by her complaint.

Anna's Appeal.

[25, 26] Anna's sole ground of appeal is that the court failed to dispose of the increment of the community property, consisting of moneys in the bank and certain stocks. The court found that money was deposited in various banks in San Francisco and that various shares of stock were purchased by Jeanne but "said assets are not before the Court for disposition." We are unable to determine the foundation of such a statement. In the amended complaint it is alleged that "the rentals, issues and profits of said real property are community property, and are of a monthly value in excess of One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00)." In the prayer plaintiff asks that all of the community property be set aside to her and that a receiver be appointed to take control of all of the community property. Thus, the determination of whether there were increments from the community property, and the disposition thereof, was before the court. It is a little difficult to determine Jeanne's position on this subject. She seems to contend that any division of the increment would be an allowance to Anna of maintenance or support which the court could not allow for certain reasons which she sets forth in her answering brief. But such a contention is wrong. A spouse who is entitled to be awarded a share of the community property is also entitled to be awarded the increment from that share. "There is no constitutional or statutory provision expressly declaring that 'rents, issues, and profits' of community property shall partake of the same attributes of ownership as the capital property, but such characteristic must follow as a matter of law, because the right of beneficial use is an incident of ownership." Boyd v. Oser, 23 Cal.2d 613, 621, 145 P.2d 312, 316. The second contention made by Jeanne is that the "Court's function on retrial was simply to determine title to a one-half interest in the properties." Assuming that this was the court's only function, she does not specify why increment is not included in this specification. Increment is a part of the "properties." If she means that the retrial was merely to determine whether Jeanne had any interest in the one-half of the real and personal properties specifically mentioned in the prior opinion (other than the one-half which the court held in that opinion was her separate property), she is wrong. The very purpose of the action was to determine what share plaintiff should be awarded of whatever community property there was, and hence when the court determined that Jeanne had no interest in that half of the property, its functions did not end but it was required to dispose of the whole of that half interest, necessarily including increments.

In the judgment, the court reserved the right and power to make further orders and decrees, and possibly it intended that the determination of this matter should be done later. However, it should have been done then. The case will have to be remanded for the purpose of determining the increment applicable to the portion of the community awarded plaintiff. Inasmuch as Anna did not appeal from that portion of the judgment which awarded her one-fourth of the community property, in any event she would not be entitled, as intimated in her brief, to a greater share of the increments than one-fourth.

The judgment insofar as it provides that the increments from the community property are not before the court, is reversed, and the cause remanded for the trial and determination of that issue; in all other respects the judgment is affirmed, Anna to recover her costs on all appeals.

Cr. 4465.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Hearing Granted Oct. 19, 1950.*

Jacob Wissenfeld and others were convicted in the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Joseph M. Maltby, J., of grand theft and a violation of the Dangerous Weapons Control Law, and defendant Wissenfeld appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that evidence was insufficient to sustain the conviction.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for new trial.

Weapons ⇦17(4)

Evidence was insufficient to sustain conviction for grand theft or violation of Dangerous Weapons Control Law. Gen. Laws, Act 1970, § 13.

Enger & Hiller, Los Angeles, Louis Thomas Hiller, Henry S. Gross, Jr., Los Angeles, of counsel, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, William E. James, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

Defendants were charged with grand theft and a violation of Section 13 of the Dangerous Weapons Control Law of 1923, Gen. Laws, Act 1970. Following a conviction on both counts of the information, defendant Wissenfeld alone prosecutes this appeal.

It is contended on appeal that,

1. "The evidence, as a matter of law, is insufficient to sustain a conviction of the crimes as charged in the information."

2. That "There was judicial error in the ruling on the exceptions to the cross-examination of witness Luke."

3. That "There was misconduct of the trial judge in instructing the jury during the absence of both defendant and his counsel."

The record reveals that on the night of August 16 Officers Shaw and Milevich in a police patrol car stopped the car in which the three defendants were riding because its rear license plate "was obviously wired on and was swinging". The three defendants were in the front seat; defendant Wissenfeld was driving the car. Officer Shaw testified to the following conversation with defendant Wissenfeld at this time, "I said, 'What seems to be the trouble with your license plate?' And he looked at it and said that he thought it would stay on and I asked him if the car belonged to him. When he didn't answer the question and said several times he was staying at the Wilton Hotel, I questioned him further about the ownership of the car and he said it belonged to a friend in Los Angeles.

"Q. Did you ask him anything further concerning the friend? A. When I asked what his friend's name was he said he didn't know."

On cross-examination the witness testified,

"Q. In other words, all you did in this particular case was to make the arrest? A. Yes.

* Subsequent opinion 227 P.2d 833.

"Q. After that you turned it over to the investigating officers? A. That is correct.

"Q. And you have told us practically all of the conversation that you had with the defendants at that time? A. All that I remember.

"Q. All that you remember. I take it that at that time you didn't know this car was stolen? A. I assumed that.

"Q. You didn't know it. A. I didn't know it.

"Q. And that is the reason you didn't ask them any questions about stolen automobiles, isn't that correct? A. Well, I did ask them about the ownership of the automobile and so forth.

"Q. He told you it was a friend's? A. He didn't say as to who owned it or whether he owned it."

An automatic and a .32 calibre revolver wrapped in a paper bag were found in the glove compartment of the car. The number on the revolver had been obliterated. In reply to questions regarding these guns defendant Wissenfeld replied to the officers, "Well, I don't know anything about the guns." There is no evidence of any admission of guilt by defendant Wissenfeld as to either count.

Defendant Luke pleaded guilty and in connection with the theft of the car and the ownership of the guns testified as follows:

"Q. Did you on or about the 22nd day of August, 1949, in the County of Los Angeles, State of California, take a certain motor vehicle, the property of Lucia Haskill, with the intent to deprive her of the use of that car? A. I did.

"Q. Was Miss Diltz with you at anytime when you took that automobile? A. She was not.

"Q. Was Mr. Wissenfeld with you at anytime you took that automobile? A. No.

"Q. Did you ever tell Karyl Diltz at anytime that you stole the automobile? A. No, I didn't.

"Q. Did you ever tell Jake Wissenfeld that you ever stole the automobile? A. No.

"Q. Did you have in your possession or in this automobile on the date of your arrest, or was there in the glove compartment of the automobile, the date of your arrest, exhibit 2 in evidence, People's Exhibit 2? Look it over and see if that is the one. A. This is the firearm I had.

"Q. Did Jake Wissenfeld or Karyl Diltz file any of the numbers on this? A. No, they did not.

"Q. Did you file the numbers off this gun? A. Yes.

"Q. Did you ever tell Karyl Diltz or Jake Wissenfeld that you filed the numbers off or you had this gun in your possession? A. No, I didn't.

"Q. Did you permit Mr. Wissenfeld to use your automobile to take out girl friends? A. Yes, I did.

"Q. And at anytime did you ever tell him you had stolen this car? A. No.

"Q. Do you know whether or not Karyl Diltz ever drove this car? A. She did not. She never drove it.

"Q. When did you first meet Jake Wissenfeld? A. It was a Saturday night at the Toddle House in Culver City, the 27th of August, I believe the date was.

"Q. And you had some conversation with Jake that night? A. Yes, I did.

"Q. And without going into all the details, what was said? A. I told him I was looking for a job and I had transportation and if he heard anything, I knew, I heard he was a better and possibly he would know somebody who would have a job for me driving or something like that.

"Q. So he told you he would put you to work? A. He said he might have something coming up and he would keep me in mind.

"Q. By Mr. Zeman: What were your duties with Mr. Wissenfeld? A. I was supposed to drive him around to certain places in Hollywood and Beverly Hills and through Los Angeles to make bets and to pick up collections and he told me that sometimes in case he might have trouble making his collections, he might want me along for that reason.

"Q. I see, and there were no particular hours, were there? A. None. No, there were no particular hours.

"Q. Whenever he needed you? A. Yes.

"Q. Did you have any definite arrangement for salary? A. He would keep me in spending money and pay all the bills. That was the agreement we came to.

"Q. In other words, your salary depended on how lucky he got, is that right? A. That is correct."

Several witnesses testified that defendant Wissenfeld did not have a car.

The only evidence of guilt was that appellant was driving the car at the time of the arrest.

Appellant cites People v. Zervas, 61 Cal. App.2d 381, 142 P.2d 946, which the respondent contends is not applicable because in the instant case the defendant was driving the car and refers to People v. Cole, 141 Cal. 88, 74 P. 547, and People v. Gonzales, 66 Cal.App. 646, 226 P. 946 as appropriate authority. The cited cases are of little help for in the within action the witness Luke testified to the theft of the car which evidence, in the light of the record, cannot be dismissed with the comment of respondent, "Thus, we need not concern ourselves with the 'story' told by the co-defendant Luke, whom the jury disbelieved". Even if the defendant Luke had not testified the only evidence of guilt remains the same.

Without going into detail it is sufficient to note that the cross-examination of the witness Luke was prejudicial. Practically all of appellant's objections were overruled and much of the cross-examination was improper; Luke was not on trial.

With regard to the instructions, the court, in the absence of defendant and counsel when the verdicts were first returned stated, "As to the verdicts on 503, grand theft, you cannot find the same defendant guilty of both offenses, you must find the defendant guilty of one or the other. I do not know what your thought about it was, which one you intended to bring in, but you cannot bring in both. I am going to send you out again and you may come back with one or the other of these verdicts and indicate to us which one you want to be the verdict." (Italics added.)

A review of the record reveals that appellant did not receive the trial that a defendant in a criminal action is entitled to.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial.

KLIMPER v. CITY OF GLENDALE et al.

Civ. 17380.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Sept. 18, 1950.

Hearing Denied Nov. 16, 1950.

Action by Maude Klimper against the City of Glendale and others to recover damages for wrongful issuance of warrant and arrest and imprisonment of plaintiff thereunder. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Kurtz Kauffman, J., entered judgments upon orders sustaining, without leave to amend, demurrers to amended complaint, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Wood, J., held that presentation of a written, verified claim, as required by city charter and ordinance, was a condition precedent to maintaining action against defendant city or an officer thereof upon a claim for damages founded in tort, and that defendant city and its officers were not estopped from relying on plaintiff's failure to present any claim.

1. Evidence ⇨31

Courts take judicial notice of provisions of a city charter making presentation and rejection of a demand against city for money or damages a prerequisite to maintenance of any action thereon.

2. Evidence ⇐32

4. Estoppel ⇐62(5)

That city officials allegedly advised plaintiff that her claim against city and officers thereof for wrongful issuance on warrant and arrest and imprisonment thereunder could be adjusted and that she should await developments did not estop city or officers from relying on plaintiff's failure to file claim at any time as barring action thereon. Henry McClernan, City Attorney, John W. McElheney, Deputy City Attorney and City Prosecutor, Glendale, for respondents City of Glendale, Charles R. Dyer, Mrs. Earle Bullock, Charles Dieffenbach, Frances W. Kelley, W. R. Stenberg and Walter E. Hegi.

WOOD, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of defendants City of Glendale, Charles R. Dyer (Police Judge of Glendale), and five police officers of Glendale, which judgment was entered upon orders sustaining, without leave to amend, demurrers of said defendants. The demurrers of the first two defendants above mentioned were to the second amended complaint. The demurrers of the other defendants above mentioned were to the third amended complaint. Plaintiff also appeals from a judgment in favor of another defendant, Marshall B. Everett, entered upon an order sustaining, without leave to amend, his demurrer to the third amended complaint.

It was alleged in the second amended complaint as follows: The City of Glendale is a political subdivision of California. Defendant Dyer at all times mentioned therein was a police judge of the City of Glendale. Defendant Rassmussen at all times therein mentioned was Chief of Police of said city. Defendant Hegi at said times was a captain of police of said city. Defendants Bullock, Dieffenbach, Kelley, and Stenberg at said times were police officers of said city and were acting under the supervision of defendants Rassmussen and Hegi. On October 27, 1947, defendant Everett filed a complaint in the police court of said city, a copy of which is attached to the third amended complaint and marked exhibit A. (Said exhibit A was entitled "The People of the State of California, Plaintiff, vs. Maude Klimper, Defendant, Complaint—Criminal," and it was alleged therein in substance in count 1 that said Maude Klimper on October 26, 1947, in the city of Glendale did unlawfully, while driving a motor vehicle on San Fernando Road, a public highway in said city, and intending to make a left turn at Princeton Street, an intersecting highway, make the approach for such left turn from a portion of the roadway at a place other than the portion nearest the center line thereof. It was also alleged therein in substance in count 2 that said defendant Klimper on October 26, 1947, in said city did unlawfully, while driving a motor vehicle on San Fernando Road, turn said vehicle from a direct course at a time when such movement could not be made with reasonable safety, and without giving the appropriate signal provided for in subdivision (b) of section 544 of the Vehicle Code. The said "Complaint—Criminal" was signed by said defendant Everett.)

Plaintiff alleged upon information and belief that defendant Everett filed said complaint at the request of defendant Stenberg. On October 28, 1947, pursuant to said complaint, defendant Dyer, Police Judge of Glendale, issued a warrant of arrest, and pursuant to said warrant the defendants Bullock, Dieffenbach and Kelley, acting under the direction of defendants Rassmussen and Hegi, arrested plaintiff and incarcerated her in the city jail; that defendants Rassmussen, Hegi, Bullock, Dieffenbach and Kelley refused to let plaintiff communicate with an attorney, bail bond broker, or any of her relatives or friends and plaintiff therefore was unable to "raise bail" until the morning of October 29, 1947. Defendant Dyer set the bail in the amount of $100, which bail was disproportionate to the offense involved. Said warrant was issued in violation of provisions of section 739 of the Vehicle Code "in that if an offense had been committed it was in the presence of Defendant W. R. Stenberg, and of which he was aware." Plaintiff was not at any time prior to her arrest given a notice to appear pursuant to provisions of section 739 of the Vehicle Code, and defendants did not comply with any of the provisions of said section, and "the Complaint issued by said defendant was a misdemeanor" and an alleged violation of the provisions of the Vehicle Code, and that section 739 of the Vehicle Code "was the only statute applicable for procedure for the alleged violation." Defendants and each of them acted wilfully and with malice and intent to degrade, humiliate and embarrass plaintiff, and the defendants knew that the warrant was not issued pursuant to the provisions of said section 739. Within 90 days from October 27, 1947, plaintiff did present to the City of Glendale a claim. By reason of the aforesaid acts plaintiff suffered shock and humiliation which affected her health and she was unable to work for a period of time and by reason thereof she has sustained actual damages in the sum of $25,000, and plaintiff asks for an additional $25,000 as exemplary damages.

For a further and separate cause of action it was alleged therein as follows: (Paragraph I) Plaintiff incorporates all of the said allegations of her first cause of action, above stated, as though set out verbatim. (Paragraph II) Within 90 days from October 28, 1947, plaintiff did present her claim to the City of Glendale "in that she contacted Joseph F. Baudino who was Mayor during this period of time, Vernon Rassmussen, the Chief of Police, who was acting during this period of time, and G. A. Campbell who was a Councilman of the City of Glendale during this period of time. That these Officials of the City of Glendale were fully advised of her grievance against the City of Glendale and Officials thereof, and requested of them what procedure she should take and they did not advise her to file a written verified claim with the City of Glendale, but told her to wait and see what would develop. That the City of Glendale is now estopped to assert as a defense the fact that the Plaintiff should have filed a verified claim as provided by their City ordinance, and that the Plaintiff relied upon the statements made by the Officials of the City of Glendale that they would wait and see what developed."

The third amended complaint was in substance the same as the second amended complaint, with the following exceptions: (1) The City of Glendale and Charles R. Dyer were not parties thereto; (2) Paragraph II of the second amended complaint was omitted from the third amended complaint, and in lieu thereof it was alleged as follows: Within 90 days from October 28, 1947, the "Plaintiff did present her claim to the City of Glendale and the officers who are referred to in this Complaint, and that she contacted one, Joseph F. Baudino who was the Mayor of the City of Glendale during this period of time, and also contacted Vernon Rassmussen, Chief of Police of the City of Glendale who was Chief of Police during this period of time, and Charles E. McCall who was the City Manager of the City of Glendale during this time, and the Plaintiff also contacted G. A. Campbell who was a member of the City Council of the City of Glendale during this time, and she advised these officials of the City of Glendale that she intended to file a claim with the City of Glendale and the officers thereof, and that she later intended to file a suit against the City of Glendale and the officers involved. That the said officials were fully advised of her grievance against the City of Glendale and the officials and police officers thereof, and the Plaintiff requested of said officials, Joseph F. Baudino, Vernon Rassmussen, G. A. Campbell, what procedure she should take and said officials, just named, advised the Plaintiff that her claim could be adjusted and settled and advised her to wait and see what would develop. That the said officials did not advise the Plaintiff to file a written, verified claim with the City of Glendale or the officers or officials thereof, but assured her that her grievance against the City of Glendale and against the officials and officers thereof would be properly taken care of. That the Plaintiff believed and relied upon the said representations and assurances, and therefore failed to file a written, verified claim with the City of Glendale and the officials and officers thereof within the ninety (90) day period as set up by the City Ordinance and Charter of the City of Glendale. That had the officials of the City of Glendale, aforenamed, not made the representations and given said assurances, and had the Plaintiff been advised to file a written, verified claim she would have filed her claim with the City of Glendale and the officials and officers within the ninety (90) day period. That the Plaintiff was not fully advised by the aforesaid officials or anyone that it was necessary to file a claim with the City of Glendale and with the officials thereof, until after the ninety day period had elapsed. The Plaintiff brought this action as soon as it became apparent to the Plaintiff that the City of Glendale and the officials or officers thereof were not going to make any adjustment or settlement of her claim against the City of Glendale or the officials or the officers thereof."

[1-3] The demurrers of all defendants except Everett were made upon the ground, among others, that it appeared that plaintiff's alleged causes of action were barred by article XI, section 5, of the charter of the City of Glendale and ordinance 2100 of said city in that plaintiff had not filed a verified claim for damages as required by said article and section of the city charter and by said ordinance. Said article XI, section 5, of the charter of the City of Glendale provides in part: "No action shall be brought on any claim or demand for money or damages against the City or any Board, Commission or Officer thereof, until a demand for the same has been presented as provided in this charter or by ordinance and rejected in whole or in part." Stats. 1921, p. 2221. Courts take judicial notice of the provisions of a city charter such as the one involved here. See Tilden v. Blood, 14 Cal.App.2d 407, 413, 58 P.2d 381; Adams v. Wolff, 84 Cal.App.2d 435, 440, 190 P.2d 665. There is no provision in the charter as to the manner, form, or time in which such a demand should be presented. The court cannot take judicial notice of a municipal ordinance. The plaintiff alleged in her third amended complaint, however, in the part thereof relating to estoppel as shown above, that she believed and relied upon representations of certain officers of Glendale "and therefore failed to file a written, verified claim with the City of Glendale and the officials and officers thereof within the ninety (90) day period as set up by the City Ordinance and Charter of the City of Glendale." It appears therefore, from that allegation, and from other above mentioned allegations in said complaint, that plaintiff alleged in effect that an ordinance and the charter of the City of Glendale provided that such a claimant as plaintiff should file a written, verified claim with the City of Glendale and the officials and officers thereof within 90 days from the date of the alleged injury. In her second amended complaint, plaintiff alleged: "That the City of Glendale is now estopped to assert as a defense the fact that the Plaintiff should have filed a verified claim as provided by their City ordinance * * *." Furthermore, it appears from the briefs of the appellant (plaintiff) and the respondents that this appeal is presented upon the basis that ordinance 2100 of the City of Glendale, relating to claims for damages against the city or an officer thereof, was properly before the trial court. A copy of that ordinance was attached to the demurrers. As stated in appellant's brief, the first question involved on this appeal is "Did failure of the appellant to file a claim with the respondents preclude her from maintaining her causes of actions?" Appellant then asserts in her brief as follows: "To this question the appellant respectfully submits that her failure to file a written claim as required by the ordinance of the City of Glendale did not foreclose her from bringing the type of action that she filed. The first reaction after reading the City ordinance * * *." Ordinance No. 2100 of the City of Glendale is in part as follows: "Section 1. All claims for damages, founded in tort, against the City of Glendale * * * or any * * * officer or employee, must be in writing, verified and presented to the City Clerk, and to the * * * officer or employee against whom it is intended to bring action, within ninety (90) days after the tort from which the damages arose. * * * Section 2. No action shall be brought against the City of Glendale or against * * * any * * officer or employee thereof unless a claim has been presented as required by section 1 of this ordinance, and such claim has been rejected in whole or in part." A case involving the same charter provision and the same ordinance, as those involved here, is Slavin v. City of Glendale, 97 Cal.App. 2d 407, 217 P.2d 984. In that case a demurrer to the third amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend. In affirming the judgment therein, the court said, 97 Cal.App.2d at page 411, 217 P.2d at page 987: "Plaintiff did not and could not allege that the required claim [required by the charter of Glendale and said ordinance 2100] had been filed as required by the law, either within the 90 day period or at any other time." The presentation of a written, verified claim, as required by said charter and ordinance, is a condition precedent to maintaining an action against the City of Glendale or an officer thereof upon a claim for damages founded in tort. See Slavin v. City of Glendale, supra.

[4] Appellant contends further that she alleged sufficient facts to show that respondents City of Glendale and officers were estopped to rely upon the provisions of the charter and the ordinance with reference to presenting a claim. Appellant cites certain cases in which the doctrine of estoppel was applied. It is to be noted that in each of those cases a claim had been filed but it was not filed within the time provided by law for filing such claim. In the present case no claim has been filed. Sufficient facts were not alleged to excuse appellant's failure to file a claim.

[5] As to the demurrer of respondent Everett, the appellant makes no argument in her briefs other than to state that the arguments of the other respondents relative to filing a claim were not applicable to respondent Everett. As to him, of course, it is not necessary that such a claim be filed. According to the third amended complaint, the basis of the alleged cause of action against respondent Everett is that he signed the complaint wherein plaintiff herein (Mrs. Klimper) was charged with violating the Vehicle Code. It was not alleged therein that there was no probable cause for his act in signing that complaint. No cause of action was stated as to respondent Everett. Plaintiff had filed three amended complaints.

By reason of the above conclusions it is not necessary to discuss other contentions of respondents.

The judgments are affirmed.

POTTER v. PACIFIC COAST LUMBER CO. OF CALIFORNIA et al.

Civ. 17303.

Hearing Granted Nov. 20, 1950.*

G. E. Potter, a lumber broker, sued Pacific Coast Lumber Company of California and others, for balance claimed to be due under contracts for the sale of carloads of lumber to defendant corporation. The Superior Court of San Luis Obispo County, Ray B. Lyon, J., rendered a judgment adverse to defendants and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that evidence did not establish as a matter of law an accord in satisfaction or an account stated.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and error ⇐1011(1)

A finding of trial court upon conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal if there is evidence of a substantial character which reasonably supports the judgment.

2. Appeal and error ⇐996

The conclusion of trier of fact from evidence or testimony that is susceptible of conflicting or opposing inferences will not be set aside by an appellate tribunal.

3. Accord and satisfaction ⇐7(1)

In order that acceptance of an offer of payment of a lesser sum in discharge of greater sum shall result in discharge of debt, offer must be made upon condition that creditor accepts offered sum in full satisfaction of indebtedness.

4. Accord and satisfaction ⇐11(2)

In order that acceptance of check or remittance shall operate as a full discharge of claim or obligation, condition that it is to be accepted in full satisfaction of pending claim or obligation must be expressly made or circumstances must be such as to indicate clearly to creditor that it is so sent.

5. Accord and satisfaction ⇐7(1)

Where a check is tendered by debtor, even though it accompanies an account, if there is no expression of condition that it must be accepted in full payment of obligation or claim, acceptance of check does not constitute "accord and satisfaction" as no agreement to that effect can be implied from transaction.

Evidence that an acknowledged debtor disputed one small separate item of an invoice received in regular course of business and deducted from his remittance the amount he disputed and remitted in regular course of business amount he admittedly owed, and that check was accompanied by voucher in customary form which recited that remittance was accepted "in full settlement of account stated below", and that creditor accepted check, did not establish as a matter of law an accord and satisfaction or account stated.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Defendants appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, a lumber broker, in an action for a balance claimed to be due under contracts for the sale of three carloads of lumber to the defendant corporation, Pacific Coast Lumber Company. Defendants C. V. Wilson and S. G. Truitt, as vice-president and purchasing agent, respectively, of defendant corporation, negotiated the contracts. The complaint was in the form of common counts. The answer, in addition to denials, set forth an affirmative defense of accord and satisfaction, the substance of the allegations in this respect being that three checks in stated amounts had been mailed to plaintiff by defendant corporation; that attached to each of said checks was a voucher in which said defendant informed plaintiff that it intended the check as full payment of a certain disputed claim; that the vouchers so attached to the three checks informed plaintiff that the checks were intended as full payment; that the plaintiff indorsed and cashed each check, and thereby agreed to the settlement intended by the defendant corporation; that at the time of making said payments the defendants in good faith disputed the amounts due the plaintiff.

The first transaction involved a carload of pine, of specified grade, widths, surfacing, and price per thousand board feet, "F.O.B. mill," with 2% discount for cash. The lumber was to be shipped from Oregon to San Luis Obispo. Upon arrival of the shipment, defendant corporation paid the carrier's freight bill which covered freight from Spokane, Washington, to San Luis Obispo. The corporation then remitted $2,930.14 by check to the plaintiff, this sum representing the amount of the plaintiff's invoice less the cash discount and less $86.40 claimed as "freight overcharge"—being the difference between the freight actually paid the carrier and the freight from Portland, Oregon.

Subsequently defendant corporation ordered two more carloads of pine, one to be shipped to Grover City, California, and the other to Santa Barbara. Again, it was understood that the lumber was to come from Oregon, although the plaintiff testified that he informed defendants it would come from eastern Oregon. The lumber in these two carloads was rough-milled at Seneca, in eastern Oregon. One carload was then shipped to Brewster, Oregon, for "re-manufacture", and from there transported to Grover City, while the other carload was shipped to Portland for "re-manufacture" and thence to Santa Barbara. On each of these shipments defendant corporation remitted to the plaintiff by check, deducting the 2% cash discount and also deducting the items representing freight charges from eastern to western Oregon. In the case of the Santa Barbara car defendant also made certain deductions for "scant loading", "improper surfacing", and "random widths".

Defendant C. V. Wilson testified that by "F.O.B. mill" he understood to mean F. O.B. the "re-manufacturing" mill where the lumber was finished and from whence it was finally shipped; he and other witnesses also testified to a custom of the lumber trade that where Oregon lumber is sold "F.O.B. mill" a zone freight rate is often specified, but if nothing is said about the zone, then the "Portland rate", from Portland, Oregon, to destination, will apply; in such case the custom is for the purchaser to charge back to the seller any excess freight paid to the carrier. In none of the transactions here in question was there anything said concerning freight or the freight rate applicable except the bare phrase "F.O.B. mill". Plaintiff denied the existence of any such custom.

In remitting for each of the three shipments, defendant corporation mailed to the plaintiff a check or draft, attached to which was a voucher identifying the shipment for which payment was intended and setting forth the amount of the corresponding invoice, with deductions noted. Printed at the top of each such voucher was the notation:

"Payee will please detach and keep this statement. Payment of sight draft attached hereto is accepted in full settlement of account stated below, and endorsement thereof will constitute payee's receipt to the Pacific Coast Lumber Company of California."

The trial court found that defendants were indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $1,011.96; and with respect to the special defense found that the allegations thereof (except, of course, that the checks were actually sent) were untrue, thereby finding that it was not true that by the voucher attached to each check defendant corporation "informed plaintiff that it intended the check as full payment of a certain disputed claim," or that the vouchers "informed plaintiff that the said checks were intended as full payment". The court further found that "it is not true that plaintiff, by the acceptance, endorsement and/or depositing for collection of said drafts, or in any other manner, agreed to any settlement of the amount due plaintiff."

Appellants contend that the trial court's findings relating to the alleged accord and

"Q. Did you talk to him (Mr. Wilson) before you cashed it? Did you call him up before you cashed it? (Referring to the payment on the first shipment.) A. Yes, I think I did; and then I felt, if they were going to be that way about it, the best thing for me to do was to cash the draft so they couldn't stop payment on the draft. This was not a check, it was a draft. I knew that, with a dispute of that type, that there would be a question as to my accepting that as final payment, but I figured that a bird in the hand was better than nothing.

"Q. Well, Mr. Potter, at the time you cashed those checks, you knew there was a dispute as to the amounts? A. Yes, because the amount was short on the draft. I figured we would be able to settle it one way or the other later.

"Q. Did you know the basis for the dispute? A. No, only from checking the deductions that I figured that they took. I knew that the freight amounted to so much.

"Q. Then you surmised, at least, that the deduction on one item was for freight? A. That's right.

"Q. And on the other item, you had notice of what the deductions were from the attached statement with the check, did you not? A. Yes, sir."

Appellants argue that "on the basis of the foregoing testimony the ultimate fact irresistibly following is that the defendant corporation informed the plaintiff * * * that the check or draft tendered therewith was offered in full payment of a certain fully identified, disputed claim." Appellants' remaining two contentions with respect to the findings are that there is no support in the evidence for the finding that by his acceptance of the checks or drafts plaintiff did not agree to a settlement, or for the finding that there was no bona fide dispute concerning the amount due.

[1,2] As conceded by appellants, "A finding of the trial court upon conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal if there is evidence of a substantial character which reasonably supports the judgment." Fewel & Dawes, Inc. v. Pratt, 17 Cal.2d 85, 89, 109 P.2d 650, 652. It is also well settled that the conclusions of a trier of fact from evidence or testimony that is susceptible of conflicting or opposing inferences will not be set aside by an appellate tribunal. In re Estate of Bristol, 23 Cal.2d 221, 143 P.2d 689.

Conceding the force of appellants' argument that the evidence clearly shows the existence of a dispute as to the amount due, and further that plaintiff was informed, by the fact that the checks were for less than the amount of his invoice, by the notations appearing on the attached vouchers, and through telephone conversations with defendants, that defendant corporation contested the particular freight items in question—it does not follow that the trial court erred, as a matter of law, in concluding that no accord and satisfaction was consummated.

[3-5] It was an essential element of defendants' proof of an accord and satisfaction that their tender of a check for less than the amount due be expressly conditioned that if the money be accepted, it is to be in full satisfaction. 1 Am.Jur. 222, 223. As said in the cited authority, at page 223:

"As pointed out in the preceding section, in order that the acceptance of an offer of payment of a lesser sum in discharge of a greater shall result in the discharge, it is a necessary element that the offer be made upon condition that the creditor accept the offered sum in full satisfaction of the indebtedness. This principle finds frequent application in the case of checks and other remittances. In order that the acceptance of the check or remittance shall operate as a full discharge, the condition that it is to be accepted in full satisfaction of the pending claim or obligation must be expressly made or the circumstances must be such as to indicate clearly to the creditor that it is so sent.

"When the assent of the creditor is sought to be inferred from the acceptance of a less sum than that claimed to be due, the fact that such amount is offered in full discharge of the whole claim must have been communicated to the creditor in some unmistakable manner. Consequently, where a check is tendered, even though it accompanies an account, if there is no expression of the condition that it must be accepted in full payment, the acceptance of the check does not constitute an accord and satisfaction, as no agreement to that effect can be implied from the transaction. * * *."

Under the particular facts of the case at bar, it would appear that the trier of fact was justified in concluding, despite the printed statement on the voucher, that the tender of each check or draft was not unequivocally stated to be on condition that it be accepted in full settlement. The language of Owens v. Noble, 77 Cal.App.2d 209, 215, 175 P.2d 241, 244, quoting from Biaggi v. Sawyer, 75 Cal.App.2d 105, 114, 170 P.2d 678, is here pertinent: "'Whether there was a dispute concerning the amount due, and whether the tender was on condition that acceptance would be in full satisfaction, are primarily questions of fact for the trial court.' In the case of Work v. Associated Almond Growers, 102 Cal.App. 232, 236, 282 P. 965, 966, this court quoted from cited authorities as follows: 'It is an essential element in accord and satisfaction by tender of a check, that the tender is subject to the condition that the acceptance of the check is satisfaction in full. This condition is not shown by the mere fact that the debtor accompanied the check with an account showing a balance equal to the amount of the check, and it is disproved where the giving and acceptance of the check is followed by such conduct of both parties as clearly shows that they did not consider the check a final settlement of the debt.' (Italics added.) Also see 1 Cal. Jur. p. 134, par. 10; Lapp-Gifford Co. v. Muscoy Water Co., supra [166 Cal. 25, 134 P. 989]; Duncan v. F. A. Hihn Co., 27 Cal. App. 152, 155, 148 P. 971; Wallace v. Crawford, 21 Cal.App.2d 394, 404, 69 P.2d 455."

The record does not disclose conclusive evidence that the plaintiff was explicitly advised that his acceptance of the checks or drafts in any of the three transactions would be considered as an agreement to an accord and satisfaction. On the contrary, the actions of the parties indicate, simply that the defendant corporation asserted that it was not liable for certain freight charges and refused to pay them. It is significant in this respect that the disputed freight charge was a separable item. The amount tendered by defendant corporation was an amount admittedly due. The trier of fact could well conclude that the amount tendered was not offered in settlement of a disputed claim, but, as above stated, in payment of a conceded indebtedness, leaving at large the question of from which point freight should be charged to the buyer. Upon analysis, the facts herein show that an acknowledged debtor has made a remittance of an amount admittedly due, and now seeks to have declared an accord and satisfaction because the creditor accepted what was concededly justly due him. The trier of fact was warranted in concluding that there was lacking an essential element of an accord and satisfaction, to-wit, that the payment was offered and accepted in settlement of a disputed demand. Here no payment whatever was made on the "disputed" demand.

[6] The situation here presented is one in which an acknowledged debtor, disputing one small separable item of an invoice received in the regular course of business, deducts from his remittance the amount he disputes and remits in the regular course of business an amount admittedly owed, accompanying his check with a voucher in customary form containing printed words to the effect that the remittance is accepted "in full settlement of account stated below." It cannot be held that as a matter of law in such circumstances there has been an accord and satisfaction or account stated.

"* * * To hold otherwise would put it in the power of a sharp, shrewd business man frequently to take advantage of the ignorant, uneducated, or unwary, and open the way, in the business and commercial world, to the perpetration of frauds rather than the honest settlement of disputes." Sanders v. Standard Wheel Co., 151 Ky. 257, 151 S.W. 674, Ann.Cas.1915A, 954.

Appellants state that they make no point of the fact that the judgment runs against Mr. Wilson and Mr. Truitt, agents of defendant corporation, "unless the suggestion is met with that the judgment ought to stand against the defendant individuals even though it be reversed as to their principal." No such problem arising, the question need not receive further consideration.

The attempted appeal from the order denying defendants' motion for new trial is dismissed. The judgment is affirmed.

Sept. 22, 1950.

Samuel Louis Johnson was convicted in Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, Edward P. Murphy, J., of selling marijuana and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Goodell, J., held that uncorroborated testimony of police officer that defendant sold marijuana to officer justified conviction.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal law ⇐814(8)

In prosecution for sale of marijuana, issue of entrapment was properly removed from consideration of jury where there was no foundation laid for such defense since defendant denied having made sale and having met police officer to whom sale was allegedly made, and police officer testified that defendant accosted officer with colloquialism intended to discover whether officer wanted to buy marijuana. Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

2. Poisons ⇐9

Uncorroborated testimony of police officer that defendant sold marijuana to officer justified conviction for selling marijuana. Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

3. Criminal law ⇐1036(1)

Admission in evidence of unobjected to testimony which went in when defendant was represented by counsel could not be urged as error on appeal from conviction for selling marijuana. Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

GOODELL, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction entered on a verdict, and from an order denying a new trial.

By an amended information appellant was accused of the sale of marijuana, § 11500, Health & Safety Code, to which charge he pleaded not guilty.

Appellant was represented on his arraignment and throughout the trial by an assistant public defender, but filed this appeal in propria persona and prosecutes it without the aid of counsel.

On July 14, 1949 between 9 and 10 p. m., Officer Finis of the San Francisco Police Department's Bureau of Special Services, or "Vice Squad", dressed in plain clothes, while standing in the doorway of a pool room in San Francisco, was spoken to by appellant who, according to the officer's testimony, asked him if he was "straight". This expression, according to the testimony of another witness means colloquially "'Have you some narcotics,' or 'do you want some', it is used interchangeably. That is an opening statement to the prospective customer or to someone you would like to buy from * * *." The officer replied that he wanted a can of marijuana cigarettes, not just a few, as he was a merchant marine and had a chance to make some money with them on the ship; appellant responded that "he might be able to fix me up" and that the can would cost $20 but he would have to go and get it; they "argued about the price and finally rather than go off, I agreed to take six marijuana cigarettes for $5. * * * He sold me the cigarettes in the men's toilet in the back of the pool room." A $5 bill was paid by the officer, with no third person present. The officer testified that he took the cigarettes and left, agreeing to meet appellant the following day at 1:15 or 1:30, at which time appellant said he could procure the can of marijuana. The officer testified that at the appointed time the next day appellant failed to show up.

The six cigarettes were analyzed and identified as marijuana.

The officer next saw appellant on the evening of July 18 at the same pool room. Again the officer was alone and in plain clothes but Inspector Noel of the State Narcotics Department was waiting down the street. On this occasion appellant said he could still get the can of marijuana and that it would cost $20. The officer then said, "I don't have enough to make a $20 purchase, but my partner is out on the street on the corner waiting and perhaps we can pool our money to buy enough." Officer Finis and appellant then joined Inspector Noel on the street and appellant told them he would have to go to Third Street to get the stuff. As appellant hailed a taxicab the two officers placed him under arrest for selling narcotics. They searched him but found no marijuana. Inspector Noel testified that appellant said "Can you give me a break" to which he replied "Give you a break, what for—for selling marijuana? * * * why did you sell marijuana to this San Francisco Police Officer previously?" to which appellant replied "Well, he was a colored man and I was a colored man and I was just trying to do him a favor."

Appellant denied seeing Officer Finis on the 14th or ever in his life before the 18th, and denied making the sale, but admitted seeing the officer on the 18th in the pool room. He denied having discussed with Officer Finis the matter of marijuana claimed to have been sold four days before, or the arrangement for the proposed sale of a can of marijuana. He denied having been in the pool room prior to July 18, and denied having hailed a taxicab.

Appellant's principal contention is that entrapment was resorted to and that an instruction defining it should have been given. He cites nineteen California cases dealing with entrapment. This is not understandable since an examination of them shows that in each of them no entrapment was proved, and the judgment of conviction was affirmed. The language which he quotes from these cases, defining entrapment and showing how it operates, is orthodox and unimpeachable but it in no way helps him.

No foundation was laid for this defense since appellant flatly denied that he had made the sale on July 14, or at all, and denied that he had ever met Officer Finis prior to July 18, the day of his arrest. His position is similar to that of the appellant in the case of People v. Lee, 9 Cal.App.2d 99, 48 P.2d 1003, where Lee denied that any sale was made or that he had any narcotics in his possession, but still argued entrapment. At pages 109–110 of 9 Cal.App.2d, 48 P.2d at page 1007, the court there said: "It is our understanding that the defense of entrapment is a positive defense imposing upon an accused the burden of showing that he was induced to commit the act for which he is being prosecuted. The invocation of the defense necessarily assumes that the act charged as a public offense was committed." (Emphasis added.)

People v. Lee is followed in People v. Grijalva, 48 Cal.App.2d 690, 694, 121 P.2d 32, in People v. Billingsley, 59 Cal.App.2d Supp. 845, 847–848, 139 P.2d 362, in People v. Gelardi, 77 Cal.App.2d 467, 477, 175 P.2d 855, and in People v. Carlton, 83 Cal.App.2d 475, 477, 189 P.2d 299. All five cases are among those cited by appellant.

said, "If a crime is committed at the suggestion of the defendant, the doctrine of entrapment is not applicable." Officer Finis testified that on July 14th appellant, opened the conversation with the inquiry "Are you straight?" an expression having a definite meaning in the trade. Appellant's testimony that he never met the officer until the 18th, and made no sale to him, raises a conflict, but the jury resolved this against the defendant as they did in the Billingsley case.

[1] There was no evidence in the record which would have justified an entrapment instruction. The subject had apparently been brought up in argument and the court instructed the jury that "The doctrine of entrapment which has been referred to by counsel has no applicability to the facts in the case before you." It was proper to thus remove this false issue from the jury's consideration. There is no merit in appellant's claim of entrapment.

[2] Appellant's next contention is that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence. In this connection he points out that there was no corroboration of the testimony of Officer Finis. It is true there was none respecting the sale itself since it was conducted in a small room with nobody present other than the officer and appellant, according to the testimony. To prove certain offenses the testimony of more than one witness is required, see, for example, §§ 653f, 1103, 1103a, Penal Code, but the sale of narcotics is not one of them. The uncorroborated testimony of the officer, if believed—as it was, according to the verdict —was sufficient.

Appellant argues that he would not have been convicted without the testimony of Inspector Noel. The inspector's testimony was confined to the happenings on the 18th, four days after the sale. He testified to meeting appellant with Officer Finis; walking with them; the discussion about going to Third Street for the stuff; the arrest and search, and the conversation after the arrest. Appellant's reply to his question as to why he had made the sale previously, that he wanted to do a favor was an admission which lent some corroboration to the testimony of Officer Finis that the $5 sale had been made.

[3] All of Inspector Noel's testimony went in without objection; appellant was represented at the time by counsel and he cannot now urge error in its admittance.

Appellant quotes from several cases where judgments of conviction were reversed notwithstanding no objections were made at the trial. Among them is People v. Gordon, 88 Cal. 422, 26 P. 502, but appellant's quotation is not to be found therein. The reversal there was because of erroneous instructions wherein the judge charged the jury on the facts. In People v. Wynn, 44 Cal.App.2d 723, 732, 112 P.2d 979, cited by appellant, it is true the judgment of conviction was reversed for misconduct of the district attorney to which the defendant had made no objection, but that was a close case where the juries had disagreed in two earlier trials. Likewise, People v. Ford, 89 Cal.App.2d 467, 471, 200 P.2d 867, cited by appellant, was a close case in which there was a serious question whether the confession had been voluntary, and there was but slight circumstantial evidence in addition to the questionable confession. In that case the briefs on appeal did not even raise the point of the district attorney's misconduct but the court held it to have been too flagrant to be overlooked on appeal. The instant case is not at all closely balanced hence these three cases, and others cited by appellant dealing with misconduct of a district attorney, are not in point.

The offense charged was the sale of the six cigarettes for $5 on July 14. Accordingly appellant argues that the testimony of Inspector Noel as to the sidewalk conversation four days later was highly prejudicial particularly in view of the fact that appellant was then virtually in custody although he was technically arrested later. Not only was no objection made to the admissibility of this testimony, but defendant did not contradict it.

No satisfactory reason has been advanced to show that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the judgment of conviction. The sale of the six cigarettes was shown by the testimony of Officer Finis; his uncorroborated testimony was sufficient, under the law, to prove the case. It was believed by the jury as indicated by the verdict. Although not requiring corroboration, it was corroborated in certain respects by the testimony of Inspector Noel. There is no merit in the appeal.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

Revenue Code section providing for taxing interest terminated by death at actual value does not require taxing at face value an interest that is accelerated because of death. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 13955.

6. Taxation ⇐897

Where testator bequeathed annuities from testamentary trusts to son for life and annuities from same trusts to son's wife after death of her husband if she were then living, and son died before inheritance tax had been determined, wife's remainder would be valued as of date of death of testator at its present worth and not at its face value. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 13411, 13952, 13955.

7. Taxation ⇐886½

Where testator bequeathed annuities from testamentary trust to son for life and annuities from same testamentary trust to son's wife after death of her husband if she were then living, and son died before inheritance tax had been determined, Revenue Code section relating to computation and rate of tax on transfers subject to contingency or condition could be applied only to that portion of entire property which was left after deducting value of son's life estate as of date of death of testator. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 13411, 13952, 13953, 13955; Administrative Code, Tit. 18, §§ 786, 793, 856.

8. Taxation ⇐896

Where testator bequeathed annuities from testamentary trust to son for life and annuities to son's wife after death of her husband if she were then living, and son died before inheritance tax had been determined, inheritance tax appraiser erred in assessing to son's wife entire property passing under will at date of testator's death. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 13411, 13952, 13953, 13955; Administrative Code, Tit. 18, §§ 786, 793, 856.

James W. Hickey, Chief Inheritance Tax Attorney, Sacramento, Morton L. Barker, Los Angeles, and Raymond G. LaNoue, Deputy Inheritance Tax Attorney, Sacramento, Bert G. Wetherby, Assistant Inheritance Tax Attorney, Los Angeles, for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

George Owen Knapp, a resident of Santa Barbara County, died on July 21, 1945. By his last will (admitted to probate on August 20, 1945), his son William Jared Knapp (hereinafter referred to as William) was bequeathed an annuity of $10,000 per year from each of five testamentary trusts aggregating a total of $50,000 per year for life. Upon the death of William, his wife Louise Allen Knapp (herein referred to as Louise), if then living, was to receive an annuity of $15,000 per year from each of the said five trusts, or $75,000 per year for her life. Upon the death of Louise, or the death of William, if Louise predeceased him, the remainders were to go to specified grandchildren of the testator.

On July 12, 1947, the state inheritance tax appraiser in the instant estate filed his report in which the various interests under the will were valued in accordance with section 13953, Revenue & Taxation Code, using the mortality tables therein specified. However, on July 19, 1947, before any action was taken on that report, William, the first annuitant, died leaving Louise surviving.

On August 17, 1948, said inheritance tax appraiser filed his second report, pursuant to section 13955, Revenue & Taxation Code, to-wit:

"Valuation of annuity or life estate terminated prior to fixing of tax. If an annuity or a life estate is terminated by the death of the annuitant or life tenant or by the happening of a contingency, and the tax upon the transfer of the annuity or estate has not been determined, the value of the annuity or estate is the present value, at the date of the transferor's death, of the amount of the annuity or income actually paid or payable to the annuitant or life tenant during the period he was entitled to the annuity or was in possession of the estate."

In the first report, William's interest was valued at $463,161.35 upon which a tax of $33,834.52 was assessed. In the second report which was based on the amount actually paid to him, sec. 13955, supra, William's interest was reduced to $99,726.03 and a tax of $3,139.04 was imposed.

According to the first report, Louise's interest was appraised at $96,346.65 and taxed at $7,534.67; in the second report her interest was increased to $546,032.04 and the tax assessed at $66,804.81.

The total tax imposed in the first report against the various interests under the will was $43,907.67; the second report assessed a total tax of $71,174.49.

On August 19, 1948, the executor of the Estate of George Owen Knapp, deceased, filed objections to the second report. A stipulation of facts was filed, and the matter submitted on written briefs. Thereafter, the court overruled the objections to said report and on May 9, 1949, made an order fixing the inheritance tax in accord with the second report. This appeal is from that order.

It was stipulated, among other things, that (a) at the death of William, the tax upon his life estate under the will had not been determined; (b) that no issue was made by objector to the correctness of the inheritance tax imposed by reason of the death of the testator, George Owen Knapp, except as to the tax charged against Louise.

It is here urged that for tax purposes the interest of Louise became fixed on the death of testator, and it was error to raise the tax on her interest upon the death of William, the first annuitant; that although section 13955, supra, "controls the valuation of William's interest, it has no effect whatsoever on the value of Louise's interest." Accordingly, it is contended that the order appealed from wherein it reads "Louise Allen Knapp (daughter-in-law) 546,032.04 66,804.81", should be changed to read "Louise Allen Knapp (daughter-in-law) 96,346.65 $7,534.67" pursuant to the first report.

Appellant argues that while section 13955, supra, must be followed for the purpose of taxing William's interest, "it is error to use the value of William's interest thus arrived at as a factor in computing the taxable value of Louise's interest. In other words, the taxable value of Louise's interest is arrived at by deducting from the 'entire property' the value of William's interest as computed under section 13953 and not by deducting from the 'entire property' the value of William's interest as computed under section 13955." Louise's remainder, as thus valued, should then be taxed pursuant to section 13411. That section reads as follows:

"Transfers subject to a contingency or condition. In the case of a transfer made subject to a contingency or condition upon the occurrence of which the right, interest, or estate of the transferee may, in whole or in part, be created, defeated, extended, or abridged, the tax is computed as though the contingency or condition has occurred, and at the highest rate possible."

Respondent claims that at the death of testator, William had a vested life estate followed by future contingent interests, and that these contingent interests made it necessary to tax the "entire property" tentatively to Louise under section 13411. Therefore, the second report considered "as a report returned on the highest possible contingency, correctly assessed the entire remainder of the corpus to Louise." Briefly, that where contingent interests are involved the vested life interest is never computed under section 13953.

A settlement of the instant controversy requires a construction of the various applicable sections of the State Inheritance Tax Law, sections 13301–14901, Revenue and Taxation Code.

"Since tax proceedings are in invitum, tax laws are strictly construed in favor of the taxpayer and against the state * * * because presumptively the legislature has given in plain terms all the power intended to be exercised.

"A statute will not be held to have imposed a tax unless it is clear and explicit. No presumption is indulged in favor of the right to take property or of any intention that is not distinctly expressed in the statute under which it is sought to be taken. Nor may a tax be extended by construction to those not named or described in the statute. * * * equitable construction * * * is not applicable to a taxing statute." See, also, In re Estate of Potter, 188 Cal. 55, 64, 204 P. 826; In re Estate of Steehler, 195 Cal. 386, 389, 233 P. 972.

[3] "And when a will creates separate interests or estates in the property disposed of, such as a limitation over after a life estate or other precedent interest, the separate values of each of the successive interests must be ascertained. The value of a life estate is computed by the use of tables prepared by actuaries for ascertaining the expectancy of life for purposes of life insurance, and the value of the remainder is the value of the property as a whole over and above the value of the life interest." 28 Am.Jur. 117, sec. 232.

Section 13952 of Rev. & Tax. Code reads: "Same (Valuation as of date of transferor's death): Estates for life or years: Estates determinable upon contingency: Reversions, remainders, etc. In the case of a transfer of any estate, income, or interest (a) for a term of years or for life, or (b) determinable upon any future or contingent event, or (c) constituting a remainder, reversion, or other expectancy, the entire property by which the estate, income, or interest is supported, or of which it is a part, is valued as of the date of the decedent's death."

Having thus provided the date for valuation and the estates which are affected, section 13953 then sets forth the method for determining the value of the particular interests here involved:

"Future, contingent or limited estate, income or interest: Use of mortality tables: Rate of interest. The value of a future, contingent, or limited estate, income, or interest is determined in accordance with the rules, methods, and standards of mortality and value that are set forth in the actuaries' combined experience tables of mortality, as extended, for ascertaining the values of life insurance policies and annuities and for determining the liabilities of life insurance companies, save that the rate of interest used in computing the present value of the estate, income, or interest is four (4) per cent per annum."

That respondent customarily followed the method laid down by the foregoing rules is evidenced by regulations of the Inheritance Tax Department contained in Title 18, secs. 793 and 786 of the California Administrative Code:

"Sec. 793: Remainders. The present worth of a remainder is obtained by computing the present worth of the precedent or outstanding estate and subtracting the amount thereof from the total value of the property involved. The difference will represent the present worth of the remainder. Example: A by will gives the annual income from $100,000 to B for life, with a remainder over to C. B at the time of the gift is 40 years of age. By an application of the method set forth in sec. 787 for determining the present value of a life estate, B's life interest is found to be $67,164.50. The latter subtracted from $100,000 results in a difference of $32,835.50, the present value of C's remainder."

"Sec. 786: Generally. The value of a limited, contingent, or future estate, income or interest in property is generally the present value or worth of such estate, income or interest at the applicable valuation date. In this connection, the Inheritance Tax Law specifically provides that such present value or worth is to be determined in accordance with the Actuaries' or Combined Experience Tables of Mortality employed in ascertaining the value of life insurance policies and annuities and the liabilities of life insurance companies, save that the rate of interest shall be 5 (4) per centum per annum in the case of future and contingent estates * * *."

[4] While as stated by respondent, the regulations promulgated by the State Controller's office are not binding on the courts, nevertheless, they are persuasive authority because designed to be interpretations of the statutes to which they point. See In re Estate of Atwell, 85 Cal.App.2d 454, 468, 193 P.2d 519.

The foregoing sections of the Inheritance Tax Law comprise the authority pursuant to which Louise's interest should be valued and taxed.

As hereinabove noted, William died prior to a determination of the tax upon his interest, and it is conceded by both sides herein that it became necessary to compute the value of his estate under section 13955, supra.

[5, 6] An examination of the terms of that section reveals that it is authority for taxing at actual value an interest terminated by death, but it does not provide for taxing at face value an interest that is accelerated because of that death. Statutory authority is required to overcome the effect of section 13952. This is supplied by section 13955, but only insofar as William's interest is concerned. Louise's remainder must be valued under section 13952 which directs that such valuation be made as of the date of death of testator, to-wit: at its present worth and not at its face value.

[7] Respondent contends that under section 13411, supra, the "entire property" passing under the will at the date of death of testator must be assessed to Louise, because such an assessment will provide the highest rate of tax.

That section reads: (Computation and rate of tax) "Transfers subject to a contingency or condition. In the case of a transfer made subject to a contingency or condition upon the occurrence of which the right, interest, or estate of the transferee may, in whole or in part, be created, defeated, extended, or abridged, the tax is computed as though the contingency or condition has occurred, and at the highest rate possible."

Said section cannot be applied to William's interest which vested on testator's death; but only to that part of the entire property which comprises the contingent estate.

As pointed out by appellant, that part of the entire property which was neither future nor contingent was William's vested life estate. Therefore, section 13411 can apply only to that portion of the entire property which is left after deducting the present value of William's life estate, to-wit: its value as of the date of death of testator.

Again respondent's regulation, Sec. 856, Title 18, California Administrative Code, supports this construction of said section: that it applies only to the contingent remainder and not to the entire property.

"Contingent and Conditional transfers. If a taxable transfer is made subject to a contingency or condition upon the occurrence of which the interest of any transferee of the property involved may, in whole or in part, be created, defeated, extended or abridged, the tax is computed at the highest rate possible upon the happening of the contingency or condition. For example, A by will gives B, who is 50 years of age, a life interest in property valued at $100,000, and C, D and E, or the survivor, a remainder interest in the property at B's death. C, who is not related to A, is 25 years of age at the date of the gift. D and E, who are brothers of A, are, respectively, 62 and 70 years of age at the date of the gift. In such case the tax on the remainder will be computed on the supposition that the property will go to C, since a tax on a remainder to C would be computed at higher rates than on a remainder going to D or E, see Section 852. Any person who pays the tax so computed may secure a refund in the event that D or E survives B's death, in an amount equal to the difference between the tax paid and the tax which would have been paid had the tax been computed on the basis of a transfer to the actual survivor, see Section 919.

"The payment of a tax due on a contingent or conditional transfer may be deferred on the filing of a bond, see Section 880, and may under proper circumstances be subject to a compromise, see Section 882."

Both parties have cited New York cases in support of their contentions. And it appears that New York does have statutory authority which permits the taxing of a contingent remainder in accord with respondent's theory. Moreover, the enactment in this state in 1911 of paragraph 6, section 15 of the Inheritance Tax Law, Stats.1911, Ch. 395, P. 721, would here support respondent, but that support has been withdrawn with the repeal of that section in 1941, Stats.1941, Ch. 833, P. 2393.

[8] By reason of the foregoing principles of law and the construction placed by this court upon the applicable sections of the Inheritance Tax Law, the method used by respondent in valuing and taxing Louise's contingent remainder was erroneous.

The order appealed from is reversed, and the trial court is directed to value and fix the tax on the interest of Louise Allen Knapp bequeathed to her under the will of testator in accordance with the views herein expressed.

MARKWORT v. McGEE.
Civ. 18130.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Hearing Granted Nov. 2, 1950.*

Proceeding in the matter of the contest of the nomination of Patrick D. McGee to the office of Member of Assembly from the 64th Assembly District of California by the Democratic and Republican Parties at the primary election, wherein Eldon James Markwort filed an affidavit of contest on ground that McGee was ineligible to the office of Assemblyman. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Norman F. Main, J., entered judgment declaring McGee eligible to the office and contestant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Per Curiam, held that the evidence sustained finding of trial court that nominee had been a resident of state for more than three years, a bona fide citizen and inhabitant of Assembly District in question for more than one year and a citizen of the United States since 1931.

1. States ⇐28(1)

For purposes of determining an election contest, the word "residence" as used in the Election Code and words "citizen and inhabitant" as used in the Constitution defining eligibility of office of Assemblyman have the same meaning. Government Code, §§ 243, 244; Elections Code, §§ 5650–5661, 5653; Const. art. 4, § 4.

2. Domicile ⇐10

The formal acts of registering and voting are convincing and persuasive evidence of residence, but not necessarily conclusive.

3. States ⇐28(1)

In election contest, evidence sustained finding of trial court that nominee had been a resident of State for more than three years, a bona fide citizen and inhabitant of Assembly district in question for more than a year and a citizen of the United States since 1931.

4. Elections ⇐295(1), 305(7)

In an election contest, question of residence or domicile is a mixed question of law and fact, and determination of trial court on conflicting evidence is conclusive upon a reviewing court.

5. Elections ⇐298(1)

California courts have jurisdiction to determine eligibility of candidates for nomination to office of member of the assembly. Elections Code, § 8600.

Rollin L. McNitt and Edythe Jacobs, Los Angeles, for appellant.

PER CURIAM.

Patrick D'Arcy McGee was born in Canada. He came to the United States with his parents in 1924. He was then seven or eight years old. He went to grammar school at Lincoln Park, Michigan.

In 1931, by virtue of his father's naturalization, Mr. McGee became a citizen of the United States.

Mr. McGee went to grammar school until 1930. From grammar school he went to Notre Dame, Indiana, worked a year, and studied four years in high school. Then he went to the University of Portland, in Oregon, from the fall of 1936 to June, 1938. This schooling was financed on a football scholarship. Before completing his studies in Oregon he was injured so that he could no longer play football; his scholarship was revoked; and he had to leave.

From Oregon, Mr. McGee came to California. As stated, this was in 1938. He lived in San Jose from July until the middle of November of that year. He worked at what he could find, and tried, unsuccessfully, to get on the football squads at Stanford or Santa Clara.

In November of 1938, Mr. McGee's father and mother and their family in Detroit were in dire financial straits. They sent word that they had to have their son's help. So he went to Detroit. He worked at odd jobs from November, 1938 to the spring of 1940, when he was employed by the Ford Motor Company. He lived with his father and mother, and the rest of their family. They lived in a tent until a house was built, in part by Mr. McGee's labor.

April 1, 1941, Mr. McGee was inducted into the Royal Canadian Air Force. May 5, 1943, he was transferred to the United States Navy Air Force. He was stationed at a number of places while he was in the service. He gave his mailing address as 90 Collingwood, Detroit, Michigan; the home of his parents. But he never lived at that address.

September 12, 1945, Mr. McGee was discharged from the Navy at Alameda, California. For a few months before his discharge he was stationed at Crows Landing, California. He was allowed travel pay by the Navy from Alameda to Detroit, Michigan.

After his discharge from the Navy, Mr. McGee applied to take the law course at Harvard University. He also applied to, and was accepted as a student at Boalt Hall at the University of California in Berkeley. Before actual enrollment at Boalt Hall he was advised he would be permitted to enter the law school at Harvard University. So he went to Cambridge, Mass., and studied law at Harvard from October 22, 1945 until the end of January, 1948.

While at Cambridge, Mr. McGee applied to, and received from the State of Michigan a soldier's bonus given by that state to residents of Michigan who served in the second world war.

Mr. McGee also registered as an elector in Cambridge, Mass., and voted at a school board election held there.

After his enrollment at Harvard, Mr. McGee filed a law student's notice of intention to take the California bar examination. July 3, 1948, he filed student's application and affidavit with the State Bar. In the last application he stated that he had been continuously a resident of California from March 10, 1948. In response to the question: "State the facts upon which you base your claim to have become and to be such a resident," he stated: "Having finished law school in February, 1948, I proceeded to Los Angeles, arriving on the above date with the intention of remaining permanently, and have so remained."

At the primary election in California in the spring of 1950, Mr. McGee was a candidate for member of assembly from the 64th Assembly District. In his declaration of candidacy he stated he had been a resident of California for twelve years. He filed on both Democratic and Republican tickets, and received a majority of the votes cast by the electors of each party.

Affidavit of contest, as permitted by the Elections Code, was filed by the candidate whom Mr. McGee defeated. The contest grounded on the proposition that Mr. McGee was, and is, ineligible to the office of assemblyman, in that he was not a citizen and inhabitant of the State of California three years next before November 7, 1950, as required by Art. IV, Sec. 4 of the Constitution of the State of California.

The contest was heard in the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Los Angeles. Upon the evidence before the court, it was found that Mr. McGee had been a resident of the state for more than three years; a bona fide citizen and inhabitant of the 64th Assembly District for more than a year; and a citizen of the United States since 1931. From the judgment declaring Mr. McGee eligible to the office, contestant appeals.

Nothing need be added to the foregoing statement of facts, except that the record shows that Mr. McGee was called as a witness for contestant under Sec. 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and exhaustively cross-examined by counsel for contestant. All of the evidence possible in such a case as this was presented to the court. Several Navy friends of Mr. McGee's testified to declarations made by him while in the service of his residence in California.

Mr. McGee testified that he made up his mind to live in California and to become a resident and citizen of this state while he was in San Jose in 1938; that that was his intent all the time he was out of the state:

taking care of his family in Detroit, in the service, and going to school. With reference to the Michigan bonus, he said he was working his way through Harvard on a GI allotment, charged with the support of a wife and child, and he needed the money. With reference to voting in Cambridge, he said he was assured that students at Harvard could vote at a school board election.

Under the familiar substantial-evidence rule, the judgment must stand, unless it be held that all, or any, of the three facts most strongly urged against Mr. McGee's residence in California—voting in Cambridge, collecting the Michigan bonus, and his declaration to the California State Bar—as a matter of law determine the ultimate fact of residence.

[1] For the purposes of this decision, it may be held that the word "residence" used and defined in our law, and the words "citizen and inhabitant" as used in the Constitution have the same meaning.

Pertinent sections of our codes are as follows: Government Code, sections 243 and 244; Elections Code, sections 5650 to 5661.

Elections Code, section 5653 codifies well-established rules that a person does not gain or lose residence by his presence or absence from a place while in the armed services, nor while a student at any institution of learning.

Residence is essentially a question of intention. Ericksen v. Ericksen, 57 Cal.App. 2d 532, 535, 134 P.2d 825. But always the union of act and intent is necessary. Gov. Code, sec. 244; Los Angeles County v. Superior Court, 128 Cal.App. 522, 529, 18 P.2d 112.

[2] The formal acts of registering and voting are convincing and persuasive evidence of residence, but not necessarily conclusive. Taff v. Goodman, 41 Cal.App. 2d 771, 775, 107 P.2d 431.

[3, 4] Taking the evidence as a whole, as we must; resolving every substantial conflict in favor of the trial court's findings and judgment, Buckhantz v. R. G. Hamilton & Co., 71 Cal.App.2d 777, 780, 163 P.2d 756; it becomes clear that this court is required to affirm the judgment. The question of residence or domicile is a mixed question of law and fact, and the determination of the trial court upon conflicting evidence is conclusive upon a reviewing court. Sheehan v. Scott, 145 Cal. 684, 79 P. 350; In re Estate of Peters, 124 Cal.App. 75, 77, 12 P.2d 118; In re Estate of Winzeler, 42 Cal. App.2d 246, 248, 108 P.2d 720.

[5] Some argument in the briefs has been devoted to the jurisdiction of the court to hear the contest. See Allen v. Lelande, 164 Cal. 56, 127 P. 643. Section 8600 et seq., Elections Code, provide for the contest. The California courts have jurisdiction to determine the eligibility of candidates for nomination. Elections Code, sec. 8600 et seq.; Heney v. Jordan, 179 Cal. 24, 175 P. 402; Norcop v. Jordan, 216 Cal. 764, 17 P.2d 123; Hubbard v. Jordan, 216 Cal. 788, 17 P.2d 127; Ackley v. Jordan, 216 Cal. 789, 17 P.2d 127; Puccinelli v. Superior Court, 183 Cal. 775, 192 P. 707.

Also the briefs argue whether a candidate who did not receive the highest vote at a primary election can bring a candidate's contest under section 8600 of the Elections Code. Nothing appears in the law which would forbid such procedure.

MACMILLAN PETROLEUM CORPORATION v. GRIFFIN et al.

No. 14300.

Sept. 21, 1950.

Hearing Denied Nov. 16, 1950.

Action by Macmillan Petroleum Corporation, substituted for Mileage Gasoline Company, against Clyde A. Griffin and George H. Jovick, wherein an application was made to grant enforcement of a judgment which had been recovered against the defendants. An order was entered in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Edward P. Murphy, J., denying plaintiff's motion to set aside ex parte order vacating minute order denying motion of George H. Jovick to vacate order granting enforcement of judgment, and granting the motion of George H. Jovick to vacate minute order, and granting motion of George H. Jovick to vacate order substituting Macmillan Petroleum Corporation for Mileage Gasoline Company, and granting motion of George H. Jovick to set aside order of enforcement, and denying plaintiff the right to enforce the judgment, and the Macmillan Petroleum Corporation appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that the order granting enforcement of the judgment was void because the then plaintiff Mileage Gasoline Company was a dissolved Nevada corporation, and that the void order could be set aside when the true status of the plaintiff was discovered.

Appeal of Mileage Gasoline Company dismissed, and that part of order granting motion to vacate order of substitution reversed, and order affirmed in all other respects.

An assignee is entitled to be substituted as party plaintiff in place of assignor.

2. Parties ⇐61

Notice of application for substitution of a party plaintiff is the better practice, but is not required.

3. Parties ⇐61

An order of substitution of party plaintiff was not invalid by reason of having been made by presiding judge of superior court rather than by the judge in whose department the matter was pending.

4. Courts ⇐47

There is but one superior court in a county, and the action of any judge of that court is the action of the court, and not merely of the particular judge.

Holder of purported assignment of judgment made prior to dissolution of corporate judgment creditor could be substituted as party plaintiff in proceeding to enforce judgment.

6. Corporations ⇐691

The capacity of a Nevada corporation which had been dissolved for 3 years to file motion in California court for enforcement of judgment in favor of corporation must be determined by Nevada and not California law.

7. Corporations ⇐691

Under Nevada law, a corporation which was dissolved on December 24, 1937, was completely defunct after December 24, 1940, and hence had no capacity to file motion on December 19, 1947, to enforce judgment in favor of corporation. Code Civ.Proc. § 1875, subd. 3, Corporations Code, § 6602.

8. Judgment ⇐502

An order granting application of Nevada corporation for enforcement of judgment could be declared invalid by trial court when it became apparent to court that order was void for lack of capacity of corporation under Nevada law due to corporation's dissolution for three years, notwithstanding that trial court had entered order denying motion to vacate enforcement order. Corporations Code, § 6602, Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1916, 1917.

9. Judgment ⇐847

Corporate judgment creditor's purported assignment of judgment prior to dissolution would not validate order which granted enforcement of judgment and which was void under Nevada law due to dissolution for three years of creditor, but assignment and subsequent diligence of assignee could be shown on assignee's application for order of enforcement. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 385, 685.

10. Appeal and error ⇐154(1)

Defendant appealing from order denying defendant's motion to vacate order of enforcement of judgment did not thereby recognize invalidity of subsequent order vacating order denying motion.

11. Appeal and error ⇐439

A court may set aside a void order at any time, even after appeal.

12. Motions ⇐59(3)

An order refusing to vacate a void order cannot give validity to the void order.

Robert E. Hatch, San Francisco, Frederick W. Mahl, Jr., Los Angeles, for appellant.

Courtney L. Moore, San Francisco, for respondents.

BRAY, Justice.

The basic questions are whether a certain order granting enforcement of a judgment is void because the then plaintiff was a dissolved Nevada corporation, and whether it could be set aside when the true status of the plaintiff was discovered. There is also involved the question of the validity of an ex parte order substituting party plaintiff. There are a number of orders made culminating in the order appealed from.

Summary.

On May 17, 1934, Mileage Gasoline Company (hereafter called Mileage) recovered a judgment against defendants Griffin and Jovick. Approximately 13 years later, in 1947, an application by Mileage's attorney was made to the superior court on notice to grant enforcement of this judgment and to order execution to issue. Apparently, Griffin was not served, and so far as this appeal is concerned will not be considered further. December 19, 1947, the court made an "Order Granting Leave to Enforce Judgment" against Jovick. Thereafter the following orders were made and proceedings had:

April 20, 1948—a minute order denying respondent's motion to vacate the order of enforcement.

May 3—an ex parte order vacating the April 20 order, endorsed on a notice of motion by respondent to be heard May 7 to vacate that very order.

June 14—an order (1) vacating the order of April 20; (2) permitting respondent to renew his motion to vacate the December 19 order; (3) granting his motion to vacate that order; and (4) denying Mileage the right to enforce the judgment.

August 10—by stipulation the order of June 14 was vacated and the matters which were before the court on June 14 were to be again presented. At this moment, the order of April 20 refusing to vacate the order of enforcement was in effect, unless the order of May 3 vacating it was valid.

August 21—an ex parte order substituting Macmillan Petroleum Corporation (hereafter called Macmillan) for Mileage as party plaintiff.

September 4—respondent filed notice of motion to set aside this order of substitution.

October 25—Mileage and Macmillan filed notice of motion to vacate the May 3 order which purported to vacate the April 20 order.

December 3—the order appealed from. The order (1) denied plaintiff's motion to set aside the order of May 3; (2) granted respondent's motion to vacate the order of April 20; (3) granted respondent's motion to vacate the August 21 order of substitution; (4) granted respondent's motion to set aside the December 19 order of enforcement and denied plaintiff the right to enforce the judgment.

[1–5] Respondent contends that neither Mileage nor Macmillan have any standing on this appeal—Mileage, because it is a dissolved Nevada corporation with no capacity to appear in this case; and Macmillan, because the order of substitution is void. For the reasons hereafter set forth in the discussion concerning the validity of the December 19 order, Mileage has no capacity to carry on this litigation, and hence its appeal must be dismissed. Moreover, if the order substituting Macmillan is valid, Mileage is completely out of the case, and hence could not appeal if it had capacity. Macmillan claims to hold an assignment of the judgment made by Mileage prior to its dissolution. An assignee is entitled to be substituted as party plaintiff in the place of the assignor. Bancroft's Code Practice and Remedies, vol. 1, p. 651. That portion of the order of December 3 setting aside the order of substitution was made upon the claim by respondent that the order was invalid because made ex parte. While it is better practice that a notice be given, there is no requirement that notice of application for substitution of a party plaintiff be given to the defendant. Bancroft's Code Practice and Remedies, vol. 1, p. 654. Respondent also contended that it was invalid because made by the presiding judge of the superior court rather than by the judge in whose department the matter was pending. It is not clear from respondent's brief whether he still makes the same contention. The point is unfounded. There is but one superior court in a county, and the action of any judge of that court is the action of the court, and not merely of the particular judge. Brown v. Campbell, 110 Cal. 644, 43 P. 12. As the order of substitution was valid, that portion of the order of December 3 vacating it must be reversed.

Was the Order of Enforcement Void?

The application for order enforcing the judgment was based, as it had to be, on the claim that the then plaintiff had exercised due diligence in not collecting the judgment theretofore. It was accompanied by the affidavit of Attorney Hatch in which he stated that continuously from a time prior to the date of the judgment he had been one of the attorneys for plaintiff. He then set forth efforts to collect the judgment, and that under examination, defendants had stated that they had no assets, but agreed to notify affiant whenever they were able to make any payments. Affiant had never been so notified, but recently had learned that they, or at least respondent, did have assets. There was no mention of Macmillan in the proceedings. On the motion heard April 20 to vacate the December 19 order of enforcement, respondent filed an affidavit claiming that the December 19 order of enforcement had been taken against him by surprise and excusable neglect in that at that time he did not know that Mileage was a dissolved Nevada corporation. He then set forth that Mileage had been a Nevada corporation which had surrendered its license and authority to conduct business in California, and had voluntarily dissolved on December 24, 1937. A certificate of its withdrawal from business in California and of its dissolution in Nevada accompanied the affidavit. This fact of dissolution has never been denied, and could not be, in view of the certificate of dissolution. On August 21, on the ex parte application for substitution, Macmillan filed an affidavit of Morris P. Macmillan, fomer president of Mileage and now vice president of Macmillan, stating that prior to the dissolution of Mileage it had assigned its assets to Macmillan and that as president of Mileage and vice president of Macmillan he had authorized Attorney Hatch to proceed with the enforcement and collection of all judgments.

It appears from the affidavit later filed by respondent on the proceedings to set aside the order of April 20, which order refused to vacate the order of enforcement, that court and counsel on the April 20 hearing assumed that the effect of the dissolution of Mileage was to be determined by California rather than Nevada law. When respondent's counsel returned to his office he discovered authorities which convinced him that the Nevada law should govern. He thereupon wrote a letter to the judge to whom the matter had been submitted calling his attention to the law on the subject, but the judge had already decided the matter adversely to him by making the April 20 order. Respondent thereupon filed a notice of motion to vacate that order, setting forth in an affidavit these facts.

Respondent concedes that the court had no authority in its May 3 or December 3 order to set aside the order of April 20 denying his motion to vacate the order of enforcement on the grounds of a mistake in law or fact. Such mistake could be considered only on the appeal from that order. Respondent contends, however, that as the order of enforcement of December 19 was void because the court had no jurisdiction of the person of Mileage, likewise the order of April 20 was void in refusing to vacate that order, and that, in any event, the order of enforcement being void, the court's order of December 3 vacating it was proper.

[6, 7] This question must be determined by the Nevada and not the California law. "It appears to be settled law that the effect of the dissolution of a corporation, or its expiration otherwise, depends upon the law of its domicile (Restatement, Conflict of Laws, pp. 228, 229, sec. 158; 20 C.J.S., Corporations, §§ 1899, 1900, pp. 128, 129, and that a defunct foreign corporation has no greater capacity or higher standing to commence or maintain an action in the state of the forum than it would have in the state of its domicile. [Citations.]" Fidelity Metals Corp. v. Risley, 77 Cal.App.2d 377, 381, 175 P.2d 592, 594. In re Estate of Lund, 26 Cal. 2d 472, 159 P.2d 643, 162 A.L.R. 606, (on the question of legitimation of a child), and the cases against the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, Maguire v. Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc., 23 Cal.2d 719, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062 (on the question of membership in the Hibernia Bank), cited by plaintiff on the policy of the lex forum, are not in point. This court takes judicial notice of the laws of the several states. Code Civ. Proc, § 1875, subd. 3; Corporations Code, § 6602. The Nevada law provides that upon filing with the Secretary of State the certificate of dissolution provided for, the corporation is dissolved, although it may continue for the period of three years thereafter for the purpose of prosecuting and defending suits. After the expiration of the three years, it is completely defunct. It "'no longer exists for any purpose.'" Fidelity Metals Corp. v. Risley, supra, 77 Cal.App.2d at page 382, 175 P.2d 592, 594. There was until 1949 no provision, as under California law, for the directors to continue as trustees to carry on any of its powers. Mileage was dissolved on December 24, 1937, and after December 24, 1940, it was completely defunct. Hence, on December 19, 1947, it had no capacity to move to enforce the judgment and therefore the order was void. In Fidelity Metals Corp. v. Risley, supra the charter of a Nevada corporation had been revoked for failure to comply with the Nevada laws in 1938. Having become delinquent in the payment of its property taxes in California, its property here was sold in 1942 to the State of California. The State deeded the property to Risley in 1943. In 1944, more than three years after the revocation of its charter in Nevada, the corporation sued Risley to quiet title to the property. Judgment in the trial court was in his favor. The corporation appealed. Risley then moved to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the corporation plaintiff was without capacity to sue or prosecute the action by reason of the revocation of its charter. In dismissing the appeal the court, after examining the Nevada cases on the subject, held that under the Nevada law the dissolution of a Nevada corporation deprived the corporation of the right, after three years, to bring or maintain any suit either in that or this state. Therefore, it followed that the corporation was without capacity to appeal. Thus, here, Mileage had no right to appear in the trial court and apply for an order of enforcement. However, its lack of capacity did not appear at that time, and on the face of the proceedings, the order appears valid.

This brings us to the question of whether a court at any time can vacate an order apparently valid on its face, but which actually is void because of the lack of capacity of the party obtaining the order. "Any judicial record may be impeached by evidence of a want of jurisdiction in the court * * *." Code Civ.Proc., § 1916. "The jurisdiction sufficient to sustain a record is jurisdiction over the * * * parties * * *." Code Civ.Proc., § 1917. In Lewis v. Superior Court, 21 Cal.App.2d 340, 69 P.2d 220, petitioner had made three successive motions to dismiss an appeal from a justice's court judgment on the ground that the notice of appeal was filed too late.

All were denied. Petitioner then sought a writ of prohibition to restrain the superior court from hearing the appeal. The respondents contended, as does respondent here concerning the order of April 20, that the orders denying the motions became res judicata. The court in granting the writ held, "Where a court actually has no jurisdiction of an action, that question may be raised at any time." 21 Cal.App.2d at page 343, 69 P.2d at page 222. Referring to the failure of counsel on the hearing of the three motions to offer proper proof of notice of entry of judgment, which notice started the time in which to appeal, the court said: "Omission by counsel cannot confer jurisdiction on any court where that court in fact has no jurisdiction of a cause." 21 Cal.App.2d at page 343, 69 P.2d at page 222.

15 Cal.Jur., p. 52, § 141, states that a judgment is absolutely void if there was no jurisdiction. Section 145 (p. 59) states the general rule that to be attacked collaterally for lack of jurisdiction, the judgment must be void on its face. Section 146 (p. 61), discussing the limitations on this rule, says: "And it has been held that 'for the purpose of showing that jurisdiction could not have been acquired in the manner shown by the record, evidence is admissible to prove any fact the existence or nonexistence of which is not conclusively established by the record or its recitals.'[4]" Footnote 4: "Thus if a judgment against a corporation recites due service of process upon the corporation, or the appearance for it of some authorized person, it may be set aside upon proof that it had been dissolved, and had no legal existence for any purpose at the time the action was begun and until the rendition of the judgment." (Emphasis added.) The above footnote also refers to section 161 (p. 89) which states: "But it may always be shown collaterally that the person against whom a judgment was rendered was dead when the action was begun, or, in the case of a corporation, that its legal existence had been terminated." (Emphasis added.)

[8] Another qualification of the rule that a judgment may not be collaterally attacked for defects not apparent in the record is applicable here: "And if the parties admit or stipulate, or fail to object to the evidence of, the facts showing a lack of jurisdiction, it is then established that the judgment is void as effectively as though shown by the record; and whenever such fact is brought to the attention of the court, it is the duty of the court to so declare as a matter of law." 15 Cal.Jur. p. 62. In the instant proceeding appellant did not contest the fact of dissolution, but did contest the legal effect. The fact of the dissolution was before the court not only by the affidavit of Jovick but by the provisions of section 6602 of the Corporations Code, which provide that the court shall take judicial notice of "the official acts affecting corporations of the * * * executive * * * departments of the State or place under the laws of which the corporation purports to be incorporated." When the dissolution became apparent to the court, it was bound to find the order void. See Thompson v. Cook, 20 Cal.2d 564, 569, 127 P.2d 909; San Francisco Unified Sch. Dist. v. San Francisco, 54 Cal.App.2d 105, 111–112, 128 P.2d 696.

Smith v. Lewis, 211 Cal. 294, 295 P. 37, is determinative of the question here. There, a minority stockholder successfully brought an action on behalf of a corporation, judgment being rendered against defendants and in favor of the corporation; then the defendants brought an action to set aside the judgment and enjoin enforcement thereof on the ground that the judgment was void because at the time the former action was commenced the corporation was under suspension of its corporate rights for failure to pay its license tax. The court affirmed judgment for the defendants in their action, partly on the ground that their complaint had been demurred to and hence the disability of the corporation was admitted, and said: "Reduced to its lowest terms, this controversy is one wherein a judgment is sought to be set aside on the ground that the court was without jurisdiction to enter the same. While it may be said that the judgment on its face did not disclose that the corporation was without power to sue or to have suit brought on its behalf, nevertheless jurisdiction thus appearing was only apparent [citation], and it may always be shown even collaterally that a corporation had no legal existence when the action was commenced. (Crossman v. Vivienda Water Co., supra [150 Cal. 575, 89 P. 335].) The same rule would be applicable where the corporation had, as here under the statute, no power to sue." 211 Cal.2d at page 300, 295 P. at page 40.

Prior to a later statutory enactment on the subject, the rule as to California corporations was: "It is settled beyond question that, except as otherwise provided by statute, the effect of the dissolution of a corporation is to terminate its existence as a legal entity, and render it incapable of suing or being sued as a corporate body or in its corporate name. It is dead, and can no more be proceeded against as an existing corporation than could a natural person after his death. There is no one who can appear or act for it, and all actions pending against it are abated, and any judgment attempted to be given against it is void. As to this, all the text writers agree, and their statement is supported by an overwhelming weight of authority. * * *

"There can be no serious doubt that such a void judgment can be collaterally impeached and its invalidity shown by any one interested, such as one entitled either as creditor or stockholder to participate in the assets of the corporation, or a stockholder liable for the debts of the corporation." Crossman v. Vivienda Water Co., 150 Cal. 575, 580, 581, 89 P. 335, 337; see also Newhall v. Western Zinc Min. Co., 164 Cal. 380, 128 P. 1040.

[9] On July 1 plaintiff filed the affidavit of Attorney Hatch in which he states that at the hearing culminating in the order of April 20, it was understood that in the event the court did not see fit to deny respondent's motion on points of law, a further hearing should be had, as to the facts of whether there had been a dissolution of Mileage and whether it had transferred the judgment to Macmillan prior to its dissolution. Plaintiff now urges that in the event we do not agree with its contentions, we remand the case for such a trial of fact. We see no necessity for so doing. There has not been, nor can there be, any question that Mileage was dissolved on December 24, 1937. The fact that, prior to dissolution, Mileage had assigned the judgment to Macmillan, does not change the situation, nor does the assumption that Macmillan was carrying the action on in the name of its assignee. Long prior to December 19, Mileage was defunct. No attempt was made to show the court then of any diligence by Macmillan, and as pointed out heretofore there could be no showing of diligence by the defunct corporation. The attorney appearing at that hearing only purported to represent Mileage, and his right to represent it had long since ceased. There are no facts that can be shown now which would breathe life into the order of December 19.

Nothing herein stated will prevent an application by Macmillan to the superior court for an order enforcing the judgment. On such application the assignment of the judgment by Mileage prior to dissolution, as well as any facts showing diligence on the part of Macmillan after such assignment, may be shown to the superior court.

Plaintiff attempts to avoid the invalidity of the December 19 order by contending that Macmillan as assignee had the right to carry on the action in the name of Mileage, its assignor, citing section 385 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Assuming that an assignee may carry on an action in the name of a dissolved corporation which has lost its capacity, the question here is not that. Here an affirmative action was taken in the name of Mileage under section 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section implies that a showing be made of diligence. It is conceded that at that time Attorney Hatch had no knowledge of the dissolution of Mileage. Here the only showing of diligence was the acts of the attorney for Mileage. Mileage had long since become defunct, and, of course, when it died, the attorney's right to represent it died also. Therefore, neither he nor it could appear in the action, and his acts from the date upon which it became completely defunct could not be considered.

Had Macmillan appeared in the proceeding as assignee and given evidence of its affirmative acts, there would have been a different situation. Until a plaintiff with capacity to act appeared in the case, the court had no jurisdiction.

[10] Plaintiff contends that by appealing from the April 20 order respondent recognized the invalidity of the order of May 3 setting it aside. This does not necessarily follow. Respondent could have appealed because the time was running out and he feared that the order of June 14 would be appealed by plaintiff. (This order was set aside later by stipulation.) If the order of May 3 was valid, the appeal was an idle act. If the order of May 3 was not valid, and if the order of June 14 did not stand, respondent was protected by his appeal from the order of April 20.

[11, 12] Plaintiff further contends that by the appeal the court lost the power to set aside that order, as it did on December 3. However, a court may set aside a void order at any time. An appeal will not prevent the court from at any time lopping off what has been termed a dead limb on the judicial tree—a void order. As we have held that the order of December 19 is void, the order of April 20 refusing to vacate it could not give it validity. Moreover, as Mileage had no capacity, it had no right to resist the April 20 motion and the court had no jurisdiction to do other than grant it. It is academic whether the order of May 3 vacating the order of December 19, or that portion of the order of December 3 again vacating it, or that portion of the order of December 3 refusing to vacate the May 3 order, is the controlling order.

The appeal of Mileage is dismissed and that portion of the order of December 3 granting respondent's motion to vacate the order of substitution of August 21, 1948, is reversed. In all other respects said order is affirmed, each party to bear his own costs.

Civ. 7773.

Sept. 20, 1950.

Action by R. J. LaMiller against St. Claire Packing Company, Inc., a corporation, and another, for damages occasioned by the breach by defendant of a written contract wherein defendant agreed to buy and plaintiff agreed to sell his 1947 tomato crop. The Superior Court, San Joaquin County, Thomas B. Quinn, J., entered a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that evidence supported finding that seller's tomatoes conformed to the contract requirement as to size, that evidence supported finding that buyer had not exercised reasonable care in furnishing boxes to seller as contemplated under the contract, and that purported letter of release was merely an authorization to the seller to sell to other canners.

1. Sales ⇐181(12)

In action by seller of crop of tomatoes against buyer for damages for breach of written contract, evidence sustained determination that seller's tomatoes conformed to contract requirement as to size.

2. Sales ⇐179(4)

Where buyer of crop of tomatoes failed to timely reject any of seller's tomatoes for failure to conform to contract requirement as to size, and buyer accepted such tomatoes, buyer thereby waived strict performance in accordance with terms of contract. Civ.Code, § 1789.

3. Sales ⇐181(11)

In action by seller of crop of tomatoes against buyer for breach of written contract, evidence supported finding that buyer had not exercised reasonable care in furnishing boxes to seller as contemplated under contract.

4. Release ⇐1

Where buyer of crop of tomatoes wrote letter addressed to whom it may concern stating that upon specified date buyer cleared seller from 1947 tomato contract which would permit seller to sell to any other canner, such letter did not amount to release but was rather an authorization to sell, and buyer was not released thereby from his obligation under contract.

5. Sales ⊂384(1)

Award of damages of $5,130 to seller upon buyer's breach of written contract to buy seller's 1947 tomato crop was supported by evidence.

Chester E. Watson, District Attorney, Stockton, John J. Jones, San Jose, Thomas E. Davis, San Francisco, for appellants.

Chadeayne & Wilkinson, Tracy, for respondent.

PEEK, Justice.

Defendants appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff awarding him damages in the sum of $5,130.00 occasioned by the breach by defendant St. Claire Packing Company, sometimes referred to hereinafter as the Buyer, of a written contract wherein said company agreed to buy and plaintiff agreed to sell his 1947 tomato crop. Defendant United Pacific Insurance Company, as bondsman for the buyer under the provisions of section 1300.1a of the Agricultural Code, was held liable in the sum of $5,000.00, the limit of its bond.

The provisions of the contract pertinent to the issues raised on appeal are that the plaintiff "sold" all of the tomatoes grown on his land and the packing company "bought" the same for $29.00 per ton; that the tomatoes would not be less than 2¼ inches in diameter and would be delivered at "roadside" in boxes furnished by buyer, but that buyer would not be liable for failure to do so beyond the exercise of reasonable care.

Plaintiff's complaint alleges that defendant buyer breached the foregoing contract in that it failed to provide the boxes as provided for in the agreement and failed to accept the tomatoes at the times and in the manner contemplated by the contract. Demurrers by each defendant were overruled. Thereafter separate answers were filed, each of which generally denied the allegations of the complaint and affirmatively alleged that the contract had been terminated by mutual agreement of the parties and that the tomatoes did not comply with the provisions of the contract as to size. The trial court adopted findings of fact favorable to plaintiff, and from the judgment which was accordingly entered defendants have appealed.

[1] Appellants' first attack upon the judgment is premised upon the proposition that respondent's tomatoes did not conform to the contract requirement as to size and therefore were subject to rejection, their argument in this regard being that conformity to such requirement was a condition precedent to the duty of the buyer to accept the tomatoes and that, in the absence of proof of compliance therewith, there was no liability on its part for nonacceptance. The record does not bear out this contention. The evidence in relation to such contention shows that until the buyer closed its cannery it accepted all of respondent's tomatoes, rejecting no deliveries for failure to conform to the minimum size requirements of the contract or for any other reason; that respondent's tomatoes were average in size; that the tomatoes under 2¼ inches in diameter were no more prevalent than those grown in adjacent fields, the percentage of such size tomatoes being variously estimated at from five to ten per cent of the entire crop, and that after defendant's cannery reopened it, as well as other canneries, accepted plaintiff's tomatoes without rejection.

[2] Even assuming the evidence to have been otherwise, appellant buyer, by failing to timely reject any of respondent's tomatoes for failure to conform to the contract requirement as to size, as it now contends, and by reason of its acceptance and conversion of such tomatoes in its canning processes, thereby waived strict performance in accordance with the terms of the contract. Sec. 1789, Civ.Code; Burrell v. So. Cal. Canning Co., 35 Cal.App. 162, 169 P. 405; See also, Brandenberg

[3] Appellants further attack the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the finding that it had not exercised reasonable care in furnishing boxes to plaintiff as contemplated under the contract. This finding is adequately supported by the testimony of a field man for the buyer, who testified that the cannery did not have sufficient boxes for the amount of tomatoes grown on the acreage which the buyer had under contract; that plaintiff was continually short of boxes and that the trucks which were supposed to bring back boxes to plaintiff on their return trips did so only for approximately two-thirds of the time and that there were times when, by reason of the want of boxes, plaintiff's picking crews could pick only for part of a day. Plaintiff testified to the same effect, as did the labor contractor who supplied the picking crews for plaintiff and who, in addition, testified that on one occasion he was compelled, because of the lack of boxes, to lay off his crew from a Thursday to the following Monday. Under such evidence the trial court could reasonably find as it did, that the buyer had not exercised reasonable care in furnishing boxes to plaintiff.

[4] Appellants further contend that the following letter written by the buyer to respondent constituted a rescission of the contract of the parties:

"To Whom It May Concern:

"Upon the above date St. Claire Packing Co., Inc., clears R. J. LaMiller from 1947 tomatoe contract which will permit him to sell to any other canners."

The foregoing letter was signed only by Mr. George W. Buttke, president of the Packing Company. It is appellants' contention that such writing contains all of the necessary elements required of a rescission by mutual consent, including consideration, mutuality and intent of the parties as evidenced by their testimony and conduct. Although his testimony relative to this phase of the case was contradicted by Buttke, plaintiff testified that he obtained such release to enable him to sell the tomatoes elsewhere and to minimize his damages resulting from the buyer's failure to furnish a sufficient number of boxes. This testimony was confirmed by plaintiff's witness Heinbockel. Plaintiff further testified that it was understood, and was so stated by Buttke, that if the cannery could again start packing it would take whatever tomatoes it could; that in fact some were shipped to the buyer, accepted and paid for by it following the execution of the writing above set forth.

We cannot agree with appellants' contention in this regard. The writing in question is more properly described, as did the trial judge in his memorandum opinion, as being not a release but more accurately "an authorization to sell." There is nothing contained therein which released the buyer from his obligation under the contract. All that was accomplished thereby was the right given to plaintiff to sell his tomatoes elsewhere, something which was necessary under the circumstances, in order that he could deal with other canneries.

[5] Appellants' final contention attacks the award of damages as being too uncertain and speculative to afford any legal basis therefor. We likewise find no merit in this contention. The record discloses substantial evidence to support the conclusion of the trial judge in his computation thereof, with which we agree, which computation as shown by his memorandum opinion, was as follows: "The evidence discloses that the crop ran at least eighteen tons per acre throughout producing a total of some 990 tons. Deducting therefrom the tonnage actually picked (690) tons the loss amounts to 300 tons. Deducting therefrom 30 tons representing undersized tomatoes on the basis of ten per cent of the total in accordance with the evidence the net loss amounts to 270 tons. Fixing the cost of picking at $10.00 per ton the money loss per ton is $19.00 or a total of $5130.00."

MORGANTI v. MORGANTI.

Civ. 7746.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Sept. 20, 1950.

Assunta Morganti sued Domenico Morganti for divorce because of alleged incurable insanity of defendant. The Superior Court, Sonoma County, Donald Geary, J., granted plaintiff an interlocutory decree of divorce and relieved plaintiff of necessity of supporting defendant at state hospital and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that statutory provision making allegation and proof of financial ability to support spouse a condition precedent to obtaining a divorce for incurable insanity of spouse is unconstitutional as constituting an arbitrary denial of equal protection of the laws.

Judgment affirmed as modified.

The Constitution does not prohibit legislature from specifying upon what grounds, if any, divorces are to be granted.

2. Divorce ⇐4, 13

Chas. McGoldrick, District Attorney, Arthur L. Tallman, Chief Deputy, Santa Rosa, for appellant.

Francis M. Passalacqua, Healdsburg, for respondent.

PEEK, Justice.

Plaintiff wife brought this action to obtain a divorce from her defendant husband upon the ground of his alleged incurable insanity. She did not allege that she had reasonable ability to support him for the remainder of his life expectancy or that he had sufficient property to provide such support as required by section 108 of the Civil Code. To the contrary it was affirmatively alleged that she did not have such financial ability. The defendant husband, appearing through the district attorney, interposed a general demurrer to the complaint predicated upon the failure of the complaint to so allege. The trial court overruled the demurrer upon the ground that the foregoing requirement contained in said section is unconstitutional. The defendant then filed an answer denying the allegations set forth in the complaint and alleging as an affirmative defense that neither plaintiff nor defendant had property sufficient to provide for the support of defendant during the rest of his life expectancy. Upon the issues thus raised the cause proceeded to trial. At the conclusion of plaintiff's case defendant's motion for nonsuit was denied. The findings of fact were generally that the allegations of the complaint and of defendant's separate defense were true. Thereafter judgment was entered granting plaintiff an interlocutory decree of divorce, which decree further provided in the last paragraph thereof: "It Is Further Ordered, Adjudged, and Decreed that plaintiff shall not be required to support defendant at the Mendocino State Hospital."

The single issue which appellant argues on his appeal is the question of the constitutional validity of section 108 of the Civil Code insofar as it requires allegation and proof of financial ability to support.

The relevant statutory provisions are contained in sections 92 and 108 of the Civil Code. The section first mentioned provides under subsection 7 thereof that one of the grounds of divorce shall be "Incurable insanity". Section 108 provides that:

"A divorce may be granted on the grounds of incurable insanity only upon proof that the insane spouse has been confined to an institution under the provisions of Chapter 1, Part 1, Division 6 of the Welfare and Institutions Code or under the provisions of Section 1026 of the Penal Code or Chapter 6, Title 10, Part 2 of the Penal Code, for a period of at least three continuous years immediately preceding the filing of the action and upon the testimony of a member of the medical staff of said institution that such spouse is incurably insane.

"Duty to support. No decree granted on this ground shall relieve the spouse granted the divorce of any obligation imposed by law as a result of the marriage for the support of the spouse against whom the divorce is granted. It shall be alleged in the complaint and proved at the trial of the cause either that there is reasonable ability to support the insane spouse for the remainder of the life expectancy or that such insane spouse has property sufficient to provide support for the remainder of the life expectancy, and the court shall make such order for support, or require a bond therefor, as the cicumstances require." (Italics added.)

Respondent's argument in support of the judgment is that said section 108 is unconstitutional as violative of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution and the various provisions of the California Constitution, to wit: Article 1, sections 2 and 21, and Article IV. Appellant, however, contends that as the legislature has the power to control the grounds of divorce upon whatever reasonable conditions it chooses, and as the conditions contained in said section 108 apply alike to all persons seeking a divorce upon the ground of incurable insanity, and since the equal protection clause guarantees only equal rights and not equality of enjoyment, therefore since the section in question confers equal rights, it is constitutional.

[1–3] The constitutional right of the legislature to specify upon what grounds, if any, divorces are to be granted cannot be doubted. See Grannis v. Superior Court of City and County of S. F., 146 Cal. 245, 79 P. 891, 106 Am.St.Rep. 23; Crouch v. Crouch, 28 Cal.2d 243, 169 P.2d 897; 9 Cal.Jur. 628. Hence the power of the legislature to specify incurable insanity as a ground of divorce and to establish requirement as to the proof thereof cannot be challenged. See State v. Brown, 213 Ind. 118, 11 N.E.2d 679, 113 A.L.R. 1243. Equally well established is the power to

In the present case had the legislature concluded its labors with the declaration of incurable insanity as a cause for divorce, with a declaration as to the manner of proof and with a further declaration as to the duty of support, there could be little question as to the constitutionality thereof. But the legislature did not stop at that point. It went further and declared, as a condition precedent to the granting of a decree upon such ground, that the financial requirements contained in said section 108 must be met by allegation in the complaint and proof at the trial.

[4] In other words there can be no question but that the plain effect of such provision is that unless the requirements as to the proof thereof are met no divorce shall be granted to the person seeking it unless he or she is able to comply with the financial conditions imposed by said section. Reduced to a most elementary illustration it simply means that if A and B have insane spouses and can prove such fact, and A is financially able to provide support and B is not, then A may obtain a divorce and B cannot. Thus, while the amendment to section 92 adding incurable insanity as a ground of divorce created a new classification, uniformly applying to all persons falling within its scope, nevertheless by the italicized provision of said section 108 the ground of divorce so created was by the latter provision restricted only to those who could comply with the financial provisions thereof. Obviously it cannot be said that such provision bears "equally upon each person so classified". In re Lake, 89 Cal.App. 390, 265 P. 325, i. e. to whom divorce on the ground of incurable insanity is made available. Neither can it be said, as the trial court so aptly stated, that those who cannot comply with the financial conditions imposed by paragraph 2 of said section are possessed of some natural or intrinsic or constitutional distinction which so differentiates them as a class as to bring them within the exception of the rule as noted in the early case of City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 27 P. 604, and reiterated in numerous cases that follow. We must conclude that such a classification is violative of both the federal and state constitutions.

[5–7] In so holding, we are not unmindful of the rule that all presumptions are in favor of the validity of statutes and that a classification adopted by the legislature will not be overthrown unless palpably unreasonable. County of Los Angeles v. Southern Cal. Tel. Co., 32 Cal.2d 378, 196 P.2d 773; Asbury Hospital v. Cass County, 326 U.S. 207, 66 S.Ct. 61, 90 L.Ed. 6. But it is equally well settled that a statute is unconstitutional "if it confers particular privileges upon a class arbitrarily selected from a larger number of persons, all of whom stand in the same relation to the privileges granted, and between whom and the persons not so favored no reasonable distinction or substantial difference can be found justifying the inclusion of the one and the exclusion of the other." Franchise Motor Freight Ass'n v. Seavey et al., 196 Cal. 77, 235 P. 1000, 1002. In other words, as the Supreme Court stated in the recent case of Takahashi v. Fish & Game Comm., 30 Cal.2d 719, 185 P.2d 805, 810, "The rule is that the classification must not be arbitrary, but must be based upon some difference in the classes having a substantial relation to a legitimate object to be accomplished."

It would seem apparent that the purposes of section 108 are (1) to provide the manner of proof where the ground for divorce is the incurable insanity of the defendant spouse, and (2) to provide a means of securing continuing financial support for the insane spouse. Applying the "substantial relation" test enunciated in Takahashi v. Fish & Game Comm., supra, to the present case, it cannot be said that the financial status of the parties bears any more relation to the first object of section 108 stated above than does the race of the applicant bear to the issuance of a marriage license. See Perez v. Sharp, 32 Cal.2d 711, 198 P.2d 17.

Furthermore proof of financial liability as set forth in the second sentence of the second paragraph of said section becomes wholly superfluous to the attainment of the second object thereof, since by reason of the specific terms of the preceding sentence no decree granted on the ground of incurable insanity can relieve a spouse of "any obligation imposed by law as a result of the marriage for the support" of the insane spouse. See section 155, Civil Code and sections 5077 and 5105.6, Welfare and Institutions Code. It follows that the requirement contained in section 108 of the Civil Code, that it must be alleged in the complaint and proved at the trial that there is either reasonable ability to support the insane spouse or that such insane spouse has property sufficient to provide support, constitutes a classification based on financial ability which is without reasonable relation to either of the legislative objects of (1) providing a manner of proof where the ground for divorce is incurable insanity, or (2) securing financial support for the insane spouse, and that such classification is, in effect, an arbitrary denial of equal protection and is, therefore, invalid.

[8, 9] There remains, however, the question as to the severability of the invalid requirement from the remainder of section 108. The rule is well established that when part of a statute is declared unconstitutional, the remainder will stand if it is complete in itself and would have been adopted by the legislature had the latter foreseen the partial invalidation of the statute. In re Bell, 19 Cal.2d 488, 122 P.2d 22; 5 Cal.Jur. 644. Thus since section 108 is complete without the invalid financial requirement, the question becomes one of legislative intent. Hale v. McGettigan, 114 Cal. 112, 45 P. 1049. In 5 Cal.Jur. at page 646, it is stated that "The distinction of an act into sections is purely artificial, and the real point is whether the provisions are essentially and inseparably connected in substance. The saving of the particular provision is therefore a matter of legislative intent, for the legislature is presumed to intend that notwithstanding the invalidity of the other parts of the act, still the valid parts stand." As we have pointed out above, the objects of section 108 are in no way thwarted or frustrated by the deletion of the invalid requirement, hence it cannot be said that the legislature would not have adopted section 108 except for the inclusion of that requirement. We conclude that the remainder of section 108 may be given effect and a divorce granted on the ground of incurable insanity.

For the reasons stated herein the judgment of the trial court granting an interlocutory decree to plaintiff is affirmed. However, since section 108 imposed upon the spouse to whom a decree is granted the obligation of a continuing responsibility for the support of the insane spouse, said decree is modified by striking therefrom that portion purporting to relieve plaintiff herein from such obligation of support. As so modified the judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 17637.

Sept. 19, 1950.

Jennie Reites and another filed a petition against Russel B. Wilkerson and others and Walter C. Peterson, as city clerk of the City of Los Angeles, to require the city clerk to examine all names affixed to a supplemental petition for the recall of the Mayor of the City of Los Angeles. Petitioners made a motion that city clerk appear and show cause why he should not be cited for contempt of court for allegedly failing and refusing to comply with terms of a peremptory writ of mandate issued by District Court of Appeal. The District Court of Appeal, Per Curiam, held that it was the duty of the Los Angeles city clerk to examine all signatures signed to a supplemental petition for the recall of the mayor, subsequent to date of original petition, and clerk could not examine only those signatures signed during ten day extended period after original petition was found insufficient.

3. Mandamus ⇐186

Where city clerk refused to examine any signatures to a recall petition other than those signed during 10 day extended period because of an opinion rendered by Los Angeles City Attorney, clerk's conduct was not such as to render him subject to a contempt citation for refusal to obey District Court of Appeal mandate requiring him to examine petition.

Enger & Hiller and Louis Thomas Hiller, all of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Attorney, Bourke Jones, Assistant City Attorney, and Roger Arnebergh, Assistant City Attorney, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

Petitioners herein made a motion in this court that respondent Walter C. Peterson, City Clerk of the City of Los Angeles, appear and show cause why he should not be cited for contempt of this court for allegedly failing and refusing to comply with the terms of a peremptory writ of mandate issued out of this court on the 25th day of April, 1950.

This proceeding concerns the examination and certification by respondent City Clerk of certain petitions filed with him for the recall of Honorable Fletcher Bowron as Mayor of the City of Los Angeles.

Insofar as here pertinent the facts are that on January 5, 1950 the original petitions for such recall election were filed with respondent City Clerk. On August 22, 1950 in conformity with the provisions of the Los Angeles City Charter as interpreted by this court in the foregoing writ of mandate, respondent City Clerk duly certified to the Council of said city that said petitions did not contain sufficient names to require the holding of an election for the recall of Mayor Bowron.

Section 273 of the Los Angeles City Charter provides in part that when such a recall petition is found to be insufficient and so certified to the Council, "it may be amended by filing a supplemental petition or petitions, in form, a duplicate of original petition bearing additional signatures, within ten days from the date of such certificate * * *".

Within the ten days after said certification of insufficiency, and as provided in the foregoing charter provision, to-wit, on August 30, 1950, there was filed with respondent City Clerk a supplemental petition consisting of 1,236 sections and containing 73,649 names of claimed registered voters of the City of Los Angeles. Some 3,979 of such names had been signed to said petition prior to January 5, 1950, the date when the first original recall petition was filed. The remainder of said names were signed subsequent to January 5, 1950, but only 915 names were affixed to said petition within ten days subsequent to August 22, 1950, or in other words, within ten days after the foregoing certificate of insufficiency was filed with the Council by respondent City Clerk.

Acting upon the advice of the City Attorney of Los Angeles, respondent City Clerk refused to examine any of the names on such supplemental petition other than the 915 names affixed thereto within ten days after August 22, 1950.

Contending that respondent City Clerk was required to examine all names affixed to said supplemental petition after January 5, 1950 (date of the original petition) petitioners commenced the instant proceeding.

Upon the hearing of the within motion praying that respondent City Clerk show cause why he should not be cited for contempt of court, he appeared and defended his action on the ground that only signatures obtained during the extended period of ten days following a certificate of insufficiency may be considered by him in examining a supplemental recall petition.

There being no dispute as to the facts, the issue before us presents solely the problem of proper construction and application of the foregoing language quoted from Section 273 of the municipal charter of Los Angeles, particularly the language therein contained which reads: "It (the recall petition) may be amended by filing a supplemental petition or petitions * * * within ten days from the date of such certificate * * *" (Emphasis added) of insufficiency of the original petition.

[1] The courts are ever mindful of the desirability of having recall petitions presented to the people through election without delay or excessive expenditure of time, money and effort. Gage v. Jordan, 23 Cal. 2d 794, 799, 147 P.2d 387. And legislation affording the people a right to initiate legislation, repeal legislation or recall public officials is to be given the same liberal construction as that extended to election statutes generally.

The charter of the City of Los Angeles nowhere declares that a supplemental petition must be "circulated" within the ten days following certificate of insufficiency of the original petition. The charter plainly states that such supplemental petition may be "filed" within such time. Since no express or implied prohibition against solicitation of signatures prior to the ten-day period following certificate of insufficiency appears, if we are to adopt a liberal construction it must be held that such practice is permissible. To hold otherwise would require us to write into the charter language not now present therein. This we cannot do because we may not place restrictions upon the charter provisions and procedure for holding recall elections which are not now found therein.

We are not here confronted with a situation wherein we are called upon to construe language in the charter that is fairly susceptible of two constructions. The charter provision is definite and certain. It permits the filing, but does not require the circulation of supplemental petitions within the extended ten-day period.

It is obvious of course that a supplemental petition may not be signed prior to the filing of the original petition, since to label it a "supplemental" petition would be a misnomer for it would in fact be part of and included in the original petition and must be filed therewith. But once the original petition is filed, we find no prohibition in the charter against the circulation of a supplemental petition to be filed in the event of insufficiency of the original one.

Respondent City Clerk places great reliance on the case of Thompson v. Kerr, 16 Cal.2d 130, 133, 104 P.2d 1021. This however was a proceeding wherein the question presented and the decision rendered concerned the validity of signatures obtained prior to the filing of the original petition. The issue in that case did not involve signatures obtained during the twenty-day period within which, in that case, the county clerk checks the signatures on the original petition. We therefore regard as pure dictum, unnecessary to the decision, the following language appearing on page 133 of 16 Cal.2d, 104 P.2d page 1022: "and in view of the further provision therein that a supplemental petition is to be circulated 'within forty days from the transmission of the said (original) petition', obviously only the names of voters signed to a 'supplemental' petition during the extended period may be included among those required to qualify the initiative measure."

Furthermore, the foregoing statement of the court does not appear to us quite accurate, since an examination of the constitutional provision there under consideration, Art. IV, sec. 1, par. 10, reveals that it restricts only the filing of the supplemental petition and does not contain any language that would confine the circulation of the supplemental petition to the extended forty-day period.

The same conclusion applies to the case of Gage v. Jordan, supra, 23 Cal.2d 802, 147 P.2d 391, in construing the aforesaid constitutional provision, Art. IV, sec. 1, par. 10, the court says: "Hence in each respective county where petitions are circulated, the process must be completed within 70 days from the first filing of sections of any petition with the county clerk or registrar, to wit: 20 days to check first sections, 40 days to secure supplemental names, and 10 days to check supplemental names" (Emphasis added.) But the pertinent constitutional provision does not use the word "secure" names to a supplemental petition. The word used in the constitution is "filed" with the clerk or Registrar of Voters.

The very evident purpose of a supplemental petition under the provisions of the Los Angeles City Charter here under consideration is to supply any deficiency that may be found by the City Clerk in the original petition after it has been presented to him. In other words, if the original petition is found insufficient, the proponents of the recall are afforded ten days within which to file a supplemental petition or petitions. But nowhere in the city charter does there appear anything which expressly or impliedly prohibits the proponents from making advance preparation for such a contingency, by commencing the circulation of supplemental petitions immediately after they have filed the original petition or petitions. Indeed, it is but natural to assume that such would be the precaution taken by the proponents of any initiative or recall petition.

[2] The peremptory writ of mandate issued by this court directed respondent City Clerk within ten days after his certification of insufficiency of the original petition or petitions, to permit the proponents to file a supplementary petition or petitions, "in conformity with the charter provisions". This the proponents have done, and for the foregoing reasons it now becomes the duty of respondent City Clerk to examine all signatures signed to said supplemental petition or petitions subsequent to January 5, 1950, the date when the original petition or petitions were lodged with him.

[3] Since respondent City Clerk refused to examine any signatures other than those signed during the ten-day extended period because of an opinion rendered him by the City Attorney, we are not disposed to regard his conduct as requiring the issuance at this time of an order to show cause in re contempt.

It is therefore ordered that petitioners' motion for the issuance of an order directing respondent City Clerk to show cause why he should not be cited for contempt may go off calendar, and it is further ordered that pursuant to the peremptory writ of mandate heretofore issued by this court that respondent City Clerk proceed forthwith to examine all names signed to said supplemental petition or petitions subsequent to the 5th day of January, 1950 (the day of presentation of the original petition or petitions) and August 30, 1950 (the date when the supplemental petition or petitions were presented), and that such of said names as are found to be the signatures of registered voters of the City of Los Angeles, be counted as valid signatures. That within ten days from and after the filing of this decision, respondent City Clerk shall make examination of such supplemental petition or petitions in the manner aforesaid (Charter of the City of Los Angeles, sec. 273) and certify to the result of such examination as provided by the terms of said city charter.

Civ. 17589.

Sept. 11, 1950.

Peter J. Murphy and wife brought an action against San Gabriel Manufacturing Company and others, for rescission of a contract for the sale of two lots. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Kenneth G. Newell, J., entered judgment in favor of the plaintiffs and the named defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that the contract of sale used was materially different from the contract form filed with the real estate division and was therefore unlawful, and that plaintiffs had established a clear right to the return of the money they had paid on such void contract.

1. Fraud ⇐68

Business and Professions Code requirement that subdivision plan be submitted to real estate commissioner and authority given commissioner to forbid sales or leases were designed to protect buyer public, and law is valid. Business and Professions Code, §§ 11000–11020.

2. Fraud ⇐68

Where subdivider changes form of contract without notifying real estate division of proposed change, and effect of such change is to materially change set-up of offering, use of substituted contract violates Business and Professions Code. Business and Professions Code, §§ 11010(e), 11012, 11020.

3. Fraud ⇐68

Where contract form filed by subdivider with state commission prohibited nonresidential usage, and sales contract actually used by subdivider without informing commission of change contained no such prohibition, but did contain provisions reserving mineral, oil and gas rights and rights of way for transmission purposes which were not contained in contract filed, sales contract used varied in material respects from one filed with commissioner and its use was violation of Act. Business and Professions Code, §§ 11010(e), 11012, 11020.

4. Fraud ⇐68

Requirement of Business and Professions Code that real estate division be notified of any material change in set up of offering is mandatory, and violation of it is criminal offense. Business and Professions Code, §§ 11012, 11020.

5. Evidence ⇐65

Vendor of lots could not plead ignorance of illegality of contract under which it was marketing lots. Business and Professions Code, §§ 11010(e), 11012, 11020.

6. Principal and agent ⇐159(1)

Where vendor's selling agent had actual knowledge of illegality of contract under which lots were marketed, his principal could not escape responsibility if sales were made unlawfully. Business and Professional Code, §§ 11010(e), 11012, 11020.

7. Contracts ⇐139

Where money has been paid in consideration of an executory contract which is illegal, party who has paid it may repudiate agreement at any time before it is executed and reclaim his money, and in such case it is duty of court to aid one not in pari delicto, though to some extent involved in illegality, and to permit him to recover back money paid on contract.

Where trial court did not make finding essential to judgment in favor of respondent, though evidence required such finding, District Court of Appeal on appeal made finding to conform to evidence and affirmed judgment. Code Civ.Proc. § 956a.

9. Contracts ⇐139
Vendor and purchaser ⇐39

In action by purchaser against vendor for rescission of contract on grounds of fraud, where sales contract used was found to vary materially from contract filed by subdivider with real estate division, such contract was void and purchaser was entitled to return of money paid on such contract. Business and Professions Code, §§ 11010(e), 11012, 11019, 11020.

A. J. O'Connor, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Jacob Chaitkin, Pasadena, for respondents.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

In November of 1947 plaintiffs Murphy agreed to purchase two lots in a real estate subdivision from San Gabriel Manufacturing Co. They made a down payment and certain progress payments in the total amount of $2,078. Thereafter they gave notice of rescission, offered to surrender their agreement and demanded the return of their money upon the ground that certain agents of San Gabriel had induced them to enter into the agreement by false and fraudulent representations. Return of the money having been denied they instituted this action in which judgment was given in their favor for $2,078. San Gabriel appeals.

There was evidence that a broker, John M. Pon, was San Gabriel's agent for sale of the property and that George C. Petersen, who was unlicensed as a broker or salesman, assisted Pon in making the sale to plaintiffs and was paid by Pon one half of a commission of $600. Pon accepted the services of Petersen in negotiating the sale. It was Petersen who was charged with false representations which were unknown to Pon and San Gabriel. On the appeal the sufficiency of the evidence to prove that false representations were made by Petersen and that plaintiffs' purchase was induced thereby is not questioned. It is contended, however, that San Gabriel was not responsible for the actions of Petersen and it is also claimed that plaintiffs were guilty of delay in attempting a rescission which, as a matter of law, bars their right to equitable relief. These contentions need not be discussed further for the reason that there is an independent ground upon which the judgment must be affirmed.

[1] The real property which was subdivided was owned by John M. Pon and his wife. They complied with the provisions of Business and Professions Code, sections 11000 to 11020, which require that the plan of subdivision shall be submitted to the Real Estate Commissioner. The purpose of the scheme of State regulation is to protect the buying public and the commissioner may forbid sales or leases under the offering to prevent fraud. Sec. 11019. It is a valid law. In re Siderbotham, 12 Cal.2d 434, 85 P.2d 453. Section 11010 provides that the subdivider shall notify the commissioner in writing of his intention to sell such offering which notice shall contain among other things: "(e) A true statement of the terms and conditions on which it is intended to dispose of the land, together with copies of any contracts intended to be used." A copy of the proposed contract was filed with the commissioner in compliance with this requirement. Thereafter Pon and wife conveyed the property to San Gabriel Manufacturing Company but Pon remained as selling agent of the property and made numerous sales of lots. Section 11012 of the Code reads: "It is unlawful for the owner, his agent, or subdivider, of the project, after it is submitted to the Real Estate Division, to materially change the setup of such offering without first notifying the Real Estate Division in writing of such intended change." Section 11020 provides that one who wilfully violates or fails to comply with any of the provisions of the chapter, secs. 11000–11020, is guilty of a public offense and punishable by fine or imprisonment.

[2, 3] The agreement between plaintiffs and San Gabriel was not in the form of the contract previously filed with the Real Estate Commissioner. No information was given to the Real Estate Division of a proposed change from the contract form submitted to the one that was used. Therefore, if the effect of the change was "to materially change the setup of such offering" the use of the substituted contract was a violation of the act. There can be no doubt that the contract that was used varied in material respects from the one filed with the commissioner. The contract which plaintiffs signed reserved rights-of-way over the lots for poles with cross-arms for the transmission of electrical energy, for telephone lines and for water, gas, sewage, electrical and telephone conduits, the sole right being reserved in the seller to convey such rights-of-way. The proposed contract did not contain these reservations. It did, however, contain the provision "that no store, launderette, restaurant, saloon, cigar, fruit or candy stand or any blacksmith or manufacturing, dairying or livery business nor any unlawful business shall at any time be maintained or carried on upon said premises or any part thereof." It was thus represented to the commissioner to be offered as a strictly residential subdivision. The contract that was used contained no such restrictions. It did, however, reserve to the seller all mineral, oil and gas rights and the right to natural underground storage space without a reservation of the right of entry upon the surface for drilling purposes. The submitted contract contained no such reservation. The contract with plaintiffs provided that it should become wholly void and terminated if either party caused the same to be recorded in the office of any county recorder. The submitted form contained no such provision. There were other variances which we deem to be of less importance. If the form of contract to be used in the marketing of a subdivision had not been deemed by the legislature to be an important feature of the offering it would not have been specified as an item of information to be furnished by the seller. It is sufficient to say with reference to the change of plan, that one who had contracted to buy a lot in this subdivision under the form of agreement that was submitted to the commissioner would not have been required to accept a deed which followed the form of the agreement which these plaintiffs signed. Such a deed would have failed in material respects to fulfill the seller's obligations with respect to the title agreed to be conveyed.

[4-6] The requirements of section 11012 are mandatory. They are for the protection of the buying public and a violation of them is a criminal offense. Therefore the wilful use by San Gabriel of the form of contract which plaintiffs signed was unlawful. It is argued that there was no evidence that San Gabriel had knowledge of the representations made to the commissioner. But San Gabriel could not plead ignorance of the illegality of the contract under which they were marketing the lots. Moreover, Pon had actual knowledge; he was San Gabriel's selling agent, and the only one through whom sales were made. If his sales were made unlawfully, his principal cannot escape responsibility.

[7] The rule of law which governs in such a case was stated in Smith v. Bach, 183 Cal. 259, 263, 191 P. 14, 15, as follows: "By the weight of authority, where money has been paid in consideration of an executory contract which is illegal, the party who has paid it may repudiate the agreement at any time before it is executed and reclaim the money. In such a case it is the duty of the court in furtherance of justice to aid one not in pari delicto, though to some extent involved in the illegality, but who, as here, is comparatively the more innocent, and to permit him to recover back money paid on a contract as the circumstances of the case may require." See also, McAllister v. Drapeau, 14 Cal.2d 102, 112, 92 P.2d 911, 125 A.L.R. 800; Morrison v. Landers, 56 Cal.App.2d 607, 133 P.2d 34; Severance v. Knight-Counihan Co., 29 Cal.2d 561, 568, 177 P.2d 4, 172 A.L.R. 1107; Carter v. Seaboard Finance Co., 33 Cal.2d 564, 573, 203 P.2d 758; Orlinoff v. [8, 9] The facts with relation to the contract forms were alleged in the complaint and a copy of the one filed with the commissioner was attached as an exhibit. The one that the parties entered into was received as an exhibit. Although the answer of San Gabriel denied that the contract form was the only one that had been filed with the commissioner they offered no evidence on the point. A deputy commissioner identified the form alleged in the complaint, and testified that no notice had been given the commission of the intended use of any other form. The court failed to make a finding upon this issue. We therefore find that the facts as to the two forms of contract are as we have stated them. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 956a; Downs v. Benatar's Cut Rate Drug Stores, 75 Cal.App.2d 61, 68, 170 P.2d 88; Horsman v. Maden, 69 Cal.App.2d 11, 17, 157 P.2d 882; Replogle v. Ray, 48 Cal.App.2d 291, 311, 119 P.2d 980.

PEOPLE by Howser, ex rel. LEVIN v. SANTA CLARA COUNTY et al. (WICKETT, Intervenor).

Civ. 14548.

Hearing Granted Nov. 20, 1950.*

The People of the State of California through its Attorney General, Frederick N. Howser, on relation of Albert J. Levin, brought an action against the County of Santa Clara, the Board of Supervisors of said County of Santa Clara, and others, to determine the validity of a charter adopted by the electors and duly approved by the legislature. Fred A. Wickett, an interested elector and chairman of the Board of Freeholders, was granted leave to intervene in support of charter. The Superior Court in and for the County of Santa Clara, James L. Atteridge, J., entered judgment in favor of applicant and intervenor appealed. The District Court of Appeals, Nourse, P. J., held that where 5 of 10 publications advertising a proposed new charter for a county had transposed language in 3 or 4 sections without any omissions of or additions to language proposed, whether disputed publications were sufficient to meet constitutional requirements became a question of fact for legislature and not the courts.

Judgment reversed with directions.

Conclusions of law not based upon conflicting evidence or possible inferences are open to review.

2. Constitutional law ⇐70(1)

Where in 5 of 10 publications advertising a proposed new charter for a county there were some transposition of language of 3 or 4 sections without any omissions of or additions to language proposed by freeholders, whether disputed publications were sufficient to meet constitutional requirement became a question of fact for legislature and not for court. Const. art. 11, § 7½.

3. Counties ⇐3

Where in 5 of 10 publications advertising a proposed new charter for a county there was some transposition of language of 3 or 4 sections without any omissions of or additions to language proposed, legislature exercised its proper function in approving charter when it reached conclusion that errors were of no consequence and that provisions of constitution were substantially complied with. Const. art. 11, § 7½.

Where right to intervene was granted in trial court and was had without objection, respondent could not contend on appeal that appellant was without right to intervene.

by the electors of Santa Clara County, and duly approved by the State Legislature. Fred A. Wickett, an interested elector and chairman of the Board of Freeholders, was granted leave to intervene in support of the charter. Judgment went in favor of the applicant and the intervenor prosecutes this appeal. The county counsel also took an appeal but later, with the cooperation of the Board of Supervisors, he withdrew his appeal.

The attack upon the charter is based on the sole ground that in five numbers of the newspaper publication the language of four sections was transposed (without, however, any change in meaning or text). Briefly the facts are: The Constitution requires ten publications in a newspaper. Ten were made of which five were literally correct. In the remaining five a portion of section 202 relating to requirements of eligibility for election to the Board of Supervisors appeared at the end of section 402, and a portion of section 303 fixing the salary of the County Executive appeared at the end of section 402. It is undisputed that all the provisions of the proposed charter were fully published for the ten times required by the Constitution, the only complaint being that in five of those publications some of the language appeared under the wrong section number—but without any change in the meaning. The legislature presumably considered these imperfections of no importance and, on June 15, 1949, approved the charter as submitted pursuant to the provisions of Art. XI, Sec. 7½ of the Constitution.

[1] There is no dispute as to the facts upon which the judgment is based, and, notwithstanding the lengthy findings which are merely conclusions of law the controlling question is whether the publication substantially complied with the terms of the Constitution. And this is a question of law. If it is necessary to refer to the facts to determine that question we are not limited to the findings of the trial court since they are not based on conflicting evidence or possible inferences. Here the case is like one based on a stipulation of facts and the conclusions of law based on the undisputed facts are open to review. E. J. Stanton & Sons v. County of Los Angeles, 78 Cal.App.2d 181, 193, 177 P.2d 804; In re Estate of Fleming, 31 Cal.2d 514, 523, 190 P.2d 611.

Arguing that the approval of the charter by the legislature forecloses judicial review of the procedural steps leading to the approval appellant cites Taylor v. Cole, 201 Cal. 327, 257 P. 40, holding that such legislative approval was a final and conclusive determination that no material unconstitutional irregularities occurred. The later case of People v. City of San Buenaventura, 213 Cal. 637, 3 P.2d 3, did not follow the Taylor case and did not overrule it. It should be noted that in the San Buenaventura case the city authorities made no attempt to comply with the Constitution and that no publication at all was made. In the later case of Santa Clara County v. Superior Court, 33 Cal.2d 552, 203 P.2d 1, these two cases were discussed in both the majority and the minority opinion and we must conclude that from the failure of the court to overrule either both must still be deemed to be authority. A fair analysis of the two opinions is that when there is a substantial failure to comply with the constitutional requirements which is apparent on the face of the proceedings, the San Buenaventura case, the recital of the legislature is not conclusive, but, where some trivial departure from such requirements occurs, in the Taylor case the city council failed to notify the electors that copies of the prepared charter amendments could be had on application, or when the alleged departure from the strict course is a matter of doubt, or one not prejudicially affecting the rights of the people then the doctrine of substantial compliance clothes the certificate of approval of the legislature with the mantle of a conclusive finding that the proceedings leading to the adoption and approval of the charter conformed with the constitutional requirements. In the Taylor case the Supreme Court specifically held, 201 Cal. page 333, 257 P. page 42, that petitioners were correct in their contention that the act of the legislature in "confirming the amendments by resolution, after a consideration thereof, conclusively presupposes that the validity of said election proceedings was examined, proof taken thereon, and findings made that said election was in all respects regular".

It is apparent that when there has been no compliance with the constitutional requirements and the failure is conceded the approval by the legislature could not possibly rest on the doctrine of substantial compliance. This explains some of the confusion in these decisions which is referred to in the dissenting opinion in the Santa Clara case, 33 Cal.2d 552, 203 P.2d 1. It should be noted however that that case was not fairly presented to the Supreme Court. The dissenting opinion emphasizes the allegation of the complaint reading, 33 Cal.2d page 562, 203 P.2d 7: " 'that said newspaper failed to publish said proposed charter any greater number than five times before such election; and no such publishing for ten times was made in any such newspaper. * * *'" If that allegation were true the Santa Clara case would be squarely within the facts of the San Buenaventura case where no publication was made because if only five publications had been made when the Constitution required ten no question of substantial compliance could arise. If the true facts had been before the court in the Santa Clara case it is fair to assume that there would have been no dissent as the only question then in the case would have been the one of proper remedy.

[2] In the proceeding here the conceded facts are that all ten publications were made, that in five of them there was some transposition of the language of three or four sections without any omissions of or additions to the language proposed by the freeholders. Whether these disputed publications were sufficient to meet the constitutional requirements thus became a question of fact for the legislature and not for the courts. In this respect we are bound by the express rule of the Taylor case.

[3] Here it is pertinent to add in reference to the substantial compliance theory that full notice was given the electors of all the provisions of the proposed charter. The Constitution does not require perfection in publication beyond the element of human error. If this were not so the will of the People could be thwarted in every instance by the carelessness of a printer or compositor in altering the number of a single section. The constitutional section was enacted in the interest of the people as a whole and their rights should not be denied by hypertechnical judicial construction. There is no super human agency supervising the conduct of public officials in the performance of their official duties. Statutes are enacted, both mandatory and directory, which fix the required standards but error occurs, either innocently or by design, and in such cases the courts always seek to preserve the rights of the public as against those of the individual. As in the case of errors occurring in judicial proceedings those which are found nonprejudicial are disregarded. So here the errors in publication complained of could not have prejudiced the voting public in any particular. We conclude that the legislature exercised its proper function when it reached the conclusion that these errors were of no consequence and that the provisions of the Constitution were substantially complied with.

[4] There is no merit in respondent's contention that appellant was without right to intervene. That right was granted in the trial court and the trial was had without objection.

Likewise the contention that the question is moot because steps are being taken to propose a new charter. The proposal may not be submitted to the electors, and if it is the voters may reject it.

We are not impressed with the suggestion of respondent that this appeal should be dismissed because the Board of Supervisors, represented by the county counsel, did not continue with their appeal. If there is any doubt of the right of a citizen and taxpayer to intervene in a case of this character the proceedings here fully dispel that doubt. Indeed in such an instance the intervention would seem to be all the more warranted.

The judgment is reversed with directions to enter judgment in accordance with the prayer of the intervenor.

TAYLOR v. SECURITY-FIRST NAT. BANK OF LOS ANGELES.

Civ. 17479.

Sept. 22, 1950.

Roy Taylor, as business agent and a member of, and for and on behalf of Furniture Workers Union No. 3161, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, a voluntary unincorporated association, and all of its members, brought an action against Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles, a national banking corporation, to recover $5,000. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Benjamin J. Scheinman, J., entered judgment on a directed verdict in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J., held that the evidence sustained the trial court's action in directing the verdict.

Affirmed.

1. Banks and banking ⇐154(8)

In action by labor union against bank to recover $5,000, evidence, including examination of manager of bank branch, sustained trial court's finding that duly accredited officer of union withdrew money and that union had proved no cause of action. Code Civ.Proc. § 2055.

2. Trial ⇐142

In action by labor union against bank to recover $5,000, where only inference that could be drawn from all of testimony was that duly accredited officer of union withdrew money and that union had failed to prove cause of action, trial court properly directed verdict in favor of bank.

3. Trial ⇐89

Striking testimony not responsive to question asked was not error.

4. Trade unions ⇐8

If union treasurer, with authority to sign checks, presented check drawn by union in favor of drawee bank, bank would be fully authorized to issue its cashier's check for union's check upon request of union's treasurer even though such check were endorsed payable to the bank.

5. Banks and banking ⇐154(7)

In action by labor union against bank to recover $5,000, trial court did not err in sustaining objections to questions intended to show that bank knew that party to whom $5,000 was paid by bank was indebted to it, and that he was a man of small means and manual worker who would have no reason to receive $5,000 from union.

Arthur Garrett, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Jennings & Belcher, Los Angeles, Stevens Fargo and Louis E. Kearney, Los Angeles, of counsel, for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

Furniture Workers Union No. 3161 had a checking account with the Vernon branch of the defendant bank. The treasurer of the union observed that the statement of account furnished by the bank was "over." It showed a credit to the union of $5,000 which was not due.

So the treasurer made out a check to the order of the bank for $5,000, and presented it to the president of the union for his signature. The president and the treasurer were authorized by the union to sign checks. On file with the bank was the usual signature card showing this authorization. And the treasurer had for a long time conducted the union's financial business with the bank.

After the president signed the check, the treasurer made the following notation upon its upper left-hand corner: "Payable cashier's check to Frank Abrams." He took the check to the bank and requested that a cashier's check be made out to his order. This was done. Then Mr. Abrams endorsed the cashier's check and deposited it in his own personal account in the same bank. He later withdrew and spent the money, "trying to act like a big shot."

When the $5,000 check was returned to the union, with the bank's monthly statement, Mr. Abrams with chemical ink remover obliterated the words "Payable cashier's check, etc." and wrote on the check instead: "refund to bank for error in credit to us."

In due time the defalcation came to light. Mr. Abrams was convicted of grand theft. His deposition was taken in the California Institution for Men at Chino.

This action was brought by the union against the bank for recovery of $5,000. Trial was by jury which, by direction of the court, rendered its verdict for defendant. The union appeals from the judgment which followed.

The essential inquiry, then, is whether there is any substantial evidence in the record supporting plaintiff's case.

Plaintiff called but one witness, the manager of the Vernon branch, and examined him under the provisions of section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Upon the identification of this witness, the following documentary evidence was received: Ledger cards of a savings account and a commercial account of the union with the bank; signature cards authorizing any two of the president, vice-president, and treasurer of the union to sign checks on these accounts; and several checks and deposit slips affecting the two accounts. The witness also testified that the union had demanded payment of $5,000 which was refused.

From this testimony may be gleaned the circumstances which occasioned the $5,000 overage. A check was signed by the president and the treasurer, shifting $5,000 from the checking to the savings account. The bank charged this check to the commercial account, and by mistake on the same day credited it back to the same account.

[1, 2] It appears from the record that there is only one inference to be drawn from all of the testimony, and no substantial evidence to the contrary: that a duly accredited officer of the union withdrew the money; that the union proved no cause of action. Therefore, the trial court properly directed the verdict. Farmer v. Fairbanks, 71 Cal.App.2d 70, 162 P.2d 26.

The union complains of a number of rulings on questions of evidence. The most seriously argued of these stems from the following: On the back of the $5,000 check appears the endorsement: "Pay to the order of Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles, Furniture Workers Union, Local 3161."

[3, 4] The teller who made out the cashier's check testified that this endorsement was not on it when he received it. On cross-examination he said: "I don't believe I would have acted on the check if it had been endorsed on the back." This statement was stricken by the court, because it was not responsive to the question asked. The ruling was correct, because the answer was not responsive to the question. And, in any event, assuming the endorsement to have been on the check when it was presented, the bank would have been fully authorized to issue its cashier's check for it upon request of the treasurer of the union. Union Bank & Trust Co. v. Security-First Nat. Bank, 8 Cal.2d 303, 65 P. 2d 355.

[5] Other rulings of the court, including those sustaining objections to questions intended to show that the bank knew that Mr. Abrams was indebted to it, that he was a man of small means and a manual worker, and would have no reason to receive $5,000 from the union, have been reviewed, and no error appears.

COHEN v. HUNTER

Civ. 3992.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Sept. 18, 1950.

Action by Helen Cohen against Samuel C. Hunter, for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when baby carriage which she was pushing across an arterial boulevard collided with automobile operated by defendant. The Superior Court, San Diego County, Joe L. Shell, J., entered judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that evidence supported implied finding of jury that plaintiff was contributorily negligent.

In action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when baby carriage which she was pushing across arterial boulevard collided with left rear fender and hubcap of automobile operated by defendant, evidence supported implied finding of jury that plaintiff was contributorily negligent, and such finding would not be disturbed on appeal.

2. Automobiles ⇐217(1), 245(6, 72)

It is duty of pedestrian to exercise reasonable care while crossing street of heavy traffic and such duty continues throughout his passage, and whether he did so and whether motorist who struck him exercised proper amount of vigilance are questions for jury's determination.

Implied finding of jury will not be disturbed on appeal where there is substantial evidence or reasonable inferences to support it.

4. Appeal and error ⇐996

To establish defense of contributory negligence as against verdict of jury, evidence must be such that appellate court can say that there is no substantial conflict on facts, and that from facts reasonable man can draw but one inference, which inference points unerringly to negligence of plaintiff proximately contributing to his own injury.

MUSSELL, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from an adverse judgment in an action for personal injuries sustained by her when a baby carriage which she was pushing across Midway Drive in San Diego collided with an automobile operated by defendant.

[1] The sole question presented is whether the evidence supports the implied finding of the jury that plaintiff was contributorily negligent. This question must be answered in the affirmative.

Midway Drive is an arterial boulevard which, at the place of the accident, runs generally north and south, is approximately 51 feet wide and is divided into four marked traffic lanes. The two traffic lanes on the east were divided by a single white line and the east and west traffic lanes were separated by a double white line in the center of the drive. Fordham Street intersects Midway Drive at right angles. It is 46½ feet wide west of Midway Drive and 25½ feet wide easterly thereof. There were well defined pedestrian crosswalks crossing Midway Drive on both the northerly and southerly sides of the intersection.

At the time of the accident (about 7:30 p. m.), December 21, 1947, the intersection was well lighted, the weather was clear, the pavement dry and the visibility good.

The plaintiff, with a companion, was crossing Midway Drive from west to east in the north crosswalk. She was pushing a baby carriage, with her grandson in it.

When she had crossed the double line in Midway Drive and was approximately on the center line between the two easterly lanes of traffic, the baby carriage collided with the left rear fender and hubcap of an automobile being driven by the defendant northerly in the east traffic lane of Midway Drive. Plaintiff was not struck by the automobile, but received injuries in the accident of which she now complains.

The defendant approached the intersection at a speed of from 15 to 20 miles per hour, slowing down as he approached the south crosswalk. He testified that as he approached the intersection, he did not see any cars stopped near the crosswalk and did not see any one in it as he came up to and entered the intersection; that when he first saw the pedestrians, he was approximately at the north curb line of Fordham Street; that he applied the brakes and stopped his car within a length or two thereof after the impact.

The plaintiff testified that before she entered Midway Drive she looked to her left to see if there was any traffic going south, and there being none, she stepped off the curb and proceeded to cross Midway Drive in the center of the painted crosswalk and was wheeling her grandson in a baby buggy before her; that as she neared the center of Midway Drive, she looked to see if there was any traffic coming north, when she saw a car that had stopped in the southerly crosswalk to let her go on; that as the car stopped, she looked again, continued walking, and that when she had crossed three lanes and was in the fourth lane, she was struck by the automobile; that she did not see the defendant's car at all until the collision.

A traffic officer, at the time of the accident, was sitting at the northwest corner of the intersection and saw the defendant's automobile before the collision occurred. He testified that he had no trouble in seeing it; that "it had lights on it and was plainly visible". He stated that there were two north bound cars stopped south of the intersection in the westerly north bound traffic lane of Midway Drive. However, the defendant and the passenger riding with him testified that they at no time saw these cars or either of them. The traffic officer further testified that he saw the left front of the vehicle strike the front of the baby buggy. This statement was contradicted by that of the defendant, his passenger, and the marks on the left rear fender and hubcap of the automobile.

An examination of the diagram, attached to appellant's opening brief, and of the reporter's transcript impels us to conclude that the plaintiff, had she looked to her right at any time after she arrived at the center of Midway Drive, could have seen the defendant's headlights and the approaching automobile. She was familiar with the intersection and knew it to be heavily traveled; she knew or should have known, that after arriving at the middle of Midway Drive, danger was to be anticipated from vehicles approaching from the south. There was no stop sign at the southeast corner of the intersection and defendant was proceeding northerly in his proper lane of traffic.

The jury evidently concluded that the plaintiff failed to exercise reasonable care in that she failed to see defendant's approaching automobile and pushed the baby carriage against it; that she could have avoided the accident by the exercise of reasonable care, and that her failure to exercise such care proximately contributed to the injuries which she sustained.

Under the circumstances shown by the record, the question of whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence was one of fact for the jury and its finding in that connection will not here be disturbed.

[2] As was said in O'Brien v. Schellenberg, 59 Cal.App.2d 764, 768, 140 P.2d 159, 161: "It is the duty of every pedestrian before entering a highway to make reasonably careful observations to ascertain traffic conditions to be encountered. It is his duty to look in the direction from which an approaching motorist might endanger his safety, to exercise reasonable care at all times within the marked crosswalk, and to continue to be alert to safeguard against injury. (Citing cases.) It is the duty of a pedestrian to exercise reasonable care while crossing a street of heavy traffic and such duty continues throughout his passage. * * * Whether he did so and whether the motorist who struck him exercised the proper amount of vigilance are questions for the jury's determination. * * *"

[4] As was said in Cooper v. Southern Pacific Co., 43 Cal.App.2d 693, 696, 111 P.2d 689, 691: "'* * * when a verdict is attached as being unsupported, the power of the appellate court begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support the conclusion reached by the jury. When two or more inferences can be reasonably deduced from the facts, the reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial court. * * * To establish the defense of contributory negligence as against the verdict of a jury, the evidence must be such that the appellate court can say that there is no substantial conflict on the facts, and that from the facts reasonable men can draw but one inference, which inference points unerringly to the negligence of the plaintiff proximately contributing to his own injury.' Crawford v. Southern Pac. Co., 3 Cal.2d 427, 429, 45 P.2d 183, 184."

A similar statement of this rule is found in Re Estate of Bristol, 23 Cal.2d 221, 223, 143 P.2d 689.

[5] The weight and sufficiency of the evidence, the construction to be put upon it and the inferences to be drawn therefrom were matters for the jury. Dillard v. McKnight, 34 Cal.2d 209, 209 P.2d 387, 11 A.L.R.2d 835.

The judgment is affirmed.

Lee Roy Terry was convicted in the Superior Court, Shasta County, of violating statute prohibiting the wilful and lewd commission of a lewd or lascivious act upon a child under the age of 14 years with intent to arouse, appeal to or gratify the lust or passions or sexual desires of such child, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held, inter alia, that evidence was sufficient to establish the corpus delicti.

Judgment affirmed.

The right of an accused to be represented by counsel may be waived.

2. Criminal law ⇐1114(1)

3. Criminal law ⇐260(11)

Contention of defendant on appeal from conviction for violating statute prohibiting the wilful and lewd commission of lewd or lascivious act upon a child under age of 14 years with intent to arouse, appeal to or gratify lust or passions or sexual desires of child, that corpus delicti was not established, was essentially a reargument as to weight of evidence, and conclusion of trial court thereon would not be disturbed on appeal in absence of some showing as to falsity or inherent improbability thereof. Pen.Code, § 288.

In order to sustain conviction of an adult under statute prohibiting wilful and lewd commission of lewd or lascivious act upon a child under age of 14 years with intent to arouse, appeal to or gratify lust or passions or sexual desires of child, testimony of a complaining witness under age of 14 years need not be corroborated, since children under that age are not deemed to be accomplices to crime. 5. Infants ⇐20

In prosecution for violating statute prohibiting wilful and lewd commission of lewd or lascivious act upon a child under age of 14 years with intent to arouse, appeal to or gratify lust or passions or sexual desires of child, evidence was sufficient to establish the corpus delicti. 6. Criminal law ⇐260(11)

In prosecution for violating statute prohibiting wilful and lewd commission of lewd or lascivious act upon a child under age of 14 years with intent to arouse, appeal to or gratify lust or passions or sexual desires of child, alleged erroneous admission of testimony given by chief of police concerning statements made by defendant to chief was not prejudicial to defendant where such testimony was stricken out and there was no jury to be misled. 7. Criminal law ⇐1186(4)

In prosecution for wilful and lewd commission of lewd or lascivious act upon a child under age of 14 years with intent to arouse, appeal to or gratify lust or passions or sexual desires of child, hearsay evidence allegedly erroneously admitted related only to immaterial facts and was in effect so inconsequential that defendant's rights could not have been prejudiced. Attorney for prosecution may cross-examine an accused upon any material matter elicited on direct examination for purpose of showing conduct or testimony inconsistent with his direct testimony.

In prosecution for violating statute prohibiting wilful and lewd commission of lewd or lascivious act upon a child under age of 14 years with intent to arouse, appeal to or gratify lust or passions or sexual desires of child, action of district attorney in cross-examining defendant by asking question which related to defendant's past record was not misconduct prejudicial to defendant where question followed defendant's testimony on direct examination concerning defendant's relationship with children and testimony relative to defendant's sobriety shortly after alleged offense. Pen.Code, § 288; Const. art. 6, § 4½.

10. Criminal law ⇐635

Fact that trial of an accused was heard in a room ordinarily used by Board of Supervisors rather than in regular courtroom did not justify conclusion that trial was violative of constitutional rights of accused to a trial open to public. Const. art. 1, § 13.

11. Criminal law ⇐635

The constitutional requirement of a public trial of an accused is for benefit of accused, that public may see that accused is fairly dealt with and not unjustly condemned, and that presence of interested spectators may keep his triers keenly alive to sense of their responsibilities and to importance of their functions. Const. art. 1, § 13.

12. Criminal law ⇐635

Record did not establish that a defendant convicted of violating statute prohibiting wilful and lewd commission of lewd or lascivious act upon a child under age of 14 years with intent to arouse, appeal to or gratify lust or passions or sexual desires of child did not receive a trial open to public pursuant to constitutional requirement. Pen.Code, § 288; Const. art. 1, § 13.

13. Judges ⇐51(1)

An accused cannot at his pleasure select the judge who will preside at his prosecution.

14. Criminal law ⇐1030(1)

An accused cannot remain silent, gambling upon his chances for a favorable verdict, and then, when verdict has gone against him, raise objections which he knew of and which could have been raised during trial.

15. Criminal law ⇐260(11)

Fact that accused waived right to jury trial only upon assurance of his counsel that a specified judge would preside, and that another judge heard cause, did not justify reversal of conviction for violation of statute prohibiting wilful and lewd commission of lewd or lascivious act upon a child under age of 14 years with intent to arouse, appeal to or gratify lust or passions or sexual desires of child, in view of fact that accused did not withdraw waiver, and since accused cannot at his pleasure select a judge who will preside. Pen.Code, § 288.

After trial court has heard a child under 10 years of age give his testimony and has determined that child was a competent witness in prosecution for violation of statute prohibiting wilful and lewd commission of lewd or lascivious act upon a child under 14 years of age with intent to arouse, appeal to or gratify lust or passions or sexual desires of child, such determination is not a matter of review any more than ruling of trial judge upon capacity of any other witness. Pen.Code, § 288.

Charles F. Gray, Jr., Sacramento, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, for respondent.

PEEK, Justice.

By an information defendant was charged with violation of section 288 of the Penal Code. Following his plea of not guilty the cause proceeded to trial before the court sitting without a jury. At the conclusion thereof defendant was found guilty and was sentenced to imprisonment for the term prescribed by law. He now appeals from said judgment of conviction.

Resolving, as we must, all conflicts in the evidence in favor of respondent and indulging in all reasonable and legitimate inferences in favor of respondent, the record may be summarized as follows:

Prior to the alleged offense the complaining witness, who was eight years of age, and her brother, aged five, visited the defendant at a cabin which was located only a few feet from the home of a great-aunt where the children were staying. As they stood outside the cabin the defendant, grabbing the prosecutrix by the hand, took her inside the cabin where he committed the acts constituting the basis of the charge. Her testimony concerning what occurred outside the cabin and her actions upon leaving were corroborated by her five year old brother. Immediate complaint was made by her to her aunt and to her parents when they arrived home some time later. The defendant, when confronted by the child's parents and her aunt, denied he had molested the child. Testifying in his own behalf he gave testimony wholly different from that of the complaining witness and in addition stated that his first knowledge of any complaint was when he was accosted by the children's aunt and their parents. On cross-examination he admitted to a degree some of the acts as charged. However, on re-direct examination he stated that in his conversation with the police he had told them the same story he told in court but when a detective threatened him he changed his story, and that on the morning of his preliminary examination he had refused to sign a statement presented to him by the chief of police on the ground it was not true. Subsequently the testimony of the police officer as to the purported admissions and confessions of the defendant was stricken from the record.

He first contends that the committing magistrate failed to inform him of the charge and of his right to counsel. The record of the preliminary examination was not introduced in evidence at the time of the trial or is it now before this court. Moreover no objection upon this ground was raised by defendant's counsel at the time of the trial in the Superior Court. Furthermore it appears from a purported quotation from the transcript of the preliminary examination, contained in defendant's brief, that the court informed defendant "* * * of his rights * * *" that he was "entitled to be represented by an attorney", that he indicated "he didn't want to have an attorney", but that nevertheless "the defendant is entitled to the services of an attorney and even though it inconveniences the court to continue it the continuance will be granted." It further appears in the transcript before us that the defendant, on cross-examination, testified that he remembered that at the time he was arraigned on the preliminary examination he was advised of his rights and his right to counsel. Even if we could consider the alleged irregularities so complained of by defendant, see People v. O'Neill, 78 Cal.App.2d 888, 892, 179 P.2d 10, his own purported quotation from the transcript of the preliminary hearing refutes such contention.

[1, 2] His second contention is predicated in part upon his first—the lack of counsel at the preliminary hearing. It is well established that the right to counsel is a right which may be waived. In re Connor, 16 Cal.2d 701, 108 P.2d 10. Equally well established is the rule that the reviewing court is limited to the transcript on appeal. People v. Gonzales, 69 Cal.App. 609, 231 P. 1014. Again, even assuming the validity of the purported quotation from the transcript of the preliminary hearing as set forth in defendant's brief, such excerpt, rather than sustaining defendant's contention, supports his conviction, since it is there shown that after the magistrate had continued the hearing for one week in order to enable defendant to secure counsel, and when the case was finally called defendant indicated he was ready to continue without counsel.

[3-5] Defendant's next contention, that the corpus delicti was not established, is essentially a reargument as to the weight of the evidence, which we assume was likewise made to the trial court. Its conclusion thereon will not be disturbed on appeal in the absence of some showing as to the falsity or inherent improbability thereof, neither of which appear in the case. As previously noted the testimony of the complaining witness was corroborated to a degree by her brother. Also there is the testimony of her parents and her aunt concerning the complaint which she made to them. It is the rule that to sustain a conviction of an adult of the crime denounced by section 288 of the Penal Code it is not necessary that the testimony of a complaining witness under the age of 14 years be corroborated, since children under that age are not deemed to be accomplices to the crime. People v. Showers, 90 Cal.App.2d 248, 253, 202 P. 2d 814.

[6] Defendant's next contention is predicated upon the alleged erroneous admission of testimony given by the chief of police concerning statements made by defendant to that officer. However, as the attacked testimony was stricken and as there was no jury to be misled we can perceive no basis whereby defendant's rights were prejudiced.

[7] Defendant also contends that his court-appointed counsel was incompetent and permitted improper hearsay evidence to be introduced. Our examination of the record does not bear out defendant's contention. Even if it can be said that some of the attacked testimony was hearsay it only related to immaterial facts and was in effect so inconsequential that defendant's rights could have been prejudiced in no way. Const. Art. VI, Sec. 4½.

In defendant's next contention he attacks the testimony of the chief of police relative to admissions made by defendant to such officer. Suffice it to say, as has been noted previously, the attacked testimony was stricken from the record and it is not apparent how defendant was prejudiced thereby.

[8, 9] Defendant further contends the conduct of the district attorney in propounding improper questions on cross-examination was so prejudicial as to warrant a reversal of the judgment. The record discloses that the particular question related to defendant's past record and followed his testimony on direct examination concerning his relationship with children and certain testimony relative to his sobriety shortly after the alleged offense. Since it was proper for the district attorney to cross-examine the defendant upon any material matter elicited on direct examination for the purposes of showing conduct or testimony inconsistent with his direct testimony, People v. Westek, 31 Cal. 2d 469, 476, 190 P.2d 9, it cannot be said that such testimony constituted prejudicial misconduct.

In support of his statement that he was deprived of his constitutional right to a public trial, defendant urges that he waived a jury trial only upon the assurance by his counsel that the cause would go to trial before the Honorable Albert F. Ross, Judge of the Superior Court of Shasta County; that the cause was not heard by Judge Ross but by the Honorable Ben R. Ragain, assigned to preside over an extra session of the Superior Court of said county, and that said trial was secret and not open to the public as provided by the Constitution, Article I, section 13, as it was not heard in a regular court room of the Superior Court of said county but was held in a room ordinarily used by the Board of Supervisors.

[13-15] The second point raised by defendant in his last contention relates to the waiver of a trial by jury based on his counsel's statement that the matter would be heard before Judge Ross, and is likewise without merit. At the outset we know of no rule permitting a defendant, at his pleasure, to select the judge who will preside in his case. Secondly it is again to be noted that the record is barren of any action on his part to withdraw such waiver. And lastly, a defendant cannot remain silent, gambling upon his chances for a favorable verdict, and then, as in the present case, when the verdict has gone against him, raise objections which he admittedly knew of and which could have been raised during the progress of the trial.

[16] Defendant's final contention attacks the action of the court in admitting the testimony of the complaining witness and her young brother upon the ground that both were incompetent as witnesses. In support thereof he again refers to the testimony given at the preliminary hearing. As we have previously stated herein, that record was not made a part of the record at the trial and is not now before this court, hence we cannot consider the same. However, our examination of the record in the Superior Court discloses that both witnesses were examined by the trial judge who determined them to be competent to testify. As stated in People v. Arcia, 85 Cal.App.2d 127, 192 P.2d 31, 32: "After a judge has heard the child give his testimony and has determined that he was a competent witness, such determination is not a matter of review any more than his ruling upon the capacity of any other witness."

In re WALTERS' ESTATE.

BREWSTER v. BANK OF AMERICA NAT. TRUST & SAVINGS ASS'N et al.

Civ. 14421.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 22, 1950.

Hearing Denied Nov. 20, 1950.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Maria R. Walters, alias, deceased, wherein Rose Brewster filed a contest to revoke probate of the will, which was opposed by Bank of America National Trust & Savings Association, etc., and another. The Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, T. I. Fitzpatrick, J., entered an order striking the contest from the files and a decree of ratable distribution and contestant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that contest was properly stricken on ground that it had been filed too late and that appeal from order was frivolous and warranted imposition of a penalty.

Order and decree affirmed and penalty assessed against appellant for taking a frivolous appeal.

Will contest filed more than three years after will had been admitted to probate and after a timely contest by another had been dismissed was properly stricken from the files on ground that it had been filed too late. Probate Code, §§ 380, 384.

2. Wills ⇐259

Order admitting will to probate is conclusive unless will contest is filed within six months thereafter. Probate Code, §§ 380, 384.

3. Wills ⇐268

Where will contest properly filed within six months after will was admitted to probate is still pending, any heir may petition to intervene in such contest even after expiration of the six-month period and a voluntary dismissal of original contest after petition in intervention has been filed cannot defeat the intervenor's rights. Probate Code, §§ 380, 384.

4. Wills ⇐371½

Affidavit of merits averring the good faith of counsel for appellant and purporting to set forth facts dehors the record, which allegedly would show that appeal from order striking tardy will contest from files had not unduly delayed probate of estate, should not be considered by appellate court in determining whether appeal was frivolous, since the question was whether any reasonable person would agree that point relied on for reversal was totally and completely devoid of merit and not whether counsel acted in honest belief that he had grounds for appeal. Rules on Appeal, rule 26(a); Code Civ.Proc. § 957.

Inexcusable negligence in failing to prepare and file supplemental brief until more than one month after obtaining permission to file such brief within ten days justified refusal to permit the filing of brief.

6. Wills ⇐371½

Where contention that the mere filing of will contest within six months after will had been admitted to probate, though contest was subsequently dismissed, kept alive until entry of decree of final distribution the right of any person to contest admission of will to probate was the only point urged for reversal, appeal from order striking from files will contest filed more than three years after admission of will to probate and after timely contest filed by another had been dismissed was frivolous.

7. Costs ⇐260(4)

Where reasonable minds cannot but agree that the points argued by appellant are completely without any semblance of substance, a penalty may properly be imposed for taking a frivolous appeal. Rules on Appeal, rule 26(a); Code Civ.Proc. § 957.

8. Costs ⇐263

Where frivolous appeal imposed an unnecessary burden on respondent, and, by improperly consuming the time of busy court, adversely affected the rights of other litigants, $100 was assessed against appellant and added to the costs as a penalty for taking a frivolous appeal. Rules on Appeal, rule 26(a); Code Civ.Proc. § 957.

Robert E. Hatch, San Francisco, for appellant.

Norman Elkington, San Francisco, for respondent, Peter J. Crann.

Sylvester Andriano, San Francisco, for respondent, Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Maria R. Walters died testate on December 22, 1945, her will having been executed on November 19, 1945. On January 11, 1946, her will was admitted to probate, and the respondent bank appointed executor. On March 5, 1946, respondent Peter Crann filed a will contest alleging that he was a devisee under a prior will executed by Maria, and that she was mentally incompetent when the will of November, 1945, was executed. On January 28, 1947, the beneficiaries named in the will admitted to probate and Crann compromised their respective claims, and, pursuant to such compromise, the parties stipulated that the Crann contest should be dismissed.

Four days before this dismissal was entered, that is, on January 24, 1947, one Bernard Stimmel, without leave of court, filed a document entitled "Joinder in Petition for Revocation of Probate of Will." In this petition Stimmel requested that he "be permitted to join in the contest" then pending, and that the probate of the will be revoked. In April of 1947, Crann moved to strike this document from the files on the ground that it had been filed without leave of court and without authority of law. The motion was granted. Stimmel appealed, one of his attorneys on such appeal being Robert Hatch, the attorney for appellant on the present appeal, the order of dismissal was unanimously affirmed by Division Two of this court. A petition for hearing was denied by the Supreme Court, one Justice dissenting. In re Estate of Walters, 89 Cal.App.2d 797, 202 P.2d 89. This opinion was filed in January, 1949, and became final in March of that year.

On May 31, 1949, at a time when both the Crann and Stimmel contests were no longer pending, both having been dismissed, appellant Rose Brewster, with Hatch as her attorney, filed what purports to be a contest to revoke the probate of the will. She alleged that she was one of the heirs of Maria Walters, that the will admitted to probate some three years and five months before the contest was filed had been improperly executed, and had been executed while the decedent was of unsound mind, and while she was under the undue influence of certain persons. Upon motion of respondent Crann, the Brewster contest was stricken from the files, and, on the same day, the court entered a decree of rateable distribution. Brewster appeals from the order and from the decree.

[1] There can be no doubt at all that the court properly struck from the files the Brewster contest, on the ground that it had been filed much too late. Section 380 of the Probate Code provides: "When a will has been admitted to probate, any interested person, other than a party to a contest before probate and other than a person who had actual notice of such previous contest in time to have joined therein, may, at any time within six months after such probate, contest the same or the validity of the will * * *."

Section 384 of the Probate Code states: "If no person contests the validity of a will or of the probate thereof within the time specified in this article, the probate of the will is conclusive, saving to infants and persons of unsound mind who were not made parties to the proceeding a like period of six months after their respective disabilities are removed."

[2, 3] Under these sections a contest must be filed within six months of the date the will is admitted to probate, or the order admitting to probate is conclusive. The language of the sections is susceptible of no other interpretation. But, says appellant, Crann filed a contest within the six-month period, and, although that contest was dismissed on January 28, 1947, the mere filing of such a contest kept alive, until the entry of the decree of final distribution, the right of any person to contest the admission of the will to probate. In support of this startling contention, which would vitiate the provisions above quoted and interminably prolong the probate of estates, the sole authority relied upon is Voyce v. Superior Court, 20 Cal.2d 479, 127 P.2d 536. That case stands for no such proposition. In that case a timely contest after probate was filed. While that contest was still pending, but after six months from the date the will was admitted to probate, a contestant sought leave to intervene and to contest the will on the identical grounds urged in the first contest. After this petition for intervention had been filed, the first contestant voluntarily dismissed her contest. Thereupon, a motion was made to dismiss the petition in intervention. When this motion was denied, prohibition was sought to prohbit the trial of the contest. The Supreme Court properly denied the writ. The basis of its holding was that when a contest is properly filed within the six-month period, and such contest is still pending, any heir may petition to intervene in that contest even after the six-month period has elapsed. A voluntary dismissal of the original contest, after the petition in intervention has been filed, cannot defeat the intervenor's rights. That holding is undoubtedly sound and correct. But it cannot be distorted into a holding, as appellant contends, that where a contest after probate has been filed within the six-month period, and then dismissed, that any other heir may file a contest after the dismissal and years after the six-month period has elapsed, any time before final distribution. Such a construction is directly contrary to the plain and obvious purposes of sections 380 and 384 of the Probate Code and would render those sections in many cases practically ineffective as statutes of repose. See Scott v. Superior Court, 125 Cal.App. 513, 14 P. 2d 99.

That this is the proper construction of the statutes and of the Voyce case is demonstrated by the plain language of that decision, by the express provisions of the code sections involved, and also is the direct and unequivocal holding in In re Estate of Walters, 89 Cal.App.2d 797, 202 P.2d 89 the prior appeal in this estate. In that case Mr. Justice Goodell, speaking for a unanimous court, stated 89 Cal.App.2d at page 798, 202 P.2d at page 90:

"As far as appellant's rights are concerned, it is clear that he could have pursued any one of three recognized methods of contesting this will. He could have filed a contest (1) before probate (Sec. 370, Pro. Code), or (2) within six months after probate (Id. 380) as did Crann, or (3) he could have become a party to the Crann contest by intervening therein pursuant to sec. 387, Code Civ.Proc., even after the six months had run, his grounds having been the same as those in the basic contest. Voyce v. Superior Court, 20 Cal.2d 479, 127 P.2d 536.

"He availed himself of none of these plain remedies. Instead, he filed the 'Joinder' without any leave of court, and thereby sought to establish himself in the same legal position as he would have occupied had he followed the Voyce case and intervened. He makes no claim that his was an informal intervention, for he says: 'The principles of these two cases (Voyce and this case) are analogous. The only distinction is that in the former the contestant proceeded by way of intervention, obtaining a court order rather than just filing the usual contest, as appellant did.' The answer to this is that appellant's 'Joinder' was not 'the usual contest'; it was neither a contest within the six months' period nor an intervention.

"The right to contest a will is created by statute and a contestant has such rights, and only such rights, as the statutes give him. [Citing cases.]

"As far as the procedural question now under discussion is concerned the Voyce case goes no further than to hold that a 'person interested' in a pending will contest may become a participant therein by way of intervention under sec. 387, Code Civ.Proc., even after the six months' period has elapsed. Appellant did not see fit to follow that procedure, and as he did not file a contest under section 370 before probate, or under section 380 within six months thereafter, it is clear that he has not followed any statutory procedure for joining his contest to that of Crann, or identifying himself with it, nor has he cited any authority countenancing the procedure which he adopted. The Voyce case lends no support to it, nor does that case hold that as long as any contest is filed within the six months the statutory limitation is removed as to other contestants who may decide to come in later without leave to intervene."

This holding was made in a case in which the attorney for appellant in the instant case was one of the attorneys for the losing party. The construction of the statutes and of the Voyce case was undoubtedly sound. There can be no doubt that, under the rule announced in the Voyce case, supra, appellant could have intervened in the Crann contest, even after six months after the will was admitted to probate, at any time while the Crann contest was pending. But that contest was voluntarily dismissed on January 28, 1947. The Stimmel contest was filed too late. That has been judicially determined. When the Crann contest was dismissed over two years prior to the filing of the present contest, it was as if, so far as appellant is concerned, no contest had ever been filed. When appellant filed her contest three years and five months after the will had been admitted to probate, there was no contest then pending in which she could intervene or otherwise join. The extension of time permitted by the Voyce case can only apply when the late contest is filed at a time when a timely contest is pending. This is the clear and unambiguous holdings of the Voyce and Walter cases, supra. The construction contended for by appellant is directly contrary to the rule of the Walters case, supra, and is palpably an incorrect and strained construction of the sections.

This appeal was set for oral argument on June 26, 1950. At that time counsel for appellant was told that the Court believed the appeal to be frivolous. After argument on this and other issues, the cause was submitted. Eleven days later, under date of July 7, 1950, the Court received a letter from Mr. Hatch in which he tendered for filing a so-called affidavit of merits purporting to set forth certain alleged facts relating to the litigation, and not contained in the record on the appeal, which facts, if considered by the Court, would, it was claimed, show that this litigation had not delayed the probate of the estate. In the same letter there was "tendered" a "Supplemental Brief," but the brief was not enclosed, the letter stating that: "The brief, about three pages long, will be presented by the printer," thus implying that the brief was already prepared and would be submitted in the immediate future. This letter was presented to the Presiding Justice on July 10, 1950. On that date he wrote to counsel for appellant informing him that the Court would not permit the affidavit of merits to be filed ex parte, because it dealt with many matters dehors the record, and informing counsel that if he was of the opinion that such a document could be filed, he should proceed by duly noticed motion. In this same letter counsel was informed that the supplemental brief could be filed within ten days and that respondent would be granted ten days to reply. On the same date the submission was vacated and an order made granting appellant ten days to file the brief, and respondent ten days to reply.

27, 1950, counsel for respondent by letter, a copy of which was sent to Mr. Hatch, called the attention of the court to Hatch's failure to file the brief and requested that the cause be submitted. Nothing was heard from counsel for appellant until August 4, 1950, when a letter was received from Mr. Hatch stating that the court's letter of July 10th was received, and the ten days granted expired, while Hatch was on vacation, and stating: "I hereby request my time to be considered extended accordingly." This request was impliedly denied by an order dated August 7, 1950, ordering the cause submitted. Thereafter, on August 14, 1950, there was filed a notice of motion for leave to file the supplemental brief (which, in the meantime had been printed and was tendered for filing, and which was not the three-page brief originally requested in the letter of July 7, 1950, but a ten-page brief) and the affidavit of merits. The motions came on for hearing on August 28, 1950. At that time both motions were denied. The affidavit of merits averred the good faith of counsel for appellant and purported to set forth various facts, all dehors the record, which, it was claimed, would show that the present appeal had not unduly delayed the probate of the estate. Such a document should not be considered. The problem involved in determining whether the appeal is or is not frivolous is not whether Mr. Hatch acted in the honest belief he had grounds for appeal, but whether any reasonable person would agree that the point is totally and completely devoid of merit, and, therefore, frivolous. The tendered supplemental brief was refused filing because the Court felt that counsel for appellant had been inexcusably negligent in failing to prepare and submit the brief at an earlier date. While this court has always been lenient in permitting the filing of supplemental briefs and the late filing of briefs, the Court must consider the rights of both parties to the appeal, and not permit one side to delay unreasonably the determination of the appeal. We think it was inexcusable for counsel to write to this court and request permission to file a brief, to imply that the brief was written, and then go out of town without making arrangements for the preparation of the brief, and then expect his time to be extended after his return. Such was, in our opinion, unfair to respondent and to this Court.

[6–8] As already pointed out, there can be no doubt at all that the points raised by appellant are frivolous. The language of the Voyce case cannot be distorted into the meaning urged by appellant. The Walters' case directly refutes every contention of appellant. If the rules announced in these cases are the law, reasonable minds cannot but agree that the points urged by appellant are completely without any semblance of substance. Such is a proper case to impose damages as provided by Rule 26(a), Rules on Appeal and section 957 of the Code of Civil Procedure. See, generally, 2 Cal. Jur. p. 977, § 577. While the courts are reluctant to hold that an appeal is frivolous, we should not permit the appellate processes to be abused. The present appeal has imposed a completely unnecessary burden on respondent, and, by improperly consuming the time of a busy court, has adversely affected the rights of other litigants. This warrants the imposing of a penalty. Hendricks v. Pappas, 82 Cal.App.2d 774, 187 P.2d 436; Danziger v. Peebler, 88 Cal.App. 2d 307, 313, 198 P.2d 719; Toohey v. Toohey, 97 Cal.App.2d 84, 217 P.2d 108.

The order and decree are affirmed, and, pursuant to the provisions of Rule 26(a) and section 957 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the sum of $100 is assessed against appellant and added to the costs as a penalty for the taking of a frivolous appeal.

In action by purchasers to rescind purchase of certain hotel property, evidence sustained finding that vendors made misrepresentations to purchasers as to legitimate monthly income from property and that purchasers relied thereon in purchasing the property.

Harvey & Viereck, Los Angeles (B. M. Cooperman, Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondents.

DORAN, Justice.

The respondents instituted the present action seeking to rescind a contract of sale under which respondents purchased from appellants certain hotel property situated at No. 14 Ozone Avenue, Ocean Park, California. The parties commenced negotiations in April, 1948; ultimately a sale price of $18,500.00 was agreed upon and escrow instructions signed on May 12, 1948. Respondents paid $3,500.00 in cash, assumed payment of a $10,000.00 first trust deed, and gave back to appellants a second trust deed in the sum of $5,000.00. Rents were to be pro-rated as of the close of escrow on the basis of a statement approved by respondents. Possession of the property was taken by the respondents on July 1, 1948, and the escrow closed on July 13, 1948.

On November 22, 1948 respondents Fuhrman served on appellants Farkas a written "Notice of Rescission ond Offer of Restoration", predicated "on the ground that you induced us to enter into said contract by your false and fraudulent misrepresentations as to the legitimate monthly income from said property. That in writing you assured us that the legitimate monthly income was over $400.00 when you knew at said time and place that you were overcharging the tenants and that the ceiling monthly rates were not more than $218.00, that the sales price, to-wit, $18,500, was based upon the monthly income which you falsely and fraudulently misrepresented to us". The notice then tendered a return of the property and demanded a return of $5,900.00, "plus our expenses in connection with the escrow, less whatever is the reasonable value of the use of the apartment occupied by us".

The complaint which followed recites the above facts and alleges that "defendants falsely and fraudulently represented to the plaintiffs in writing that the legitimate monthly income was $407", segregating the rentals received from each room, apartment, etc. The complaint then avers that "in support of their false and fraudulent representations as above outlined, defendants submitted to the plaintiffs their receipt books and records concerning the alleged legitimate income and plaintiffs relying upon said representations agreed to purchase * * * said premises and paid them the purchase money". It is also charged that "defendants well knew that said income was not legal and that the legitimate ceiling income was approximately one-half (½) of the amount represented to the plaintiffs."

first time became aware" of the misrepresentations, and gave notice of rescission. A second cause of action alleged that plaintiffs feared that defendants would foreclose the second trust deed for failure to make payments thereunder, and sought an injunction against the defendants transferring said trust deed and restraining defendants from foreclosing same.

The trial court sitting without a jury, found that the misrepresentations were made as alleged and that plaintiffs relied thereon in purchasing the property. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiffs in the sum of $5,900.00, together with cancellation of the second trust deed. Pending final settlement, plaintiffs were directed to pay to the holder of the first trust deed the monthly sum of $100.00, and "authorized to retain for the up-keep of the premises and as compensation to themselves the balance of any of the monthly income received from the rental of the said premises without making any accounting for the same to the defendants." The present appeal followed.

It is contended by appellants that "The decision is in error as a matter of law because it is in direct conflict with the testimony and evidence adduced at the trial and the law applicable to the case". Under this head appellants maintain that respondents as plaintiffs failed to carry the burden of proving the affirmative allegations made, and point to the fact that a rental statement furnished by appellants to the escrow on June 28, 1948, "could not have induced a purchase of property for which the escrow was opened upon May 12, 1948". It is also argued that the escrow "neither contained or required any representation as to the amount of rents".

Respondents' brief points out that both parties introduced evidence directly bearing upon the question whether appellants made false representations as to the legitimate monthly income derived from the property. Both written and oral misrepresentations were offered in evidence, and the case was tried on this theory. Rent receipt books exhibited to respondents by appellants were also placed in evidence and the plaintiffs' case was not made to depend upon the rental statement furnished in escrow, although such statement doubtless corroborated the other representations made. That the record contains substantial evidence in support of the trial court's findings and judgment can hardly be doubted.

As evidenced by respondent's Exhibit I, the Office of Housing Expeditor had, in March of 1946, laid down ceiling rates for each of the units in the building, a copy of which schedule was in the possession of the appellants. These ceiling rates depended upon the number of persons occupying the unit and upon whether it was rented on a daily, weekly or monthly basis. For example, the maximum legal rate for Room 1 when rented to two people by the day is $1.50; by the week $5.50; by the month such rental is set at $22.00.

Abraham Farkas, appellant herein, testified to giving Mr. Fuhrman a paper prepared by Farkas' daughter specifying the rentals which were being collected. The record discloses the following testimony given by Farkas under Section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure: "Q. Now, at the time you gave it (the paper) to him, was it true that you were collecting from Room 1, $60.00 a month or $15.00 a week. Is that true? A. That is the daily rate; on a daily rate." Respondent Fuhrman testified: "The earning capacity they (the appellants) said was $408.00 * * * per month", and that respondents relied on such statement. Respondents then purchased the property and continued to charge the same rentals as represented by appellants, supposing the same to be legal, until in November when the O. P. A. gave notice that such charges were unlawful, and that about $250.00 per month was all that could be charged.

There was testimony by an O. P. A. attorney that daily rentals "could not be required in advance", although "a tenant might pay for his own convenience". There was evidence to the effect that appellants, prior to the sale, did collect daily rentals in advance, and that respondents, relying on appellants' representations as to

The appellants' brief endeavors to explain the matter by affirming that the O. P. A. schedules provide a "maximum potential earning power" of the premises to be $532.50 per month; further, that "The insistence of the plaintiff in collecting rentals by the month and in advance was the sole reason for the reduction of income earned by the premises", rather than any fraud on the part of appellants. However, as pointed out by respondents, the "potential earning power" is not an issue on this appeal; the question involved is that of appellants' misrepresentations.

As concerns appellants' second contention mentioned above, the record indicates that in collecting rentals after purchasing the property, respondents merely carried on in the manner indicated by the appellants' representations. Again, there is evidence supporting the trial court's conclusion that the loss in monthly rentals reasonably anticipated when respondents purchased the premises, was directly due to the appellants' misrepresentations as to the amounts which could legally be collected. In place of $408.00 which respondents were led to believe could be legally collected each month, respondents soon found that the law would only permit the collection of about $250.00 per month. To attribute this loss to respondents' activities rather than to appellants' admitted statements concerning rentals, in reliance of which the sale was consummated, would require a trial or an appellate court to either ignore or discredit much of the evidence in the record. This, the trial court refused to do. It cannot be said that such conclusion was wrong.

The appellants' contentions are without merit, and no reversible error has been pointed out.

The attempted appeal from the order denying a new trial is dismissed, and the judgment is affirmed.

MOELLER v. DE ROSE et al.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 19, 1950.

Hearing Granted Nov. 16, 1950.*

Peel L. Moeller sued Ernest Carmen De Rose and Hayes Company for injuries resulting when defendant De Rose who was a wholesale and retail newspaper distributor for defendant Hayes Company struck plaintiff pedestrian with an automobile at intersection. The Superior Court in and for the County of Santa Clara, M. G. Del Mutolo, J., rendered a judgment adverse to defendants and defendant Hayes Company appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held, inter alia, that whether defendant distributor as regarded his duties as retail distributor was an employee of defendant newspaper or was an independent contractor was for jury under the evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

Campbell, Hayes & Custer, Robert E. Hayes, San Jose, Edward J. Niland, Santa Clara, of counsel, for appellant.

Emery J. Delmas, San Jose, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff, a pedestrian, was injured by an automobile owned and operated by De Rose, a newspaper distributor for the San Jose Mercury Herald, published by the Hayes Company. Plaintiff brought this action against De Rose and the Hayes Company, the latter being joined on the theory that De Rose was an employee of the Hayes Company and was acting in the course and scope of his employment at the time of the accident. The jury returned a verdict of $25,000 against both defendants. Hayes Company alone appeals. Since De Rose has not appealed, it must be presumed, and appellant concedes, that the evidence shows that the accident was proximately caused by the negligence of De Rose. The contentions of appellant are that the evidence shows, as a matter of law, that De Rose, at the time of the accident, was not an employee of the Hayes Company but was an independent contractor; that, even if he was an employee, he was not then acting in the course and scope of his employment; that the trial court erroneously instructed the jury in certain particulars; and that the trial court erroneously refused to give certain instructions proffered by appellant. There is no merit in any of the points urged.

The accident occurred on December 5, 1947. On that date, and for about seven years prior thereto, De Rose was employed as a newspaper distributor by the San Jose Mecury Herald. He was a member of the Teamsters' Union and designated in the governing labor contract as a "rural motor deliveryman." As such, he made both wholesale and retail deliveries of newspapers every day. In so far as the wholesale route was concerned he was clearly an employee of the newspaper, and no contention is made to the contrary. This route extended from San Jose to Salinas. De Rose, each morning, would pick up about 2,500 newspapers in his own pickup truck at about 1 a. m. and would then drive to Salinas making deliveries to retail distributors in each town along the way. The Mercury Herald billed the agencies receiving these papers and collected from them. De Rose's sole duty as to these papers was to deliver them.

In addition to these wholesale deliveries De Rose operated, and was required to operate as part of his job, a retail route of forty-one customers which was embraced, geographically, within the wholesale route. He purchased these papers from the appellant and then sold them to the retail customers for a profit, the wholesale and resale prices being fixed by appellant. De Rose collected from these retail customers, and any loss sustained was his loss, and not that of the company. De Rose kept the records of these accounts and took care of the billing and bookkeeping. Because he made the deliveries on his wholesale and retail routes very early in the morning, he could not make the collections on his retail route at the time he delivered the papers, and, using his own car, customarily made these collections at night when the farmer customers were at home.

The method of payment to De Rose for these services is not in dispute. He used his own car in making deliveries and collections. He was allowed eight cents a mile for the use of his car while making the wholesale deliveries, and included, geographically, were the retail deliveries. But no mileage allowance was paid for the use of his car while making collections. The retail route was much shorter than the wholesale route, extending but sixteen miles from San Jose. The normal time required to make wholesale and retail deliveries was five and a half to six hours. He normally started to work at 1 a. m. and was home by 6:30 or 7 a. m. Nevertheless, he was paid, pursuant to the terms of the union contract, $1.51 per hour for eight hours each week day, and on Saturday and Sunday he received time and a half for eight hours for not more than six hours of work. These extra two or two and a half hours of wages were paid to De Rose, according to his testimony, as compensation for making the collections on the retail route. Farmer, the circulation manager of the Mercury, and De Rose's immediate superior, admitted that this extra compensation was to pay De Rose for making the collections on his retail route, and to induce him to undertake promotion work for the newspaper.

Under the rules of the newspaper, De Rose was billed each month for the purchase price of the newspapers he delivered to the retail customers, and was required to remit this sum to the newspaper by no later than the 20th of each month. Farmer testified that the retail portion of the route was assigned to De Rose by the Mercury; that this was an integral part of the distributor's job and required of him by the company; that it was his (Farmer's) duty to assign routes; that the retail or wholesale route of any driver could be changed by the company at any time; that drivers were informed by him of the proper and most effective ways of handling the route, including collections; that he did not care when De Rose made his collections, or, in fact, whether De Rose ever collected on these accounts, as long as the company was paid for the papers. De Rose testified that he had to make four to six collection trips each month to collect from all of his customers, and that he was never told by the Mercury what methods he should use in collecting.

De Rose was covered by workmen's compensation insurance through the company, and deductions were made from his total eight hours daily salary for social security and unemployment insurance, and for a group health and death policy. No deductions for these purposes were made from the profits he made on the resale of papers.

The accident in which plaintiff was injured occurred around 9 p. m. on December 5, 1947. At about 5 p. m. on that night De Rose telephoned to a girl friend and arranged to take her with him that evening while he made some collections on his retail route. This friend, in the past, had frequently accompanied De Rose on such trips, and assisted him while they were driving along by picking out the overdue accounts from the file maintained by De Rose. Pursuant to the prearranged plan, De Rose picked his friend up in his automobile, and they drove along the retail route, making about five or six collection calls. De Rose then returned his friend to her home, where he stayed for about fifteen minutes. He left her home at about 8:45 p. m. He testified that he was then intending to go home. He started in that direction, but at the corner of Park Avenue and Sunol Street in San Jose he decided to take a left turn, which was directly opposite to the most direct route to his home. He testified that he turned in this direction because he was "probably" going to get a couple of magazines. It was while making this turn, and while still in the intersection, that he ran down the plaintiff under circumstances which admittedly support the implied finding that the accident was proximately caused by his negligence.

Farmer testified that he had never told any of the drivers not to take passengers with them on collection trips, and De Rose testified that that was not any of the company's business.

The first and major contention of appellant is that at the time and place of the accident De Rose was not an employee of the appellant but was, as a matter of law, an independent contractor. Various tests have been suggested by the cases to determine this issue, see, Restatement of Agency, § 220, but, as was said in Schaller v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 11 Cal.2d 46, 52, 77 P.2d 836, 839: "While these tests are recognized as helpful, yet no special test, or fact, or circumstance has been found to give a conclusive answer to the question, and in the last analysis each case must turn upon its own peculiar facts and circumstances."

[1, 2] The nature of the relationship, except in unusual cases, is primarily a question of fact. The test, as in the case of other factual questions, is not what this court would have found under the facts, but whether the finding of the trial court is supported by any substantial evidence, including reasonable inferences from that evidence. Washko v. Stewart, 20 Cal.App.2d 345, 349, 67 P.2d 151; Malvich v. Rockwell, 91 Cal.App.2d 463, 468, 205 P.2d 389; Pacific Lumber Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 22 Cal.2d 410, 422, 139 P.2d 892; Candido v. California Emp., etc., Comm., 95 Cal.App.2d 338, 212 P.2d 558. "It is only where but one inference can reasonably be drawn from the evidence that the question of whether one is an employee or an independent contractor becomes one of law for the court." Burlingham v. Gray, 22 Cal.2d 87, 100, 137 P.2d 9, 16; to the same effect see National Auto., etc., Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 80 Cal.App.2d 769, 772, 182 P.2d 634; Perguica v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 29 Cal.2d 857, 859, 179 P.2d 812.

In our opinion the record contains ample and substantial evidence to support the implied finding that De Rose, in making the collections, was an employee of the appellant. This evidence can be classified in two main categories:

1. There was substantial evidence that appellant had the right to control De Rose in the manner in which he made collections. "A material and often conclusive factor is the right of an employer to exercise complete and authoritative control of the mode and manner in which the work is performed. The existence of such right of control, and not the extent of its exercise, gives rise to the employer-employee relationship." Perguica v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 29 Cal.2d 857, 859, 179 P.2d 812, 813. Farmer, the circulation manager of appellant, testified that if he had given De Rose instructions as to his collections, that is "how to do it or when to do it," he would have expected those instructions to be followed. Admittedly, the retail route, including collections, was an integral part of the job, and De Rose was required to take it as part of his job. Admittedly, the retail route was assigned to De Rose by the appellant, and admittedly that company could change or increase or decrease that route at any time. Farmer testified that the retail distribution was assigned to De Rose for the convenience of the paper; that De Rose had been informed that the "collections and promotions on that [retail] route are up to him as an employee," and that De Rose was informed by appellant of the proper and most effective ways of handling that business. Farmer also testified that, although the main interest of appellant was in seeing to it that De Rose paid his bill to the paper and not in whether the retail customers paid De Rose, nevertheless it was to the interest of the company that these collections be made regularly; that De Rose would not have been a satisfactory employee unless he collected regularly; and that unless he collected regularly he would not have been permitted to keep his job.

[3] 2. The next important factor that must be considered is the manner of payment. Admittedly, the delivery of papers on both the wholesale and retail routes took but five and a half or six hours, yet De Rose was paid at an hourly rate for a full eight hours. De Rose testified that this extra compensation was to pay him for the time consumed in making the collections on his retail route, and Farmer admitted the extra pay was for the purpose of allowing De Rose to do collection and promotion work. It must be remembered that this extra compensation was paid pursuant to appellant's contract with the union, and that neither in that agreement, nor outside of it, was there any differentiation made between wholesale and retail routes. It must also be remembered that from the full eight hours of wages, deductions were made by appellant for federal income taxes, federal unemployment insurance, social security taxes, and a group health insurance plan. Such deductions are normally made only from the wages of an employee, and not from those of an independent contractor. Farmer testified that deductions were made only from employees' wages and not from the income of independent contractors, and that the company considered only the retail distributors on the wholesale route as independent contractors. This belief of the parties as to the nature of the relationship as indicated by their actions is entitled to some weight. Perguica v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 29 Cal.2d 857, 860, 179 P.2d 812; Restatement of Agency, § 220(i).

Under this evidence it clearly was a jury question as to whether De Rose was an employee or an independent contractor. In the case of Burlingham v. Gray, 22 Cal. 2d 87, 137 P.2d 9, where the facts in support of the employer-employee relationship were much weaker than those here involved, this rule was established. In that case the trial court had ruled that, as a matter of law, one Gray and one Porter were not employees of the newspaper, and directed its verdict accordingly. This was unanimously reversed by the Supreme Court, it being held that the issue was a jury question. The evidence shows that one Porter, under contract with the newspaper, was a distributor of the paper in a portion of the county. Gray was hired by Porter as one of the carriers to distribute the papers to Porter's customers within his district, and was paid by Porter $50 a month. The basic question was whether Porter, the distributor, was an employee or independent contractor. The written contract between the newspaper and Porter designated him as an independent contractor. Under that contract Porter's income came from the difference between the wholesale price he paid the newspaper company for the papers, and the retail price he charged his customers, less expenses. In addition, pursuant to a separate oral agreement between Porter and the newspaper, Porter was paid $2.00 per week, less social security benefits, by means of a regular payroll check of the company, for picking up a bundle of papers at Anaheim and delivering them to an agent at Orange. At the time of the accident, Gray, the carrier, was delivering copies of the newspaper to subscribers and also had in his possession the bundle of papers required to be delivered at Orange. The Supreme Court looked beyond the precise terms of the contract between Porter and the newspaper, see, also, Pacific Lbr. Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 22 Cal.2d 410, 139 P.2d 892; Candido v. California Emp., etc., Comm., 95 Cal.App.2d 338, 212 P.2d 558; Lewis v. Constitution Life Co., 96 Cal.App. 2d 191, 215 P.2d 55, and emphasized the fact that the evidence showed that Porter always seemed to carry out the suggestions of the company. The Court also emphasized the fact that (as in the instant case) it was the newspaper that fixed the wholesale price it charged Porter, and also the price Porter charged his customers. Other matters mentioned by the Court as tending to show an employer-employee relationship were that Porter received $2.00 a week, less social security deductions, from the company; that he was a member of a group hospitalization plan for employees of the newspaper; that Porter received an annual vacation with pay; that the newspaper reserved the right to terminate Porter's agency at any time; and that the newspaper supervised Porter's activities. The Court held that, under these facts, a jury might have inferred "that the company's right of control over Porter as dealer was complete and that any instructions given to Porter would be obeyed." 22 Cal.2d at page 101, 137 P.2d at page 16. The Court said that if Porter had failed to comply with the company's "suggestions," it could have discharged him. It might also have compelled him to follow their suggestions by changing the wholesale and retail prices. "In the light of the foregoing discussion, it is difficult to conceive of a much more complete control of an employee doing work of a character inherently embodying some freedom of action than that which the company had the power to exercise over the dealer Porter." 22 Cal.2d at Page 102, 137 P.2d at page 17. The Court concluded that the provision of the contract allowing discharge if Porter was unsatisfactory in any manner, plus the fact that Porter accorded implicit obedience to the suggestions of the company, indicated a power of control by the employer over the means as well as the ultimate result. The Court concluded by holding that the problem was a jury question and reversed the directed verdict.

The case stands for the proposition that doubtful cases involving this issue must be submitted to the trier of the facts. The factual situation there involved was much weaker than that in the instant case, and it would appear that the decision is controlling here. See, also, Pacific Lbr. Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 22 Cal.2d 410, 139 P.2d 892; Candido v. California Emp., etc., Comm., 95 Cal.App.2d 338, 212 P.2d 558; Lewis v. Constitution Life Co., 96 Cal.App. 2d 191, 215 P.2d 55.

[4] Appellant lays stress on the fact that De Rose testified that he made collections when he wanted to; that he made them in the evening because it was most convenient for him and his customers at that time; that he regarded it as nobody's business if he took passengers with him; and that he felt free on such trips to make deviations from the most direct route if he so desired. Aside from the fact that if this evidence does support the argument that De Rose was an independent contractor it merely creates a conflict with other evidence, it is our belief that such evidence is not inconsistent with De Rose being an employee while making these collections. In the very nature of things De Rose had to make the collections when his customers were home, and he and not the newspaper knew that fact. Moreover, as was said in the Burlingham case, 22 Cal.2d at page 100, 137 P.2d at page 16: "* * * the fact that a certain amount of freedom of action is inherent in the nature of the work does not change the character of the employment where the employer has general supervision and control over it." This is well-settled law.

It is true that there are other cases holding that, under certain circumstances, a newspaper distributor may be an independent contractor as a matter of law, but the facts of all of these cases are readily distinguishable from those involved here. Thus, in Rathbun v. Payne, 21 Cal.App.2d 49, 68 P.2d 291, where this appellate court, in reversing a judgment for plaintiff, held, as a matter of law, that one Asbitt was an independent contractor and was not an employee of the newspaper, the reversal was based on the lack of any evidence of the right to control the means to be used by the distributor. Asbitt's sole duty was to deliver papers on a retail route, and he received no hourly wages, his profits being dependent on commissions. The same can be said of Bohanon v. James McClatchy Pub. Co., 16 Cal.App.2d 188, 60 P.2d 510, relied upon in the Rathbun opinion. There, too, the appellate court reversed a judgment against a newspaper, but that case involved almost entirely the proper interpretation of a written contract between the parties. The court gave great weight to the fact that, unlike the instant case, no fixed compensation was paid the distributor for his services, and the distributor there involved was solely a retail distributor.

In the Bohanon case the court relied upon State Comp. Ins. Fund v. Indus. Acc. Comm., 216 Cal. 351, 14 P.2d 306, as controlling. A reading of that opinion demonstrates that the court held that the decisive factor was that the distributor, who hired boys to distribute the papers he purchased wholesale, was not paid any fixed wages or compensation by the newspaper for his services. That serves to distinguish that case from the instant one. The court emphasized, citing Globe Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 208 Cal. 715, 284 P. 661, and Call Pub. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 89 Cal.App. 194, 264 P. 300, that if the distributor were paid a regular salary or compensation, as in the instant case, the rule might be different.

[5, 6] There is undoubtedly general language in these cases somewhat inconsistent with that employed by the court in the Burlingham case, but all of these cases, factually, are distinguishable from the Burlingham case and from the instant one. Moreover, to the extent that these earlier decisions are inconsistent with the Burlingham case the latter, being later in time, must control. We think the proper rule is and should be that if the issue is reasonably debatable (as is certainly true in the instant case), the question is a jury question and not one for the court as a matter of law.

[7] The next main question is whether De Rose had deviated from the course of his employment at the time of the accident. Appellant seems to contend that, because De Rose was on his way home at the time of the accident, he was not acting in the course and scope of his employment. This would seem to be a question of fact and not a question of law. See note in 33 Cal. L.Rev. 646. While there is substantial authority for the rule that, where the facts are undisputed, the question of liability is one of law and not of fact, the rule of law in this state, as expressed by the majority of the court in Loper v. Morrison, 23 Cal.2d 600, 145 P.2d 1, is that in such cases the question is one of fact for the jury and not one of law for the court. This conclusion seems to us sound, and is in accordance with the general rule elsewhere. 57 C.J.S., Master & Servant, page 408, § 617; 3 Cooley on Torts, p. 68, § 396; Restatement of Agency, § 228(2); but see 35 Am.Jur. p. 1040, § 600.

[8-10] In considering this problem, the so-called "going and coming rule"—i.e., that an employee is not acting in the course and scope of his employment while going to or coming from work—is not involved. That rule is applicable where the employee is required to perform services at a fixed place on particular premises, and has no application where the duties are to be performed over a wide territory, and the hours and place of employment are more or less discretionary with the employee. Makins v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 198 Cal. 698, 703, 247 P. 202, 49 A.L.R. 411; Truck Ins. Exchange v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 27 Cal. 2d 813, 818, 167 P.2d 705; 1 Campbell on Workmen's Compensation, p. 191, § 200. This exception is strengthened where the use of a motor vehicle is required by the employment and is not furnished by the employer. Campbell, p. 193, § 201. In such cases, whether the car is furnished by the employer or employee, where the car is kept at the employee's home, the duties of the employee do not cease until the automobile arrives at the home of the employee. Campbell, p. 174, § 185. De Rose can be compared to the commercial traveler who uses his own car. Such employees "may be regarded as acting in the course of their employment so long as they are traveling in their employer's business, including the whole period of time between their starting from and returning to their place of business or home." California C. I. Exch. v. Indus. Acc. Comm., 5 Cal.2d 185, 186, 53 P.2d 758, 759.

[11, 12] But, says appellant, De Rose deviated from the course of his employment either in taking his girl friend home, or, after he did so, in turning away from the most direct route to his home to purchase some magazines. Under the facts these were jury questions. As was said in Loper v. Morrison, 23 Cal.2d 600, 605, 145 P.2d 1, 3: "The general rule in these cases is stated in Kruse v. White Bros., 81 Cal.App. 86, 93, 253 P. 178, recently quoted with approval in Westberg v. Willde, 14 Cal.2d 360, 373, 94 P.2d 590, 597; 'Whether there has been a deviation so material or substantial as to constitute a complete departure is usually a question of fact. In some cases the deviation may be so marked, and in others so slight relatively, that the court can say that no conclusion other than that the act was or was not a departure could reasonably be supported; while in still others the deviation may be so uncertain in extent and degree in view of the facts and circumstances as to make the question of what inferences should be drawn from the evidence properly one for the jury.'" See, also, Lockheed Aircraft Corp. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 28 Cal.2d 756, particularly at pages 758-760, 172 P.2d 1; 57 C.J.S., Master &

Servant, p. 408, § 617. There can be no doubt that under the facts the jury was entitled to infer that the company knew that distributors customarily took passengers on their collection trips, and not only did not object but impliedly consented. This being so, it was not a deviation from the employment as a matter of law for De Rose to take his passenger home after such a collection trip. The same must be held as to the turn away from the most direct route home to purchase some magazines. Whether that was so substantial a deviation as to take it out of the employment, or whether it was so slight a deviation as to be impliedly included therein, was properly submitted to the jury, and its determination, under the facts, cannot be disturbed.

Objection is made to several of the instructions. At the request of respondent the court instructed "that if you find that the defendant Ernest Carmen De Rose deviated or departed from the ordinary or direct route which his mission required him to pursue you must then find whether such deviation or departure was of such a character,

"1. As was contemplated by the employment, or ought to have been foreseen by the defendant Hayes Company, or

"2. That it was such that the defendant Hayes Company would have consented to had it known thereof.

"In the event that you find that such deviation or departure comes within either of the above two subdivisions then you must find the defendant Hayes Company liable to plaintiff if you find the defendant De Rose liable to plaintiff."

After several hours of deliberation the jury asked for a re-reading of this instruction and it was twice re-read to the jury. Appellant argues that such instruction was incorrect because an employer may consent to a deviation without authorizing it. The sole authority cited in support of this contention is the Restatement of Agency, § 229, comment c, which declares that acts of a personal nature permitted by the employer to make the employment more desirable are not necessarily within the scope of the employment.

[13, 14] The instruction contains a correct statement of law. It is almost a verbatim quotation from 2 Cal.Jur.Supp. p. 515, § 333, which cites many cases in support of the rule that a recovery is sustainable on proof of either of the two factors mentioned in the instruction. The rule in this state is that where an employee is engaged on a trip which combines his personal business with that of his employer, the employer may be liable for the employee's tortious acts. Gayton v. Pacific Fruit Express Co., 127 Cal.App. 50, 15 P.2d 217; Aubel v. Sosso, 72 Cal.App. 57, 236 P. 319; Dolinar v. Pedone, 63 Cal.App.2d 169, 146 P.2d 237. In Kruse v. White Brothers, 81 Cal.App. 86, 92, 253 P. 178, 181, the Court stated that where the master's business is the controlling purpose of the trip "usual or incidental personal acts * * * not amounting to a turning aside completely from the master's business so as to be inconsistent with its pursuit, are often only what might be reasonably expected, to which, therefore, the master's assent may be fairly assumed". See, also, Loper v. Morrison, 23 Cal.2d 600, 606, 145 P.2d 1.

Appellant also objects to the failure of the trial court to give its instruction 58-A. The proffered instruction was as follows.

"I instruct you that 'an act of a servant or an agent is not within the scope of employment if it is done with no intention to perform it as a part of or incident to a service on account of which he is employed.' If you find that at the precise time and place of the accident in suit the defendant De Rose was entertaining no intention to serve his employer, he was not acting within the scope of his employment as a matter of law and you cannot find otherwise.

"I further instruct you that if the defendant De Rose had no such intention at the time and place of the accident in suit, you are to return a verdict in favor of the defendant Hayes Company."

[15] The instruction, as applied to some facts, undoubtedly embodies a correct statement of the law and is set forth in the Restatement of Agency, § 235. That section reads: "An act of a servant is not within the scope of employment if it is done with no intention to perform it as a part of or incident to a service on account of which he is employed." The comment on the rule says that: "* * * It is the state of the servant's mind which is material."

[16] While the instruction undoubtedly embodies a correct statement of general law, it is doubtful whether that principle is applicable at all to a deviation case. Once it is determined that the collection trip was a part of and incident to De Rose's employment, the fact that the collections were completed and De Rose was on the way home is immaterial, because going home was an incident of the employment, so that the intention of De Rose at the "precise" time of the accident is a false factor. Moreover, another and complete answer to this contention is that the court fully, fairly and completely covered the issue of scope of employment by giving respondent's instructions 26 and 29 and appellant's instruction 55. These instructions adequately covered this issue.

The last major contention of appellant is that the trial court erred in failing to give appellant's proffered instruction on burden of proof. The instruction refused by the court reads as follows: "If you find in plaintiff's favor on the issues of negligence and contributory negligence, as against the defendant Hayes Company, you have another issue to determine, namely, was defendant De Rose within the scope of his employment, that is, 'on the job' or doing work for the Hayes Company at the time and place of the accident. Legally we call this being 'within the scope' or 'without the scope' of employment. The burden is on plaintiff to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that issue also. If you find that the defendant De Rose was not within the scope of his employment for the Hayes Company at the precise time of the accident in suit, your verdict must be in favor of the Hayes Company."

[17-19] This instruction was properly refused. To be within "the scope of employment" does not require the employee to be literally "on the job," or "doing work for" the company at the precise time of the accident. As already pointed out, there is substantial evidence to support the implied finding that De Rose, after finishing his collections, was on his way home from that trip and was still within the scope of his employment, although he was not then technically "on the job" or "doing work for" the company. Moreover, if going home, in such cases, can be considered as "doing work for" the employer, while the burden is on the plaintiff to show that the servant was acting within the scope of his employment, it is also true that a prima facie case is established by a showing that the alleged servant at the time of the challenged occurrence was performing work and labor for his claimed employer. Upon such a showing the burden of going forward with the evidence shifts to the employer. See cases collected 16 Cal.Jur. p. 1110, § 67; see, also, Lewis v. Constitution Life Co., 96 Cal.App.2d 191, 215 P.2d 55; Restatement of Agency, § 228, comment b. Thus, the proffered instruction would have been highly confusing and misleading, and was properly refused.

It should be mentioned that the court did give the usual instruction that the burden of proof was on the plaintiff and that the plaintiff must prove his case by a preponderance of the evidence. Under the circumstances, and no proper instruction having been offered by appellant, the instructions given were sufficient.

PEOPLE v. JAMES.

Cr. 821.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Sept. 18, 1950.

O. D. James was convicted of first degree murder in 1944. In 1950 defendant filed motion to vacate judgment of conviction and from order denying motion, defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that defendant's contention that his constitutional rights were violated and his plea of guilty was vitiated by lack of effective aid of counsel at trial would not be determined by proceedings in nature of a petition for writ of coram nobis, and that delay of 5½ years between time of trial and time of filing of proceedings to vacate judgment was unreasonable.

Order affirmed.

1. Criminal law ⇐997

Motion to vacate a judgment of conviction and withdraw a plea of guilty is in nature of a writ of coram nobis.

2. Criminal law ⇐997

Defendant's contention that his constitutional rights were violated and his plea of guilty to a charge of murder was vitiated by lack of effective aid of counsel at trial, could not be determined by proceedings in the nature of a petition for writ of coram nobis.

3. Criminal law ⇐997

Motion to vacate a judgment in the nature of a petition for writ of coram nobis is a remedy of a narrow scope, and its purpose is to secure relief, where no other remedy exists, from a judgment rendered while there existed some fact which would have prevented its rendition if trial court had known it and which through no negligence or fault of defendant was not then known to court.

4. Criminal law ⇐997

Applicant for writ of coram nobis must show that facts upon which he relies were not known to him and could not in exercise of due diligence have been discovered by him at any time substantially earlier than time of his motion for the writ or he has stated no grounds for relief.

5. Criminal law ⇐997

Writ of coram nobis does not lie to correct an error in judgment of the court, nor to contradict or put in issue any fact directly passed upon and affirmed by judgment itself, and where remedies of a right to appeal and to make a motion for new trial are provided for by statute, to that extent an application for writ of coram nobis cannot be entertained.

6. Criminal law ⇐997

The grounds upon which a court may issue a writ of error coram nobis are more narrowly restricted than those which allow relief by habeas corpus.

7. Criminal law ⇐997

Generally, the writ of error coram nobis does not lie to correct an issue of fact which has been adjudicated, even though wrongly determined, nor for alleged false testimony at trial, nor on ground that a juror swore falsely as to his qualifications, nor for newly discovered evidence.

8. Criminal law ⇐997

All matters of fact reviewable by appeal, or upon motion, must be presented by motion for a new trial, and cannot be made grounds on application for writ coram nobis.

9. Criminal law ⇐997

In prosecution for murder, where defendant dropped a previous plea of not guilty and entered a plea of guilty, and was imprisoned, and had not appealed from judgment of conviction or made motion for new trial, but 5½ years after conviction sought to vacate judgment on grounds of lack of effective aid of counsel, defendant had not proceeded with due diligence in seeking relief by motion for writ of coram nobis.

10. Criminal law ⇐997

Showing of diligence is essential to granting of relief by way of coram nobis.

11. Criminal law ⇐997

Where defendant seeks to vacate judgment of conviction it is necessary to aver not only probative facts upon which basic claim rests but also time and circumstances under which facts were discovered, in order that court can determine as matter of law whether litigant proceeded with due diligence.

12. Criminal law ⇐997

Where defendant entered a plea of guilty to a charge of murder, and deputy district attorney read a statement of facts concerning crime, and defendant stated that such statement was correct, and court fixed crime as murder in first degree and sentenced defendant, any error in fixing degree under such circumstances was an error of law and could not be reached by proceedings to vacate judgment in the nature of a writ of coram nobis.

13. Criminal law ⇐997

Writ of coram nobis does not lie to correct errors of law and is not intended to authorize any court to review and revise its opinions, nor to redress an irregularity occurring at trial that could be corrected on motion for new trial or by appeal.

14. Habeas corpus ⇐29

An application for a writ of habeas corpus is the proper remedy to attack collaterally a judgment of conviction which has been obtained in violation of fundamental constitutional rights.

15. Criminal law ⇐997

On motion to vacate a judgment of conviction of murder, where defendant contended that he was induced to plead guilty upon promises of a lesser sentence than might otherwise be imposed if he pleaded not guilty, evidence failed to establish that defendant's change of plea from not guilty to guilty was brought about because of inducement by assistant district attorney.

16. Criminal law ⇐997

Whether there was sufficient or probable cause to hold defendant to answer charge of murder was question of law and writ of error coram nobis would not lie to correct such error.

17. Criminal law ⇐997

On motion to vacate the judgment of conviction of murder, defendant was precluded from challenging alleged inadequacy of evidence or irregularities of procedure of preliminary examination by his failure to move to quash the information. Pen. Code, § 995.

18. Criminal law ⇐238

Testimony at preliminary examination established probable cause to hold defendant for trial on charge of murder.

Adams & Reynolds, San Francisco, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, and Gilbert Harelson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

MUSSELL, Justice.

Defendant was charged with having murdered one Charlie Thomas on December 2, 1944. After preliminary examination and information filed in the superior court, defendant appeared for arraignment and, not being represented by counsel, the court appointed an attorney to represent him for the purpose of the arraignment. Defendant's counsel then waived reading of the information, the defendant was informed of his rights and, upon being asked if he wished to enter a plea at that time, entered a plea of not guilty to the charge. He stated that he had no money to pay for a lawyer and that he wished to have one appointed for him. The court then continued the matter one week for the purpose of setting the case for trial and appointment of an attorney. On December 19th defendant was again brought into court and a statement was made to the court by a deputy district attorney that the defendant desired to withdraw his plea of not guilty and enter a plea of guilty. Defendant was then asked if he wished to withdraw his plea of not guilty theretofore entered, to which he made the following reply: "Yes, sir. I want to plead guilty. I am guilty of it." Permission was granted to withdraw the plea of not guilty and the court informed the defendant that he was charged with a felony, to wit: murder, in that on or about the 2nd day of December, 1944, he had murdered one Charlie Thomas. Defendant then entered a plea of guilty.

For the purpose of fixing the degree of the crime, a statement was then made by the deputy district attorney as follows: "In brief, the facts are that this defendant and the deceased were playing dice at Giffen Ranch No. 2. Some altercation arose over the fact that the deceased person grabbed the money from the dice game—that money did not belong to this defendant, by the way—this defendant started after him, and the deceased man ran out the side door, followed by the defendant. The defendant stated to me that then and there he dropped his hat and as he reached to get it, the deceased, Charles Thomas, pulled a knife on him; that this defendant took the knife away from him, and thereupon proceeded to stab him, and that stab wound caused the death."

The court asked the defendant if he had any statement to make as to the facts related and he replied that he did not and that the statement was right. The court then fixed the crime as murder in the first degree and on December 22nd, after informing the defendant of the filing of the information, the arraignment, the plea and the fixing of the degree of murder as that of murder in the first degree, asked if there was any legal cause to offer why judgment should not then be pronounced against him. Receiving a negative reply, judgment was pronounced that the defendant be punished by imprisonment in the state prison at San Quentin until legally discharged.

On March 2, 1950, defendant filed a motion in the trial court to vacate the judgment upon the grounds (1) that defendant's constitutional rights were violated and his plea of guilty was vitiated by lack of effective aid of counsel; (2) that defendant was induced to plead guilty upon promises of a lesser sentence than might otherwise be imposed; and (3) that defendant was held for trial without sufficient or probable cause. The motion was heard by the trial court on the affidavit of defendant, the transcript of the preliminary hearing and proceedings had in the trial court and the testimony of the deputy district attorney who was in charge of the case at the time of the preliminary examination, and the subsequent proceedings in the superior court. The motion was denied and defendant appeals from the order denying it. The grounds of appeal are substantially the same as those set forth by the defendant in his motion to vacate the judgment in the trial court.

[2–4] Defendant's contention that his constitutional rights have been violated and his plea of guilty vitiated by lack of effective aid of counsel cannot here be determined by the proceedings in the nature of a petition for writ of coram nobis.

As was said in People v. Adamson, supra, 34 Cal.2d 320, 210 P.2d 13, 15: "In this state a motion to vacate a judgment in the nature of a petition for coram nobis is a remedy of narrow scope. (See People v. Darcy (1947), 79 Cal.App.2d 683, 693, 180 P.2d 752; People v. Martinez (1948), 88 Cal.App.2d 767, 774, 199 P.2d 375.) Its purpose is to secure relief, where no other remedy exists, from a judgment rendered while there existed some fact which would have prevented its rendition if the trial court had known it and which, through no negligence or fault of the defendant, was not then known to the court. (People v. Gilbert (1944), 25 Cal.2d 422, 442, 154 P.2d 657; In re Lindley (1947), 29 Cal.2d 709, 725–726, 177 P.2d 918; People v. Tuthill (1948), 32 Cal.2d 819, 821, 198 P.2d 505.) The applicant for the writ 'must show that the facts upon which he relies were not known to him and could not in the exercise of due diligence have been discovered by him at any time substantially earlier than the time of his motion for the writ; otherwise he has stated no ground for relief.' (People v. Shorts (1948), 32 Cal.2d 502, 513, 197 P.2d 330, 336.)"

[5] The writ does not lie to correct an error in the judgment of the court nor to contradict or put in issue any fact directly passed upon and affirmed by the judgment itself, and where the remedies of the right to appeal and to make a motion for a new trial are provided for by statute, to that extent an application for a writ of coram nobis cannot be entertained. People v. Mooney, 178 Cal. 525, 528, 529, 174 P. 325; People v. Reid, 195 Cal. 249, 257, 232 P. 457, 36 A.L.R. 1435.

[6–8] As was said In re Lindley, 29 Cal.2d 709, 724, 177 P.2d 918, 928: "The grounds upon which a court may issue a writ of error coram nobis * * * are more narrowly restricted than those which allow relief by habeas corpus." The court there said, 29 Cal.2d at page 725, 177 P.2d at page 928, quoting from Keane v. State, 164 Md. 685, 166 A. 410, 411, 412, 413: "'In the original as well as in the modern practice [the purpose of these writs] was not to permit a review of the evidence given in connection with the issues actually tried to determine whether witnesses who actually testified before a jury sworn on those issues testified falsely, but to determine whether facts existed which were not known to the court at the trial and not in issue under the pleadings, but which, if known, would have prevented the judgment which actually was entered from being entered.'"

And 29 Cal.2d on page 726, 177 P.2d on page 928, quoting from the Keane case, supra: "'Accordingly it is stated as a general rule that "the writ of error coram nobis does not lie to correct an issue of fact which has been adjudicated, even though wrongly determined; nor for alleged false testimony at the trial; nor on the ground that a juror swore falsely as to his qualifications; nor for newly discovered evidence. * * *"'" (Citing cases.)

The court further stated, 29 Cal.2d on page 726, 177 P.2d on page 928: "This restricted scope of the writ of coram nobis has been recognized by the California courts. As stated in People v. Reid, 195 Cal. 249, 256, 232 P. 457, 460, 36 A.L.R. 1435, quoting from Sanders v. State, 85 Ind. 318, 44 Am.Rep. 29: 'It is our opinion that the courts have the power to issue writs in the nature of the writ coram nobis, but that the writ cannot be so comprehensive as at common law, for remedies are given by our statute which did not exist at common law—the motion for a new trial and the right of appeal—and these very materially abridge the office and functions of the old writ. These afford an accused ample opportunity to present for review questions of fact, arising upon or prior to the trial, as well as questions of law; while at common law the writ of error allowed him to present to the appellate court only questions of law. Under our system all matters of fact reviewable by appeal, or upon motion, must be presented by motion for a new trial, and cannot be made the grounds of an application for the writ coram nobis. Within this rule must fall the defense of insanity as well as all other defenses existing at the time of the commission of the crime. Within this rule, too, must fall all cases of accident and surprise, of verdicts against evidence, of newly discovered evidence, and all like matters.' Quoted with approval in People v. Lumbley, 8 Cal.2d 752, 759, 68 P.2d 354; People v. Superior Court, 4 Cal.2d 136, 149, 47 P.2d 724."

[9–11] In the instant case the defendant failed to appeal from the judgment or move for a new trial. These remedies, at least, were available to him and the facts upon which defendant relies to establish his contention that he lacked the effective aid of counsel were known to him and to the trial court throughout all of the proceedings had therein. There was no showing that the facts upon which defendant relies with reference to this contention were not known to him and could not in the exercise of due diligence have been discovered by him at any time substantially earlier than the time of his motion for the writ. The defendant well knew that he was entitled to and did not have an attorney to represent him at the time of the entry of his plea. Five and one-half years elapsed between the time of trial and the time of the filing of the proceedings to vacate the judgment. The record does not set forth a reasonable explanation for the delay. A showing of diligence is prerequisite to the availability of relief by motion for coram nobis. People v. Shorts, 32 Cal.2d 502, 512, 197 P.2d 330. As was there said, 32 Cal.2d at page 513, 197 P.2d at page 336: "We are of the view that where a defendant seeks to vacate a solemn judgment of conviction, particularly where such judgment has been affirmed on appeal, the showing of diligence essential to the granting of relief by way of coram nobis should be no less than the similar showing required in civil cases where relief is sought against lately discovered fraud. In such cases it is necessary to aver not only the probative facts upon which the basic claim rests, but also the time and circumstances under which the facts were discovered, in order that the court can determine as a matter of law whether the litigant proceeded with due diligence; a mere allegation of the ultimate facts, or of the legal conclusion of diligence, is insufficient." (Citing cases.)

In People v. Coates, 95 Cal.App.2d 78, 212 P.2d 263, it was held that due diligence was not shown where the facts upon which the defendant relied were known to him and his plea of guilty which he sought to set aside was entered more than four years before applying for the writ.

As was said in People v. Martinez, 88 Cal.App.2d 767, 773, 199 P.2d 375, 379: "* * * An application for a writ of error coram nobis should be made within a reasonable time. Diligence is required. A convicted person is not permitted to allow years to pass during which witnesses die, disappear or forget, and his own imagination grows and expands. * * *"

In People v. Black, 114 Cal.App. 468, 473, 300 P. 43, it was held that the writ of coram nobis should be applied for at or near the time of moving for a new trial and in People v. Vernon, 9 Cal.App.2d 138, 142, 49 P. 2d 326, it was stated that the motion to vacate a judgment must be made within a reasonable time after such judgment has been rendered and in that case the court concluded that a delay of four and one-half years was unreasonable.

[12] The record herein does not set forth any facts not known to the trial court at the time it fixed the degree of the crime. An error in fixing the degree under the circumstances shown is an error of law and cannot be reached by the present proceedings.

[13, 14] As was said in People v. Tuthill, 32 Cal.2d 819, 822, 198 P.2d 505, 506: "The writ does not lie to correct errors of law; it 'is not intended to authorize any court to review and revise its opinions'." (Citing cases.)

And in People v. Martinez, supra, 88 Cal. 2d at page 771, 199 P.2d at page 378, it is said: "The writ of error coram nobis never issues to correct an error of law, nor to redress an irregularity occurring at the trial that could be corrected on motion for new trial or by appeal."

In this connection it may be observed that a writ of habeas corpus has been held to be available in situations where defendant was not given the opportunity to have the advice of counsel and did not waive such right. In re Jones, 88 Cal.App.2d 167, 198 P.2d 520. And in People v. Adamson, supra, 34 Cal.2d 320, 210 P.2d 13, cases are cited under the statement of the rule that an application for a writ of habeas corpus has become the proper remedy to attack collaterally a judgment of conviction which has been obtained in violation of fundamental constitutional rights. However, in the case at bar, we are not passing upon the question of the availability of the remedy of a writ of habeas corpus under the circumstances shown by the record before us.

[15] The defendant contends that his plea of guilty should be set aside because the assistant district attorney induced him to plead guilty because of a promise of a lesser sentence than might otherwise be imposed. In his affidavit the defendant stated that the assistant district attorney voluntarily visited him in the Fresno county jail and told him that unless he changed his plea from not guilty to guilty, he would be found guilty by a jury and executed, but that if he would spare the state the expense of a jury trial, defendant would receive a short sentence in the county jail or on the road camp and that, in fear of his life, he entered into an agreement to and did change his plea from not guilty to guilty. These statements were contradicted by the testimony of the assistant district attorney and his chief. The assistant district attorney denied that he had ever told the defendant he would see to it that all he got was a short jail sentence and further stated that he never promised the defendant anything if he would plead guilty. The affidavit and the foregoing testimony created a conflict in the evidence and the court's implied finding contrary to the contentions made in defendant's affidavit cannot here be disturbed. We cannot say that the evidence established as a matter of law that defendant's change of plea was brought about because of inducement by the assistant district attorney.

In People v. Coates, supra, 95 Cal.App.2d 78, 212 P.2d 263, it was held that even if there was merit in the defendant's claim that his plea was induced by promise of probation (which fact was not alleged) he was not entitled to a reversal of the judgment of conviction in proceedings for a writ of error coram nobis.

[16–18] Defendant further contends that the motion to vacate the judgment should be granted because he was held to answer without sufficient or probable cause. Whether there was sufficient or probable cause to hold the defendant to answer was a question of law and not of fact and, as noted, the writ of error coram nobis does not lie to correct errors of law. People v. Tuthill, supra. The defendant is precluded from challenging the alleged inadequacy of the evidence or irregularities of procedure of the preliminary examination by his failure to move to quash the information under section 995 of the Penal Code. In re Rogers, 91 Cal.App.2d 394, 400, 205 P.2d 667. From an examination of the testimony taken at the preliminary examination, we conclude that there was probable cause to hold the defendant to answer under the rule stated in People v. McRae, 31 Cal.2d 184, 187, 187 P.2d 741.

GERM v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al.

No. 14285.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 15, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 14, 1950.

Hearing Denied Nov. 13, 1950.

Joseph Germ sued the City and County of San Francisco, a municipal corporation, Yellow Cab Company of San Francisco, a corporation, and Albert A. Brodose and others, for injuries resulting when plaintiff was struck by a taxicab. The Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, George W. Schonfeld, J., rendered a judgment against plaintiff in favor of defendant Yellow Cab Company and its driver, Albert A. Brodose, and in favor of plaintiff against the City and County of San Francisco, and the City and County of San Francisco appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that evidence sustained judgment for plaintiff against the City and County on ground that while plaintiff pedestrian was standing near intersection in safety zone for streetcar, a streetcar struck a taxicab which was stopped near streetcar tracks and knocked the taxicab into plaintiff, and that taxicab had not already struck plaintiff before streetcar arrived at safety zone.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and error ⇐930(1)

On appeal from judgment for plaintiff in personal injury action, evidence and inferences reasonably deducible therefrom was required to be taken most strongly in favor of plaintiff.

2. Street railroads ⇐114(2)

In action for injuries, evidence sustained judgment for plaintiff against city on ground that while plaintiff was standing near intersection in safety zone for streetcar, a streetcar struck a taxicab which was stopped near streetcar tracks and knocked taxicab into plaintiff, and that taxicab had not already struck plaintiff before streetcar arrived at safety zone.

3. Street railroads ⇐118(4)

In personal injury action involving a streetcar accident, an instruction that streetcar operator has duty to anticipate that he might have obstructions in his path, such as a stopped motor vehicle, and must keep proper lookout and keep streetcar under such control as will enable him to avoid collision with stopped motor vehicle, and must slow up and stop if situation requires it, and that a failure on part of operator to use such care to avoid such collision is negligence, should not have been given without modification.

In personal injury action involving a streetcar accident, instruction that streetcar operator should not assume that street is or will remain clear, and must anticipate and expect presence of others, including motor vehicles and pedestrians lawfully using street, and that fact that operator did not know a pedestrian was on street, does not excuse conduct which would have amounted to recklessness if operator had known a pedestrian was on street, should not be given since standing alone instruction implies that operator, regardless of whether he sees a pedestrian on street, is reckless if he fails to anticipate that pedestrian might step onto streetcar tracks.

In reviewing instructions all instructions must be considered together and no one or two considered as an isolated whole.

6. Street railroads ⇐118(4)

In action for injuries allegedly resulting when streetcar knocked taxicab into pedestrian standing in streetcar safety zone, giving of instruction that streetcar operator must anticipate obstructions in path, and must keep proper lookout and keep streetcar under such control as would enable him to avoid collision with stopped motor vehicle, and must slow up and stop if situation requires it, and of instruction implying that streetcar operator, regardless of whether he sees pedestrian on street, is reckless if he fails to anticipate that pedestrian might step onto streetcar tracks, was not error prejudicial to defendant city under the circumstances and in view of other instructions. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

In personal injury action involving a streetcar, plaintiff was entitled to have instructions given on plaintiff's theory of case.

8. Intoxicating liquors ⇐131
Negligence ⇐4

The taking of drinks of alcoholic nature is not illegal and does not constitute negligence per se.

Street railroads ⇐98(1)

If a pedestrian is standing in streetcar safety zone when struck by taxicab, and if taxicab driver or owner of taxicab, or streetcar operator, are guilty of negligence which proximately caused injuries, and if pedestrian was free from contributory negligence, whether pedestrian had been drinking alcoholic beverages is immaterial.

10. Municipal corporations ⇐741(1)

The chief purpose of requirement of provision of San Francisco Charter that a verified claim be presented as foundation for personal injury action against city, is to enable city to investigate claim and to settle without litigation. St.1935, p. 2421, § 87.

11. Municipal corporations ⇐741(2)

The purpose of requirement of verification imposed by San Francisco Charter requirement that a verified claim be presented as foundation for personal injury action against city, is to hold claimant responsible for false statements made in claim. St.1935, p. 2421, § 87.

12. Municipal corporations ⇐741(2)

Where plaintiff at no time appeared before notary to verify claim against defendant city, but plaintiff signed claim and notary verified claim on assurance of plaintiff's attorney that signature was that of plaintiff, requirement of city charter that a verified claim be presented as foundation for personal injury action against city was substantially complied with. St. 1935, p. 2421, § 87.

13. Appeal and error ⇐1046(5)

Comment of trial judge in personal injury action against city, intimating that testimony of a witness was not impeached by his deposition, was cured by repeated statements of trial judge that jury was sole judge of evidence and credibility of witnesses.

14. Appeal and error ⇐1046(5)

Erroneous statement of trial judge in personal injury action against city that a witness could not be cross examined from his unsigned deposition was cured where trial judge after making such statement permitted such cross examination.

15. Trial ⇐29(4)

A judge should be temporate and courteous and his attitude should not reflect undue impatience or severity toward either counsel.

16. Appeal and error ⇐1046(5)

Heated, discourteous, and intemperate statements made by trial judge during trial of personal injury action against city, were not prejudicial to city where such statements were somewhat impartially distributed between counsel and trial judge frequently admonished jury to disregard such statements and told jury that jury was sole judge of facts and veracity of witnesses. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

In personal injury action against city, alleged error of trial judge in sustaining an objection to question asked police officer by counsel for city on direct examination relative to conversation between officer and driver of taxicab involved in accident, and error in improper remark of trial judge that city police did not need assistance by leading questions, was cured where counsel was permitted thereafter to go thoroughly into the conversation and to use leading questions.

In personal injury action against city, error of trial judge in sustaining objections to questions asked police officer by counsel for city on ground that questions were leading was not prejudicial to city where subject involved was completely covered in subsequent questions.

19. Witnesses ⇐240(4), 242

A question asked witness in personal injury action against city, as to whether plaintiff had told witness that plaintiff was standing in streetcar safety zone, and a taxicab which allegedly struck plaintiff after taxicab was struck by streetcar came up to within 5 feet of plaintiff and that plaintiff stood there 15 or 20 seconds, was leading and suggestive.

Fact that person called as witness in personal injury action against city was in court during trial before he was called as a witness, despite order excluding all witnesses which was made at beginning of trial, did not render such witness incompetent to testify.

Improper refusal of trial judge in personal injury action against city to permit a witness for city to testify because witness had disobeyed order excluding all witnesses from courtroom during trial, was not prejudicial to city where city did not show damage, or that testimony city desired to obtain from such witness was vital.

22. Evidence ⇐471(19)

Question asked driver of taxicab which allegedly while stopped was struck by streetcar and knocked into pedestrian standing in front of taxicab in streetcar safety zone, as to whether driver after accident looked to see if there were any marks made on street by taxicab while taxicab was being pushed by streetcar and while driver was holding taxicab brakes, was objectionable as calling for an opinion as to when skid marks were made.

23. Evidence ⇐471(19)

Question asked driver of taxicab which allegedly while stopped was struck by streetcar and knocked into pedestrian standing in front of taxicab in streetcar safety zone, as to whether driver could identify on a photograph in evidence the marks driver saw on street and made by taxicab after taxicab was struck by streetcar, was objectionable as calling for an opinion as to when skid marks were made.

24. Appeal and error ⇐1170(7)

In personal injury action against city, improperly permitting an answer to question as to whether driver after accident looked to see if there were any marks made on street by taxicab while taxicab was being knocked by streetcar into plaintiff pedestrian who was standing in streetcar safety zone, and to question as to whether taxicab driver could identify on a photograph in evidence the marks driver saw on street and made by taxicab after taxicab was struck by streetcar, which questions were objectionable as calling for conclusion as to when skid marks were made, was not prejudicial to city. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

Testimony of taxicab driver whose stopped taxicab was allegedly struck by streetcar and knocked into plaintiff pedestrian who was standing in streetcar safety zone, that driver knew skid marks were made in street after taxicab was struck by streetcar, which testimony was based upon driving experience of driver that his tires would not skid at speed he was going when he slowed down because plaintiff was in front of him, was objectionable as being opinion of taxicab driver, but its admission in evidence in personal injury action against city which claimed streetcar struck taxicab after taxicab had struck plaintiff was not prejudicial to city. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

26. Appeal and error ⇐1170(7)

Fact that a juror during trial of personal injury action against city spoke to a taxicab driver who was a defendant in case and whose taxicab allegedly was knocked by streetcar into pedestrian standing in streetcar safety zone, was not prejudicial to defendant city where conversation related only to whether juror and driver had known each other previously and the case was not mentioned. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

In action against city and driver and owner of taxicab for injuries allegedly resulting when streetcar struck taxicab which had stopped about a foot from streetcar track, and in front of plaintiff who was standing in streetcar safety zone, and taxicab then struck plaintiff, remark of counsel for defendant taxicab driver and owner, made despite fact that there was no evidence as to condition of street, tracks or streetcar, that when city took over streetcar company the equipment was not in best condition and tracks were in deplorable condition, was not prejudicial to city where there was a photograph of the track in evidence.

Award of damages for injuries will not be upset on appeal unless the award appears to be so excessive as to indicate that jury was motivated by prejudice or passion, particularly where trial judge on motion for new trial has passed upon award.

29. Damages ⇐173(1)

In personal injury action, earnings of plaintiff for eight years preceding injury were admissible as evidence of extent to which earning capacity of plaintiff was impaired by injuries.

30. Damages ⇐38

Fact that injured person was not employed at time of accident does not necessarily deprive him of right to compensation for loss of earning capacity.

31. Damages ⇐134(3)

in left leg, and which would require future employment of plaintiff to be sedentary in nature, was not excessive.

32. Witnesses ⇐226

Whether during cross examination a party will be permitted to make the witness his own is discretionary with trial judge.

33. Witnesses ⇐226

In action against city and driver and owner of taxicab, for injuries allegedly resulting when streetcar struck taxicab which had stopped about a foot from streetcar track, and in front of plaintiff who was standing in streetcar safety zone, and taxicab then struck plaintiff, trial judge did not abuse discretion in refusing to allow city to call a witness as witness for city when on cross examination trial judge sustained objection to question put to witness as not being proper cross examination.

34. Witnesses ⇐290

Where trial of personal injury action against city dragged almost interminably because of delaying tactics engaged in by city, trial judge could try to speed up trial by limiting cross examination of witnesses by city as to matters which had been previously covered.

35. Trial ⇐133(6)

Accusation by counsel that counsel for another party was trying to keep truth out of case in personal injury action did not justify reversal of judgment where trial judge promptly and at much length admonished jury to disregard remark.

Dion R. Holm, City Attorney, George E. Baglin, Deputy City Attorney, San Francisco, for appellant.

John Wynne Herron, San Francisco, for respondent.

BRAY, Justice.

In an action for personal injuries, a jury verdict was rendered against plaintiff in favor of defendant Yellow Cab Company and its driver, Albert A. Brodose, and in favor of plaintiff against the City and County of San Francisco[1] in the sum of $63,044.20. From the judgment thereon the city appealed.

Questions Presented.

1. Alleged insufficiency of the evidence. 2. Alleged error in instructions. 3. Was the claim presented by plaintiff to the city a verified one? Alleged error in exclusion of testimony concerning it. 4. Alleged misconduct of the trial judge. 5. Alleged error in exclusion and admission of testimony. 6. Alleged error in misconduct of a juror. 7. Alleged misconduct of counsel for Yellow Cab Company. 8. Alleged excessive damages.

Facts.

[1, 2] On a dark Sunday evening about 9:30, at a point on Mission Street in San Francisco south of 15th Street, plaintiff was struck by a cab of defendant Yellow Cab Company, driven by defendant Brodose. Plaintiff and defendants Yellow Cab Company and Brodose claimed that the cab had stopped near plaintiff and that the city's streetcar negligently struck the cab, pushing it into plaintiff. The city's theory was that the streetcar mildly bumped into the taxi after it had already run into plaintiff and inflicted his injuries. The accident happened in 1945. The trial was not had until four years afterward. The evidence was highly conflicting. While the city has meticulously combed the evidence and pointed out many facts supporting its theory, including contradictory statements by some of plaintiff's witnesses, still, taking the evidence and the inferences reasonably deducible therefrom most strongly in favor of plaintiff, as we are required to do, the evidence is sufficient to support the verdict. This evidence follows:

Plaintiff, an unemployed laborer 50 years old, walked from the east side of Mission Street out to the safety zone for streetcar passengers boarding northbound cars at 15th Street. He saw a streetcar coming from the south, from 16th Street, and a

1. Hereinafter referred to as "the city."

Yellow Cab which was about 80 feet away when he left the curb. The cab swerved to a stop facing plaintiff where he was standing at the end (south) of the zone between two of the three raised markers; the front of the cab was at a "V" painted on the street preceding the zone. The cab was at a slight angle to the southbound tracks, with its left rear fender about a foot from the nearest rail. Plaintiff and the cab remained stopped for from 15 to 20 seconds, when the streetcar came on down the block and struck the cab with great force, pushing it into plaintiff, who was thrown five feet into the air, landed on the hood of the cab, and then rolled off under the cab. The cab driver held his brakes and was pushed along for several feet, and then his foot was knocked off the brake. The streetcar pushed the cab to within 15 feet of the south crosswalk of 15th Street. Skid marks were left on the pavement where the cab had been pushed, that of the left rear tire being about 40 feet long, and parallel to the tracks for a little distance, then swerved over the tracks, and that of the right wheel being about 15 feet long and turning toward the rails and passing over two of the raised safety zone markers.

1. Sufficiency of Evidence.

It is not necessary to detail the evidence given by the various witnesses. While there is strong evidence to support the city's contentions, the testimony of plaintiff, Brodose, Serenia Murphy, Cecil B. Murphy, and Ross Williams, if believed (and it evidently was), was sufficient to support the verdict.

The city contends that certain physical facts conclusively support its contention that the cab had already hit plaintiff before the car arrived. This contention is based upon the assumption that its interpretation of these facts is the only possible one, and upon the conclusion that the jury must necessarily believe its witnesses. For example, its interpretation placed upon the location of the skid marks is not the only reasonable one deducible therefrom; also, it was for the jury to determine the credibility of the city's employees who testified that the damage to the streetcar was extremely slight. In this latter behalf it is significant that while the city produced photographs of the damaged cab it did not produce any of the condition of the streetcar. The city characterizes the injury to the rear of the cab as slight. However, from an examination of the photographs the jury could very well find that the damage was considerable and must have been caused by more than slight force. After an examination of all the evidence, we cannot say that there is any undisputed physical fact which refutes the positive testimony of plaintiff's eye-witnesses to the accident.

Among the instructions given were two which for convenience we have lettered (a) and (b).

(a) "You are hereby instructed that it is the duty of the streetcar operator to anticipate that he might have obstructions, such as a stopped motor vehicle, in his path, and he must keep a proper lookout and keep his streetcar under such control as will enable him to avoid a collision with such stopped motor vehicle, and if the situation requires it, he must slow up and stop. A failure if any, on his part, to use this car[e] to avoid such a collision, is negligence."

(b) "You are instructed that the operator of a streetcar has no right to assume that a street is clear or will remain clear, but he must anticipate and expect the presence of others, including motor vehicles and pedestrians, lawfully using such street. Accordingly, the fact, if it be a fact, that the operator of a streetcar did not know that a pedestrian was on the street, is no excuse for conduct which would have amounted to recklessness if he had known that a pedestrian was on such street."

These instructions are patterned after instructions approved in Meyers v. Bradford, 54 Cal.App. 157, 201 P. 471, which was an action involving a collision between two automobiles. The instructions in the Meyers case have been variously criticized and explained. For example, in Anderson v. Freis, 61 Cal.App.2d 159, 142 P.2d 330, the court considered a similar instruction and found it ambiguous, but as was done in other cases, held that there was no prejudice in giving it as the subject of negligence was fully covered in the other instructions. As to instruction (a), a similar instruction was refused in Blythe v. City & County of San Francisco, 83 Cal.App.2d 125, 188 P.2d 40, 46, which was a case involving a collision between a streetcar and an auto stalled on the tracks. The instruction there read: "You are instructed that it was the duty of the motorman in operating the streetcar down the hill toward the corner where this accident occurred, to keep his streetcar in such control as would enable him to stop at any time to avoid injury to persons or property lawfully upon the highway, and if the motorman failed in this duty then the defendant, City and County of San Francisco, was guilty of negligence." This court said: "The proferred instruction was properly refused because it does not correctly state the law. It was not the legal duty of the motorman to operate and control his streetcar so as to 'enable him to stop at any time to avoid injury to persons or property lawfully upon the highway.' If such were the law it would be the duty of a motorman, proceeding carefully, to stop regardless of the time at which the person or property came upon the tracks. Negligence cannot be based upon such an exacting formula completely divorced from the variables of time, place and surrounding circumstances." 83 Cal.App.2d at page 135, 188 P.2d at page 46.

[3, 4] Instruction (a) should not be given without modification in an action involving a streetcar accident. Instruction (b), likewise, should not be given in this type of action, as, standing alone, it implies that a motorman, whether he sees a pedestrian on the street, or whether he does not see him, is reckless if he fails to anticipate that the pedestrian might step on to the car tracks. The giving of these instructions was erroneous.

[5, 6] But, under the circumstances of this case, and in view of the provisions of section 4½ of Article VI of the Constitution, we cannot say that it was prejudicial. All of the instructions must be considered together and no one or two considered as an isolated whole. Blackmore v. Brennan, 43 Cal.App.2d 280, 287, 110 P.2d 723. The court further instructed: "In the absence of knowledge or reason to know to the contrary, the motorman of a streetcar, so long as he is exercising ordinary care, may operate his streetcar forward on the assumption that the driver of an automobile which is traveling in front of the streetcar and in the same direction, will not suddenly stop his automobile on the streetcar track so close to the oncoming streetcar as not to afford the motorman a reasonable opportunity to stop." "If you find that the plaintiff in this action, by a failure to exercise reasonable care, caused the taxicab suddenly to stop near the streetcar tracks, and thereafter negligently blocked the passage of the taxicab and the streetcar, and as a proximate result of such conduct on his part the accident occurred, the plaintiff cannot recover in this action." "The operator of a streetcar is only obliged to exercise ordinary care and caution in the operation of the car to avoid inflicting injury upon persons on the street." Under the evidence, the jury had to decide which of the witnesses it was going to believe: those who testified in support of plaintiff's contention that the cab stopped to permit him to cross to the safety zone and that such a time elapsed between the stopping of the cab that the motorman saw or should have seen it in time to avoid striking it, and yet the car struck the cab knocking it into plaintiff; or those who testified that the cab hit the plaintiff before the car struck the cab. In view of the instructions as a whole and these issues raised by the evidence, it is difficult to see how the jury could have been misled by instructions (a) and (b). The jury was positively instructed that the motorman was obliged to use only ordinary care. If it believed the city's witnesses, he had done so; if it believed plaintiff's and the cab company's witnesses, he had not done so.

Many of the city's objections to these instructions are based upon the claim that they ignore or do not incorporate the city's version of the facts. Thus, the city contends that the instructions assume that the streetcar struck the cab before the latter hit plaintiff. Of course, the court is required to instruct on the theories of both parties rather than on that of one party alone. It is true that the motorman testified that he saw plaintiff on the street. However, the jury did not necessarily have to believe him; hence the city's contention that an instruction on the motorman's failure to see plaintiff should not have been given, is not well founded.

[7-9] The city contends that two of the instructions on intoxication were erroneous. It was the city's theory that plaintiff was intoxicated and by reason of that fact walked into the path of the oncoming cab, causing it to get into the path of the oncoming car. The theory of plaintiff and defendants Yellow Cab Company and Brodose was that plaintiff was standing in the safety zone, and hence, although they claim plaintiff was sober, it was immaterial whether he was intoxicated. The first instruction was to the effect that it is not illegal and does not constitute negligence per se for a person to take drinks of an alcoholic nature. The second instruction was to the effect that if plaintiff was standing within the safety zone when struck, and if plaintiff was free from contributory negligence, and if the defendants or any of them were guilty of negligence which proximately caused plaintiff's injuries, then the question of whether or not plaintiff had been drinking was immaterial. Plaintiff was entitled to have instructions given on his theory of the case. These two instruction were only a part of the instructions given on intoxication. Among these were instructions to the effect that the jury might consider intoxication of plaintiff, if proved; that intoxication is no excuse for failure to act as a reasonably prudent person would; that an intoxicated person is held to the same standard of care for his own safety as a sober person; and that if intoxication prevented plaintiff from acting as a reasonably prudent person would and as a proximate result thereof he was injured, he could not recover. These instructions properly stated the law and were not erroneous.

3. Plaintiff's Claim.

The San Francisco Charter requires, as the foundation for an action of this kind against the city, that a claim be presented and that such claim be verified. Stats.1935, p. 2421, § 87. Plaintiff alleged in his complaint that he had filed such a claim. This allegation was denied by the city. At the trial, the original claim presented to the city was offered in evidence by plaintiff and admitted without objection by the city. On its face it appeared to be signed by plaintiff and verified by his oath before Notary Public Marie H. Stanley. The city called Mrs. Stanley as a witness. She testified, in effect, that she had no recollection of going to the San Francisco Hospital where admittedly plaintiff was confined on the day the claim was verified, but that either she did go there, or that plaintiff's then attorney brought the claim to her already signed and informed her that the signature was plaintiff's; that she frequently verified documents presented to her by attorneys under similar circumstances. Before Mrs. Stanley testified, the city attempted to show through plaintiff that he had not signed the claim in the presence of the notary. After some questions of plaintiff, the court refused to permit the city to examine him any further on the subject. Thereupon the city made an offer to prove through plaintiff that the claim was brought to plaintiff at the hospital by his then attorney, signed by plaintiff, and that plaintiff at no time appeared before the notary to verify it. The court refused to permit the city to make such proof. Thereafter the court refused to give the jury an instruction offered by the city to the effect that if plaintiff did not appear before the notary and personally verify the claim, it would not be a verified claim as required by the charter, and its verdict must be in favor of the city.

[10-12] Was the claim a verified one? For the purposes of this discussion we will assume, as contended by the city, that plaintiff did not personally verify it, but that he signed it, and the notary verified it on the assurance of plaintiff's attorney that the signature was that of plaintiff. We will also disregard the fact that the city made no objection to its introduction in evidence. "The chief purpose of the claim requirement is to enable the city to make an investigation of the claim and give it an opportunity to settle without litigation." Holm v. City of San Diego, 35 Cal.2d 399, 400, 217 P.2d 972, 973. Undoubtedly the requirement that the claim be verified is to hold the claimant responsible for false statements made in the claim. Section 121 of the Penal Code provides: "It is no defense to a prosecution for perjury that the oath was administered or taken in an irregular manner, or that the person accused of perjury did not go before, or was not in the presence of, the officer purporting to administer the oath, if such accused caused or procured such officer to certify that the oath had been taken or administered." See People v. Darcy, 59 Cal.App.2d 342, 139 P.2d 118. "In determining whether or not there has been substantial compliance the purpose of the claim statute is important." Knight v. City of Los Angeles, 26 Cal.2d 764, 767, 160 P.2d 779, 780. The claim here satisfied both purposes of the claim statute, namely, the city was enabled to make a full investigation of the claim and had an opportunity to settle had it been so advised, and secondly, the verification was sufficient to support a perjury charge were any false matters stated therein. While it is true, as stated in 1 California Jurisprudence, p. 667, and in In re Johnston, D.C., 220 F. 218 (cited by the city), that the notary's jurat is not conclusive, nevertheless the use by the subscriber of the document as a verified one constitutes a substantial compliance with the requirement that the document be verified. In Le Mesnager v. Hamilton, 101 Cal. 532, 35 P. 1054, 40 Am.St.Rep. 81, it was held that a married woman could not be bound by an acknowledgment of a mortgage when she never in fact appeared before the notary making the acknowledgment, and that it was error to refuse evidence to prove the true facts. However, at that time there was a specific requirement that a married woman must appear personally before the notary, so that there could be no question that she was acting voluntarily. Moreover, at that time the courts were extremely technical in all matters respecting conveyances of property. In Fairbanks, Morse & Co. v. Getchell, 13 Cal.App. 458, 110 P. 331, it was held that an oath given over the telephone to a notary was invalid, but mainly on the ground that the person at the other end of the telephone was in a county other than that of the notary, and hence was out of the notary's jurisdiction. The courts in late years have liberalized their attitude towards claims required to be filed with municipalities. Thus, in Kelso v. Board of Education, 42 Cal.App.2d 415, 109 P.2d 29, the court held that a claim for injury to the son substantially complied with the statute although verified by the father. In Holm v. City of San Diego, supra, 35 Cal.2d 400, 217 P.2d 972, it was held that a claim which did not state the address of the claimant, a factor previously considered essential, Holm v. City of San Diego, Cal.App., 208 P.2d 777, substantially complied with the statute.

While there are circumstances under which, to constitute a verification to an instrument, the subscriber must personally appear before the notary, it would be the height of technicality, serving no good purpose, to hold that the claim here did not constitute a substantial compliance with the requirement that it be verified. Therefore there was no error in the court's refusing to permit the city to produce evidence on the subject.

4. Alleged Misconduct of Judge.

[13-16] The city has made nine assignments of alleged misconduct by the trial judge. We have examined all of these incidents. Some of them were comments on the evidence by the court; others were in connection with rulings on the admission or exclusion of evidence. We do not deem it necessary to detail the incidents here. As to the comments on the evidence, they were either legitimate comments by the court, or, where erroneous, such as the intimation that a certain witness' testimony was not impeached by his deposition, were fully cured by the court's repeated statements that the jury was the sole judge of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses. In some of these instances the judge made erroneous statements of the law, but in every instance the error was cured by permitting the city to proceed as the judge had previously stated it could not proceed. For example, the judge stated that a certain witness could not be cross-examined from his unsigned deposition, and then permitted the city to so examine him. In some of the instances the judge spoke heatedly, was discourteous, intemperate, and failed to exhibit that judicial demeanor expected of judges. As said in the Canons of Judicial Ethics of the Conference of California Judges, "A judge should be temperate * * * courteous * * * a judge's attitude should not reflect undue impatience or severity toward either counsel * * *" (Canons 5, 6 and 13.)

Taking these actions of the judge as a whole, it must be said that he should have displayed a more judicial temperament, but we cannot say that his outbursts prejudicially affected the case, particularly as the judge was somewhat impartial in the distribution between counsel of like, testy remarks. On occasions he was equally harsh and intemperate with the other counsel in the case, in one instance, resulting in an assignment by the cab company's counsel of misconduct by the judge. It must be pointed out that in no instance did the city's counsel make an assignment of misconduct at the trial. It frequently has been held that this failure prevents consideration of the matter on appeal. Jones v. Bridges, 38 Cal.App.2d 341, 101 P.2d 91; Jones v. Bayley, 49 Cal.App.2d 647, 122 P.2d 293; People v. MacDonald, 167 Cal. 545, 140 P. 256. It is the city's contention that the conduct of the judge as a whole and in part bring the case within the rule that where the misconduct is such that admonitions by the judge to the jury to disregard it could not repair the damage, no such assignment need be made. People v. Walker, 93 Cal. App.2d 818, 209 P.2d 834. For that reason we have examined the incidents in detail. In number, the city's counsel bore the brunt of this petulance more often than other counsel. However, counsel's conduct in extending the trial by unduly lengthy and repetitious cross-examination of the witnesses contributed somewhat to the situation. The city's tendency to emphasize quantity rather than quality has extended itself even to its briefs on this appeal. They total 385 pages in length. Its reply brief of 127 pages is primarily a repetition of the matters set out extensively in its opening brief. The statement in People v. Murphy, 53 Cal.App. 474, 487, 200 P. 484, 490, is appropriate here: "Much of the trouble during the trial between the court and counsel for the defendant was occasioned by the manifest desire of the court on the one hand to expedite the trial of the defendant as much as possible, and by counsel on the other hand to gain delay". We are not condoning the petulance and actions of the judge, but an examination of the entire record convinces us that it did not deprive the city of a fair trial, particularly in view of the fact that lightning did not strike the city alone, and that time after time the court admonished the jury that regardless of what it said the jury should disregard its statements and was the sole judge of the facts and the veracity of the witnesses.

5. Exclusion and Admission of Testimony.

[17] Counsel for the city was examining police officer Peyre on direct examination concerning a conversation at the scene of the accident with defendant Brodose. "Q. And did Mr. Brodose tell you where the plaintiff was with respect to his taxicab when he, Brodose, first saw him?" The court sustained an objection to this question as leading and suggestive, and in doing so remarked that a member of the police department of San Francisco is presumed to have passed a civil service examination that required some intelligence and therefore he did not need assistance by leading questions. Any error in the ruling and in the court's improper statement was cured by the fact that counsel was thereafter permitted to go thoroughly into the conversation and to use the same form of question.

[18] Later, on direct examination, counsel for the city asked Peyre this question: "Did this man [a witness to the accident] tell you that he saw the injured man standing there and the cab was standing there, then the streetcar hit the cab and pushed it into the man?" An objection that the question was leading and suggestive was sustained, as was an objection to the following question, on the same ground: "Did he tell you the accident happened in this fashion: That the man, the injured man that was standing there and the cab was standing there, and then the streetcar came up ten seconds later and pushed the cab—yes, pushed the cab into the man?" Both questions were based almost verbatim on what Williams, the witness, had testified he told the police officer. While these were proper questions, no harm was caused by the ruling, for the subject was completely covered in subsequent questions.

[19] The city called Nils Wiseth in rebuttal to testify what plaintiff told him about the accident. After asking the witness what was said in the conversation referred to, and receiving an answer, counsel asked if plaintiff told the witness he was standing in a safety zone and the taxi came up to within five feet of him and he stood there 15 or 20 seconds. The court sustained an objection to this as leading and suggestive, which it unquestionably was. The witness was the city's witness on direct examination. Moreover, at the end of the discussion between court and counsel for plaintiff and counsel for the city, the latter withdrew the question.

Refusal to permit Kennedy to testify.

[20] Kennedy, the investigator for the cab company, arrived at the scene of the accident shortly after it occurred. Brodose testified he told Kennedy what had happened. Kennedy shortly after the accident interviewed Mrs. Murphy, taking a statement from her, which she signed. She testified that Kennedy suggested to her the number of feet that the car stopped south of 15th Street, as she was not a good judge of distance. Kennedy was in court during the trial. The usual order excluding all witnesses was made at the beginning of the trial at the request of the city. A little more than half way in the trial of the case, the city called Kennedy to the stand. Thereupon counsel for the cab company objected to his being sworn as a witness on the ground that he had sat in court during the trial up to that point, to the city counsel's knowledge, and that his presence in court in violation of the rule of exclusion made him incompetent as a witness. The court sustained the objection and refused to allow Kennedy to be sworn, solely on that ground. This undoubtedly was error. People v. Russell, 34 Cal.App.2d 665, 94 P.2d 400; People v. Talkington, 8 Cal.App.2d 75, 47 P.2d 368; People v. Mack, 115 Cal.App. 588, 2 P.2d 209; People v. Boscovitch, 20 Cal. 436; Mintzer v. Wilson, 21 Cal.App.2d 85, 68 P.2d 370. But was it prejudicial under the circumstances of this case? The city made no offer of proof, but "Where the trial court erroneously refuses to permit a witness to take the stand or be sworn to testify under any circumstances or upon any subject without regard to the question of the admissibility or relevancy of the evidence the witness might give, basing its refusal on the ground that the witness is wholly incompetent to testify, and it can be ascertained from the record that the witnesses' testimony would be vital, no offer of proof is necessary to establish that such error was prejudicial." People v. Duane, 21 Cal.2d 71, 81–82, 130 P.2d 123, 129; emphasis added. Thus, to be prejudicial, it must appear to this court that the testimony which the witness would have given was vital. Obviously, if it was not or would not have been admissible, then the city has not been damaged by its exclusion.

then refers to Lawless v. Calaway, 24 Cal. 2d 81, 147 P.2d 604, which holds that no offer of proof is required where the witness can be examined under section 2055 as such an examination "is often exploratory." 24 Cal.2d at page 91, 147 P.2d at page 609. But, as pointed out above, Kennedy could not have been examined under section 2055, and if called as a witness by the city, it would have been bound by his testimony. That the proposed examination of Kennedy was merely exploratory is shown by the city's statement of not what it expected him to testify, but what it wanted to examine him about. It is obvious from the statements in the brief that most of what the city intended to ask Kennedy was inadmissible; for example, Mrs. Murphy testified that Kennedy had suggested the 90 feet in her statement. The city says it wanted to ask him what his reasons for doing that were. His reasons would be immaterial. None of the matters proposed to be asked Kennedy would have been contradictory to the evidence adverse to the city nor in support of the city's contentions. Boiled down, the city's complaint is that it was not permitted to go on a fishing expedition with Kennedy. It has failed to show in any way that it was damaged by the court's refusal to let Kennedy testify, nor that his testimony would be vital.

[22-24] Brodose was asked by his own counsel on direct examination if after the accident he looked to see if there were any marks made on the street by his cab while it was being pushed by the car and while he was holding on to the brakes. The city's objection that this called for the witness' opinion and conclusion was overruled. Again, he was asked if he could identify on a photograph in evidence, the marks he saw on the street made by his cab after it was hit by the car. A similar objection was overruled. While the objections were good and should have been sustained, no prejudice resulted from their being overruled. A reading of the transcript shows that it must have been clear to the jury that the witness was giving merely his opinion and that it was for the jury to determine when the skid marks were made.

[25] Counsel for the city cross-examined Brodose at great length concerning how he knew that the marks were made after his cab was struck. He stated that from his experience driving cars for quite a few years he knew that going at the speed he was going when he slowed down because plaintiff was in front of him, his tires would not skid. The city's counsel then moved to strike out the witness' testimony as to when the skid marks were made, on the ground that it was based merely on his opinion and conclusion. While the motion should have been granted, no prejudice resulted. His explanation of how he knew the origin of the marks was such that if the jury did not believe his testimony as to how fast he was going (and there was evidence by the city's witnesses to refute it) his whole conclusion would fall. His statement that the marks were made after his cab was struck was based upon and was no stronger than his testimony as to his actions after he saw plaintiff.

6. Alleged Misconduct of Juror.

[26] This complaint is not serious, although it did involve a comedy of errors in that the wrong juror got accused. During the trial of the case juror Brix was seen conversing with Brodose outside the courtroom. The city, in chambers, called the court's attention to this fact, and moved for a mistrial. Brodose was examined by the court in the absence of the jury. He stated that the juror said "Hello" to him and stated that his face seemed familiar. Brodose said he thought he recognized him too. The juror then asked if Brodose ever worked at Hunters Point, to which Brodose replied that when he was going to sea he did. Brodose testified that no mention of the case was made. Subsequently juror Bront was brought into the judge's chambers. Before any questions were asked of him, other than was he Mr. Brix, counsel called the court's attention to the fact that he was the wrong juror and he was excused. Later Brix was examined. The court asked him if he had spoken to Brodose. He admitted he had, but stated that the case was not mentioned by either; that he was satisfied he had never seen Brodose before the case started; that he asked Brodose if he knew that Brix worked at Hunters Point and Brodose had replied that he used to be there too, during the war. During the interview counsel for the cab company asked the city's counsel, "Are you satisfied now * * * ?" The court denied the mistrial motion. The city contends that the incident was irregular and prejudicial. It undoubtedly was irregular, but there is no showing that it was prejudicial.

7. Alleged Misconduct of Counsel.

[27] In his argument to the jury, counsel for defendants Brodose and the cab company said: "Number one, there is the question of the swaying of the streetcar. Now, we all know it is a matter of common knowledge, his Honor knows it, I know it, you know it. When the city took over the Market Street Railway, with its tracks and equipment, the equipment was not in the best condition, and the tracks were in deplorable condition." The city immediately cited this as misconduct. The following then occurred:

"The Court: There is no misconduct. It is true there was no evidence or testimony offered as to the condition of the street or tracks, rather, directly, or of the streetcar.

"Mr. Baglin: And no evidence of any swaying either, your Honor.

"Mr. Miller: If the jurors don't have personal knowledge of that they can forget about it." Counsel then referred to the photograph of the roadbed in evidence and stated that the jury could see how it was "all chewed up." He then called attention to a bend in the track and argued that where there is such a bend, the car is inclined to sway. The court should have instructed the jury to disregard counsel's remark. It did point out that there was no evidence of the condition of the tracks. However, with the photograph of the track in evidence, we cannot say that the remark was prejudicial.

8. Damages.

[28] The jury awarded plaintiff $63,044.20, which the city contends is excessive. The rules applicable to the review of damages by appellate courts have been so frequently passed upon and are so well established that they do not require citation of authorities. Before this court can upset the award it must appear to us that it is so excessive as to indicate that the jury was motivated by prejudice or passion. Particularly is this so, where, as here, the trial judge on motion for new trial has passed upon the award. Nor is it a question of what damages this court would award in the first instance. Nor are awards in other cases necessarily a criterion of the proper award in the instant case. The types of injury, the age, physical condition, financial status of the various plaintiffs, and the value of the dollar at the time of injury, vary so greatly that it is almost impossible to find a case where the situation is on all fours with a case at bar.

The city concedes that plaintiff suffered a comminuted fracture of the right humerus, which makes him unable to bring his arm up to a right angle with the level of the shoulder joint; also that he suffered a dislocation of the right hip joint, as to which he now has a very good movable joint; also that he had a compound, comminuted fracture of both bones of the left leg in about the middle third; a comminuted fracture of the right ankle—three prominences of the ankle joint were broken. The left leg has healed but with one and a half inches of shortening. The bony prominences of the right ankle are enlarged and not freely movable. His inability to abduct his right arm more than 45 degrees from his body constitutes more than a 50% disability. By reason of the shortening of the left leg he has to wear a raised shoe and limps badly. He cannot dorsiflex the right ankle, that is, raise the foot toward the leg and force it down towards the leg normally, and has a marked decrease in motion of the ankle. He has large varicose veins and thickening of the vessels, and inflammation of the lymphatics of the leg, which came as a result of the fractures. The swelling and inflammation comes on intermittently but will be recurrent. His left knee was stiff because of the immobilization of the leg. Plaintiff's doctor and the doctor whom the city had examine plaintiff were in substantial agreement as to the nature of plaintiff's injuries and disability. The city's doctor stated in his report that plaintiff "is suffering from a very marked disability, and he will never be able to return to hard or arduous work. The condition is now permanent. * * * The patient must seek employment of a sedentary nature and certainly one not requiring standing for any length of time or walking for any distance." Plaintiff at the time of injury was 56 years of age, with a life expectancy of 23.24 years. He was confined to the hospital for a period of approximately four months. Plaintiff's hospital bill was $1,044.20. He claimed $12,000 loss of wages, or chance to work during the time he was completely incapacitated. Originally the complaint asked for $25,000 general damages. It was amended at the trial, over the city's objection, to ask for $50,000 general and loss of earnings of $12,000, which with the hospital bill totaled $63,044.20, the exact amount the jury gave. (In fact, during their deliberations, they came back to court and asked the exact amount asked for by plaintiff.)

[29-31] The city attacks the $12,000 loss of earnings which the jury impliedly awarded and also the total amount of the damages on the ground that, in effect, plaintiff was an inebriate incapable of finding or holding employment, and also on the ground that the court erred in permitting plaintiff to estimate his earnings over the previous eight years, which estimate plaintiff gave as $18,000, or an annual average of $2,250. The earnings prior to the injury are admissible as evidence of the extent to which the earning capacity of the plaintiff has been impaired by the injury. Tornell v. Munson, 80 Cal.App.2d 123, 181 P.2d 112; Armstrong v. Ford, 30 Cal.App.2d 347, 86 P.2d 385; Treadwell v. Whittier, 80 Cal. 574, 22 P. 266, 5 L.R.A. 498, 13 Am.St. Rep. 175. As said in Wilcox v. Sway, 69 Cal.App.2d 560, 160 P.2d 154, the best method of proof of pecuniary loss is testimony of the plaintiff as to his earnings for a number of years immediately prior to the accident. Bonneau v. North Shore R. Co., 152 Cal. 406, 93 P. 106, 125 Am.St. Rep. 68. The city has cited no case holding that the testimony of the plaintiff as to his prior earnings is not admissible. There is no express limitation upon the time which this testimony may cover. The remoteness of the time affects the weight of the testimony and not its admissibility. The fact that the injured person was not employed at the time of the accident does not necessarily deprive him of the right to compensation for the loss of his earning capacity. Wilcox v. Sway, supra, 69 Cal.App.2d 560, 160 P.2d 154. Actually, the city's main attack on this evidence, as well as on the award itself, is its claim that the evidence shows that plaintiff neither earned what he claimed he had earned nor had the earning capacity that the jury found. Plaintiff testified that he came to California in 1942. Prior to that time he worked in underground mining in Minnesota, and as a laborer in the car repair department of a railroad, but not steady employment, that is, only nine or ten months a year for three or four years. His work record in California was spotty. From December 17, 1942, to July, 1943, his shipyard earnings were $472.95. From July, 1943, to July, 1944, he was intermittently unemployed because of rheumatism. From February to June of 1944 he earned $100 per month as a farm laborer. At the time of the accident, April 15, 1945, plaintiff was unemployed and living at the St. Vincent de Paul Shelter, apparently on its charity. He had been on its rolls in November, 1943. From time to time he had been admitted to the San Francisco Hospital for "alcoholism" or "alcoholic addiction." The records of the hospital indicate that the day after the accident he might have suffered from delerium tremens. A couple of months after his discharge from the hospital after the accident he was again hospitalized due to a fall and the breaking of his hip, probably while intoxicated.

While the evidence would have justified the jury in finding, as contended by the city, that plaintiff was a ne'er do well who over the preceding eight years had earned very little money, and whose earning power at the time of the accident was practically nil, on the other hand, there was evidence which supported the jury's finding that he had the earning capacity found by the jury. Unquestionably the man was badly disabled and incapacitated from future hard work, the only type of work for which he was fitted. In view of the seriousness of his injuries we cannot say that the verdict is excessive.

Other Matters.

[32, 33] It is not clear from the city's briefs whether it claims the court erred in refusing to allow it to call the witness Klein as its witness, when on cross-examination the court sustained an objection to a question put to the witness as not being proper cross-examination, or whether the incident is pointed out solely for the purpose of contrasting it with the situation when, over the city's objection, the court permitted plaintiff to make Blake his witness during plaintiff's cross-examination (one of the nine incidents of alleged misconduct heretofore mentioned). Whether during cross-examination a party will be permitted to make the witness his own, is a matter entirely in the discretion of the trial court. While, in view of the court's action as to the witness Blake, it probably would have been better for plaintiff to accede to the city's request, we cannot say that the court abused its discretion to the point of being prejudicial.

[34] In its reply brief the city raises for the first time thirteen other claims of misconduct by the judge. It would appear that in the voluminous opening brief and the fine-tooth-combing with which the city went over the record, raising every possible contention, serious and not serious, nothing would have been overlooked. We have endeavored to cover every point raised by the city, and in spite of the rule that we have the right to disregard issues raised for the first time in the reply brief, have considered them. They relate to the court's limiting the city's cross-examination of certain witnesses, and the comments of both the court and opposing counsel concerning the length of the trial. In practically every instance the matter sought to be gone into on cross-examination had been covered more than once before. Both the limitations and the comments were because of the city's delaying tactics and the court's effort to speed up the trial. The court had the right where the trial dragged almost interminably, as did this, to try to speed it up. The city's actions were responsible for the comments.

[35] There was no misconduct in the action of the plaintiff in asking certain questions of the city's investigator Worcester. The city did not object to them. On one occasion the cab company counsel accused the city's counsel of trying to keep the truth out of the case, when the city interposed an objection. The court promptly and at some length admonished the jury to disregard the remarks. This fully met the situation.

99 Cal.App.2d 534

CENTERS et al. v. DOLLAR MARKETS et al.

Civ. 17492.

Sept. 21, 1950.

Martin Centers and Virginia Centers brought an action against Dollar Markets, a corporation, and others, to recover damages for malicious prosecution. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Joseph M. Maltby, J., entered judgment on a directed verdict for defendants, and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallee, J., held that the conflicting evidence as to want of probable cause on the part of the named defendant's cashier in accusing Virginia Centers of obtaining money by false pretenses should have been submitted to the jury.

Affirmed in part and reversed in part.

1. Malicious prosecution ⇐56

In order to recover damages for malicious prosecution, plaintiff must prove termination of the criminal proceedings in his favor, want of probable cause, and malice on part of defendants.

2. Appeal and error ⇐927(7), 989

Where trial court entered judgment on directed verdict for defendant in action for malicious prosecution, and it was conceded that evidence established that criminal proceeding was terminated in favor of plaintiff, reviewing court would consider only evidence most favorable to plaintiff, together with every inference which reasonably could be drawn and every presumption which fairly could be deemed to arise therefrom in plaintiff's favor, to determine whether there was any evidence of malice and want of probable cause.

3. Malicious prosecution ⇐20

"Probable cause", as it relates to malicious prosecution, is suspicion founded upon circumstances sufficiently strong to warrant reasonable man in belief that charge is true.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Probable Cause".

4. Malicious prosecution ⇐56

In order to recover compensatory damages for malicious prosecution, plaintiff must prove that defendant did not have reasonable grounds for believing that facts alleged in complaint were true.

5. Malicious prosecution ⇐20

"Probable cause", as it relates to malicious prosecution, does not depend upon possession of facts which satisfactorily prove guilt of accused person but has reference to common standard of human judgment and conduct, and exists where accuser was possessed of information or facts which were sufficient to have caused reasonable person to honestly believe that charges made were true.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Probable Cause".

In malicious prosecution actions, proof of favorable termination of criminal proceedings does not create conflict on issue of "probable cause", since proof that no crime was committed or that accused is innocent does not negative existence of probable cause.

In malicious prosecution actions, when evidence bearing on question of probable cause is in conflict, it is province of jury to determine whether facts exist which will warrant inference of probable cause.

In malicious prosecution actions, if there is no dispute concerning existence of facts relied upon to show want of probable cause, trial judge must determine, as matter of law, whether such undisputed facts do, or do not, warrant inference of want of probable cause.

In malicious prosecution actions, if there is no evidence whatever from which jury might infer that defendants did not in fact believe that crime has been committed and that plaintiff had committed it, question of defendant's belief is to be determined by court on basis of what, under circumstances, was sufficient to cause reasonable man to entertain suspicion that crime had been committed and that plaintiff had committed it.

10. Malicious prosecution ⇐27, 30

"Malice", as it relates to malicious prosecution, means actuated by wrongful motive, that is, party must have had in mind some evil or sinister purpose, but malice does not necessarily infer presence of anger or vindictiveness and it is sufficient if it appears that former suit was commenced in bad faith to vex, annoy, or wrong adverse party.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Malice".

11. Malicious prosecution ⇐56

In malicious prosecution action, plaintiff is not required to prove that prosecutor was inspired by personal hostility, a grudge, or ill will.

12. Malicious prosecution ⇐56

In malicious prosecution action, malice must be proven against particular defendant in order to justify award of compensatory damages against that defendant.

In malicious prosecution action, malice, like any other fact in issue, may be proved by direct evidence or may be inferred from all the circumstances in case.

14. Malicious prosecution ⇐23, 32

In malicious prosecution action, malice may, but need not necessarily, be inferred from want of probable cause, but want of probable cause may not be inferred from the most express malice.

15. Malicious prosecution ⇐18(7)

Party is not required to exhaust all sources of information bearing on facts which come to his knowledge in order to have "probable cause", as it relates to malicious prosecution.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Probable Cause".

16. Malicious prosecution ⇐18(6)

Knowledge of facts which may justify alleged malicious prosecution is that which is possessed at time of its occurrence, not that which is subsequently acquired.

In action to recover damages for malicious prosecution brought by customer against corporate owner of supermarket and several of its employees as result of complaint filed against customer for obtaining money by false pretenses, evidence did not establish want of probable cause on part of secretary of corporation and manager of store, where there was no evidence that either of them had not acted in good faith and under honest belief that crime had been committed and that it had been committed by plaintiff, and there were circumstances made known to them sufficiently strong to warrant reasonable men in believing that charges were true.

In action for malicious prosecution brought by customer against corporate owner of supermarket and several of its employees as result of complaint filed against customer for having obtained money by false pretenses, whether store's cashier had probable cause in accusing customer of the offense, was for jury.

19. Malicious prosecution ⇐27, 32

In malicious prosecution actions, malice may be inferred from want of probable cause, or it may be shown by proving lack of good faith on part of accuser.

If defendant in malicious prosecution action did not himself believe in guilt of accused, then circumstances relied upon by him in making accusation would not shield him.

In action to recover damages for malicious prosecution brought by customer against corporate owner of supermarket and several of its employees as result of complaint filed against customer for obtaining money by false pretenses, evidence was sufficient to warrant inference that supermarket's cashier did not in fact suspect plaintiff of guilt and that he was actuated by malice and sinister motives in making accusations against plaintiff.

Corporate defendant is liable for acts of its agents, acting within scope of their authority.

One may be civilly liable for malicious prosecution without personally signing complaint initiating criminal proceedings, if such person, without probable cause and with malice, instigates or procures prosecution.

Test of liability in action for malicious prosecution is whether defendant was actively instrumental or was proximate and efficient cause of maliciously putting law in motion.

In action for malicious prosecution brought by customer against corporate owner of supermarket and several of its employees as result of complaint filed against customer for obtaining money by false pretenses, jury questions were presented as to whether defendants had made full and fair disclosure of all facts to deputy city prosecutor and as to whether such prosecutor had given any advice.

Advice of counsel is not defense to action for malicious prosecution if it appears that defendant did not believe that accused was guilty.

27. Malicious prosecution ⇐42

In action for malicious prosecution brought by customer against corporate owner of supermarket, where it was conceded that cashier in supermarket who had accused customer of obtaining money by false pretenses was acting within scope of his authority, if jury concluded that such cashier did not believe customer was guilty, corporate owner of supermarket would be liable for acts of cashier unless it could establish that it acted on advice of counsel.

Russell H. Pray, Eric A. Rose, Long Beach, for appellants.

Clock, Waestman & Clock and E. W. Sheridan, all of Long Beach, for respondents.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal by plaintiffs from a judgment for defendants entered on a directed verdict in an action for damages for malicious prosecution. The claim is that the evidence was such as to require the submission of the cause to the jury.

For a number of years prior to February 21, 1948, Dollar Markets, a corporation, had operated a supermarket in Long Beach. The market was of the self-service type, with two cash registers near the entrance. Plaintiff, a housewife, with her husband and three children, had lived adjacent to the market for three and a half years. She had done substantially all of her shopping for groceries and related items at the market. During that time she had visited the market nearly every day and had known its employees, Mr. Mead, the manager, and Mr. Main, the cashier. Mr. Mead had given her credit when a check from her husband, who was overseas, was delayed. She had frequently cashed checks for $55.20 which came to her husband for disability received in World War II. In each instance the check was O.K'd by the manager and then presented to the cashier for payment.

On February 21, 1948, plaintiff went to the market to buy two cans of milk. She entered the rear of the store, could not find the brand of milk she was seeking, asked the manager, defendant Mead, when he expected a shipment of a particular brand, and ordered a carton. She took two cans of milk, went to the cashier, defendant Main, waited in line and paid for the milk. Main and a young boy, a stacker, were at the register. She then returned home.

About 10 or 15 minutes later Mead called on her at her home and asked her if she had told Main "that Mr. Mead held a check of mine and Mr. Main was supposed to have paid me $66.40. Q. And what did you tell him? A. I told him no, I had not." Mead left. About 15 minutes later Mead and Main called on plaintiff. Mead asked Main if plaintiff "was the one he had given the money to and he said yes.

"Q. Did he say how much? A. $66.00.

"Q. $66.00 or $66.40? A. $66.40.

"Q. What else was said during the conversation? A. I told him he hadn't given it to me. Mr. Main said he had; He said he would be short $66.40 when he checked the cash register that night. * * *

"Q. Did he then say anything about any other monies? A. Oh, yes, I was twenty-five short last Saturday and I think you got that too. * * *

"Q. What was said after that? A. I denied I had gotten it, and they claimed

I had, so then Mr. Mead stated there wouldn't be anything more said about it, they would check further."

Plaintiff did not talk to either of them again.

Main testified he was the cashier on February 21, 1948; he had known plaintiff as a regular customer for some time; she was in the store on the average of once a day; he accepted about 20 checks on the morning of February 21. In cashing a check he looked at it "for the O.K., placed it on the cash register where the currency is placed, handed the money, turned the check over, stamped with the bank stamp, put it underneath the register." On February 14, plaintiff "came through the check line I am sure and whether she bought anything or not I am not sure, and she asked Dow [Mead] to O.K. a check on the bank for $25.00—she asked me for the $25.00 and Dow had the check in the back, O.K., and would bring it up in a few minutes and I handed her the money and she said 'Thank you', and left and I went on checking. * * * and I never thought another word about it. I forgot it." Plaintiff had not asked him for money like that before. He told Mead about it on the 21st. On the 21st "I asked her [plaintiff] if there was anything that I could do for her and she said, 'I'd like to get these two cans of milk and $66.40.' I says, 'For what?' She says, 'Dow has my check in the back room, and has okayed it and will bring it up in a few minutes.' * * * I says, 'All right,' so I hands her $66.40 and she thanks me"; he asked Mead for the check in a minute or two; he told the details of these occurrences to Mead, Dyer, general manager of Dollar Markets, and Inspector Carroll of the Long Beach Police Department.

James Lynch testified that on February 21st he was employed by Dollar Markets as "sack boy," working alongside Main. Plaintiff came up on the wrong side of the cash register, talked to Main, and he (Main) gave her some money in large bills—fives and tens. He told Mead, Dyer and Inspector Carroll about the incident.

On February 23, 1948, defendant Dyer advised defendant Gillingham, secretary and treasurer of Dollar Markets, of the alleged incident of February 21. Gillingham then checked the manager's report of the store for February 21 to verify the shortage that Dyer had reported to him. The report showed a shortage in both cash registers of $66.61. He then examined the manager's report of February 14. It showed a shortage of about $24.32 in both cash registers. He then questioned Dyer regarding the facts. On February 21 either Mead or Dyer called the Long Beach Police Department, and Inspector Carroll was sent to the market to make an investigation. Gillingham did not do anything further about the matter until he was asked by Inspector Carroll on February 24 to come to his office. Gillingham, accompanied by Dyer, went to the inspector's office. On the way Gillingham and Dyer discussed the matter. At the inspector's office they met Mead. Gillingham, Dyer and Mead presented the facts to the inspector. In their presence the inspector dictated a report of the transaction from notes he had in his possession and the statements of Dyer and Mead. Main, the cashier, was not present. They then went to the office of Milton Emlein, Deputy City Prosecutor of the City of Long Beach. The inspector first talked to the prosecutor alone. The others were then called in and with the inspector talked to the prosecutor from 15 minutes to half an hour. The prosecutor questioned the inspector regarding facts other than those contained in his report, and questioned Dyer about the facts. Dyer told him he had conducted a thorough investigation and what it had revealed. The prosecutor questioned Mead about the facts. Gillingham then signed the complaint. He did not talk to the prosecutor at all. He testified that at that time he believed plaintiff was guilty.

Mr. Emlein testified that at the conclusion of the questioning he asked the group if they desired a complaint; if so, he would issue it. Someone indicated that they did. Gillingham was selected because of his position with the company. When asked if he advised the issuance of a complaint, Mr. Emlein stated that he approved its issuance. When asked if he told those present there was probable cause, he said he could not recall. He testified that at the time he issued the complaint he was convinced there was probable cause.

Gillingham signed and swore to a complaint that day, charging plaintiff in two counts with theft of $25 from Dollar Markets on February 14, 1948, and $66.40 on February 21, 1948. Plaintiff was arrested the same day, taken to the Long Beach jail, booked, photographed, fingerprinted, and placed in a tank with other prisoners. About half an hour later she was arraigned, pleaded not guilty; the trial was set for March 2, and she was released on her own recognizance. The trial was continued to March 16.

On March 16, 1948, on motion of Mr. Emlein, the complaint was dismissed on the following signed request of Gillingham: "Gerald Gillingham being the complaining witness therein, states that further investigation of the facts upon which the complaint was issued shows that there was an insufficient basis upon which to press the charges contained in said complaint."

Gillingham testified that Main gave the information he had about the alleged thefts to Mead. Mead gave it to Dyer and Dyer gave it to him (Gillingham). He had no personal knowledge of the case. He made no investigation other than talking to Dyer and sitting in at the meetings with Inspector Carroll and the deputy city prosecutor. He had no actual belief in the matter; it was Dyer's judgment. He did not talk to Main before signing the complaint.

Dyer, Main and Mead each testified that on February 24, 1948, he believed plaintiff was guilty.

[2] Respondents concede that the evidence establishes that the criminal proceeding was terminated in favor of plaintiff. They also concede that the individual defendants were acting within the scope of their authority as employees of Dollar Markets. The question is whether, considering only the evidence most favorable to plaintiff together with every inference which reasonably can be drawn and every presumption which fairly can be deemed to arise therefrom in her favor, there is any evidence of want of probable cause and of malice.

[3-6] Probable cause is "a suspicion founded upon circumstances sufficiently strong to warrant a reasonable man in the belief that the charge is true." Lee v. Levison, 173 Cal. 166, 169, 159 P. 438; Hudson v. Zumwalt, 64 Cal.App.2d 866, 872, 149 P.2d 457; Sebastian v. Crowley, 38 Cal.App.2d 194, 202, 101 P.2d 120. The burden was on plaintiff to prove that a defendant did not have reasonable grounds for believing that the facts alleged in the complaint were true in order to recover compensatory damages against that defendant. Brock v. Southern Pacific Co., 86 Cal.App.2d 182, 194, 195 P.2d 66; Sebastian v. Crowley, 38 Cal.App.2d 194, 203, 101 P.2d 120. Probable cause does not depend upon the possession of facts which satisfactorily prove the guilt of an accused person. It has reference to the common standard of human judgment and conduct. It exists if one is possessed of information or facts which are sufficient to cause a reasonable person to honestly believe the charge is true. Jensen v. Leonard, 82 Cal.App.2d 340, 351, 186 P.2d 206; Moore v. Durrer, 127 Cal. App. 759, 765, 16 P.2d 676. Proof of the favorable termination of the criminal proceeding does not create a conflict on the issue of probable cause. Moore v. Durrer, 127 Cal.App. 759, 765, 16 P.2d 676. Proof that no crime was committed or that the accused is innocent does not negative the existence of probable cause.

[7-9] When the evidence bearing on the question of probable cause is in conflict, it is the province of the jury to determine whether facts exist which will warrant or reject an inference of probable cause. However, if there is no dispute concerning the existence of the facts relied on to show want of probable cause, the trial judge must then determine, as a matter of law, whether such undisputed facts do, or do not, warrant an inference of want of probable cause. If there is no evidence whatever from which the jury might have inferred that the defendants did not in fact believe that a crime had been committed and that plaintiff had committed it, the question of defendants' belief is to be determined by the court on the basis of what, under the circumstances, was sufficient to cause a reasonable man to entertain a suspicion that the crime had been committed and that plaintiff had committed it. Franzen v. Shenk, 192 Cal. 572, 578, 581, 582, 221 P. 932; Haydel v. Morton, 8 Cal.App.2d 730, 733, 48 P.2d 709.

[10-14] In an action for malicious prosecution, malice means actuated by a wrongful motive, i. e., the party must have had in mind some evil or sinister purpose. Pickering v. Havens, 70 Cal.App. 381, 388, 233 P. 346. Appellant says that malice is "an absence of an honest and sincere belief by the defendants that the criminal prosecution of plaintiff, Virginia Centers, was justified." It does not necessarily infer the presence of anger or vindictiveness. It is sufficient if it appear that the former suit was commenced in bad faith to vex, annoy or wrong the adverse party. Hudson v. Zumwalt, 64 Cal.App.2d 866, 872, 149 P.2d 457. The plaintiff is not required to prove that the prosecutor was inspired by personal hostility, a grudge, or ill will. Singleton v. Singleton, 68 Cal.App.2d 681, 696, 157 P.2d 886. Malice must be proven against a particular defendant in order to justify an award of compensatory damages against that defendant. Thomson v. Catalina, 205 Cal. 402, 405, 271 P. 198, 62 A.L.R. 235. Like any other fact in issue, malice may be proved by direct evidence or may be inferred from all the circumstances in the case. It may, but need not necessarily, be inferred from want of probable cause; but want of probable cause may not be inferred from the most express malice. Burke v. Watts, 188 Cal. 118, 126, 204 P. 578; Singleton v. Singleton, 68 Cal.App.2d 681, 690, 696, 157 P.2d 886; Davidson v. De Sousa, 20 Cal.App.2d 311, 314, 66 P.2d 740.

There is no conflict in the evidence relating to the facts from which the existence or want of probable cause for the prosecution of the criminal charge must be determined as to the defendants Gillingham and Mead. There was no evidence that either of them did not act in good faith and under an honest belief that the crime had been committed and that it had been committed by plaintiff. There were circumstances made known to them sufficiently strong to warrant a reasonable man to believe the charge was true.

[15] Appellants argue that because Gillingham testified that when he went to the city prosecutor's office he had formed no actual belief in the matter, and because he did not exhaust all sources of information, he did not in fact believe the truth of the charge. The record is not clear as to just what time counsel was referring when he asked the witness "You had formed no actual belief in the matter at all, had you?" and the witness answered, "No"; but it would appear that it was before the meeting in the city prosecutor's office. The witness testified that he relied on Dyer's judgment; he had complete confidence that Dyer and Mead would tell him all the facts, he believed they told him everything they knew, and at the time he signed the complaint he believed plaintiff was guilty; he based his belief on all the facts that had been gathered and presented from the time Dyer first informed him of the case on February 23, the conversation and reports read in the inspector's office, and the review of the facts presented in the inspector's report to the prosecutor and his (the prosecutor's) recommendation that a complaint be issued. A party is not required to exhaust all sources of information bearing on the facts which have come to his knowledge in order to have probable cause. Brock v. Southern Pacific Co., 86 Cal.App.2d 182, 199, 195 P. 2d 66.

[16, 17] Appellants also argue that want of probable cause appears because Gillingham did not, between the time the complaint was signed and the date the proceeding was dismissed, make any further investigation of the case. The knowledge of facts which may justify the alleged malicious prosecution is that which is possessed at the time of its occurrence; not that which is subsequently acquired. Hudson v. Zumwalt, 64 Cal.App.2d 866, 872, 149 P.2d 457; Perry v. Washington National Ins. Co., 14 Cal. App.2d 609, 618, 58 P.2d 701, 59 P.2d 158. The court properly determined, as a matter of law, that the evidence did not establish want of probable cause on the part of the defendants Gillingham and Mead. This conclusion relieves us of the necessity of discussing the question of malice attributed to these defendants.

[18] Defendant Main, the cashier, told Mead, and testified, that on February 14 plaintiff obtained $25 and on February 21, $66.40, by false pretenses. Plaintiff, at all times, and in her testimony, denied the statements of Main in toto and denied that she received the money. She related the incidents which occurred on her visits to the market in detail. If plaintiff's testimony was true, the jury would have been justified in inferring that Main's statements to Mead were necessarily and knowingly false. Robinson v. McKnight, 103 Cal.App. 718, 729, 284 P. 1056. If Main's statements to Mead were false, there was no theft and hence no probable cause on the part of Main for plaintiff's arrest. The evidence was thus in conflict as to whether there was want of probable cause on the part of Main. If there is evidence with respect to the actual belief of the defendant sufficient to warrant a conclusion that he did not in fact believe the truth of the charge, the question of probable cause to that extent involves a question of fact to be submitted to the jury. Sutherland v. Palme, 93 Cal.App.2d 307, 314, 208 P.2d 1035; Gooding v. McAlister, 114 Cal. App. 284, 292, 299 P. 774. There was evidence sufficient to support the conclusion that Main did not in fact suspect plaintiff of guilt and that he was actuated by sinister motives.

[19-21] Malice on the part of Main may be inferred from want of probable cause. It may be shown by proof of lack of good faith on the part of an accuser. Baker v. Gawthorne, 82 Cal.App.2d 496, 500, 186 P.2d 981. If a defendant did not himself believe in the guilt of the accused, then the circumstances relied on will not shield him. Franzen v. Shenk, 192 Cal. 572, 579, 221 P. 932. He must have believed that his charge was true. There was other evidence of malice on the part of Main. On several occasions after the arrest of plantiff, Main asked her twelve year old boy why his mother did not come and do some more shoplifting. Gillingham testified that at the times involved Dollar Markets had a rule prohibiting the cashier from cashing checks unless O.K'd by someone in authority; that the transactions of February 14 and 21, as told to him, were highly irregular and in violation of the rules; and that Main had no authority to give money from the cash register without depositing a check or other evidence of payment in the register. The evidence was sufficient to warrant the inference that Main was actuated by malice.

[22, 23] As we have said, respondents concede that Main was the agent of the corporate defendant and that his activities were within the scope of his authority in acting for and on behalf of the corporation. The corporate defendant is liable for the acts of its agents acting within the scope of their authority. Pierre v. Great Atlantic, etc., Tea Co., 4 Cal.App.2d 468, 471, 40 P.2d 909; Diggs v. Arnold Bros., Inc., 132 Cal.App. 518, 524, 23 P.2d 71. Main did not sign the complaint. However, he put in motion the forces which resulted in the charge. He related his story to Mead and to the inspector. He assisted, participated in, and cooperated in causing the prosecution. One may be civilly liable for malicious prosecution without personally signing the complaint initiating the criminal proceeding. If a person, without probable cause and with malice, instigates or procures the prosecution, he is liable. The rule is stated in Blancett v. Burr, 100 Cal.App. 61, 62, 279 P. 668: "The general rule appears to be that 'one who procures a third person to institute a malicious prosecution is liable in damages to the party injured to the same extent as if he had instituted the proceeding himself * * ' and 'that it is not necessary that the complaint or information on which the prosecution is based should have been signed by the person sought to be held liable in order to establish his liability in an action for malicious prosecution. It is enough if he was instrumental in setting the law in motion and caused the prosecution to proceed.' Ann.Cas. 1918A, pages 485, 486, where authorities, including Kinsey v. Wallace, 36 Cal. 462, 480, are cited. To practically the same effect is the declaration of the law in 38 Corpus Juris, 395, where reference is also had to many authorities, and wherein it is stated that the test of liability in an action for malicious prosecution is whether the defendant was actively instrumental or was the proximate and efficient cause of maliciously putting the law in motion. A case which is nearly parallel in its facts with the instant case is that of Holden v. Merritt, 92 Iowa 707, 61 N.W. 390. Therein it appears that the defendant furnished an inspector of the United States government with facts on which the inspector filed an information on which the plaintiff was arrested. The defendant insisted that there was no evidence that he had instigated or procured the prosecution. With reference thereto, in part, the court said: ' * * It need not be shown that the defendant ordered or directed the warrant or process to issue, or that he participated in its execution. If he, on his own motion, gave information or made complaint to the officers of the law in such a manner as that, in the regular and ordinary course of events, an arrest must be made, or will probably follow, this is sufficient to warrant the jury in finding him the real prosecutor. (Citing authorities.)'"

[24-27] Defendants assert that the defense of advice of counsel was established by uncontroverted evidence. There is no evidence that Main was advised by counsel. The evidence did not establish that Dollar Markets acted, through its officer Gillingham, on the advice of counsel. Advice of counsel can only be established by proving the facts that were stated by a defendant to counsel. Singleton v. Singleton, 68 Cal. App.2d 681, 695, 157 P.2d 886. Dollar Markets did not prove the facts that were stated to the prosecutor. The evidence was that the report of Inspector Carroll and other facts—the nature of which was not disclosed—were presented to the prosecutor. One cannot say from the record what facts were stated to him. Whether a full and fair disclosure of all the facts was made to Mr. Emlein was a question of fact to be determined by the jury. Miller v. Lee, 66 Cal.App.2d 778, 784, 153 P.2d 190. And whether Mr. Emlein gave any advice was a question of fact for the jury. Further, advice of counsel is not a defense to an action for malicious prosecution if it appears that the defendant did not believe the accused was guilty. Franzen v. Shenk, 192 Cal. 572, 580, 221 P. 932. As we have said, the jury could have concluded that Main did not believe plaintiff was guilty; and Dollar Markets is liable for the acts of Main, unless it can establish that it acted on the advice of counsel.

One of the defendants named in the complaint was Thomas I. Lingo. Appellant does not point to any evidence connecting this defendant with the prosecution of plaintiff, and we have found none.

The judgment in favor of defendants Gillingham, Mead and Lingo is affirmed. The judgment in favor of defendants Main and Dollar Markets, a corporation, is reversed.

MEADOWS v. EMETT & CHANDLER et al.

Civ. 14501.

District Court of Appeal, First District. Division 2, California.

Sept. 19, 1950.

Hearing Denied Nov. 16, 1950.

George Donald Meadows brought an action against E. L. Emett and Norman Chandler, individually and as a copartnership doing business under the firm name and style of Emett & Chandler, to recover damages for breach of a contract to pay money. The defendants, who were residents of Los Angeles County, moved to change the place of trial to Los Angeles. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Daniel R. Shoemaker, J., denied the motion to change venue, and the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, P. J., held that the complaint was not sufficient to create a prima facie case entitling plaintiff to maintain an action in a county other than that of the residence of the defendants.

Reversed with directions.

Venue ⇐72

Where motion for change of venue is made, it must clearly appear from complaint alone that plaintiff is entitled to have cause tried in county other than that in which defendant resides, and in determining whether plaintiff is so entitled all uncertainties will be resolved against complaint and all allegations will be strictly construed against pleader.

2. Pleading ⇐45

Mere conclusions or indefinite statements of pleader will not suffice to create prima facie case entitling pleader to maintain action in county other than that of residence of defendant.

3. Pleading ⇐45

In action to recover for breach of contract by corporation, brought in county where contract was made by corporation against individual defendants transacting business as copartners, on alter ego theory, complaint alleging that defendants were owners of all capital stock of corporation at time contract was made and that corporation was merely medium through which defendants transacted business as copartners fell short of creating prima facie case entitling plaintiff to maintain action at county other than that of residence of defendants.

Courts will not disregard corporate entity unless it is necessary in order to prevent fraud or injustice, and allegation that corporation is alter ego of individual stockholders is insufficient to justify court in disregarding corporate entity in absence of allegations of facts from which it appears that justice cannot otherwise be accomplished.

In order to rely on alter ego theory, it must be alleged and proved that stockholders and corporate entity are business conduits and alter ego of one another, and that to recognize their separate entities would aid consummation of wrong, and mere ownership of all stock and control and management of corporation by one or two individuals is not of itself sufficient to cause courts to disregard corporate entity.

6. Venue ⇐22(1)

Where contract was made in San Francisco between corporation and plaintiff, and, subsequent to dissolution of corporation, agent brought action in San Francisco, on alter ego theory, against individuals who formerly owned corporation, in absence of allegation that recognition of corporate entity would sanction fraud or promote injustice, individual defendants could not be deprived of their statutory right to be tried in Los Angeles where they resided. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 396b, 397, subd. 1.

Cosgrove, Cramer, Diether & Rindge, Los Angeles, Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, San Francisco, for appellants.

William E. Ferriter, James C. Purcell, San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

The appeal involves the question of venue. Plaintiff sued in the City and County of San Francisco for an alleged breach of contract to pay money. Defendants are all residents of the county of Los Angeles. They moved to change the place of trial to Los Angeles under sections 396b and 397, subd. 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The defendants filed affidavits and amended affidavits in support of their motion. No counter affidavits were filed. The appeal is taken from the order denying the motion to change the venue.

The complaint alleges that in 1939 plaintiff entered into a contract in San Francisco with a corporation located in Los Angeles for the payment of commissions on insurance procured by plaintiff for the corporation; that in 1943 the corporation dissolved and assigned all its assets to the defendant partnership; that on that date said "co-partnership assumed all of the debts of the said corporation."

On this appeal plaintiff argues that the affidavits of defendants were insufficient to support the motion. They show that in 1946 plaintiff commenced a similar suit on the contract of 1939 against the partnership, and later a similar action against the corporation and against the present defendants individually. The two actions were tried together and defendants had judgment of non-suit. On appeal the judgment was affirmed, 86 Cal.App.2d 1, 193 P.2d 785, the appellate court holding that plaintiff's proof failed to show any right of recovery and that the alleged contract was not shown to have existed as a matter of fact. The defendants contend that their liability under the alleged contract of 1939 was finally determined in the prior judgment and that the present proceedings must be, and can only be, one on the contract of 1943 whereby they assumed all the obligations of the dissolved corporation. The respondent contends that he is suing solely on the alleged contract of 1939 and argues that he may be deemed to rely on the alter ego theory to hold the individual defendants liable for the corporation's contract.

The appellants rely on the allegations of the complaint setting forth a new contract of assumption of the corporate debts which was made in Los Angeles County when the corporation was dissolved. They point out that the motion must be heard and decided on the plaintiff's complaint without amendment. They point out that the complaint alleges that the contract sued on was made with the corporation which is not a party defendant. If respondent may contend that he is now suing on the alter ego theory the essential facts supporting that theory must be pleaded and it is of no avail to respondent on this appeal that the complaint might be amended to plead a good cause of action.

[1, 2] Assuming that the action on the corporate debt was commenced against the individual defendants in good faith the trial court was limited, on the motion for change of venue, to the cause pleaded in the complaint and it must appear clearly from the complaint alone that plaintiff is entitled to have the cause tried in a county other than that in which the defendant resides. In determining this question all uncertainties will be resolved against the complaint and the allegations will be strictly construed against the pleader. Neet v. Holmes, 19 Cal.2d 605, 613, 122 P.2d 557; Sheeley v. Jones, 192 Cal. 256, 219 P. 744; Rench v. Harris, 76 Cal.App.2d 113, 117, 172 P.2d 576. "[M]ere conclusions or indefinite statements of a pleader will not suffice to create a prima facie case entitling one to maintain an action at a county other than that of the residence of the defendant." Gas Appliance Sales Co. v. W. B. Bastian Mfg. Co., 87 Cal.App. 301, 309, 262 P. 452, 456; 25 Cal.Jur. p. 910.

There are just two theories on which plaintiff may maintain the action—first, that when the corporation was dissolved and the defendants assumed all its obligations a new contract of assumption arose binding the individual defendants to pay plaintiff's claim against the corporation; second, that at the time of the alleged contract of 1939 with the corporation the two defendants were acting as the alter ego of the corporation as that term has been defined in the authorities herein cited.

Respondent vigorously denies that he is suing on the first theory and this is understandable since to admit it would compel a change of the place of trial to Los Angeles where both defendants reside and where the contract of assumption was made.

[3-5] He insists that he is suing on the second theory alone and we will examine the complaint for the purpose of determining whether that theory can be maintained. The only allegations which might form the basis of the alter ego theory are: "That the defendants, E. L. Emett and Norman Chandler, were on the said 9th day of February, 1939, and at all times thereafter until the dissolution of said corporation as aforesaid, the owners of all capital stock of said corporation, and that the said corporation was merely a medium through which said defendants, E. L. Emett and Norman Chandler, transacted business as copartners."

These allegations fall far short of what is required before a defendant can be denied his statutory rights as to the place of trial. The rule is stated in Norins Realty Co. v. Consol. A. & T. G. Co., 80 Cal.App.2d 879, 883, 182 P.2d 593, 596, where the court said: "The allegation that a corporation is the alter ego of the individual stockholders is insufficient to justify the court in disregarding the corporate entity in the absence of allegations of facts from which it appears that justice cannot otherwise be accomplished. California L. & S. Supplies v. Schultz, 105 Cal.App. 471, 287 P. 980. The court will not disregard the corporate entity unless it is necessary in order to prevent fraud or injustice. 6A Cal.Jur. p. 76. Mere ownership of all the stock and control and management of a corporation by one or two individuals is not of itself sufficient to cause the courts to disregard the corporate entity. Hollywood Cleaning & P. Co. v. Hollywood L. Service, 217 Cal. 124, 129, 17 P.2d 709; Erkenbrecher v. Grant, 187 Cal. 7, 200 P. 641."

The same rule is followed in Dos Pueblos Ranch and Imp. Co. v. Ellis, 8 Cal.2d 617, 621, 67 P.2d 340, 342, citing with approval Erkenbrecher v. Grant, 187 Cal. 7, 200 P. 641, where the further observation was made that in order to rely on this theory it must be alleged and proved that the stockholders and the corporate entity "'are the "business conduits and alter ego of one another," and that to recognize their separate entities would aid the consummation of a wrong.'"

[6] The rule is firmly settled that no reliance can be had on this theory in the absence of pleading that recognition of the corporate entity would sanction a fraud or promote injustice. Hollywood Cleaning & P. Co. v. Hollywood L. Service, 217 Cal. 124, 129, 17 P.2d 709; Erkenbrecher v. Grant, supra, 187 Cal. page 11, 200 P. 641; Continental Securities, etc., Co. v. Rawson, 208 Cal. 228, 238, 280 P. 954; Wiseman v. Sierra Highland Min. Co., 17 Cal.2d 690, 697, 111 P.2d 646. If a plaintiff must plead those factors in order to state a cause of action against individual defendants it is obvious that he must plead them in order to take from such defendants their statutory right of trial in the county of their residence.

The judgment is reversed with directions to grant the motion.

DOOLING, Justice.

I concur. The main opinion does not in express terms meet the respondent's argument that there was no sufficient affidavit of merits. An affidavit of merits was originally filed which omitted the classic phrase "that he has stated all of the facts of the case" to his counsel (25 Cal.Jur. 901–902) and substituted therefor the statement: "Said counsel is more familiar with the facts of this case than is affiant." An amendment to this affidavit was filed in which it is expressly stated "(t)hat prior to the execution of said affidavit (the original affidavit of merits) * * * I had fully and fairly stated the case and all the facts thereof of the above entitled action" to counsel. Taking the affidavit as amended it is certainly sufficient. Counsel for respondent argues "It is clear * * * that if counsel is more familiar with the facts than the client, the latter does not know all of the facts and could not possibly state all of the facts to counsel." The argument is hypertechnical. No litigant can state more than he knows and the classic recital of the statement of "all of the facts of the case" to counsel is necessarily subject to that implied qualification. Here we have also the additional fact recited that on the former appeal in an action grounded on the same basic claim a judgment of non-suit was affirmed, "(a)nd when the facts of the case are averred, the question of whether or not the defendant has a meritorious defense may be left for the consideration of the court." 25 Cal. Jur. 901; Westover v. Bridgford, 25 Cal. App. 548, 144 P. 313; Carter v. Broder, 50 Cal.App. 63, 194 P. 527.

IMPERIAL-YUMA PRODUCTION CREDIT ASS'N v. SHIELDS et ux.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Sept. 21, 1950.

Hearing Denied Nov. 20, 1950.

Action by Imperial-Yuma Production Credit Association, a corporation, against E. S. Shields and Mary Shields, on a note, wherein defendants filed a counterclaim against the balance due. The Superior Court, Imperial County, L. J. Mouser, J., entered judgment for plaintiffs and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, Acting P. J., held that the evidence failed to establish that the agent of cattle company was the agent of the association or that the association had ever authorized the cattle company agent to pasture cattle on the defendants' land.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Associations ⇐20(5)

In association's action on note, where defendants filed counterclaim for damages caused by livestock pastured on their land by alleged agent of association, evidence supported ruling of trial court that defendants had failed to show liability on part of association for acts of agent of cattle company that had leased property for pasturage purposes. Civ. Code, §§ 1589, 2310.

2. Appeal and error ⇐205

Where defendant made no offer of proof or disclosure as to nature of evidence excluded, appellate court could not determine whether exclusion was error.

3. Associations ⇐18

Declaration, if any, by agent of cattle company that he might be an agent for, or director of, association, made out of presence of association and without its knowledge, would not establish fact that agent of cattle company was agent of association. Civ. Code, §§ 1589, 2310.

4. Appeal and error ⇐1056(1)

In association's action on note, where defendants filed counterclaim for damage caused by livestock pastured on their land by alleged agent of association, and defendants had leased crop to a cattle company for pasturage purposes, exclusion from evidence of alleged conversation between a defendant and association employee after damage was discovered, wherein defendant had accused association of permitting agent of cattle company to pasture off defendants' crop, and employee had in effect denied such accusation, was not prejudicial error.

5. Associations ⇐19

Where assignment of crop proceeds executed by defendants provided that payments under pasturing agreement could be made by cattle company to association, receipt by association of $298.86 from livestock owner and their crediting of such amount to defendants, did not constitute a ratification or confirmation of cattle company agent's act, as regards liability for damage to crops by livestock. Civ. Code, §§ 1589, 2310.

GRIFFIN, Acting Presiding Justice.

This is the third appeal in the instant action. For a more complete statement of the facts see Imperial-Yuma Production Credit Association, a corporation, v. Shields, 88 Cal.App.2d 328, 198 P.2d 951; and Id., 74 Cal.App.2d 932, 169 P.2d 671. On the third trial, settlement was made by a stipulation that defendants were entitled to a credit of $1,685.97 by reason of wheat delivered by defendants but for which they were not credited on the note. The issues were then narrowed down to the question of whether defendants were entitled to an offset or counterclaim against the balance of $1,508.93 due on the note set forth in plaintiff's cause of action. The claim was for damages alleged to have been suffered by defendants as a result of the destruction of a 120-acre grain crop. The cross-complaint alleges, in this respect, that at plaintiff's request, defendants planted a crop of barley, with the understanding that at the proper stage of growth it was to be pastured; that at that stage defendants informed plaintiff and that plaintiff failed to so pasture the crop and that thereafter, when it became too late to so pasture it, defendants informed plaintiff that they did not desire to pasture it at all; that nevertheless, during defendants' absence, plaintiff pastured the 120 acres and the crop was consumed by plaintiff's livestock; that for such pasturing plaintiff credited defendants with $298.86 and no more; that had the barley crop not been pastured at that time and allowed to produce a crop of grain, the reasonable net value would have been $3,500; and that by reason thereof defendants were injured in the sum of $3,201.14, after allowing credit for $298.86 already paid. Plaintiff denied that it instigated or requested the planting of the crop or that plaintiff had anything to do with the planting or pasturing of it, and denied that defendants were entitled to any credit under the alleged claim.

The issues are presented on an agreed statement of facts and the testimony of defendant E. S. Shields. In the agreed statement of facts it is stated that under the pleadings and evidence there remained but one item before the court, i. e., that of the alleged destruction of the crop and the liability of plaintiff to defendants for the damages suffered, if any. The renewal note, the loan acceptance, the crop mortgage, and the statement of account showing payments credited, were received in evidence without objection. The court sustained objections to certain questions propounded to the witness Shields which are the subject of contention on this appeal.

Shields testified that he owned 120 acres of land and on February 26, 1940, he and his wife signed a crop and chattel mortgage covering crops on this and other acreage for the years 1940, 1941 and 1942, in addition to considerable farm machinery, tools, etc. as security for the payment of the renewal note sued upon. This mortgage was received in evidence.

Apparently defendant Shields planted the acreage to grain and subsequently leased it for pasturage purposes to the San Pasqual Land & Cattle Company, which operated through one A. Kalin. According to the assignment in evidence plaintiff association, on October 3, 1940, secured from Shields an assignment of all proceeds from the rental of pasturage and sale of crops grown on the acreage for the calendar year 1940-1941. This agreement was subsequently accepted by San Pasqual Land & Cattle Company. According to a receipt in evidence, on March 14, 1941, plaintiff gave defendant credit for $298.86 received from the cattle company for pasturage on 80 acres of land for the month of January. From the exhibits in evidence it does not appear that plaintiff association had any part in the transaction between defendants and the cattle company or had any control over the time or manner in which the acreage was to be pastured. According to a letter accompanying the assignment sent to defendants for signature, plaintiff asked that defendant sign and return it and asked that defendants inform plaintiff "the name of the purchaser of your pasture. We understand it is Mr. Al Kalin." The only evidence offered by defendants on that subject was the testimony of Mr. Shields. He stated that he was farming about 600 acres of land in 1940; that he executed the note and assignment in evidence; that he had some conversation with plaintiff relative to the crops that were to be planted and that it was to receive the returns from them during the year 1940. He then testified that in September, 1940, a field worker for plaintiff came to his ranch and made a list of all equipment available, and told defendants that unless the note was paid by them the company was going to sell all the equipment; that the field worker suggested defendants see Mr. Kalin, who was one of the board of directors of the Production Credit Association, and that he might do something for them; that he went to see Mr. Kalin, who was a regional director in the Westmorland district of the Production Credit Association. As to what was said at that time, the court sustained an objection on the ground of hearsay. The witness then testified that about December 1, 1940, he called the "Production Credit" and informed Mr. Hixon that the grain field was ready for pasture and should be pastured right away; that he did not recall what the reply was; that about January 1, 1941, he called again and told him that the barley had gone too far now to be pastured; that while this defendant was out of the city he discovered the crop had been pastured around February 1, 1941; that he went to plaintiff's office and had a conversation with Mr. Hixon. The court then sustained an objection to a relation of that conversation and defendant Shields made an offer of proof which recites that Shields said to Hixon: "I see you have permitted Mr. Kalin to pasture off my barley crop"; that Mr. Hixon replied: "We turned that whole matter over to Mr. Kalin and you will have to see him. I have nothing further to say to you." The court then refused to hear evidence as to any claimed damage because of the defendants' failure to establish any basis for plaintiff's liability for such claimed damage, whereupon defendants rested. The court directed a verdict in favor of plaintiff for $1,508.93, being the balance due on the note and directed that it find against defendants on their cross-complaint. Such a verdict resulted. Judgment was entered accordingly. Defendants appealed and claim that the court erred in its ruling and in granting plaintiff's motion for a directed verdict.

It is argued by defendants that the evidence establishes that Kalin was at all times herein mentioned, in fact, the agent of plaintiff and that when it accepted the benefits, namely, $298.86 from the pasturage, there was a confirmation of the act of Kalin under secs. 1589 and 2310 of the Civil Code and the holding in Phillips v. Sanger Lumber Co., 130 Cal. 431, 434, 62 P. 749.

Plaintiff's contention is that there was no evidence that Kalin was agent for plaintiff in making the agreement with defendants for pasturing the acreage or in accepting or making payments to it, or that plaintiff ever directed Kalin to perform the obligation at all or in any particular manner; that accordingly, defendants showed no liability on the part of plaintiff for the alleged loss of the barley crop.

[1-3] The instruments in evidence, on their face, clearly support the trial court's ruling that there was a failure of proof on the part of defendants to show liability on the part of plaintiff association. There is nothing contained therein indicating that Kalin was plaintiff's agent in any of the transactions or was ever authorized by the corporation to pasture cattle on defendants' land in its behalf or that plaintiff ever directed Kalin to pasture it at the time indicated. The only possible evidence, which bears on this subject, is the testimony of defendant Mr. Shields. He stated that a field worker suggested to him that he see Mr. Kalin, who undeniably was the authorized agent of the San Pasqual Land & Cattle Company and who, as he stated, was also one of the board of directors of plaintiff association; that he told him "he might do something for him". This statement, if so made, did not prove that Kalin was plaintiff's agent or that Kalin was authorized to act for the association in any manner. Shields, subsequently, contacted Kalin, apparently at some other place than plaintiff's place of business, and made some arrangements with him about pasturing the cattle on defendants' premises. We are unable to determine whether the sustaining of the objection to the relation of that conversation was proper or improper, because there was no offer of proof or disclosure as to the nature of the conversation. If Kalin stated that he was dealing on behalf of the San Pasqual Land & Cattle Company in entering into the agreement for leasing the property for grazing purposes no agency in relation to plaintiff association could be established by such conversation. On the other hand, if Kalin made some declaration indicating that he might be an agent for or a director of plaintiff association, such declaration of the agent would not create ostensible authority and such declaration, made out of the presence and without the knowledge of the principal, was incompetent to establish either the fact of agency or the extent of the agent's authority. Union Construction Co. v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 163 Cal. 298, 125 P. 242; Curtin v. Ingle, 137 Cal. 95, 69 P. 836, 1013; Lambert v. Gerner, 142 Cal. 399, 76 P. 53; 1 Cal.Jur. p. 698, sec. 8; 1 Cal.Jur. p. 741, sec. 41. In the absence of an offer of proof it cannot be said that the trial court erred in its ruling in this respect.

[4] The only other conversation which defendants rely upon to prove such agency and authority is the purported conversation with Mr. Hixon, after the discovery of the claimed damage. Even if the evidence had been admitted under the offer of proof, the evidence of agency and authority of Kalin to act for the association in pasturing the cattle at the time indicated falls far short of establishing that fact. In effect it was but an accusation that plaintiff association did "permit" Kalin to pasture off defendants' barley crop. If Kalin was dealing through the San Pasqual Land & Cattle Company, as indicated, he would need no permission of plaintiff to the pasturing of the acreage and plaintiff would have no authority to tell him when he could or should pasture it. In effect, the reply of Mr. Hixon tends to negative the accusation and clearly indicates that Kalin was not acting for the plaintiff association. We see no prejudicial error in sustaining the objection. Defendants failed to, and declined to produce other proof on this subject.

[5] The remaining argument that the receipt of $298.86 from the San Pasqual Land & Cattle Company constituted a ratification or confirmation of the act of Kalin, under the law of agency, is without merit. The assignment of crop proceeds, duly executed by defendants, provides for such payments to be made to plaintiff association. In the absence of a contrary showing, the receipt of such funds by it could not be construed as a ratification of Kalin's act as agent.

Under the evidence produced or proffered, the ruling of the trial court in sustaining objections to the questions propounded and the granting of the motion for a directed verdict must be sustained.

PEOPLE v. PORTER.

Cr. 2657.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 20, 1950.

Lloyd Porter was convicted in the Superior Court in and for the County of Monterey, H. G. Jorgenson, J., for issuing a check without sufficient funds with intent to defraud and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that evidence sustained conviction.

1. False pretenses ⇐49(1)

Evidence sustained conviction for issuing a check without sufficient funds with intent to defraud. Pen.Code § 476a.

2. False pretenses ⇐14, 22

Offer of restitution or restitution itself is no defense to a prosecution for issuing a check without sufficient funds with intent to defraud nor is it necessary for prosecution to show that victim was actually defrauded. Pen.Code, § 476a.

3. Criminal law ⇐736(2)

In prosecution for issuing a check without sufficient funds with intent to defraud, where there was a conflict in testimony regarding whether defendant's statements on arrest were given freely and voluntarily, it was for jury to resolve conflict. Pen.Code, § 476a.

4. Criminal law ⇐491(1)

In prosecution for issuing a check without sufficient funds with intent to defraud, where police officer testified that he knew defendant's handwriting, action of trial court in asking witness whether handwriting on check was defendant's, was proper. Code Civ.Proc. § 1870, subd. 9.

5. Criminal law ⇐491(1)

In prosecution for issuing a check without sufficient funds with intent to defraud, refusal of trial court to appoint a handwriting expert to have check in question analyzed was not error.

6. Criminal law ⇐650

In prosecution for issuing a check without sufficient funds with intent to defraud, refusal of trial court to submit defendant to a lie detector test as requested was not error, since result of such a test would not have been admissible in evidence.

7. False pretenses ⇐52

In prosecution for issuing a check without sufficient funds with intent to defraud, an instruction charging that it was no defense to prosecution for making and uttering a fictitious check that after check was passed the defendant attempted to make restitution, was not error. Pen.Code, § 476a.

8. Criminal law ⇐656(3)

In prosecution for issuing a check without sufficient funds with intent to defraud, action of trial court cutting off defendant's answer to a question concerning a conversation defendant had with prosecuting attorney, regarding lowering of charge to misdemeanor, and telling defendant that he could further argue question to jury, showed no prejudice. Pen.Code, § 476a.

Lloyd Porter, in pro per.

Fred N. Howser, Atty. Gen. and C. A. Linn and William M. Bennett, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent.

BRAY, Justice.

Defendant, appearing in propria persona as he did in the trial court, appeals from a judgment, after jury verdict, convicting him of the crime of violating section 476a of the Penal Code (issuing check without sufficient funds, with intent to defraud), and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Contentions.

1. Insufficiency of the evidence. 2. Error in admission of defendant's statements. 3. Court mislead the jury concerning handwriting testimony. 4. Court refused to appoint a handwriting expert for defendant. 5. Court refused to permit defendant to take a lie detector test. 6. Error in instructions. 7. Prejudice of the court.

1. Evidence Sufficient.

Porter. Defendant showed Fratini his driver's license and stated that Archibald Porter was his brother, and that the latter owed him the amount of the check for work defendant had performed for him. Thereupon Fratini cashed the check. Fratini took the check to the Salinas branch and found there was no account of the maker there. Thereupon he deposited it in the Monterey County Bank. Four days later the check came back endorsed "Unable to locate." About a half an hour before defendant presented the check to Fratini a girl employee of the drug store gave defendant, at his request, two blank checks on the Bank of America. About two days later defendant cashed with the Valley Distributing Company in Salinas a check for $8 drawn on the same bank, in which Lloyd Porter was the payee and endorser and Archibald Porter was the maker. When he cashed this check defendant said that Archibald Porter was his uncle. This check came back "Refer to maker." An official of the Salinas branch of the Bank of America testified that an examination of the Bank's records for approximately ten years past revealed no account in either the name of Lloyd or Archibald Porter. On October 21, defendant was taken into custody and after questioning and unsuccessful attempts by the police to locate the brother, defendant admitted that he wrote the check and signed a written statement to that effect. Lieutenant of Police Roberts, who testified he knew defendant's handwriting, stated that the signature "Archibald Porter" was in defendant's handwriting. At the trial, defendant admitted cashing the check, but claimed that it was given him by his brother, and that in cashing it he had no intention of defrauding anyone, pointing out that he had given Fratini his true address, shown him his operator's license, and that, as he was on parole for a prior crime, he would not have taken the chance of committing a crime. He stated that he was unable to locate his brother. He also claimed that the oral and written statements made by him to the police were not freely or voluntarily given but given "under duress more or less." Several years back on a prior arrest he had received "some pretty rough treatment down there at the City Jail." This time the lieutenant of police shoved him on to a stool and told him when he signed the statement he could get up, and rather than take a beating defendant signed the statement. All of this was denied by the lieutenant and the other officers present. It is obvious that, again, the jury did not believe the defendant.

[2] At the time of his arrest, defendant offered to pay the check. The arresting officer did not communicate this fact to the complaining witness. Defendant contends that this is positive proof of his lack of intent. Of course, offer of restitution or restitution itself is no defense to a prosecution under section 476a of the Penal Code (People v. Weaver, 96 Cal.App. 1, 274 P. 361), nor for that matter is it necessary to show that the victim actually was defrauded. People v. Sherman, 100 Cal.App. 587, 280 P. 708. The effect of this offer to repay, as well as the other testimony of defendant on the question of intent, was a matter for jury determination. "In the case of People v. Walker, 15 Cal.App. 400, 114 P. 1009, the court said that the intent with which a check is 'deposited' was a question exclusively for the jury; and the intent with which a person does an act may be inferred from all the surrounding circumstances." Ex parte Shackleford, 64 Cal.App. 78, 81, 220 P. 430, 431.

2. Admission of Defendant's Statements.

[3] Defendant contends that they were not admissible because not freely and voluntarily made. As pointed out above, there was a conflict in the testimony and it was for the jury to resolve this conflict, which they did. The court fully instructed the jury on what constituted "free and voluntary" and even on the difference between admissions and confessions.

3. Testimony on Handwriting.

[4] On cross-examination of Lieutenant Roberts, defendant asked Roberts if he was a handwriting expert. Roberts replied, "I wouldn't say a handwriting expert, no." Then the following occurred:

"By Mr. Porter: Q. You wouldn't be qualified then to pass on that that was definitely the defendant's handwriting? A. I don't believe I was ever asked to do that.

By the Court: Q. But you saw his handwriting a great many times, is that right? A. Right.

Q. And in your opinion, it is his handwriting? A. Yes.

Q. And you told him so at the time? A. Right.

Q. Have you changed your mind about it at all? A. No."

Defendant contends that by this action the court told the jury that Roberts was a handwriting expert. The action of the court is not subject to such construction. The court was merely asking, as it had a right to do, for the opinion of one who had seen the handwriting many times. Section 1870, subdivision 9, of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "The opinion of a witness respecting the * * * handwriting of a person, when he has knowledge of the * * * handwriting" may be given. See People v. Bidleman, 104 Cal. 608, 38 P. 502.

Defendant now contends that Roberts' testimony as to his familiarity with defendant's handwriting was false. However, he did not question Roberts' statement at the trial and there is no evidence in the record upon which such claim of falsity can be based.

4. Refusal to Appoint Expert.

[5] Defendant, testifying in his own behalf, after stating that he had never denied cashing the check but had denied cashing it with intent to defraud, stated: "And what I would like more that anything else is to have the handwriting expert to examine that check and that hasn't been done by the prosecution." He then continued his testimony without pause. This is the only intimation at the trial that he desired a handwriting expert appointed. He now contends that this constituted a demand that the court have the check analyzed by a handwriting expert. It is plain that it did not constitute such a demand. Moreover, assuming it to be a demand, the language of the court in People v. Conte, 17 Cal.App. 771, 122 P. 450, 457, concerning a demand by defendant that a doctor who testified as to a rock used as a murder weapon but which no longer had visible blood stains on it, be required to analyze the rock for blood, is applicable here, 17 Cal.App. page 784, 122 P. page 455: "* * * we are familiar with no law requiring the court under such circumstances to order the services of an expert witness in behalf of a defendant to be compensated for out of the public funds."

5. Lie Detector.

[6] The same thing is true concerning a request made by defendant in chambers at the conclusion of the testimony that the court submit him to a lie detector test. In People v. Wochnick, 98 Cal.App.2d 124, 219 P.2d 70, after an exhaustive review of the cases on the subject of lie detector tests as evidence, the court said, 98 Cal. App.2d page 128, 219 P.2d page 72: "We are in accord with the views expressed in the foregoing cases that 'the systolic blood pressure deception test for determining the truthfulness of testimony has not yet gained such standing and scientific recognition as to justify the admission of expert testimony deduced from tests made under such theory.'" As the result of such a test would not have been admissible in evidence, the defendant could not have been benefitted by such a test, even if the court had the power to order it.

6. Instructions.

[7] Defendant states that the court "did unlawfully misinstruct the jury." The only specification of error is defendant's claim that the court instructed the jury on section 476 as well as 476a of the Penal Code. The court at no time instructed concerning the elements of the offense set forth in section 476 (uttering a fictitious check). It fully and fairly instructed on the elements of the offense set forth in section 476a, emphasizing the fact that for a conviction it was necessary that the intent to defraud be proved. The court did say, "It is no defense to the prosecution for making and uttering a fictitious check that after the check was passed, the defendant attempted to make restitution." (Emphasis added.) This sole reference to "fictitious check" did not constitute a charge under section 476, and if error, it was harmless, as it is obvious that the court was referring to the matter of restitution rather than to the type of crime. Defendant could be convicted of violating section 476a if the jury found the intent to defraud, whether it found that he actually wrote the maker's signature on the check, or passed it knowing that the maker (his brother) had no funds in or credit with the bank. We can find no error in the instructions.

Recent Developments.

Since defendant's conviction and this appeal was perfected, defendant has attempted to file with this court a letter which would indicate that the bank official was in error in testifying that defendant at no time had an account with the bank. This letter, of course, has no place in the record. Moreover, it is immaterial. It showed that defendant closed out his bank account on January 1, 1945. At the trial, defendant did not contend that he still had a bank account at the time he cashed the check. Moreover, he contended that the check was drawn by his brother on his brother's bank account. There was no such account.

7. Prejudice of the Court.

[8] Defendant contends that he was tried by a prejudiced court. The only specification concerns the following incident: Defendant, while testifying, stated to the prosecuting attorney, Mr. Barron, that the latter had offered to "drop this charge to a misdemeanor for a County Jail sentence. Was that true?" Barron replied, "That was on His Honor's suggestion I went over to see him." Then the following occurred:

"The Witness: Do you think for one minute that if I had of given that check there I would jeopardize myself to face 28 years which I could have got out for three or four months here maybe, or a year! Is that—does that sound reasonable?

"Mr. Barron: Your Honor—

"The Court: Well this is kind of a difficult situation.

"Mr. Barron: It is Your Honor.

"By the Court: Q. Of course, you knew, as a matter of fact, if you were convicted of a misdemeanor that your parole would be revoked and you would have to go back to prison, didn't you, when you made that statement that you wouldn't plead guilty? A. Yes, Your Honor, you want to remember that I could have plead guilty for that and when back on a minor violation, why, or just—

"The Court: Well, you have answered the question.

"The Witness: That—I have answered the question partly.

"The Court: You can argue that question to the jury. * * *"

Then Mr. Barron wanted to testify to the conversation he had with defendant. The court refused to permit him to do so. The action of the court shows no prejudice.

Sept. 29, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 26, 1950.

Original proceeding by J. E. Simpson against Benjamin S. Hite, Registrar of Voters of the County of Los Angeles, for a peremptory writ of mandate directing respondent to omit from the ballot a proposed initiative ordinance providing for repeal of resolutions of Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors which designated, and pursuant to which the county had acquired, a site for municipal and superior courts buildings and for designation of a different site. The Supreme Court, Schauer, J., held that proposed initiative ordinance dealt with administrative matters which under state law were committed solely to the Board of Supervisors and that therefore ordinance was not within the initiative function.

Peremptory writ of mandate awarded.

SCHAUER, Justice.

Petitioner asks that this court by mandate direct respondent, registrar of voters of Los Angeles County, to omit a proposed initiative ordinance from the ballot to be used at the general election to be held November 7, 1950. The principal provisions of the proposed ordinance, in substance and effect, are (1) the repeal of resolutions of the Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors which designate, and pursuant to which the county has acquired, a site for municipal and superior courts buildings; (2) a declaration of the will of the people that such site be used for parking or some other useful purpose; and (3) a designation of another site for a building or buildings to house the courts. It appears also that as a necessary incident of the foregoing provisions, the ordinance would require the withdrawal by the county from, or abandonment of, contracts heretofore made for, or as preliminary to, the construction of the courts buildings on the already acquired site.

[1] Respondent has joined issue by demurrer to the petition, and the proponents[1] of the proposed initiative ordinance have filed a demurrer and answer. Upon the facts pleaded, as admitted by the demurrers and by the answer, we have concluded that the proposed ordinance deals with administrative matters which, under state law, are committed solely to the board of supervisors; therefore, the ordinance is not within the initiative function and the peremptory writ should issue.

1. The proponents of the initiative ordinance allege that they constitute the "Los Angeles County Courthouse Committee [and that it] is an unincorporated association of twenty-three civic leaders, business men and lawyers of the County of Los Angeles, * * * the majority of whom are citizens * * * and registered voters of said county; said Committee was organized in 1949 for the purpose of obtaining for the County of Los Angeles a single courthouse site * * * for the future construction thereon of a single building or adjacent and connecting buildings, to house the Superior and Municipal Courts and the County Law Library, in lieu of three separate, scattered sites theretofore selected by the Board of Supervisors, for the construction thereon of three separate buildings for said functions." The committee admits the prior acquisition by the county of the site selected by the board of supervisors and "admits that all of the site selected by the proposed Ordinance is privately owned except for a strip from Broadway to Hill Street with a frontage of about fifty six (56) feet immediately north of the law library property," which "law library property," it is also admitted, "the Board of Law Library Trustees of the County of Los Angeles has held title to" since July 20, 1950, and which was acquired "for the purpose of constructing thereon a separate building for * * * [a] County law library" at a cost (for the land) of "about $580,333."

ters" for superior and municipal courts. Such state law leaves to the boards of supervisors to determine, in each case, what is required to constitute "suitable quarters." It is undisputed that suitable quarters for such courts are wanting and are needed in Los Angeles County, and that the board of supervisors has so determined. Some three years prior to the filing of the proposed initiative ordinance, the board of supervisors decided upon an area north of Temple Street, bounded on the east by North Broadway, as a site for a municipal courts building and a superior courts building. On June 26, 1947, the Los Angeles city planning commission duly approved the site proposed by the supervisors for the municipal courts building and on August 26, 1948, the commission duly approved the site for the superior courts building.[3] Between October 14, 1947, and July 6, 1948, the board of supervisors adopted a series of resolutions designating and directing acquisition of the area north of Temple Street as a site for the courts buildings. Pursuant to these resolutions, and in performance of the duty enjoined by the state law, the property was acquired at a cost of $1,550,085.61. The board appropriated and allocated funds aggregating $10,699,700 for construction of the buildings on the acquired site; of such funds it has spent $54,517.62 budgeted under the Accumulative Capital Outlay Act (Stats.1937, ch. 717; Stats.1949, ch. 14, Gen.Laws, Act 8496a) "for the purpose of constructing" the superior courts building, and $484,883.98 appropriated from general funds "for purposes directly connected with the construction of said courts building." It employed architects who prepared plans for the buildings; it has paid the architects $170,654.40 for their services in respect to the municipal courts building and $507,305.34 for their services in respect to the superior courts building; further fees which it has agreed to pay the architects are payable as construction of the buildings progresses. (The possible liability of the county for further fees or damages in the event that the partially completed project is abandoned is as yet undetermined.) After public hearing the city planning commission duly approved the extent of such buildings and their situation on the area selected as a site. The board of supervisors called for bids for construction of the superior courts building and entered into a contract with the board of the Retirement Association[4] of the County of Los Angeles whereby the latter agreed to erect the municipal courts building and to lease it to the county. (The amount of liability, if any, on this contract in the event of withdrawal or abandonment by the county is another undetermined matter.)

At this stage in the carrying out of the project, on August 25, 1950, the initiative petition now in question was filed with the respondent. The area designated by the proposed initiative ordinance as a substitute site for the location of any new courthouse or courts building is south of Temple Street, bounded on the east by North Broadway, immediately across Temple Street from a portion of the site designated and acquired by the board of supervisors.

3. See discussion of the California Conservation and Planning Act (Deering's Gen.Laws, Act 5211c), post, 222 P.2d 230. The City of Los Angeles has a comprehensive zoning plan (Ordinance 90500) and the County of Los Angeles has a master plan (Ordinance 1494).

4. The county retirement association, which consists of all county employes (Gov.Code, § 31552), is managed by a retirement board of five members (Gov. Code, & 31520). The lease agreement between the Los Angeles retirement board and the county of Los Angeles was entered into under a state law which permits investment of funds of a retirement association in "[r]eal property or improvements * * * acquired for sale or lease to the county in which the retirement system is established" (Gov. Code, § 31595, par. (e)). Such an investment requires unanimous approval by the retirement board and approval of four-fifths of the board of supervisors. (Gov.Code § 31601). It also requires that the property and the plans of the proposed building be examined by an appraiser appointed by the retirement board and board of supervisors; the appraiser must determine whether the investment will return the statutorily permitted rate of interest. (Gov.Code, § 31603).

It is observed that the act of the board of supervisors in determining that "suitable quarters" for the superior and municipal courts were wanting and were needed, and that the provision of such quarters entailed the procurement of a suitable site and the construction of adequate buildings, does not appear to have been challenged by referendum or otherwise, and is not attacked by the proposed initiative ordinance. It is only the designation of the site which has already been acquired, and, perforce incidentally, the making of the architectural and construction contracts which are extant, that are attacked. Under the circumstances of this case, are these matters within the reach of the initiative?

[3] The powers of initiative and referendum in Los Angeles County apply only to acts which are legislative in character, and not to executive or administrative acts. (See Housing Authority v. Superior Court (1950), 35 Cal.2d 550, 219 P.2d 457; Essick v. City of Los Angeles (1950), 34 Cal.2d 614, 624, 625, 213 P.2d 492; note, 122 A.L.R. 769.) The state legislature has declared the legislative policy applicable here: that the board of supervisors shall provide suitable quarters for the municipal and superior courts. (Deering's Gen.Laws, Act 5238, § 22, Stats.1947, ch. 1101 § 1 ["The board of supervisors shall provide suitable quarters for the municipal courts"]; Code Civ. Proc., § 144 ["If suitable rooms for holding the superior courts * * * are not provided in any county by the supervisors thereof, * * * the courts * * * may direct the sheriff of the county to provide such rooms"]; Ex parte Widber (1891), 91 Cal. 367, 369, 27 P. 733 ["It will be conceded upon all sides that it is the duty of the board of supervisors to prepare suitable rooms * * * for the use of the judges of the superior courts"]; Gov. Code, § 25351, Stats.1947, ch. 424, § 1 ["The board may construct, lease, build * * * or repair buildings for a * * * courthouse * * * and such other public buildings as are necessary to carry out the work of the county government"].)

[4, 5] It seems obvious beyond the reach of serious argument that the board of supervisors cannot perform the duty of providing "suitable quarters" for the courts without selecting and designating the sites of the buildings to house the courts, as well as the character and size of the buildings. The determination of what is "suitable" as quarters for the courts necessarily includes the selection of a site as well as ascertainment of the extent and character of accommodations which a building or buildings must contain. Prescribing the policy and duty was the legislative act of the state; carrying out the policy by performing the duty is an administrative function delegated by the state to the local governing body, the board of supervisors. "The governing body of the [local political subdivision] * * * by its resolution did not make a law but thereby acted in an executive or administrative capacity as an instrumentality of the state to make operative the provisions of a state law already existing." (State v. Butler (1945), 145 Neb. 638, 17 N.W.2d 683, 690; see also Kleiber v. City and County of San Francisco (1941), 18 Cal.2d 718, 725, 117 P.2d 657; Housing Authority v. Superior Court (1950), supra, 35 Cal.2d 550, 219 P.2d 457; State v. Salome (1949), 167 Kan. 766, 208 P.2d 198, 208; Seaton v. Lackey (1944), 298 Ky. 188, 182 S.W.2d 336, 339; Dickson v. Hardy (1932), La.App., 144 So. 519, 526.)

Here the state has acted to establish the basic policy and has vested the responsibility for carrying out that policy in a board of supervisors. The steps which the board has taken to carry out the state policy—the determination that for "suitable quarters" it was necessary or expedient to erect new buildings rather than to continue to use existing buildings, the fixing of sites for the buildings to make them convenient for the purpose to be served, the determination of the size of the buildings, the arrangement of space therein to provide court rooms, jury rooms, judges' chambers and all the other details which enter into implementing the legislative act of the state—viewed as parts of the entire project, are all inextricably interwoven and related. We are satisfied that, regardless of what might be the character of a particular step in another context, such steps appear here, in the respects in which they are sought to be interrupted and repealed or controlled by the initiative ordinance, to be predominantly and controllingly administrative in character.

The proponents of the initiative measure rely upon the following cases as establishing that the selection of the sites of the courts buildings is a legislative matter: Hopping v. Council of City of Richmond (1915), 170 Cal. 605, 150 P. 977; Hopping v. Council of City of Richmond (1915), 170 Cal. 618, 150 P. 982; Hill v. Board of Supervisors (1917), 176 Cal. 84, 167 P. 514; Burdick v. City of San Diego (1938), 29 Cal.App.2d 565, 84 P.2d 1064; Knowlton v. Hezmalhalch (1939), 32 Cal.App.2d 419, 89 P.2d 1109. However, in none of those cases was the court purporting to deal with a situation such as the one at bar, where the legislative policy has been expressly fixed by the state itself, and the execution of that policy has been specifically imposed by the state law on the board of supervisors as an administrative function. It would be beyond the powers of a board of supervisors to repeal or amend the state-declared policy; likewise, it is beyond the powers of the electorate of Los Angeles County by initiative procedure to repeal or amend such state policy. The board cannot escape the duty imposed upon it by the state through the medium of declining to act; neither can the electorate of the county take from the board the administrative functions delegated to it by the state. The situation is similar to that in Riedman v. Brison (1933), 217 Cal. 383, 387, 18 P.2d 947. There the state legislature, by general act, provided that the governing body of a city might submit to the electors of the city the proposition of withdrawing from a water district. This court denied a petition for mandate to compel the city clerk to place on the ballot an initiative proposal directing the council to submit such question to the electors, for "the legislature, in its general act, * * * designated the city council * * * as the state agency which may initiate proceedings for the withdrawal of the municipality from the Metropolitan Water District. * * * The provisions of the charter of the city relating to the initiative apply only to its legislative acts which, unless otherwise authorized, can relate only to municipal affairs, of which this is not one. (Hopping v. Council of City of Richmond, 170 Cal. 605, 611, 150 P. 977.)"

The Hopping (supra, 170 Cal. 605, 150 P. 977; 170 Cal. 618, 150 P. 982), Burdick (supra, 29 Cal.App.2d 565, 84 P.2d 1064) and Knowlton (supra, 32 Cal.App.2d 419, 89 P.2d 1109) cases concerned the use of initiative or referendum to control the essentially municipal affairs of erection of municipal buildings by cities. In the Hill case (supra, 176 Cal. 84, 167 P. 514), the act of the board of supervisors which was involved was a "resolution declaring the necessity for the construction of a new hall of records." The decision of the court that such resolution was subject to referendum was based on its view that: "That a resolution such as is here under consideration is legislative in character is conclusively established by the decision in the Hopping case." But, as pointed out in the Hopping case (p. 611 of 170 Cal., 150 P. 977), "To allow it [the referendum] to be invoked to annul or delay executive conduct would destroy the efficiency necessary to the successful administration of the business affairs of a city. In many cases it would entirely prevent the exercise of the executive power necessary to carry out the acts determined upon by the legislative department." It is manifest from reading the Hopping decision that the basic elements of the acts of the city council which were held to be most material as fixing the character of its acts as legislative are not here involved in the acts of the supervisors; on the contrary those elements here were in large part resolved by the state legislature when it determined the public purpose and policy of requiring the board of supervisors to furnish "suitable quarters" for the courts. Certainly the court in the Hopping case did not consider the question here involved, i.e., whether the electorate of a county, in a case such as this, may by the initiative interrupt and interfere with the performance by the supervisors of their state-imposed administrative duty to furnish suitable quarters for state courts. Insofar as any language used in the Hill case may imply that the acts of the board of supervisors with which we are here concerned are legislative and subject to the initiative, it is clearly contrary to the practical and efficient operation of the state-imposed plan of government, tends to defeat the state policy, and should be, and is, overruled. Nickerson v. San Bernardino (1918), 179 Cal. 518, 522, 177 P. 465, and Jardine v. City of Pasadena (1926), 199 Cal. 64, 71, 248 P. 225, 48 A.L.R. 509, are not in point. In those cases this court refused injunction to control the local governing body's power in connection with providing a site for a public hospital. The cases refer to that power as "legislative and discretionary," but they are not concerned with, and make no attempt to draw, a distinction between legislative and administrative action.

[6] As pointed out in Newsom v. Board of Supervisors (1928), 205 Cal. 262, 269, 270 P. 676, "It has been recognized from an early date in the history of the state that in the exercise of their functions under particular statutes 'the board of supervisors is a special tribunal, with mixed powers—administrative, legislative and judicial' * * *." Where a series of acts by a board are all directed to the end of carrying out a duty imposed on the board by the law of the state, and where it is sought by a citizens' committee of the county to interrupt the process through repeal by the initiative of one or more of the steps theretofore taken by the board, the acts sought to be repealed are to be judged, as legislative or administrative, not as isolated acts but in their true relationship as a part of the entire project.

[7] If the selection of sites of courts buildings were subject to referendum, the electors could nullify every determination of the board of supervisors to erect buildings for the courts and thereby nullify the legislative policy and prevent execution of the duty imposed upon the board of supervisors. Furthermore, a small group, or various small groups, of electors, by repeated initiative proposals for a change of site, could interfere with the supervisors' attempts to furnish quarters for the courts at any time, even when the period for referendum had passed. Thus, such small group or groups of electors could not merely place the board of supervisors in a strait jacket (see Housing Authority v. Superior Court (1950), supra, 35 Cal.2d 550, 219 P.2d 457) but could interfere with the functioning of the courts by depriving them of the quarters which the supervisors were bound to, and in good faith sought to, furnish. This application of the initiative would be "inappropriate and impossible of operation" and would repeal "provisions of * * * state law vesting administrative and discretionary powers in the Board of Supervisors" (Newsom v. Board of Supervisors (1928), supra, 205 Cal. 262, 269, 272, 270 P. 676, which held that the initiative method cannot be employed where compliance with the requirements of the general law calls for the exercise of the mixed administrative, legislative and judicial powers of the local legislative body and its various functions are so intermingled as to render the initiative entirely inconsistent and unworkable). The initiative or referendum is not applicable where "the inevitable effect would be greatly to impair or wholly destroy the efficacy of some other governmental power, the practical application of which is essential * * *." (Chase v. Kalber (1915), 28 Cal.App. 561, 569-570, 153 P. 397 [improvement of city streets]; see Hunt v. Mayor & Council of Riverside (1948), 31 Cal.2d 619, 628–630, 191 P.2d 426.) Similarly, where a state act specifies the steps to be taken by a local body in enacting legislation, an initiative measure cannot be validly adopted unless such steps are taken. (Hurst v. City of Burlingame (1929), 207 Cal. 134, 140, 277 P. 308 [zoning, lack of notice and hearing]; Galvin v. Board of Supervisors (1925), 195 Cal. 686, 696-698, 235 P. 450 [toll bridge franchise, lack of hearing, notice to state engineer, etc.].)

It is to be observed also that difficulties resulting from the use of the initiative here proposed are apparent from a consideration of the requirements of the state Conservation and Planning Act (Deering's Gen.Laws, Act 5211c). That act requires that every city and every county adopt a master plan for the development of the area. (§ 10.) The plan may include, among other things, the locations and arrangement of public buildings. (§ 44.) The master plan is to be prepared and adopted by the planning commission of the political subdivision. (§ 35.) Before adopting or substantially amending the plan, the commission must hold a public hearing thereon. (§ 61.) The legislative body of the city or county shall adopt such parts of the master plan "as may practicably be applied to the development of the city or county for a reasonable period of time next ensuing" (§ 70) and shall "upon recommendation of the planning commission" determine reasonable means for putting it into effect (§ 71). Before recommending the plan or any amendment to the legislative body, the planning commission shall hold at least two public hearings, and before adopting the plan the legislative body shall hold at least one public hearing. (§ 72.) The legislative body shall not change the plan without referring the proposed change to the planning commission for a report (§ 72) and the planning commission must hold public hearings on such proposed changes (§ 74). The legislative body shall not construct or authorize a public building in an area for which the plan has been adopted without submitting the location and character of such building to the planning commission for a report, and the legislative body can overrule the commission's disapproval of a proposed public building only by a two-thirds vote. (§ 73.)

[8] The above prescribed procedure must be followed by the board of supervisors when it is proposed to change the site of a public building. (See Newsom v. Board of Supervisors (1928), supra, 205 Cal. 262, 270, 270 P. 676; see also Johnston v. Board of Supervisors (1947), 31 Cal.2d 66, 74, 187 P.2d 686.) There is no machinery provided for the electors as a whole to comply with the planning commission procedure, yet the law requiring the master plan, and compliance with it, makes no exception in favor of initiative-fixed sites. Thus the board would encounter further difficulty and delay if it were required to accept, and seek to fit into the master plan, as presumptively would be necessary in order to secure planning commission approval of, changes proposed from time to time by the electors in the site of courts buildings. And this difficulty and delay would constitute not merely an inconvenience to the supervisors, and a continuing check on their efforts to house the courts in accordance with the legislative direction of the state, but also, since the need for "suitable" court quarters is determined and unchallenged, it could result in continuing hindrance of the more efficient functioning of the courts.

All material contentions advanced by the proponents of the initiative ordinance are necessarily disposed of by our holding that such ordinance deals with matters which are not within the initiative function.

For the reasons above stated, it is ordered that the peremptory writ of mandate issue forthwith directing the respondent to omit the proposed initiative ordinance from the ballot.

PETROVICH v. CITY OF ARCADIA et al.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.

Sept. 21, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 19, 1950.

Action by Martin Petrovich, etc., against the City of Arcadia and others for rescission and cancellation of a bid to construct a sewer system for defendant city and for exoneration of surety on bid bond, wherein the City of Arcadia filed a cross-complaint against plaintiff and the Great American Indemnity Company, as surety, seeking to recover full amount of bid bond. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Frederick F. Houser, J., entered judgment against each of the parties on their respective pleadings and defendants appealed from the judgment adverse to them.

The Supreme Court, Shenk, J., held that bid bond only provided security for actual damage to city resulting from successful bidder's refusal to enter into contract and not for forfeiture of bond as a penalty or as liquidated damages and that recovery was properly denied in absence of showing of actual damage.

Prior opinion, 205 P.2d 41.

1. Municipal corporations ⇐327

Recognition by subsequent legislation of the power of cities of the sixth class theretofore to provide for bid security and forfeiture thereof as a penalty or liquidated damages upon failure of successful bidder to enter into contract could not be deemed an exercise of such power for a sixth class city which had theretofore invited bids for construction of sewer system without providing for forfeiture of bid bond. Government Code, §§ 37900–37907, 37930–37935, St.1949; p. 1187, § 4.

2. Municipal corporations ⇐333

Where invitation by sixth class city for bids for construction of sewer system and bid form furnished by city required cashier's check or bond as a guarantee of entry into contract and provided that in case of failure to do so surety's liability to city would be established and deposit of bid, security and forfeiture thereof were not required by any statute applicable to sixth class cities, bid bond merely provided security to the extent of sum stated in bond for actual loss or damage to city resulting from bidder's refusal to enter into contract and did not provide for forfeiture of full sum of bond to city as a penalty or liquidated damages. Civ.Code, §§ 1442, 1670, 1671.

3. Contracts ⇐318

Forfeitures in the nature of a penalty are not favored and language must be so construed as to avoid a forfeiture, if that is possible.

4. Municipal corporations ⇐333

Bid invitation and executed bid for construction of city sewer system should not be held to extend the hazards of bidder and surety on his bid bond beyond the fair meaning of the language used, where such language was of the city's own choosing.

5. Municipal corporations ⇐250, 253

Municipalities in dealings with private persons are not exempt from the rules requiring construction of language so as to avoid a forfeiture if possible and so as not to extend the liability of other party to contract beyond the fair meaning of language used in contract where such language was of the municipality's own choosing.

To enforce a contract for liquidated damages, even in favor of a municipal corporation, under statutory exception to general rule as to invalidity of such contracts, it must appear from the nature of the case that it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damages. Civ. Code, §§ 1670, 1671.

7. Damages ⇐157(3)

Whether a case comes within statutory exception to general rule as to invalidity of contracts for liquidated damages presents a question of fact which must be alleged and proved. Civ.Code, §§ 1670, 1671.

8. Municipal corporations ⇐333

Where city sought to recover full amount of bid bond as liquidated damages for successful bidder's refusal to enter into contract, finding that it was not impracticable or extremely difficult to fix amount of damage or loss to city by reason of such refusal was supported by absence of specific evidence that nature of case made it difficult to ascertain such loss or damage and by reasonable inference from the facts that such difficulty did not exist. Civ.Code, §§ 1670, 1671.

9. Municipal corporations ⇐333

Recovery on bid bond given as a guarantee that bidder upon acceptance of bid would enter into contract and furnish performance bond was properly denied in absence of showing of actual damage to city resulting from successful bidder's refusal to enter into contract. Civ.Code, §§ 1442, 1670, 1671.

10. Appeal and error ⊂=843(2)

Where agreement in connection with bids for construction of city sewer system merely required bidder to furnish security for actual damage to city resulting from failure to enter into contract upon acceptance of bid, whether city in absence of statute had power to provide by contract for a forfeiture or liquidated damages for failure to enter into contract became an academic matter which need not be determined, particularly where existence of such power had subsequently been recognized by statute. Government Code, § 37935.

SHENK, Justice.

The plaintiff brought this action against the city of Arcadia for the rescission and cancellation of his bid to construct sanitary improvements in that city, and for the exoneration of the surety on the bid bond. The city cross-complained joining the surety as a defendant, and prayed for a forfeiture of the bond and for judgment in the full amount thereof. Judgment went against each of the parties on their respective pleadings. The city has appealed from the judgment adverse to it.

In the early part of 1946 the city was duly authorized by popular vote to incur a bonded indebtedness of $350,000 to construct sanitary improvements. The bonds were sold and the proceeds provided a fund in the stated amount for the purpose intended.

On August 6, 1946, the city invited bids for the construction of sewer lines and works in accordance with specifications on file, each bid to be accompanied by a cashier's check or a bond in at least ten per cent of the amount of the bid. On August 20th, 1946, the plaintiff filed a bid of $347,129.40 and a surety bond in the sum of $37,500. On that date the bids were opened, and the plaintiff's bid was found to be the lowest. Five other bids ranged in amounts from $416,188.75 to $556,480.80. On August 22, and before acceptance, the plaintiff delivered to the city council a written request for permission to withdraw his bid because the cost of certain "wyes" in the pipe lines amounting to $55,448.06 had been inadvertently omitted, and the inclusion of that item would have brought the amount of the bid to $402,577.46. Permission to withdraw or amend the bid was refused. The plaintiff's bid was accepted and he was requested to sign a contract to perform the work. This he failed to do and commenced the action for the cancellation of the bid and the bid bond. The judgment on the issues thus raised was based on the trial court's finding that there was no inadvertent error in the computation of the plaintiff's bid. Since the plaintiff has not appealed, any question as to the correctness of that finding is now foreclosed.

The only questions for determination concern the correctness of the court's findings on the issues tendered by the cross-complaint.

The invitation for bids required that each bid must be accompanied by either a cashier's check or a bond in at least ten per cent of the total amount of the bid as a guarantee that on acceptance the bidder would enter into the contract and furnish a faithful performance bond.

The plaintiff's bid was on a form furnished by the city and contained the following language with ink lines drawn through the portions indicated: "A* ~~cashiers check properly made payable to the City of Arcadia~~* a Bid Bond in favor of the City of Arcadia for Thirty Seven Thousand Five Hundred dollars ($37,500.00), which amount is not less than ten percent (10%) of the total amount of this proposal, is attached hereto and is given as a guarantee that the undersigned will execute the Agreement and furnish the required bonds if awarded the contract and in case of failure to do so within the time provided ~~said check shall be forfeited to the City~~ Surety's liability to the City will be established * * . (Strike out inapplicable phrase.)"

The bid bond in the sum of $37,500 was in the usual form with the condition stated that upon the acceptance of an award made to the plaintiff and his entering into a contract and giving the required performance bonds, the bid bond obligation should be null and void, otherwise to remain in full force and effect.

After the plaintiff refused to sign the contract, the city adopted a resolution to the effect that the plaintiff's bid bond was forfeited. The cross-complaint was based on the assumption that the language of the invitation for bids and of the bid provided for forfeiture of the bid bond in the event the plaintiff refused to execute the contract upon the acceptance of his bid. At the close of the trial the city asked and was granted leave to amend the cross-complaint by adding an allegation that from the nature of the case it was impracticable and extremely difficult to fix the amount of damage or loss to the city by reason of the plaintiff's failure to perform. No further evidence was introduced. There was no testimony offered indicating that the nature of the case made it difficult to fix the amount of damage; nor was there any evidence of actual damage to the city. The city did not readvertise for bids and the advertised project was abandoned. Subsequently under other plans and specifications another contract was let.

The city relied on the language of the instruments in evidence and the plaintiff's noncompliance to establish a case either of forfeiture of the bond, or for liquidated damages under the exception to the general invalidity of agreements therefor. Sections 1670, 1671, Civil Code. The trial court determined that the instruments relied upon did not provide for a forfeiture of the bond; that the language applicable to a bid bond was that of guarantee only; and that there was no intention or agreement that the penal sum should be treated as liquidated damages. The court found that it was not impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the amount of damage or loss to the city by the plaintiff's failure to enter into the contract, and that the city suffered no actual damage. The city questions the foregoing determination and findings, and the judgment based thereon.

At the time here involved there was no statute applicable to cities of the sixth class, of which the City of Arcadia is one, requiring the deposit of bid security and forfeiture thereof under such a contract. The legislature enacted the requirement in 1949. Prior to that year provisions relating to public work contracts in fifth and sixth class cities were included in sections 777 and 874 of the Municipal Corporation Bill of 1883. Stats.1883, p. 93 as amended, Deering's Gen.Laws, Act 5233. In 1949 these provisions became sections 37900 to 37907, inclusive, of the Government Code. Stats. 1949, pp. 100, 165. At no time did they contain specific provision for bid security deposit and forfeiture. At the same session of the legislature sections 37930 to 37935, inclusive, applicable to cities of the sixth class only, were added to the Government Code. Stats.1949, p. 1186, sec. 3 of Act. It was there provided that security, in the form of cash, cashier's check, certified check, or surety bond, in at least ten per cent of the amount should accompany the bid, and that if the successful bidder should fail to execute the contract the amount of the bidder's security should be forfeited to the city (with an exception not necessary to be noticed). Thus in cases such as this the legislature has now made mandatory a deposit of security and forfeiture when the successful bidder has inexcusably refused to execute the contract. In adopting those provisions it was declared in section 4 that the legislative intention was not to change the existing law, but rather by such adoption to declare that under prior section 874 "cities of the sixth class always have had power * * * to require a bid bond, cashier's check or other security, and the power thereunder to declare the forfeiture thereof upon failure, neglect or refusal to enter into a contract awarded thereunder."

[1] The foregoing may be said to be a legislative recognition in 1949 of the power of cities of the sixth class theretofore to provide by other means what the legislature has now enacted, namely to make adequate provision for the forfeiture of required bid security as a penalty or liquidated damages. But that recognition cannot also be deemed an exercise of the power for the city. In exercising the power the greater penalty must be declared in conjunction with the requirement for bid security deposit. Therefore assuming that the city might make the proper provision by the instruments involved, the question is whether it has done so. Where similar provisions, statutory or otherwise, have been brought into question the result has turned on whether the language declared the full sum forfeited either as a penalty or as liquidated damages. Here language to that effect in relation to the bond security is lacking.

Palo and Dodini v. City of Oakland, 79 Cal.App.2d 739, 180 P.2d 764, involved a provision of the Oakland City Charter requiring the deposit of a certified check with a bid and the forfeiture of the check in the event the successful bidder failed to execute the contract. It was held that, restricting the charter language to its most technical limits, as required by the established rule, the explicit and mandatory terms called for a forfeiture and prohibited any relief therefrom.

In Town of Mill Valley v. Massachusetts Bonding and Insurance Company, 68 Cal. App. 372, 229 P. 891, the bond forfeiture declaration of section 10 of the Improvement Act of 1911, Stats.1911, p. 730, was brought into question. That section required the deposit of either a certified check or a bond with the bid. The language of forfeiture read: "But if said bidder fails, neglects or refuses to enter into the contract to perform" the work, "then the certified check accompanying his bid and the amount therein mentioned, shall be declared to be forfeited to said city and shall be collected by it and paid into the general fund, and any bond forfeited may be prosecuted, and the amount due thereon collected and paid into said fund." It was held that the language did not fall short of prescribing a forfeiture in the case of a bond, but that the terms of the statute created the forfeiture. The court noted the omission of the express declaration as to the bond, but concluded that the result was the same because of the use of the word "forfeited" in direct connection with the word "bond." No similar language in connection with the bond requirement appears in the present case.

City of Los Angeles v. Shafer, 53 Cal. App. 458, 200 P. 384, 386, involved a faithful performance bond under section 9 of the Street Improvement Act of 1913, Stats. 1913, p. 954. In the event of the abandonment of the work, that section authorized the city to relet the contract and hold the contractor and his sureties responsible on his bond for the costs and expenses of reletting, and any damage resulting from the abandonment. Cf. sec. 37935, Govt. Code, Stats.1949, p. 1186. There was no express alternative declaration of forfeiture. The court contrasted the provision applicable to the bond liability with language in the same section requiring certified check security with the bid and forfeiture of the whole sum if the bidder failed to enter into the contract. As to the bond it was said: "If the Legislature intended that the obligation be one for liquidated damages or for a penalty or a forfeiture, it could have so provided."

Numerous other cases have been cited in support of the propriety of the city's resolution that there was a forfeiture in the present case. Those cases supported the power of the city to enforce full recovery where the statute or contract declared a forfeiture, usually as liquidated damages. Turner v. City of Fremont, 8 Cir., 170 F. 259—contract, liquidated damages; Davin v. City of Syracuse, 69 Misc. 285, 126 N.Y. S. 1002—contract, liquidated damages; Village of Morgan Park v. Gahan, 136 Ill. 515, 26 N.E. 1085—contract, forfeiture, legality assumed; Wheaton Building & Lumber Co. v. City of Boston, 204 Mass. 218, 90 N.E. 598—statute, liquidated damages; Daddario v. Town of Milford, 296 Mass. 92, 5 N.E.2d 23, 107 A.L.R. 1447—PWA rules and contract, liquidated damages; Mayor etc., of Baltimore v. J. L. Robinson Const. Co., 123 Md. 660, 91 A. 682, L.R.A.1915A, 225, Ann.Cas.1916C, 425—charter, liquidated damages; Elliott Bldg. Co. v. City of Greensboro, 190 N.C. 501, 130

S.E. 200—contract, liquidated damages. City of Weston v. Bank of Greene County, Mo.App., 192 S.W. 126, involved a suit by the city on a deposit check payment of which had been refused. The terms and source of the provisions, whether statutory or contractual, under which the check was deposited were not disclosed in the opinion, but the action was upheld under the assumed power of the city "to require a deposit with bids, to be forfeited on the conditions stated in the said published offer", as indicated in Village of Morgan Park v. Gahan, supra.

The foregoing cases disclose that forfeiture to the full amount of the deposit as a penalty or as liquidated damages was accomplished by express language. Thus there was notification by the terms of the statute or the contract of the extent of the contractor's and surety's liability where liability in excess of actual loss and damage was intended.

[2] In the present case the plaintiff's bid on the form furnished by the city, with the inapplicable phrases stricken as instructed therein, reads: "A bid bond * * * is attached hereto and is given as a guarantee that the undersigned will execute the agreement and furnish the required bonds if awarded the contract and in case of failure to do so within the time provided * * * surety's liability to the City will be established." This language contains no words of forfeiture or of an agreement that the full sum of the bond will be considered as liquidated damages in the event the contract is not entered into. Nor does the city's invitation for bids contain such language. The declaration is that of guarantee.

[3, 4] Forfeitures in the nature of a penalty are not favored; and language must be so construed as to avoid a forfeiture if that is possible. O'Morrow v. Borad, 27 Cal.2d 794, 800, 167 P.2d 483, 163 A.L.R. 894 and cases cited; Booth v. Los Angeles County, 124 Cal.App. 259, 261, 12 P.2d 72; sec. 1442, Civ.Code. In the case of agreements for liquidated damages sections 1670–1671 serve to prevent any penalizing effect, and therefore there may be no need for such a rule of construction. In the present case we are of the opinion that the agreement does not provide for either a penalty or liquidated damages since the language in relation to the bid bond contained in the executed bid form adopts no more than the words of guarantee in the bid invitation. Words indicating that the full sum of the bond would be forfeited or treated as liquidated damages could readily have been used. To construe words actually used otherwise than in accordance with their plain meaning would result in unauthorized changes in or additions to the language of the instruments and would base the conclusion upon uncertain or doubtful inferences contrary to the language expressly employed. The wording of the bid invitation and the executed bid was of the city's own choosing and should not be held to extend the bidder's and the surety's hazards beyond its fair meaning. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. City of St. Paul, 136 Minn. 396, 162 N.W. 470, L.R.A.1917E, 370.

[5] Municipalities are not exempt from the foregoing rules in dealings with private persons. Sacramento County v. Southern Pacific Co., 127 Cal. 217, 59 P. 568, 825; Hoyt v. Board of Civil Service Commissioners, 21 Cal.2d 399, 402, 132 P.2d 804; Corporation of America v. Durham, etc., Co., 50 Cal.App.2d 337, 340, 123 P.2d 81 and cases cited. There is here no justification for applying a different rule because a municipality is involved. In Groves v. John Wunder Co., 205 Minn. 163, 286 N.W. 235, 123 A.L.R. 502, 506, it was pointed out that if so-called public contracts were in the suggested special category for measuring damages, a municipal corporation would be dealt with more favorably than the ordinary litigant. In the absence of statutory or contract language otherwise providing, the guarantee measured the city's compensatory right to the extent of the actual damage only and the liability of the surety on the bid bond would thereby be deemed to be "established" for the actual damage resulting from the plaintiff's breach, but limited by the sum stated in the bond. 11 C.J.S., Bonds, § 130, p. 508; United States v. Alcorn, C.C., 145 F. 995, 998;

Weinreich Estate Co. v. A. J. Johnston Co., 28 Cal.App. 144, 148, 151 P. 667 and authorities cited.

[6-10] If it be assumed by any process of reasoning that the language of the instruments might be construed as an agreement to treat the total sum of the bond as liquidated damages, such a construction would bring into operation sections 1670 and 1671 of the Civil Code. Under those sections it must appear from the nature of the case that it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damages. These provisions apply to the city as well as to any other contracting party. City of Los Angeles v. Shafer, supra, 53 Cal.App. at page 466, 200 P. 384. Whether the case comes within their terms presents a question of fact which must be alleged and proved. Dyer Bros. Golden West Iron Works v. Central Iron Works, 182 Cal. 588, 593, 189 P. 445; Rice v. Schmid, 18 Cal.2d 382, 385, 115 P.2d 498, 138 A.L.R. 589. No specific showing on that issue was attempted by the city and the findings were based on inferences contrary to its position. Different inferences may not here be indulged. It is not indicated that loss or damage was suffered by the city in any proceeding to re-let the contract. In fact, no steps to that end were taken, and there was no showing that any special loss to the city resulted in abandoning the project. The absence of specific evidence that the nature of the case made it difficult to ascertain loss or damage, and the reasonable inferences from the facts that such difficulty did not exist, support the finding of the failure of any showing on that issue. Also as no actual damage was shown the trial court was justified in concluding that there was no basis upon which recovery could be awarded on the city's cross-complaint. The question of the general power of the city in the absence of statute to provide by contract for forfeiture or liquidated damages becomes a matter of academic interest only and unnecessary to be decided in this case. This is especially true as the legislature has now spoken on the subject.

GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS, TRAYNOR, and SCHAUER, JJ., concur.

CARTER, Justice.

I dissent.

The interpretation placed upon the transaction by the majority opinion is unsupportable. It is conceded that the city could lawfully have provided for a forfeiture or liability of the full amount of the bid bond, and there is no doubt about it. Palo and Dodini v. City of Oakland, 79 Cal.App.2d 739, 180 P.2d 764. The issue is wholly one of interpretation. Desiring to have constructed a sewer system, the city called for bids. In its invitation for bids it was stated that each bid must be accompanied by "either a cashier's check or bid bond" for 10% of the bid "made payable" to the city "as guarantee" that the bidder "will enter into a contract if his bid is accepted." In addition, a form of bid was furnished and used by the bidder wherein it was stated: "A * cashiers check properly made payable to the City of Arcadia* a Bid Bond in favor of the City of Arcadia for Thirty-seven Thousand Five Hundred Dollars ($37,500.00), which amount is not less than * * * 10% of the * * * amount of this proposal, is attached hereto and given as a guarantee that the undersigned will execute the Agreement * * * if awarded the contract and in case of failure to do so within the time provided* said check shall be forfeited to the City.* Surety's liability to the City will be established." A footnote in explanation of the asterisk stated "Strike out inapplicable phrase." Plaintiff drew a line through the phrases between the first two asterisks and those between the last two. It is also recited therein that defendant-city "will in no way be responsible for any errors or omissions made in the preparation of this bid." The court found and it is not questioned that plaintiff-bidder committed a "wilful breach of duty in refusing to enter into" the construction contract.

The only reasonable interpretation of the invitation for bids and bid form is that the liability under the bond would be for the full amount. The words used cannot be differently construed. It is provided that if the bidder fails to execute the contract, his liability to the city will be established. "Established" means: "Made stable or firm; fixed or secured in some way." Webster's New Int. Dict., 2d Ed., p. 874. "Establish" means: "To fix immovably or firmly." Id. p. 874. "To establish is to make stable or firm; to fix in permanence and regularity, to settle or secure on a firm basis, to settle firmly or to fix unalterably." Wells Lamont Corporation v. Bowles, Em.App., 149 F.2d 364, 366. The "liability" would not be settled beyond dispute if there still remained to determine the amount of the liability, as is held by the majority. The liability was for the amount of the bid bond, otherwise the complete or exact liability would not be fixed. "The process of fixing implies, primarily a stabilization or definite determination". Pulcifer v. County of Alameda, 29 Cal.2d 258, 263, 175 P.2d 1, 4. See also, San Francisco Pioneer Woolen Factory v. Brickwedel, 60 Cal. 166, 177. The term "to establish" is the same as the phrase "to fix". "To fix" is "to make firm, stable, or fast; to fasten; to set or place definitely; to establish; station; settle; to assign precisely, to give a permanent form to; to make definite and settled". Webster's Int. Dict., 2d Ed., p. 958. " 'Fixed' [liability], means certain and definite as to both obligation and amount * * *." [Emphasis added.] National Commercial Title & Mortgage Guaranty Co. v. City of Newark, 11 A.2d 759, 763, 18 N.J.Misc. 186. See also, First Savings Bank & Trust Co. of Albuquerque, N. M., v. Stuppi, 10 Cir., 2 F.2d 822, 825; Oklahoma Cotton Growers' Ass'n v. Groff, 135 Okl. 285, 275 P. 1032, 1036; Commercial Casualty Ins. Co. v. State Board, 119 N.J. 94, 194 A. 390; San Francisco Pioneer Woolen Factory v. Brickwedel, 60 Cal. 166. The majority opinion completely ignores the plain meaning of the words used in the documents forming the basis of this transaction.

There is, however, another completely compelling factor. It is conceded that if a cashier's check had been furnished, it would have been forfeited. There is utterly no basis for assuming that the parties intended a different result to flow if a bond instead of a check was given. The invitation for bids said that either a check or bond must accompany the bid, indicating that one was considered exactly equivalent to the other. True, the word "forfeiture" was not used in connection with the bond, but equally forceful and more appropriate words were used. More appropriate, for it would not be technically accurate to use the word "forfeiture" in referring to the bid bond, as distinguished from a cashier's check, for a forfeiture usually refers to the loss of a fixed tangible asset or property right such as a cashier's check would be, rather than a mere promise which is the basis of the liability created by a bid bond. It would be odd to refer to the forfeiture of the promise or the bond, inasmuch as, on the contrary, liability is to be based thereon. Thus the more appropriate words, that liability should be "established", were used. But certainly they have the same meaning and effect as words providing for a forfeiture of a cashier's check would have. That the cashier's check or bid bond were to stand for the same nature and measure of liability is further evidenced by the invitation for bids which stated that such a check or bond must accompany the bid as a guarantee that the contract would be executed, the same "guarantee" for either kind of security. It is fallacious to speak of the bidder choosing the bid bond over the cashier's check to escape a "forfeiture" or that kind of liability. Plainly the bid bond is used because it requires much less liquid capital to obtain it. It is not reasonable to suppose a different rule of liability would be imposed depending upon the security supplied. Common sense would seem to dictate that the city did not intend to give to the bidder the alternative to determine for himself whether he would suffer a forfeiture or not merely by choosing the form of security —check or bond. The rule of construction against forfeiture does not require a court to blind itself to all reason and common sense. The requirement of security for the execution of a contract by a bidder on government contracts is common, and it is generally held that the security is forfeited on failure to execute the contract. See, Palo and Dodini v. City of Oakland, 79 Cal. App.2d 739, 180 P.2d 764; McQuillan Mun. Corps., 2d Ed., sec. 1323. To say that a different result would follow as to liability when a cashier's check or money is deposited, rather than a bond, is wholly artificial. Such a construction will thwart the manifest purpose of the security requirement contained in the bid. It is obvious that the construction placed upon the documents here involved will not only give the bidder the right of choice of security (cashier's check or bid bond), but will also permit him to determine in advance whether he may run the risk of having his security forfeited, or merely subject the surety on his bid bond to an action for the actual damages suffered by the public corporation for his failure to execute the contract in case his bid is accepted. Of persuasive importance in construing the instruments is the public policy underlying the requirement that security be furnished by bidders.

There is a clear analogy between this case and Town of Mill Valley v. Massachusetts Bonding, etc., Co., 68 Cal.App. 372, 229 P. 891. There the proceeding was conducted pursuant to the Improvement Act of 1911, Stats.1911, p. 730. That act provides: "All proposals or bids offered shall be accompanied by a check payable to the city certified by a responsible bank, for an amount which shall not be less than ten per cent of the aggregate of the proposal, or by a bond for the said amount and so payable". The language relating to the forfeiture is as follows: "But if said bidder fails, neglects or refuses to enter into the contract to perform said work or improvement, as hereinafter provided, then the certified check accompanying his bid and the amount therein mentioned shall be declared to be forfeited to said city and shall be collected by it and paid into the general fund, and any bond forfeited may be prosecuted, and the amount due thereon collected and paid into said fund."

It will be noted that the last quoted provision does not specifically provide that in the event a bid bond is given in lieu of a certified check, the bond may be forfeited if the bidder fails or refuses to enter into the contract to perform the work, while it does expressly provide that if the bidder furnishes a certified check and refuses to enter into the contract, the certified check accompanying the bid shall be declared forfeited to the city. With reference to the forfeiture of the bond, all that is said is: "[A]ny bond forfeited may be prosecuted, and the amount due thereon collected and paid into said fund." This is far from a declaration that if the bidder furnishes a bid bond instead of a certified check, and refuses to enter into the contract, the bond shall be forfeited. Nevertheless, the District Court of Appeal, in construing this provision in Town of Mill Valley v. Massachusetts Bonding, etc., Co., supra, squarely held that the last quoted language was susceptible of no other construction than that the bond should be forfeited in like manner as the certified check. In this connection, the court states, 68 Cal.App. at page 377, 229 P. at page 893: "This language does not, as contended, fall short of prescribing a forfeiture; nor does it, as claimed, amount to a mere declaration of duty authorizing the trustees to declare a forfeiture, in which event the city might be limited to a recovery of actual loss sustained. The statute itself creates the forfeiture, if language means anything, for the terms employed are plain and unambiguous. When the bid is accompanied by a check, the provision recites that it shall be 'declared to be forfeited,' and immediately following in referring to a bond it recites that 'any bond forfeited may be prosecuted and the amount due thereon collected.' [Emphasis that of the author.] While the act does not provide an express declaration in the case of a bond as it does in referring to the check, the language of the section clearly contemplates that a statutory forfeiture occurs upon failure to enter into the contract in either event. When a bond is declared forfeited and payment of the amount is refused, of necessity a suit must follow to enable the trustees to avail themselves of the benefits of the forfeiture, namely, the amount due thereon. But that a forfeiture is prescribed and imposed expressly under the act itself, upon failure to enter into the contract, there can be no question. The same reason and intent apply in both cases."

As I read the last quoted excerpt, it unequivocally declares that the same rule must be applied to a bid bond as to a certified check and that the only difference between the two is that "When a bond is declared forfeited and payment of the amount is refused, of necessity a suit must follow to enable the trustees to avail themselves of the benefits of the forfeiture, namely, the amount due thereon." [Emphasis added.] The court then declares, with respect to whether the same rule should apply to a bid bond as to a certified check, that "The same reason and intent apply in both cases."

Applying the reasoning in the Mill Valley case to the case at bar, no other conclusion can be reached than that if the certified check may be forfeited for failure to enter into the contract, the bid bond may likewise be forfeited and the city entitled to recover the full amount of the bond without proving that it has suffered any amount of damages whatsoever by the failure of the bidder to enter into the contract.

In addition to the foregoing, however, the statutes now require that the bond as well as the check shall be forfeited. The Act under which the bonds were voted to construct the sewer here involved provides that the contract for the work shall be let "as other contracts are let" by the city. Stats. 1901, p. 27, sec. 9, Deering Gen. Laws 1943, Act 5178. In 1949, provisions were added to the Government Code dealing with municipal corporations. Said code now provides that contracts of a city of the sixth class shall be let to the lowest bidder and that: "All bids shall be presented under sealed cover and accompanied by one of the following forms of bidder's security. (a) Cash. (b) Cashier's check made payable to the city. (c) A certified check made payable to the city. (d) A bidder's bond executed by an admitted surety insurer, made payable to the city." Gov. Code, sec. 37931. Then it is provided: "The security shall be in an amount equal to at least 10 per cent of the amount bid. A bid shall not be considered unless one of the forms of bidder's security is enclosed with it." Gov. Code, sec. 37932. "If the successful bidder fails to execute the contract, the amount of his bidder's security shall be forfeited to the city except as hereinafter provided." Gov. Code, sec. 37933. [Emphasis added.] When these sections were added to the code, the Legislature stated in the same Act that: "It is not the intention of the Legislature in adopting this act to change the existing law, but rather it is the intention of the Legislature to declare by such adoption that under Chapter 6, Part 2, Division 3, Title 4 of the Government Code cities of the sixth class always have had power under said chapter to require a bid bond, cashier's check or other security, and the power thereunder to declare the forfeiture thereof upon failure, neglect or refusal to enter into a contract awarded thereunder." [Emphasis added.] Stats.1949, Ch. 690, sec. 4. While the specific provision for forfeiture above quoted was not made before 1949, yet the Legislature assumed provision therefor could be made by a city as was done here. Manifestly, in restating the law, it clearly calls for forfeiture whether check or bond is used. For this Court to arrive at a different conclusion is to fly in the face of the legislative declaration and the plain common sense construction of the language here used.

Furthermore, it has been held consistently that a forfeiture occurs when security is given with a bid. In Turner v. City of Fremont, 8 Cir., 170 F. 259, it was held valid as liquidated damages. To the same effect are Davin v. City of Syracuse, 69 Misc. 285, 126 N.Y.S. 1002; Wheaton Building & Lumber Co. v. City of Boston, 204 Mass. 218, 90 N.E. 598; and Daddario v. Town of Milford, 296 Mass. 92, 5 N.E. 2d 23, 107 A.L.R. 1447; Village of Morgan Park v. Gahan, 136 Ill. 515, 26 N.E. 1085, holds there is a forfeiture. To the same effect are Elliott Bldg. Co. v. City of Greensboro, 190 N.C. 501, 130 S.E. 200; Mayor, etc., of Baltimore v. J. L. Robinson Const. Co., 123 Md. 660, 91 A. 682, L.R.A. 1915A, 225, Ann.Cas.1916C, 425; City of Weston v. Bank of Greene County (Mo.) 192 S.W. 126, and there is a strong policy favoring that result, as stated in Palo and Dodini v. City of Oakland, 79 Cal.App.2d 739, 750, 180 P.2d 764, 771: "Provisions requiring a deposit accompanying a bid for city contracts, or for forfeiture thereof, are necessary as a matter of public policy to protect the public interests. If, as here, a bidder were allowed without loss to himself to withdraw his bid after the bids have been publicly opened, fraudulent practices would develop. The body awarding contracts could agree to release a favored contractor if it turned out that his proposal was low as compared to other bids. Moreover, any bidder who found that in comparison with the other bidders, his bid was quite low, could withdraw his bid, and the city would thereby lose the value of competitive bidding and be forced to pay the prices of higher bidders with no compensation to itself for the loss sustained." To further that policy requires at least a reasonable construction of the instruments and forbids the unnatural and strained interpretation given by the majority. The majority holding will make it possible for the well financed contractor to monopolize the field and eliminate the small contractor. Naturally cities will, after this opinion becomes the law, always require a cashier's check for it can be forfeited. As a result, unless a contractor has the actual cash on hand, he cannot put up the check. In large contracts that is a very important factor.

Furthermore, it is obvious that the inevitable result of the rule announced by the majority will be that the city will have to bring suit on every bid bond in order to recover any damage suffered by it as the result of the failure of the bidder to execute a contract awarded to him. While it is impossible to visualize all of the difficulty a city might have to prove the amount of damages suffered, it is obvious that it will place an undue burden upon the city to protect its interests in such a case. Of course, the careful city attorney, after reading an opinion of the Supreme Court holding that no forfeiture may be required in such a case, will advise the city council to require a cashier's check with every bid, and, as stated above, this will mean that the contractor without a large cash reserve will not be able to bid on large jobs because he will be unable to deposit a cashier's check with his bid.

It seems to me that if the majority is right in holding that a forfeiture cannot be had in this case, it should go the whole way and hold that the same rule would apply to a certified check because of the provisions of sections 1670 and 1671 of the Civil Code, on which the majority also relies as a basis for its decision. In this connection, it should be noted that the case of Town of Mill Valley v. Massachusetts Bonding, etc., Co., supra, holds squarely that sections 1670 and 1671 of the Civil Code have no application to a case of this character. At page 376 of 68 Cal.App., at page 893 of 229 P. the court said: "The still further claim is made that a statutory forfeiture is inapplicable to the case, for the reason that appellant surety company, by the express terms of its bond, excluded any liability for a statutory forfeiture or penalty. It is accordingly claimed that sections 1670 and 1671 of the Civil Code and the equity rules against forfeitures control the case, and that therefore plaintiff should have pleaded and proved its damage." And again on page 378 of 68 Cal.App., on page 894 of 229 P.: "A court of equity has no power to disregard or set aside the express terms of statutory legislation, however much it may interfere with the operation of common-law rules. Hence any pleading or proof of actual damage has no place in a case where equity does not apply. This being so, the sections invoked by appellant can avail it nothing. This brings us to the final contention of appellant upon the subject, namely, that a statutory forfeiture is inapplicable to the case, for the reason that appellant surety company by the express terms of its bond excluded any liability for such forfeiture or penalty." Further, on page 379 of 68 Cal.App., on page 894 of 229 P.: "The insertion in the bonds of the phrase 'liquidated damages' does not in anywise change their character or limit the liability thereon, so as to require pleading and proof incident to such damages. The amount thereof was the same as required by the statute. There was therefore no attempt by the parties to limit liability under the bonds in this particular. Under these circumstances, whether the amount be considered as a penalty or as liquidated damages is of no moment, for in either event the instruments are absolute undertakings to pay the amount named therein, and are not conditioned against loss or damage requiring pleading and proof." While it is true, as heretofore stated, the proceedings involved in the Mill Valley case were pursuant to the provisions of the "Improvement Act of 1911", Stats. 1911, p. 730, and "Improvement Bond Act of 1915", Stats. 1915, p. 1441, the court there pointed out that the same reasoning applied whether the security declared to be forfeited was a certified check or a bid bond, and, as heretofore further pointed out, the 1949 session of the Legislature declared that "cities of the sixth class always have had power" under the statutes of this state "to require a bid bond, cashier's check or other security, and the power thereunder to declare the forfeiture thereof upon failure, neglect or refusal to enter into a contract awarded thereunder." Stats. 1949, Ch. 690, sec. 4.

To my mind this is a case in which this Court should do a clean cut job of simplifying the law so that both public corporations and contractors will know just what their respective rights are, and not try to arrive at a result in this case which will relieve a contractor and a bonding company of liability by making bad law which not only reflects unfavorably upon this court, but will continue to plague those who may be subjected to it as long as the majority of this Court will permit it to stand.

I would, therefore, reverse the judgment.

I dissent.

In my opinion the judgment should be reversed and I am in accord in the main with the reasoning found in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice CARTER.

Action by Max Beck, against Ida W. Unruh and others, to quiet title to property in Los Angeles County. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Walter R. Evans, Judge assigned, entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Wood, J., held that where, at time bankrupt's property was sold to state for delinquent taxes, no consent had been obtained of the bankruptcy court to make such sale, tax collector was without power to convey property, and the state had no title to convey to a purchaser at a tax sale.

1. Bankruptcy ⇐11

Upon adjudication of bankruptcy, United States District Court acquires exclusive authority and control over all property of bankrupt, and jurisdiction of bankruptcy court extends to adjudication of questions respecting title of property which is vested in trustee, who has actual or constructive possession of all of bankrupt's property.

2. Bankruptcy ⇐188(1), 214

A trustee in bankruptcy takes property of bankrupt subject to all such liens as would have been enforceable against it in hands of bankrupt himself, but owner of lien may not institute proceedings in a state court to enforce it without permission of bankruptcy court.

WOOD, Justice.

Action to quiet title to real property in Los Angeles County. Plaintiff's claim of title is based on a deed from a trustee in bankruptcy, and defendants' claim of title is based on tax deeds to and from the State of California.

On November 4, 1927, the United Finance Company, a corporation, was adjudged a bankrupt. The real property involved herein was owned by the bankrupt and was listed in the schedule of assets in bankruptcy. Taxes assessed against said property for the fiscal year 1926-1927 were not paid, and on December 1, 1932, the tax collector of Los Angeles County executed deeds which allegedly conveyed the property to the state for such delinquent taxes. The trustee in bankruptcy was discharged on December 11, 1936, and the bankruptcy proceedings were terminated. No disposition was made of the property herein in the bankruptcy proceedings. On May 19, 1944, said property was sold at public auction by the tax collector to Fred R. Salter, and the collector executed deeds which allegedly conveyed the property to him. On June 9, 1944, Salter conveyed his interest in the property to one Ewald who, on February 12, 1945, conveyed his interest to Ida W. Unruh, one of the defendants herein. The deeds to Salter, the deed to Ewald and the deed to Ida W. Unruh were all recorded on November 15, 1945. On May 2, 1947, the bankruptcy proceedings were reopened, and on June 9, 1947, another trustee in bankruptcy was appointed. On December 15, 1947, the trustee sold all the right, title and interest of the bankrupt corporation in said property to plaintiff and executed a deed therefor in favor of plaintiff.

On March 15, 1948, plaintiff commenced this action to quiet title to the property. In the complaint it is alleged that plaintiff is the owner of and in possession of said property; and that defendants claim some title or interest in the property but the defendants have no title or interest therein. Defendants in their answer deny those allegations, except that they admit that defendant Ida W. Unruh claims some title and interest in the property; they allege that Ida W. Unruh is the owner of and in possession of the property, and that plaintiff has no title or interest therein. As affirmative defenses, they allege that the cause of action is barred by sections 3521 and 3725 of the Revenue and Taxation Code.

The court found, among other things, that plaintiff is the owner, in possession and entitled to possession of the property; that "from Nov. 4, 1927 and until Dec. 15, 1947, when the said real property was sold to the plaintiff by the trustee in Bankruptcy * * *, the said real property was in the custody of the Court, and the said Fred R. Salter [purchaser at the tax sale] acquired no right, title or interest in or to the said real property, and the defendants acquired no right, title or interest" therein by reason of the conveyance by Fred R. Salter to Ida W. Unruh; and that the cause of action is not barred by either section 3521 or section 3725 of the Revenue and Taxation Code. Judgment was rendered quieting title in plaintiff on the condition that "plaintiff reimburse defendants, repaying to them the amount of taxes, penalties and costs expended by them, determined by the Court to be in the amount of $1728.51." Defendants appeal from the judgment.

Appellants contend that the cause of action is barred under the provisions of sections 3521 and 3725 of the Revenue and Taxation Code. Section 3521 provides that: "A proceeding based on an alleged invalidity or irregularity of any deed to the State for taxes or of any proceedings leading up to the deed can only be commenced within one year after the date of recording of the deed to the State in the county recorder's office * * *." Section 3725 provides that: "A proceeding based on alleged invalidity or irregularity of any proceedings instituted under this chapter can only be commenced within one year after the date of execution of the tax collector's deed." Plaintiff (respondent) asserts, in substance, that those sections are not applicable to the present case. He argues that the tax sales were made while the property was in the custody of the federal court in bankruptcy proceedings, and that therefore such sales were void.

[1, 2] Upon an adjudication of bankruptcy the United States District Court acquires exclusive authority and control over all property of the bankrupt. Manter v. Howard, 94 Cal.App.2d 404, 408, 210 P.2d 880; Wells v. California Tomato Juice, Inc., 47 Cal.App.2d 634, 636, 118 P.2d 916; Loeffler v. Wright, 13 Cal.App. 224, 230, 109 P. 269. It was stated in the Manter case, supra, 94 Cal.App.2d at page 408, 210 P.2d at page 882, that: "'The filing of the petition [bankruptcy] is an assertion of jurisdiction with a view to the determination of the status of the bankrupt and a settlement and distribution of his estate. This jurisdiction is exclusive within the field defined by the law, and is so far in rem that the estate is regarded as in custodia legis from the filing of the petition.'" Such jurisdiction extends "to the adjudication of questions respecting the title" to the property, Ex Parte Baldwin, 291 U.S. 610, 616, 54 S.Ct. 551, 554, 78 L.Ed. 1020, which title is vested in the trustee in bankruptcy, Nuckolls v. Bank of California, 10 Cal.2d 266, 274, 74 P.2d 264, 114 A.L.R. 708, who has actual or constructive possession of said property. See In re Canyon Pipe Line Co., D.C., 39 F.Supp. 233, 235. The trustee in bankruptcy, however, takes the property of the bankrupt "subject to all such liens as would have been enforceable against it in the hands of the bankrupt himself", In re Knox-Powell-Stockton Co., 9 Cir., 100 F.2d 979, 982, but the owner of a lien may not institute proceedings in a state court to enforce it without permission of the bankruptcy court. Wells v. California Tomato Juice, Inc., 47 Cal.App. 2d 634, 636, 118 P.2d 916; Straton v. New, 283 U.S. 318, 51 S.Ct. 465, 75 L.Ed. 1060.

In Re Eppstein, 8 Cir., 156 F. 42, 17 L. R.A.,N.S., 465, certain real property belonging to a bankrupt corporation was sold for taxes prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, but title and possession remained in the bankrupt, and these passed to the trustee upon his qualification. After the period of redemption had passed and while the property was in the custody and control of the court of bankruptcy, the holder of the tax sale certificate, without leave of that court, obtained a tax deed from the county treasurer. The court held therein that a court of bankruptcy may require those who assert title to property which had rightfully come into its possession and control as part of the bankrupt's estate, to present their claims to that court. It was stated therein, 156 F. at page 43: "We do not mean that property in the course of administration under the bankruptcy act is exempt from taxation, or freed from tax liens or claims theretofore fastened upon it * * * but that it is in custodia legis, and that any act interfering with the court's possession, or with its power of control and disposal, and done without its sanction, is void."

In the case of Dayton v. Stanard, 241 U.S. 588, 36 S.Ct. 695, 60 L.Ed. 1190, sales of land for taxes and special assessments, which land belonged to a bankrupt estate, were held to be invalid because the sales were made without permission of the federal court.

another by a purported sale or otherwise." Since the state had acquired no title to the property, it had no title to convey to the purchaser at the tax sale. As was stated in DeFlon v. Van Lue, 83 Cal.App.2d 288, 290, 188 P.2d 301, 302, "'The state cannot convey title that it does not possess.'" The trial court properly found that the defendants herein acquired no right, title or interest in the property by reason of the conveyance by the purchaser at the tax sale. Under such circumstances the cause of action was not barred by said sections of the Revenue and Taxation Code. See 3 A.L.R.2d pp. 893-908 for a discussion of the subject, "Necessity of consent of court to tax sale of property in custody of court * * * or trustee appointed by it."

PEOPLE v. OLIVERIO.

Cr. 4472.

Oct. 2, 1950.

Joseph Oliverio was convicted in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, William M. Byrne, J., of bookmaking, and he appealed from the judgment of conviction and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The District Court of Appeal, Wilson, J., held that the evidence sustained the conviction.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Gaming ⇐98(3)

Evidence sustained conviction for bookmaking. Pen.Code, § 337a, subd. 3.

2. Gaming ⇐73

Racing paraphernalia need not be found in possession of person charged with bookmaking to justify conviction, and person charged with bookmaking need only receive money as a wager on a race or purported race. Pen.Code, § 337a, subd. 3.

When circumstances shown by evidence reasonably justify conviction for bookmaking the conviction will not be disturbed by reviewing court. Pen.Code, § 337a, subd. 3.

Leland E. Zeman, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Norman H. Sokolow, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

WILSON, Justice.

The only point raised by appellant for a reversal of the judgment in this case is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain his conviction of bookmaking in violation of subdivision 3, section 337a [1] of the Penal Code.

Appellant presented a motion for a new trial which was denied, whereupon he was sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail. Execution of the sentence was suspended and he was placed on probation for a period of three years. He has appealed from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.[2]

1. Sec. 337a: "Every person, * * *
"3. Who * * * receives, holds, * * * or purports or pretends to receive, hold * * * any money * * * bet or wagered, or to be * * * bet or wagered, or offered for the purpose of being * * * bet or wagered, upon the result, or purported result, of any trial, or purported trial, or contest, or purported contest, of * * * speed * * * between * * * beasts, * * *
"Is punishable by imprisonment * * *."

2. Appellant's brief does not conform with Rule 15(a) of the Rules on Appeal, 22 Cal.2d 12, in that it is not prefaced by a topical index of its contents or by a table of authorities.

A statement of the evidence will demonstrate its sufficiency. A police officer had had appellant under observation for about three and a half weeks in a pool hall. On the date of arrest the officer had observed appellant for approximately an hour. The latter was approached from time to time by various people each one of whom had a conversation with him. Each would hand him a sum of money which he placed in his pocket, and he would then go to the pay telephone at the front of the room, dial a number and hold a short conversation. Appellant was approached by a person who said, "Give me Lurline; give me Jimmie John, five, one to place." This person handed appellant a sum of money which he placed in his pocket and went to the telephone. The officer moved close to the telephone and heard appellant say, "Jimmie John, one to place; and also, Lurline B, one to place." About ten minutes later a person approached appellant and asked, "What did my bet pay?" to which he replied, "Ten, ten," took money from his pocket and handed it to the person. The officer left the pool hall and went across the street to confer with his fellow officer. When he returned to the pool hall appellant had left. The latter was arrested subsequently as he was returning home. The National Scratch Sheet, dated the day of the above mentioned occurrence, was fixed in a cardboard sign to the left of the pay telephone which appellant would consult while holding his telephone conversations.

Another officer entered the pool hall, heard the telephone bell ring "at least a dozen times." He answered it and the names of horses were given to him in the succeeding conversations.

When appellant was arrested he was carrying $200 on his person. An officer consulted the scratch sheet in question and found that two horses named Jimmie John and Lurline B were running in the fifth race at Del Mar on that date.

[1] The evidence is sufficient to sustain the conviction, to establish the corpus delicti, and to prove the charge against appellant beyond a reasonable doubt. People v. Hoffman, 94 Cal.App.2d 379, 382, 210 P.2d 885 and cases there cited; People v. Woods, 35 Cal.2d 504, 218 P.2d 981.

[2, 3] It is not necessary that racing paraphernalia be found in the possession of the person charged with the crime of bookmaking. The only requirement is that he receive money as a wager on a race or a purported race. People v. Hoffman, supra. The evidence shows that appellant received money from a person who named two horses listed in the scratch sheet as being in a race at the Del Mar race track on the day in question. When the circumstances shown by the evidence reasonably justify the finding of guilt such finding will not be disturbed by the reviewing court. People v. Warnick, 86 Cal.App.2d 900, 903, 195 P.2d 552.

Appellant's reliance upon People v. Banks, 39 Cal.App.2d 164, 102 P.2d 818, is in vain. We pointed out in People v. Hoffman, supra, 94 Cal.App.2d at page 382, 210 P.2d 885, the inapplicability of that decision in a case where the evidence is similar to that above outlined, and further that the appellate court assumed the prerogative of the jury, weighed the evidence and accorded belief to the testimony of witnesses that the trial court had disbelieved. In People v. Woods 35 Cal.2d 504, 218 P.2d 981, the Banks case was specifically disapproved insofar as it is in conflict with evidence of the character presented in the Woods case.

Judgment and order denying new trial affirmed.

BOWDEN et al. v. HEATON et al.

Civ. 7697.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Sept. 30, 1950.

Hearing Denied Nov. 27, 1950.

Action by Lottie Bowden and Clara Mitchell against Jennison Heaton and Beulah F. Heaton to quiet title to certain property, wherein defendants filed answer and cross-complaint to quiet title in themselves. The Superior Court, Humboldt County, Delos A. Mace, J., entered a decree quieting plaintiffs' title on ground of adverse possession and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Adams, P. J., held that the evidence adduced by plaintiffs had sufficiently satisfied all the necessary requirements to establish the title in plaintiffs by adverse possession.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and error ⇐930(1), 989

Presumptions favor judgment of trial court, and only province of appellate court is to determine whether in its most favorable aspect there is evidence to support decision of trial court.

2. Adverse possession ⇐13

Elements required to be established to constitute adverse possession are that the possession was by actual occupation, open and notorious, and not clandestine, that it was hostile to title of one claiming to be true owner, that it was held under claim of title, that it was continuous and uninterrupted five years prior to commencement of action, and that claimant paid all taxes levied or assessed against land.

In action to quiet title brought in 1945, evidence that prior owners took possession of land in 1937 on issuance to them of commissioner's certificate, that deed was issued to them in 1938, that they had pastured 200 head of sheep on land and had occasionally lived on place, that place was posted with signs on all gates and locks were put on gates and no trespassing signs were posted on premises and that they had paid all taxes, was sufficient to establish title in prior owners by adverse possession.

Marcel E. Cerf, Robinson & Leland, San Francisco, for appellants.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiffs, Lottie Bowden and Clara Mitchell, about January 31, 1945, filed an action claiming to be owners of some 800 acres of land in Humboldt County, and seeking to quiet their title thereto. Numerous defendants were named, but as the only defendants concerned with this appeal are Jennison Heaton and his wife, Beulah F. Heaton, further reference to the others may be omitted.

The Heatons filed an answer and a cross-complaint setting up ownership of some 600 acres of the property in themselves, and seeking to quiet title as against plaintiffs. The latter replied to the cross-complaint, and the issues created were tried by the court, sitting without a jury, and resulted in a decree quieting plaintiffs' title on the ground that plaintiffs, under color of title, had taken possession of the property, and by adverse possession for more than the statutory period had acquired an unassailable title as against the Heatons.

The evidence in the case shows that plaintiffs were owners of the property in controversy prior to June 1, 1926, at which time they leased it, with an option to purchase. The lease interest eventually became vested in Benbow Company, a corporation, which company, about June 1, 1926, executed a trust deed to Mercantile Trust Company which did not include the property in controversy, but did include "all executed contracts for the sale and purchase of any other real property covered by this indenture, whether same be a part of the property herein specifically described or such real property as shall hereafter be acquired by the company." On April 16, 1928, plaintiffs, in execution of the option to sell, deeded the property to Benbow Company, taking, in payment therefor, promissory notes to the amount of $16,375, secured by a mortgage on the property conveyed, said mortgage being recorded June 22, 1928. In June, 1933, one Wilson succeeded the original trustee under the trust deed. On September 5, 1933, Wilson executed a deed to F. H. Woll and F. K. Clelland, which included the 800 acres of the property conveyed by plaintiffs to Benbow Company. Woll and Clelland executed to Jennison Heaton, on September 24, 1934, a deed apparently for but 600 acres of the original 800 acres, upon which the Benbow Company had constructed an airport, which deed was recorded August 3, 1936.

On October 10, 1933, payment of the purchase notes executed by Benbow Company not having been made, plaintiffs instituted foreclosure proceedings, naming a large number of defendants. Jennison Heaton was included as "Jennison Heaton, a corporation," and, though Beulah Heaton was not at first named as a defendant, she was thereafter, by an amendment of the complaint allowed by the court, made a defendant, was served with summons September 11, 1936, and defaulted.

A decree of foreclosure of plaintiffs' mortgage was entered December 16, 1936, and the property was sold to plaintiffs on May 22, 1937, at which time a certificate was issued to them. The property was not redeemed, and on or about May 22, 1938, a deed was issued to plaintiffs. They took possession of the land when the certificate was issued, and, as found by the trial court, it was thereafter held by them in actual possession, openly and notoriously and under claim of right. They paid all taxes assessed against said property, beginning with back taxes from 1932 on.

It appears from the record that defendants sought in the lower court to have judgment entered on the pleadings because of what they claimed was an admission by plaintiffs that defendants were the owners of the property. This was denied by the court which pointed out that plaintiffs had elsewhere in their pleadings denied defendants' ownership. It was also contended in the lower court that defendants' chain of title was superior to that of plaintiffs because the trust deed carried title to after-acquired property, that plaintiffs' deed to Benbow Corporation brought the property into the trust, and that the purchase-money mortgage executed by the Benbow Company to plaintiffs was secondary and subordinate to the provisions of the trust deed. The trial court ruled to the contrary, citing Civil Code, sec. 2898; Hawkins v. Harlan, 68 Cal. 236, 9 P. 108; 25 A.L.R. 92; 36 Am.Jur. 810; but it also held that the argument was irrelevant since plaintiffs had established title by adverse possession. The same arguments are made on this appeal, but since the judgment of the court below is based upon adverse possession, only that phase of appellants' asserted ground for reversal need be considered here.

[1] Regarding the finding of the trial court that plaintiffs acquired title by adverse possession, appellants contend that there was a failure of proof on this behalf. However, on appeal the presumptions favor the judgment, and our only province is to determine whether, in its most favorable aspect, there is evidence to support the decision of the trial court.

[2] Elements required to be established to constitute adverse possession, as set forth in 1 Cal. Jur., sec. 22, p. 522, are that the possession was by actual occupation, open and notorious, and not clandestine; that it was hostile to the title of one claiming to be the true owner; that it was held under claim of title; that it was continuous and uninterrupted for five years prior to the commencement of the action; and that claimant paid all taxes levied or assessed against the land. Also see Meier v. Meier, 71 Cal.App.2d 502, 505–506, 162 P.2d 950; Posey v. Bay Point Realty Co., 214 Cal. 708, 711–712, 7 P.2d 1020; Lundy v. Lakin, 96 Cal.App.2d 221, 215 P.2d 61.

tion, open and notorious, and was hostile to any claims of defendants. Testimony given by Mrs. Bowden was that plaintiffs went into possession on the issuance to her and her daughter of the commissioner's certificate on May 22, 1937, that they then hired a Mr. Metcalf and his wife, who lived on the place, to run the premises, and plaintiffs put some 200 head of sheep on the land to pasture; that from August, 1938, until July, 1942, a Mr. Marshall ran the place for them on a share basis; that they then leased the property to a Mr. James who later conveyed his lease to a Mr. Gamlon, who continued in possession under the lease; that plaintiffs occasionally lived on the place part of the time, as the house was furnished; that the place was posted with signs on all of the gates, including those into the airport; locks were put on gates entering the property, and metal "no trespassing" signs were posted on them; that a portion of the land was leased to and used by the Campfire Girls for five years, for camping purposes, from 1940 on; that their possession has never been questioned by any one; and that she wrote Heaton about the time of the foreclosure asking him if he would like to pay the balance due on the mortgage and take the property over, but he never replied.

Clara Mitchell corroborated her mother's testimony regarding signs, and locks and chains on the gates. She testified that she took wood from the property; that she never saw a plane on the airport; and that no one ever questioned their right of occupancy of or title to the property.

Defendants did not appear at the trial, but rested their case upon the record title. Their only witness was their attorney who testified that he landed his plane on the airfield in 1941, and that in 1942 he took down a sign near the airport; that in 1939 he posted one reading "Keep out, J. Heaton, owner"; but he gave no testimony of doing so under directions from or by authority of the Heatons, or that in taking the sign from a gate he so acted.

We are satisfied that the evidence adduced by plaintiffs justifies the conclusion of the trial court, and sufficiently satisfies all necessary requirements to establish title in plaintiffs by adverse possession, even though defendants' contention that their chain of title established title in themselves were conceded—which we hold need not be determined in this action.

ROSENKRANZ et ux. v. PELLIN et al.

Civ. 17516.

Sept. 26, 1950.

Hearing Denied Nov. 20, 1950.

Action by Aaron Rosenkranz and Selda Rosenkranz, husband and wife, against O. H. Pellin and others for unlawful detainer. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Wilbur C. Curtis, J., entered judgment for plaintiffs for possession of the property, $500 damages and $150 attorney's fees and the named defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that evidence sustained finding that defendant Pellin was in possession of the premises during month of April, 1949, although lease was cancelled by plaintiffs as of March 31, 1949.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Landlord and tenant ⇐80(3)

The possession of the subtenant, in so far as landlord is concerned, is that of tenant.

2. Landlord and tenant ⇐291(13)

In action for unlawful detainer, where lease was terminated by landlord as of March 31, 1949, and subtenant of defendant assignee of lease testified he was in possession of premises to day of trial April 29, 1949, evidence was sufficient to sustain finding that defendant was in possession during month of April, 1949.

3. Landlord and tenant ⇐291(13)

In action for unlawful detainer, where plaintiff owner of property testified that its reasonable rental value was $500 a month, such evidence was sufficient to sustain finding of $500 as reasonable rental value of property.

4. Landlord and tenant ⇐95

Generally a sale by a lessor of realty during an unexpired term does not of itself abrogate lease and its effect is to grant all right of original lessor to grantee of reversion and grantee then becomes landlord by operation of law and tenant becomes a tenant of grantee of reversion. Civ. Code, § 821.

5. Landlord and tenant ⇐79(2)

A lessee is under duty to his lessor to perform, covenants of lease and assignee who assumes a lease binds himself on those covenants.

6. Landlord and tenant ⇐79(2)

Where lease provided that lessee would vacate premises within 60 days from date of notice in event lessors exercised their option to cancel lease and provided that lessee agreed to pay lessors a reasonable attorney's fee in event an action was filed to compel performance of terms and conditions of lease or to terminate it, and thereafter plaintiffs purchased premises from lessors and lessee assigned his interest in lease to defendant who assumed lease and agreed to be bound by its terms, defendant was bound by covenants of lease.

8. Courts ⇐122

Where complaint in unlawful detainer action alleged reasonable rental value of property to be $500 a month, and prayed damages for rent and that damages be trebled, action was within jurisdiction of Superior Court. Code Civ. Proc. § 89(d).

David A. Matlin, Los Angeles, for appellant.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal by defendant O. H. Pellin from a judgment for plaintiffs in an action of unlawful detainer.

On February 28, 1947, the Bicks and Lassars were the owners of three parcels of real property in Los Angeles. The property was unimproved except for a two-story house on one of the lots. On that date they executed a written lease of the property to Rosner for three years. The lease contained a provision by which the lessors reserved the right to cancel the lease at any time during its term, "If all or any portion of this property is sold or if a major building is to be erected on any portion of said property, the Lessors may, on giving the Lessee sixty (60) days notice in writing cancel this lease, and the Lessee will vacate said premises within sixty (60) ———from date of such notice and release the Lessors from all obligation under the terms of this lease." Rosner took possession.

On September 17, 1947, the lessee, with the approval of the lessors, assigned his interest in the lease to appellant Pellin, who, in writing, assumed the lease and agreed to be bound by its terms.

On October 21, 1948, Pellin sublet the property to Von Benzonheim. Prior to subletting, Pellin had purchased the two-story house on the property. After the subletting, he continued to own and maintain the building on the property.

On January 26, 1949, plaintiffs purchased the real property but not the building. On that date the original lessors and plaintiffs gave notice in writing to Pellin cancelling the lease as of March 31, 1949, and demanded possession on that date. Pellin did not remove the building from the property and Von Benzonheim did not vacate the premises, hence this action.

The court found that during April, 1949, Von Benzonheim was in possession, and that Pellin was in possession as assignee of the lease and, in addition, as the owner of the building maintained by him on the property, and that the reasonable rental value of the property was $500 a month. Judgment was for possession of the property, $500 damages, and $150 attorney's fees.

Appellant claims that: 1) there is no competent evidence to support the finding that Pellin was in possession during the month of April, 1949; 2) there is no competent evidence to support the finding that the reasonable rental value of the property was $500 a month; 3) there was no privity of contract between plaintiffs and Pellin warranting the award of attorney's fees; 4) the superior court had no jurisdiction of the subject of the action.

[1, 2] Code of Civil Procedure section 1161, in pertinent part, provides that a tenant of real property, for a term less than life, is guilty of unlawful detainer "[w]hen he continues in possession, in person or by subtenant, of the property, or any part thereof, after the expiration of the term for which it is let to him, without the permission of his landlord, or the successor in estate of his landlord, if any there be." The possession of the subtenant, insofar as the landlord is concerned, is that of the tenant. 15 Cal.Jur. 766, sec.18. Von Benzonheim testified he was in possession of the premises from January, 1949, to the day of trial, April 29, 1949. We understand appellant to concede that the building remained on the property during April. The evidence is sufficient to support the finding that Pellin was in possession during the month of April, 1949.

[3] Plaintiff Aaron Rosenkranz, owner of the property, testified that its reasonable rental value was $500 a month. This evidence is sufficient to support the finding as to the rental value of the property. 5 Cal.Jur. 10-Yr. Supp. 713, sec. 278, and cases there cited.

The original lessee assigned the lease to Pellin. Pellin agreed in writing with plaintiffs' predecessors in interest, Bicks and Lassars, to be bound by and comply with all the terms, covenants and agreements in the lease. Respondents purchased the property January 26, 1949. On that date the grantors and grantees served written notices upon Pellin and Von Benzonheim cancelling the lease as of March 31, 1949.

[4-6] The general rule is that a sale by a lessor of real property during an unexpired term does not of itself abrogate the lease. Its effect is to grant all the rights of the original lessor to the grantee of the reversion. The grantee then becomes the landlord by operation of law and the tenant becomes a tenant of the grantee of the reversion. Upton v. Toth, 36 Cal.App. 2d 679, 684, 98 P.2d 515. Civil Code section 821 says that a person to whom any real property is transferred, upon which rent has been reserved, is entitled to the same remedies for recovery of rent and for nonperformance of any of the terms of the lease, as his grantor might have had. A lessee is under a duty to his lessor to perform the covenants of the lease. An assignee who assumes a lease binds himself to perform these covenants. Hartman Ranch Co. v. Associated Oil Co., 10 Cal.2d 232, 245, 73 P.2d 1163. Pellin was bound to plaintiffs by the covenants of the lease which provided that the lessee would vacate the premises within 60 days from date of notice in the event the lessors exercised their option to cancel the lease. He was also bound to respondent by the covenant of the lease by which the lessee agreed to pay the lessors a reasonable attorney's fee in the event an action was filed to compel the performance of the terms and conditions of the lease or to terminate it.

[7, 8] Code of Civil Procedure section 89, subdivision (d), provides that the municipal court shall have original jurisdiction in all proceedings in unlawful detainer "where the rental value is three hundred dollars ($300) or less per month, and where the whole amount of damages claimed is three thousand dollars ($3,000) or less." In 1949 the respective amounts were increased from $200 to $300 per month, and from $2000 to $3000. Stats. 1949, ch. 1519, sec. 1. The amount sued for is the test of jurisdiction. Harris v.

Seidell, 1 Cal.App.2d 410, 416, 36 P.2d 1104. In the present case the complaint alleged that the reasonable rental value of the property is $500 a month, and prayed damages for the rent and that the damages be trebled. It was expressly held in Cook v. Winklepleck, 16 Cal.App.2d Supp. 759, 763, 59 P.2d 463, 465, that an action of unlawful detainer involving property having a rental value of "more than $200" a month is within the jurisdiction of the superior court.

No. 14415.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 28, 1950.

Rehearing Granted Oct. 28, 1950.

See 223 P.2d 505.

Granville P. Combs sued Catherine Ritter for an accounting of rents and profits received by defendant from an apartment house owned as joint tenants by plaintiff and by defendant who was plaintiff's former wife. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Alfred J. Fritz, J., rendered a judgment for plaintiff for $326.10, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that evidence did not justify implying an agreement whereunder defendant was to be paid for her services in managing the apartment after separation of the parties, and that defendant was entitled to be compensated to the extent rents received exceeded rents which would have been received had apartments been rented unfurnished rather than furnished with defendant's furniture.

Judgment reversed and case remanded.

1. Tenancy in common ⇐31

In the absence of an agreement, express or implied, a cotenant is not entitled to compensation for services rendered in the care and management of the cotenancy property.

2. Joint tenancy ⇐8

That husband before separation from his wife received an allowance for serving as janitor for apartment building owned by himself and his wife as joint tenants would not justify implying agreement that after separation wife was to be paid for her services in managing apartment house.

3. Partnership ⇐83

Generally a partner is not entitled to compensation for services rendered by him to a partnership.

4. Partnership ⇐83

An agreement may be implied whereunder a partner is entitled to compensation for services rendered by him to partnership.

5. Partnership ⇐122

The existence or nonexistence of an implied agreement whereunder a partner is to be entitled to compensation for services rendered by him to partnership is for determination of court from facts and circumstances of case.

6. Appeal and error ⇐996

Inferences of fact which support conclusion of court as to existence or nonexistence of an implied agreement whereunder a partner is entitled to compensation for services rendered by him to partnership will not be disturbed on appeal even though trial court might with equal propriety have found the other way.

7. Joint tenancy ⇐8

Fact that after husband and wife separated wife managed apartment house owned by them as joint tenants did not justify implying an agreement whereunder wife was to be paid for such services.

8. Joint tenancy ⇐8

A joint tenant of apartment house whose furniture was used in furnishing apartments was entitled to be compensated to extent the rent received from apartments exceeded rent which would have been received had apartments been rented unfurnished, notwithstanding absence of an agreement between joint tenants that a charge could be made for use of furniture.

Edmund J. Holl, San Francisco, for appellant.

Garton D. Keyston, San Francisco (William S. Sparks, San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

BRAY, Justice.

Plaintiff received judgment for $326.10 in an action for an accounting of the rents and profits received by defendant from an apartment house owned as joint tenants by plaintiff and defendant, his former wife. Contending that this did not constitute an equal division of the net profits, plaintiff appealed.

Contentions:

That neither the evidence nor the law justifies an allowance to a joint tenant (1) for services as manager of the tenancy property; (2) for rental for furniture and furnishings of one joint tenant used in the tenancy property.

Facts.

Plaintiff and defendant were married in 1928, at which time defendant owned the apartment house in question as her separate property. In 1938, at plaintiff's request, defendant, without any monetary consideration, executed a joint tenancy deed of the property to plaintiff and herself as joint tenants. In November, 1944, defendant obtained an interlocutory decree of divorce. There was no property settlement, nor disposition of the property in the decree. Prior to the separation of the parties, all rents from the apartments, and the salaries of the parties (both of whom were working) were deposited in a common account from which all expenses were paid. The action was for an accounting from November 4, 1944, the date of separation of the parties, to February 15, 1949, the date when the apartment house was sold. Except for the two items herein discussed, no objection was made to the accounts submitted by defendant. The court approved these accounts and allowed defendant $50 per month (or a total of $2050) for services as manager, and $100 per month (or a total of $4100) for the rental of furniture used in the apartments, which furniture was her separate property. After deducting these allowances there was a net profit of $652.21 of which the court awarded plaintiff half, or $326.10.

Is Defendant Entitled to Compensation as Manager?

[1] The rule is clear, and defendant concedes, that in the absence of an agreement, express or implied, a cotenant is not entitled to compensation for services rendered in the care and management of the cotenancy property. Goodenow v. Ewer, 16 Cal. 461, 472, 76 Am.Dec. 540; Raun v. Reynolds, 18 Cal. 275, 291; Freeman on Cotenancy and Partition, 2d ed., 1886, § 260; 33 C.J. 910; 48 C.J.S., Joint Tenancy, § 8, p. 931; 7 Cal.Jur. 349. "It appears to be a settled rule that a cotenant is not ordinarily entitled to compensation for services rendered in managing, operating, or taking care of the common property in the absence of an express agreement or a mutual understanding that the services should be paid for. An exception to this rule exists where one cotenant performs services which neither the law nor the relation of cotenancy imposes upon him. But leasing the property, collecting rentals, and looking after repairs do not fall within the exception." 14 Am.Jur. § 30, pp. 98-99.

Defendant testified that there had been no discussion with plaintiff on the subject of pay for her services. She concedes that there was no express agreement. She contends, however, that the evidence supports an implied agreement. The court made no finding as to an agreement, either express or implied, but allowed defendant $50 per month for her services. Defendant contends that thereby the court impliedly found that there was such an implied agreement and that the evidence supports such a finding. We have carefully examined the record and find no evidence to justify such a claim. The two matters which defendant claims give rise to an implied agreement are (1) the income tax reports filed by plaintiff prior to the separation and (2) the fact of the services rendered.

[2] 1. Prior to the separation plaintiff had taken a deduction of $240 a year for "janitor services" in the joint income tax reports. This was with the consent and knowledge of defendant. There was no janitor; plaintiff stated "I was the janitor," and "I was allowing that for myself." The record does not show whether plaintiff actually received this sum personally, or whether it was merely a bookkeeping item for tax purposes only. Assuming, however, that plaintiff did receive such an allowance while the parties were living together, it affords no basis for implying an agreement that, after the separation, defendant was to be paid for her services.

[3-7] 2. Defendant testified and the court found that defendant "managed and operated said apartment house, and laundered all curtains, cleaned and washed the woodwork and stoves, cared for and operated the furnace and refrigeration unit, made minor plumbing repairs, collected rents, received and remedied complaints of tenants, paid all bills in connection with the operation of said apartment house, and did all things necessary in operating said apartment house * * *." Defendant contends that the fact of these services raises an implied agreement to pay for them. She has cited no case, nor have we been able to find any, supporting this theory. Cases like Dugan v. Forster, 104 Cal.App. 117, 285 P. 384, Neilsen v. Holmes, 82 Cal.App. 2d 315, 186 P.2d 197, cited by defendant, do not sustain the contention. They state the general rule that a partner is not entitled to any compensation for services rendered by him to a partnership. They then state that an agreement may be implied and that the existence or nonexistence of such a contract is a question for the court to determine from the facts and circumstances of the case, and that the inferences of fact which support the court's conclusions will not be disturbed on appeal, even though the trial court might with equal propriety have found the other way. There is no question but that this is the law and that the rule as to cotenants is the same as to partners in this respect. However, in these cases there were other circumstances than the mere fact of service alone. Thus in the Dugan case, the salaries of the defendants were entered in the books and the plaintiff did not claim that he was not aware of the fact that they were charging salaries. In the Neilsen case there was testimony that there was an express agreement to pay salaries.

In Thompson v. Salmon, 18 Cal. 632, also cited by defendant, the plaintiff was employed by his cotenants in an oral agreement to take charge of and sell their land in small tracts, and to receive a commission. During his employment he rendered five different accounts current, showing the amount of sales, his disbursements for taxes, and costs paid in certain suits against squatters. After the rendition of these accounts he brought suit against his cotenants for services in bringing twenty-seven suits against squatters, hunting up witnesses and other matters. The opinion states that the point of dispute was whether the commission on sales was to cover all services rendered by him. The trial court found that it did not. On appeal, the only point passed on was whether the fact that in the accounts presented plaintiff had not included the charge now being made, precluded him from claiming payment of it thereafter. The court held that it did not.

As there is no evidence of an implied contract to pay defendant for her services, the allowance to her of $50 per month was improper.

Use of Furniture.

Prior to the institution of this action, plaintiff brought suit against defendant to acquire title to the furniture in the apartment house. In that action it was held that a small portion of the furniture was community property and that the bulk of the furniture was defendant's separate property. In this action the court found (and the finding is not challenged): "that the furniture and furnishings in said apartment house were owned exclusively by defendant save and excepting the stoves therein and several pieces of furniture and wall beds and equipment; that said stoves and several pieces of furniture and wall beds and equipment were owned by the parties hereto as tenants in common." The apartments were rented furnished. Defendant's counsel stated to the court (and this statement was not disputed in the trial court) that the difference in the rental value of all the apartments unfurnished and furnished was $120 per month. In her accounting defendant allowed $20 per month for the use of the community furniture and $100 per month to herself for the use of her separate furniture. No evidence was offered to contradict the reasonableness of this allocation or of the court's finding that it was reasonable. It is conceded that there was never any discussion between the parties concerning a charge for the use of the furniture. Plaintiff contends that in the absence of an agreement a cotenant may not charge for the use of his personal property in cotenancy business. This is not the law. The rule is well stated in Goodenow v. Ewer, supra, 16 Cal. 461, at page 472, 76 Am.Dec. 540: "He is also entitled to reasonable allowances, to be deducted from the rents, for the use of his individual property, when such use was required in order to let the premises themselves. It is not probable that he could have let the theater rooms, from time to time, as different theatrical companies required them, without, at the same time, letting the carpets, lamps, and scenery; and as these constituted his individual property, a reasonable allowance for them should be deducted from the rents received."

[8] In our case the apartments could not have been let as furnished apartments were it not for defendant's furniture. See also 7 Cal.Jur. 352-353. Here the rents were increased $100 per month because of defendant's furniture. She, therefore, is entitled to be compensated to that extent. This is in line with the general rule allowing compensation for repairs or improvements where made with the acquiescence of the other cotenants. See Freeman on Cotenancy and Partition, §§ 262, 279; 14 Am.Jur. 115, § 49. Plaintiff relies on three cases: Clement v. Duncan, 191 Cal. 209, 215 P. 1025, which held that a partner is not entitled without an agreement to interest on money advanced by him to the partnership. Carpenter v. Hathaway, 87 Cal. 434, 25 P. 549, involved an oral agreement of partnership in the buying and selling of certain lands. Defendant was to supply the money and plaintiff the services, the net profits to be equally divided. It was held that in arriving at the amount of the net profits, in the absence of an express agreement, defendant could not charge interest on the moneys invested. In Young v. Canfield's Estate, 33 Cal.App. 343, 164 P. 1134, an owner of land agreed to give another for his services one third of the net profits from the sale of the land. In a suit against the estate of the owner the trial court held that in determining what were the net profits on his investment the owner was entitled to interest. On appeal the higher court stated that the sole agreement between the parties was expressed in writing signed by the owner, and that the words "net profits" therein did not authorize a charge of interest. "The general rule is that the matter of the payment of interest must be made the subject of an express agreement, otherwise it cannot be charged * * *." 33 Cal. App. at page 345, 164 P. at page 1135. In view of the Goodenow case this rule cannot be held to extend to the use by a cotenancy of personal property where such use is required, as here. The allowance for use of defendant's furniture was proper.

The judgment is reversed, and the case remanded to the trial court to amend its findings of fact and conclusions of law as herein indicated, and to enter judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $1351.10.

In murder prosecution, prejudicial effect of statement of trial judge intimating that some one other than co-defendant, possibly defendant, hit decedent during an assault on decedent, was removed by statement of trial judge made following objection and discussion between counsel and court that "if I am mistaken I am mistaken".

8. Criminal law ⇐1035(3)

Where counsel for defendant charged with murder failed to timely object to an alleged prejudicial remark made by trial judge when counsel for defendant was cross-examining a witness, defendant could not assign the remark as error for first time on appeal.

In a criminal prosecution instructions are always to be given or refused with reference to facts introduced before jury.

10. Criminal law ⇐807(1)

In murder prosecution trial judge properly refused to give an instruction which was merely an argument to jury based solely upon defendant's version and valuation of facts.

Harold D. Hadley, Marysville, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, for respondent.

PEEK, Justice.

Appellant Wescott and his co-defendant Fehr were charged with the crime of murder, to which they both pleaded not guilty. At the conclusion of the prosecution's case Wescott moved for an advisory verdict and for a dismissal as to himself, both of which motions were denied. Following the jury's return of verdicts of guilty against both defendants, Wescott moved for a new trial and now appeals from the denial thereof as well as from his judgment of conviction.

The evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to the respondent shows that immediately prior to the crime decedent Henry McAnally and a friend William Patrick Noonan were sleeping along the levee near the city of Marysville. Noonan, according to his testimony, was awakened by a blow on the head. While endeavoring to protect himself from further blows he heard McAnally "hollering" for help. He then noticed two men standing over McAnally, beating him. It was too dark to identify the assailants. However, as one Johnson approached armed with an automobile crank they ran away and Noonan noticed that they both wore T shirts and that one had dark vertical stripes on it. He further stated at the trial that defendants were approximately the same size as his assailants. Two police officers testified to seeing the defendants near the scene of the crime on three different occasions. Both defendants made statements to the officers following their arrests a few days later. Appellant Wescott denied any knowledge of the crime. But he did take the officers to the home of a friend where he obtained a T shirt which he said he was wearing that night. His co-defendant Fehr implicated them both in the fatal assault. However, his statement, having been out of the presence of Wescott, was admitted only as to himself. The remaining evidence against defendants consisted of testimony of a doctor that McAnally died as a result of the beating he received, and the introduction of certain exhibits, among which was a pocket knife identified by Noonan as the one McAnally had prior to the assault, and which Fehr gave to the officers with the statement that it was given to him by Wescott. Also identified by Fehr was a club which he said he had used.

The evidence so summarized was all that the record contained at the time of appellant's motion for an advisory verdict. It is now his contention that the testimony of Noonan, which he characterizes as being "contrary to statements of both defendants" and as being "vague" and "contradictory", was the only evidence in the record that appellant struck McAnally and that therefore on the authority of Penal Code section 1118 and People v. Ward, 145 Cal. 736, 79 P. 448, such motion should have been granted. We cannot agree with this conclusion. The evidence at the time of the motion showed that Noonan and McAnally were attacked without provocation as a result of which the latter died. Noonan described the participation by two men in the beating of decedent. He described a part of the assailants' clothing and that the defendants were similar in size to the assailants. He further described the pocket knife owned by decedent and found in the possession of Fehr. Wescott himself admitted being in the vicinity of the crime but denied giving the knife to Fehr or that he knew anything about the assault, saying he was asleep on the levee.

[1-3] From our examination of the record we cannot say that there is an "absence of any substantial evidence as to some fact that the prosecution was bound to prove." People v. Jackson, 78 Cal.App. 442, 248 P. 1061, 1064. To justify an instruction directing a verdict of acquittal the evidence must be insufficient as a matter of law. People v. Bannon, 59 Cal.App. 50, 63, 209 P. 1029; People v. Curtis, 36 Cal. App.2d 306, 324, 98 P.2d 228. See also 8 Cal.Jur. 284. Thus, where, as here, there is evidence from which an inference of guilt is justified a case will not be taken from the jury because an inference of innocence might also be drawn therefrom. People v. Cox, 117 Cal.App. 254, 256, 3 P.2d 581.

[4] Appellant's next contention is that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the verdict. Here it must be noted that following the denial by the court of appellant's motion he took the stand in his own defense and admitted that his statements to the police, to the effect that he had not seen the fight, were incorrect, his reason for this being that having been in trouble once before he was afraid they would not believe him and that he wanted to first get the advice of counsel. He also testified that on the evening in question he had had quite a few drinks; that as he was following Fehr along the levee there was a sudden commotion and that he ran up ahead to see what was happening; that he noticed the decedent and Fehr struggling; that the man had a knife in his hand and he grabbed the man by the arm; that the man went limp and the knife he was trying to pry away came out of his hand.

His argument in support of such contention is principally predicated upon the weight of the evidence. In his reply brief, however, he endeavors to distinguish the case of People v. Le Grant, 76 Cal.App.2d 148, 172 P.2d 554, 557, which is strongly relied upon by the prosecution. In that case the evidence shows that the defendant Le Grant did not participate in the fatal fight but that during its progress kept people from attempting to stop it. The court, in rejecting the same argument as appellant makes herein, i. e. that the evidence shows no preconceived conspiracy or concert of action between the co-defendants as to any intended assault upon the victim, and that the evidence was also insufficient to show that Le Grant had participated directly or aided and abetted his co-defendant in the commission of the crime, stated: "The liability of a defendant for a criminal act is fixed by the provisions of sections 31 and 971, Penal Code, whereby all persons 'concerned' are principals, whether directly, or by aiding and abetting in its commission, and conspiracy or concert of action, comprehend nothing that is not included in the definition of 'who are principals'. (Citing cases.) One may aid and abet without having previously entered into a conspiracy to commit a crime. (Citing cases.)"

Thus, to sustain the conviction against Wescott there was no necessity that he be shown to have physically participated in the fight. And although the mere presence alone of appellant at the scene of the attack would be insufficient, nevertheless, as the court in the Le Grant case stated, it would be a "circumstance tending to support a finding that he is a principal." However, by his own statement, he aided Fehr by holding the decedent's arm and removing the knife from his hand. Thus, with full knowledge of Fehr's acts and that an assault was in progress and knowledge of the possible fatal consequences he held the arm of the deceased while Fehr struck him.

[5, 6] The rule is too well established to warrant citation of authority that the strength or weakness of the testimony and the credibility of the witnesses were matters solely within the province of the jury, and that if there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, to sustain its conclusion, a reviewing court will not interfere.

[7, 8] Appellant's next contention is that the trial court committed prejudicial error in two instances, first, by making certain statements during the course of defendant Fehr's testimony relative to the number of times he struck the decedent and the inference which the court drew therefrom that some one else also participated, and second, statements concerning what the court apparently felt was an attempt to impeach a witness upon an immaterial matter. It is true that the court's first comment did intimate that some one in addition to Fehr, possibly Wescott, hit the decedent. However, following objection to the comment and a discussion between counsel and the court, the judge stated: "If I am mistaken I am mistaken." While, as we have said, it was unnecessary to a conviction of appellant that he actually struck McAnally, nevertheless even if such were not the rule the latter comment of the court would remove the prejudicial effect, if any, from the statement. Additionally it may be said that the questioning of the witness by the court could well come within the rule stated in People v. Butterfield, 40 Cal.App.2d 725, 105 P.2d 628. See also People v. Buratti, 96 Cal.App.2d 417, 215 P.2d 500, and cases therein cited. The second comment which appellant attacks, "Let's move along. You can't impeach a witness on an immaterial matter. Let's get going", was made after counsel for defendant, in cross-examining the witness Noonan, read a portion of his statement which was not inconsistent with his testimony at that moment. No objection was made to the remark. Even if such statement was objectionable (which under the circumstances we doubt), appellant's counsel, having failed to timely object to the alleged prejudicial remark, cannot now assign it as error and raise it for the first time on appeal.

Appellant's final contention is that the court erred in failing to give the instruction proposed by him. The instruction is quite lengthy and no benefit would be served by quoting it at length. Suffice it to say that it was nothing more than an argument to the jury based wholly upon appellant's version and valuation of the facts.

[9, 10] In a criminal case instructions always are to be given or refused with reference to the facts introduced before the jury. People v. McCoy, 25 Cal.2d 177, 188, 153 P.2d 315. Thus it has been repeatedly held to be improper to give instructions which single out the testimony either of the defendant, or any other witness, and charge the jury with particular reference thereto. People v. McDonnel, 94 Cal.App.2d 885, 211 P.2d 885; People v. Harris, 128 Cal.App. 44, 16 P.2d 688.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

In re GALLIMORE'S ESTATE.

Civ. 14536.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 27, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 27, 1950.

Hearing Denied Nov. 20, 1950.

Proceeding in estate of Sue Gallimore, deceased, wherein Elizabeth Gray and two others, three of the four remaindermen of a testamentary trust created by the will of Sue Gallimore, petitioned for a termination of the trust prior to the time fixed for its termination in the trust instrument on the ground that all purposes of the trust had been fulfilled. Robert Gallimore, Jr., and two others responded as trustees, and Robert Gallimore, Jr., individually objected as the fourth remainderman. The Superior Court, Santa Clara County, John D. Foley, J., denied the petition to terminate, and the three petitioning remaindermen appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that trust could not be terminated on the ground that its purpose was accomplished over the objection of one of the four remaindermen.

Affirmed.

1. Trusts ⇐61(1)

A trust may not be terminated prior to time specified in trust instrument, over objection of a beneficiary, unless there is no possible purpose to be accomplished in continuing the trust.

2. Trusts ⇐61(1)

Where testamentary trust decree of distribution provided specified monthly payments to certain person for life, and payment of remainder of trust income to testator's sister-in-law and four remaindermen, and upon death of sister-in-law payment of net income to four remaindermen, survivor or survivors of them, and upon death of certain person and sister-in-law trust property would pass to four remaindermen, but three remaindermen acquired rights of certain person and sister-in-law, trust could not be terminated, on ground that its purpose was accomplished, over objection of the other remainderman.

Smith, Wool & Perren, Fred A. Wool, San Jose, for appellants.

Rea, Jacka & Frasse, San Jose, for respondents.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Three of the four remaindermen of a testamentary trust created by the will of Sue Gallimore petitioned for a termination of the trust prior to the time fixed for its termination in the trust instrument on the ground that all purposes of the trust had been fulfilled. One remainderman objected. The trial court denied the petition to terminate, and the three petitioning remainder-men appeal. There is no merit to the appeal.

Sue Gallimore died testate. Elizabeth Gray, John and Margaret Gallimore, the three appellants, and Robert Gallimore, Jr., the objector, were her four surviving nieces and nephews. All are the children of Nellie Gallimore, the sister-in-law of Sue. The final decree of distribution was entered in Sue's estate in December, 1939, and Sue's will, by which the testamentary trust was created, was made part of that decree. The decree of distribution, which has long since become final, provides that the residue of the estate is distributed to three named persons as trustees for the following purposes:

"(a) To pay to Gong Yuen, the sum of Thirty Dollars ($30.00) a month, as long as he shall live.

"(b) To pay the net income from this Trust, after the payment of said monthly sum to Gong Yuen, to Mrs. Nellie Gallimore, Elizabeth Gray, Robert Gallimore, Jr., John Gallimore and Margaret Gallimore, share and share alike, until the death of Nellie Gallimore.

"(c) Upon the death of Nellie Gallimore, said net income shall be paid to Elizabeth Gray, Robert Gallimore, Jr., John Gallimore and Margaret Gallimore, the survivor or survivors of them, share and share alike.

"(d) Upon the death of both Gong Yuen and Nellie Gallimore, all of said property shall belong to and become the property of Elizabeth Gray, Robert Gallimore, Jr., John Gallimore and Margaret Gallimore, share and share alike."

All of the parties named in the testamentary trust are over the age of majority and fully competent. The trust estate presently consists of securities valued at $72,500 and a parcel of real property inventoried at $8,500. The real property produces an income of $300 per year, and the total expenses of maintaining the property amounts to about $400 a year. The various accountings by the trustees show that the total income produced by the trust estate has only been sufficient to pay all the costs of administration and the payments due to Gong Yuen under paragraph "(a)". In the past seven years no payments of income have been made to the income beneficiaries under clause "(b)". Nellie and Gong are still alive.

In February and March of 1949, the three appellants who are three of the four remaindermen named in paragraph "(d)", being all of the remaindermen with the exception of Robert Gallimore, Jr., acquired all of the rights of Gong Yuen and Nellie Gallimore in the trust. These three remaindermen then disclaimed all rights of their assignors in the trust. Thereupon, appellants, contending that there was no further purpose to be served by continuing the trust, demanded that the trustees terminate it and distribute the corpus to the four remaindermen. The trustees refused to comply, and refused to petition the probate court for instructions. Appellants then petitioned for an order terminating the trust and distributing the corpus. At the hearing, Robert Gallimore, Jr., one of the remaindermen, objected. After a hearing, the trial court denied the petition, and the three petitioning remaindermen appeal.

The appellants contended before the trial court and now urge that:

1. The essential and only purpose of the trust was to provide for the payment of income to Gong and Nellie, because as soon as the duty to distribute income to them terminated, the corpus was to be distributed to the trustor's four nephews and nieces.

2. By virtue of the assignments to the appellants by Gong and Nellie, and their disclaimers, no further purpose of the trust could be achieved.

3. The remaining rights of the nephews and nieces to receive income are identical with their rights as remaindermen. Hence, their rights have merged and the trust has terminated.

4. There is nothing in the trust instrument which indicates an intention of the trustor that the trust should continue until the deaths of Nellie and Gong.

Robert Gallimore, Jr., at the hearing, urged several reasons why the trust should not be terminated. The trial court recognized that the specific reasons assigned by Robert might not be sound, but concluded that there was a very good reason why the trust should not be terminated. In this connection the court, in a memorandum opinion, stated: "It may be to his [Robert's] pecuniary advantage if the trust is allowed to continue until the time specified therein for its termination. The trust provisions and particularly the survivorship provision with regard to the payment of income upon the death of Nellie Gallimore [Clause "(c)"] indicate the possibility of this advantage to Robert Gallimore, Jr. if the trust is allowed to continue. In this situation it cannot be said that the termination of the trust at this time would not prejudice the rights of Robert Gallimore, Jr. as an income beneficiary."

It seems to us quite clear that the reason assigned by the trial court for not terminating the trust is sound. Obviously, Robert Gallimore, Jr., if he should survive Nellie during the lifetime of Gong, and should survive the other nephews and nieces, would be entitled, as such survivor, under Clause "(c)", to all of the income above that paid to Gong. By now terminating the trust he would lose that important and prospective right.

[1] Much has been written on the general subject as to whether a trust whose purposes have been fully performed may be terminated, over the objection of a beneficiary, prior to the time specified in the trust. Generally, under such circumstances, it is stated that a trust will not be terminated. 4 Bogert on Trusts and Trustees, Part 2, § 1002, page 491; 3 Scott on Trusts, pp. 1833, 1865, §§ 337, 340; 59 Harv.L.Rev. pp. 157, 201. It is true that there is authority to the effect that if the purposes of the trust have been fully accomplished, the trust will be terminated even if some of the beneficiaries object. 3 Scott on Trusts, p. 1865, § 340. That rule will never be applied, however, where the rights of any beneficiary will be adversely affected by the termination. The rule is that all of the beneficiaries must consent to a termination unless there is no possible purpose to be accomplished in continuing the trust. See 123 A.L.R. pp. 1427, 1449; 45 A.L.R. pp. 743, 749.

[2] The argument of appellants is that this case is one where no purpose can be served by continuing the trust. But this contention disregards Clause "(c)" of the trust. This is not a case where the interests of the holders of the beneficial life interests have merged with the vested remainder interests. Robert Gallimore, Jr., has a contingent survivorship interest in the income of the trust under Clause "(c)". This being so, the trial court properly refused to terminate the trust over his objections.

Civ. 7684.

Sac. 6029.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Sept. 25, 1950.

Hearing Denied Nov. 20, 1950.

Joe Nuland and Alva Leo Archer brought suit against S. R. Pruyn and J. R. Busby for an order dissolving alleged partnership, on ground that alleged partnership had been wrongfully terminated by defendants, for damages for breach of agreement to create alleged partnership and for an account. The Superior Court of Solano County, Harlow V. Greenwood, J., rendered a judgment for the plaintiffs, and the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, J., on rehearing, held that agreement between the parties was ambiguous as to whether relationship created was that of partnership or of employment, and that therefore evidence was admissible to show the intent of the parties, that evidence was insufficient to establish a wrongful dissolution of the alleged partnership, and that Superior Court committed prejudicial error in determining rights of the parties on theory that there had been a wrongful dissolution.

Judgment reversed and new trial ordered on all issues.

Prior opinion 216 P.2d 526.

1. Appeal and error ⇐1008(3)

Whether a contract is in any of terms ambiguous or uncertain is a matter of determination in the first instance by the trial court, and, if it is found so to be, it is primarily the duty of the trial court to construe it, after a full opportunity afforded the parties to produce evidence of the facts, circumstances, and conditions surrounding its execution, and the conduct of the parties relative thereto.

2. Appeal and error ⇐1008(3)

Where a writing is so uncertain that either of two constructions urged might be sustained, it is not within the functions of a court of review to declare that the interpretation given by the trial court should be supplanted by the other construction of which the instrument is susceptible.

3. Contracts ⇐175(2)

Contract providing that defendants owned radio repair and service business, that plaintiffs represented that they were expert radio service and repairmen, that defendants desired plaintiffs to devote their services to the business, that equipment and stock was reasonably worth $2,500, that 50 per cent of gross receipts of business would be deposited in bank account until defendants received $2,500 as repayment, that thereafter a fund of at least $1,000 was to be maintained, and that excess was to be withdrawn and divided equally between the parties as dividends, was ambiguous as to whether relationship of parties was a partnership or merely one of employment, and evidence was admissible to aid in interpretation.

4. Partnership ⇐328(3)

In action for an order dissolving alleged partnership because of alleged wrongful termination of alleged partnership by defendants, for damages for breach of agreement to create alleged partnership, and for an accounting, evidence was insufficient to sustain finding that defendants wrongfully terminated alleged partnership, and it was reversible error to render accounting on theory that alleged partnership was wrongfully dissolved.

5. Partnership ⇐75, 300

If partnership was by notice rightfully dissolved by defendants, plaintiffs would have been entitled to have their ownership in assets determined as of date of dissolution and to have payment made to them in money or in kind, and if such was not done and plaintiffs' property was used in partnership business, they would be entitled to an election to receive their property and to share in the profits made thereafter in proportion their property bore to the whole or to be paid interest on the value of their property so used.

6. Partnership ⇐273

In case of a wrongful expulsion of partners from partnership and continued use of the expelled partners' assets, right of expelled partners would be based on an assumption of a continued partnership with full participation in profits according to a ratio set up in articles of partnership, at least for a period from wrongful expulsion to actual dissolution by circumstances or decree of court.

Taft, Wright & Hopkins, of Vallejo, for appellants.

Brunswig Sholars, of Schofield, Hanson & Sholars, and Ralph Bancroft, all of San Francisco, Leo C. Dunnell, of Fairfield, for respondents.

VAN DYKE, Justice.

After decision of this cause by an opinion heretofore filed we granted a rehearing on the petition of respondents. Our purpose in doing so was to give further consideration to the decision so made and to certain points in respect thereto raised by respondents' petition. Further consideration of these matters, however, leads us to the conclusion that the opinion heretofore filed herein correctly and adequately disposes of the issues raised on the appeal and for that reason we adopt the opinion heretofore rendered as our present opinion. That opinion is as follows:

"By their complaint in this action the plaintiffs alleged that on June 26, 1944, they and the defendants entered into a written agreement whereby the parties thereto agreed to the creation of a partnership for the operating of a radio repair and service business in Vallejo, California, for a period of five years. This written agreement is not set out in haec verba in the complaint, but its alleged legal effect is pleaded. Plaintiffs further alleged that they entered upon the performance of the agreement and fully performed their obligations thereunder until on or about September 6, 1944, on which date they were by the defendants wrongfully excluded from participation in the business and prevented from further performance. They pleaded that on that date and in contravention of the partnership agreement the defendants, without cause, served upon them a written notice of election to terminate the partnership and that the service of the same was a part of a joint and concerted action and conspiracy by defendants against them for the purpose of excluding them from participating in the management and profits of the partnership. They alleged that thereupon defendants immediately took exclusive charge and possession of the partnership business and wrongfully excluded the plaintiffs therefrom thereafter, in the meantime refusing them access to the partnership records and refusing any accounting of the business. They claimed these acts made a dissolution of the partnership necessary; that defendants thereby caused a dissolution of the partnership in contravention of the partnership agreement. They alleged resulting damages consisting of the loss by them of their share of the profits of the partnership from the date of the exclusion to the date of accounting and that an accounting of the partnership affairs was necessary. They prayed for an order dissolving the partnership and, based upon a requested finding that the dissolution was wrongfully caused in contravention of the partnership agreement, they asked damages for the breach of the agreement, an account of the business to determine their share of profits, the appointment of a referee to take such account and for judgment for any amount found due them.

"The defendants answered, denying virtually all of the foregoing allegations of the complaint.

"Upon the pleadings so framed the case went to trial. At the outset the question of whether the written agreement, admittedly executed but denied as to the alleged legal effect, created a partnership or merely an employment of plaintiffs by defendants, received the attention of the trial court. Considerable evidence was taken concerning the facts, circumstances and conditions surrounding the execution of the agreement and of the conduct of the parties thereafter. The court then announced its determination that the contract not only spoke for itself, but that it was a partnership agreement. The court thereupon ordered that an account be taken of the partnership business and referred the taking of that account to a referee, who thereafter proceeded to take the account and upon completion thereof filed with the court her referee's report. The court adopted this report, which determined that there was due to the plaintiffs the sum of $4,039.05 each and thereafter entered judgment in their favor, adjudging that each of them recover that sum against the defendants jointly and severally. From this judgment this appeal is taken.

"Herein the appellants contend that the court misconstrued the contract. To the determination of this contention it will be necessary to refer to the terms and provisions of the agreement somewhat at length. By the terms of the agreement appellants here, S. R. Pruyn and J. R. Busby, are collectively referred to as the first party thereto and the respondents here, Joe Nuland and Alva Leo Archer, are collectively referred to as the second party. The agreement recites that the first party is the owner and operator of a certain radio repair and service business in Vallejo, and the second party represents and declares that they are expert radio service and repairmen, experienced and qualified in the matter of repairing, rebuilding, and servicing radio receiving sets and kindred items. It is then recited that the parties desire that the second party devote their services to the radio repair and service business under the terms and conditions set forth. In consideration of these premises detailed provisions are made concerning the proposed actions and obligations of the parties thereunder. It is agreed that the first party (appellants here) shall not be called upon to render any services whatever in the conduct of the business, but may do so if they desire. On the other hand, Nuland is required to devote to the business not less than five eight-hour days each calendar week. Archer is required to devote his full and exclusive time to said business and is forbidden to accept other or different employment of any kind or character whatsoever. He agreed to work not less than six eight-hour days each calendar week. The parties agreed that the initial value of the tools, equipment, materials, supplies and stock in trade of the business was reasonably worth $2,500. It was stipulated that 'fifty (50%) per cent of the gross receipts' of the business should be deposited in a bank account to be known as 'the fund' from which only the first party jointly or severally might draw; that from this fund moneys would be withdrawn by the first party from time to time until they had received $2,500 as 'repayment for their investment and/or purchase price' of the aforesaid property. Then the funds were to be accumulated, never falling below a balance of $1,000. The excess over that was to be withdrawn not less than once a month and divided equally between the parties 'as dividends from the operation of said business.' However, if it should turn out that said balance was insufficient to properly operate the business, then the parties agreed that they might, by mutual agreement, increase the amount of the balance. All operating expenses of the business were to be paid from 'the fund'. It was further agreed that the remaining fifty per cent of the 'gross receipts' should be equally divided between the first and second parties not less than once each calendar month. The second party was charged with the duty of purchasing supplies and materials, but could not make such purchases in excess of $50 from any source without written consent of the first party and no power was given to incur obligations otherwise without first obtaining such written consent. The parties agreed to keep accurate books of account to which all should have access. The agreement provided the term thereof would be a period of five years, but if Nuland or Archer were inducted into the armed forces or for any reason became physically incapable of performing their duties then the 'first party may, at his option or election, terminate the within agreement by giving notice in writing to the second party or any member thereof of his intention so to do, fifteen (15) days in advance of such termination.' If the second party either jointly or severally violated or breached the agreement the first party could forthwith cancel and terminate the same by giving written notice of intention so to do to either member of the second party. If second party faithfully performed their duties then upon the expiration of the term of the agreement the personal property constituting the physical assets of said business should be divided equally between the first party and the second party. Finally, it is declared to be the intention of the parties that Nuland and Archer shall devote their best interests and efforts towards the success of the business, conduct themselves in a sober and businesslike manner and refrain from intoxication or other practices which might tend to injure the reputation or good name of the business.

"Over the proper interpretation of this agreement as constituting a partnership or, on the other hand, a contract of employment, the parties to this appeal, both in their briefs and in their arguments, have wholly disagreed. Appellants contend that without regard to the evidence and merely taking the agreement 'by its four corners' the object to be attained by the original owners of the business was to secure the services of competent men to be employed in the radio repair business. They point to the way in which the agreement makes a unit of Pruyn and Busby and the second unit of Nuland and Archer; to the stated purpose of the first party to obtain expert and experienced repairmen; to the stated purpose of the second party to devote their services; to the control by the first party of all the funds; to the limitations placed on the second party in respect of the expenditure of moneys and the incurring of obligations; to the expressed giving to the first party of the power of termination, whereas no such power is stated to be in the second party; to the requirements concerning conduct of the second party without such restrictions being placed upon the first party; to there being no declared obligation moving from the first party to the second party other than the payment of compensation; to the lack of a provision for the sharing of profits and the presence of a provision for 'compensation' from 'gross profits'; to the lack of any express declaration of intent to form a partnership; to there being no requirement for capital contribution by the second party nor pledge of credit thereby nor provision expressed for liability for losses. And from these things they conclude that on its face the contract is one of employment only.

"On the contrary, the respondents say the contract fully measures up to the code definition of a partnership, to-wit, 'an association of two or more persons to carry on as co-owners a business for profit' (Corp.Code, Sec. 15006, subd. (1)); that the code further declares (Corp.Code, Sec. 15007, subd. (2)) the receipt by a person of a share of profits is prima facie evidence that he is a partner, although no such inference is to be drawn if profits are received as payment; that the use of the word 'partnership' is not essential to the formation of one; that the question of partnership or not is a matter solely of the intention of the parties to do the things which partners do; that the agreement refers to an agreed value of personal property then being used in the business and provides for the withdrawal of the agreed amount 'as repayment for their investment and/or purchase price' thereof, meaning that the then owners agreed to accept the stipulated value in payment for such property which would thereafter belong to the business, that is, to the parties in common as co-owners. They point to the provision for maintenance of the balance in the business funds of $1,000, thus providing working capital and to the final provision for equal division of all assets upon expiration of the agreed term. They cite authorities to the effect that the lack of capital contribution by one or more partners does not prevent the relationship of partners. They argue that the absence of any reference to liability for debts is supplied by inference and is absent from many agreements of partnership. They say the inequality of control is a matter which can be agreed upon between partners inter se and they conclude that the agreement has all of the content necessary to the formation of a partnership.

[1-3] "It seems apparent that we have here an instrument which presents, in so far as its interpretation is concerned, questions of fact rather than of law. The agreement is ambiguous and uncertain in respect of the matters here in question and comes within the rules governing the interpretation of such documents.

"'* * * Whether a contract is in any of its terms ambiguous or uncertain is a matter of determination in the first instance by the trial court. If it is found so to be, it is primarily the duty of such court to construe it, after a full opportunity afforded the parties to produce evidence of the facts, circumstances and conditions surrounding its execution, and the conduct of the parties relative thereto. * * * And where a writing is so uncertain that either of the two constructions urged might be sustained, it is not within the functions of a court of review to declare that the interpretation given by the trial court should be supplanted by the other construction of which the instrument is susceptible.' (6 Cal.Jur. 327, sec. 192.)

"Illustrative of this principle is the case of Slama Tire Protector Co. v. Ritchie, 31 Cal.App. 555, 562, 161 P. 25. In that case an agreement had been made concerning the sale and distribution in a given territory of a certain tire protector device and the question before the court was whether the contract was one of sale or one whereby an agency was created and the goods which were the subject of the agency had been consigned to the agent and not sold to him. After discussing the terms of the contract and pointing out the uncertainties therein, the court said:

" 'Thus we could proceed and point out other language of the contract which, taken alone or viewed in connection with the provisions of the instrument above referred to, clearly implies that the contract was intended to establish the relation of principal and agents between the parties and not intended as a contract for the sale of the goods; but it is unnecessary further to examine the contract for this purpose. The instrument is presented herein in full, and there can be no difficulty in observing from its language that the conclusion arrived at by the court below as to its legal nature, scope, and effect involves a reasonable view of the language of the writing.

" 'We do not say that the provisions of the contract above specifically adverted to are wholly inconsistent with the theory that the transaction was intended as a contract of sale. What we do say is that the provisions are perfectly consistent with a contract creating an agency. * * *

" 'As suggested, however, it must be admitted that the contract contains some language which, if considered by itself or without reference to or consideration of other language of the instrument, might warrant the construction to which the writing is subjected by the plaintiff, viz., that it involves an agreement for the absolute sale of the tire protectors to the defendants. Indeed, it may justly be assumed to be true that the instrument is so characterized by ambiguity and uncertainty as to the nature of the relation which the parties intended thereby to create between themselves that either of the two constructions of the contract urged by the respective parties might, upon reasons equally cogent, be sustained. The question, therefore, then arises, assuming, of course, that no competent testimony extrinsic to the writing itself reflecting light upon the real intention of the parties has been received: Is it, in such a situation, within the proper or legal functions of a court of review to declare that the construction given the writing by the trial court should be rejected and supplanted by the other construction of which the instrument is susceptible? Manifestly, no reason can be conceived which would support an affirmative reply to that question. The appeal court could not adopt such a course in such a case without resorting to the exercise of arbitrary power.'

"The principle declared in the foregoing authority has found approval in later cases, among which may be cited Kautz v. Zurich Gen. A. & L. Ins. Co., 212 Cal. 576, 582, 300 P. 34. Therein, concerning the principle here involved, the Supreme Court said:

" '* * * The construction given the instrument by the trial court appears to be consistent with the true intent of the parties and where that is the case the appellate court will not substitute another interpretation though it seem equally tenable.' See, also, Manley v. Pacific Mill & Timber Co., 79 Cal.App. 641, 648, 250 P. 710.

"As of July 31, 1946, the court made and filed findings of fact and conclusions of law, whereby it found to be true all of the allegations of plaintiffs' complaint and in addition specifically found that the partnership was entered into in writing on the 26th of June, 1944; that no accounting had been had of the partnership assets; that such account was necessary in order to ascertain the amounts due the plaintiffs from defendants; that defendant Busby was presently in possession of all partnership assets, having purchased all right, title and interest therein of defendant Pruyn; that all of the allegations of defendants' answer to the complaint were untrue, and that defendants had wrongfully caused a dissolution of the partnership, the plaintiffs being without blame therein. As conclusions of law the court declared:

" '1. That the partnership heretofore existing between the plaintiffs and the defendants be and the same is hereby declared to be dissolved, the defendants having wrongfully caused the same by their conduct.

" '3. That the defendants be, and they are hereby required to render to the above entitled court a full and complete accounting of all transactions of the said partnership including all profits arising therefrom from the beginning of said venture up to and including the dissolution thereof.'

"On April 9, 1947, the court entered an interlocutory decree. This decree recited that on February 13, 1946, the court 'did cause to be entered in its minutes that there was since on or about the 26th day of June, 1944, a partnership' existing between the parties; that it had theretofore filed findings of fact and conclusions of law; that it now appeared no final decree in the cause could be made until an accounting had been had for the purpose of determining the value of the properties and business of the partnership and of plaintiffs' interest therein. It then ordered that the partnership theretofore existing be and it was thereby declared to be dissolved; that Georgia H. Crowley be appointed a referee to take the account, the parties being ordered to produce before the referee all books, papers and writing in their possession and under their control, relating to the business. The referee was empowered to examine the parties and the witnesses and was declared to have all the powers conferred on referees by law.

[4] "It is to be noted that the court by the findings of fact which it had made and entered had found that on September 6, 1944, appellants had, in contravention of the partnership agreement, wrongfully served on plaintiffs written notice of their election to terminate the partnership; that plaintiffs had not committed any breach of the agreement; that the serving of the notice was part of a joint and concerted action and conspiracy by defendants against plaintiffs with the intent of excluding plaintiffs from the management of the business and participation in profits and that thereupon respondents had wrongfully taken exclusive charge and possession of the partnership business, and had excluded and still continued to exclude plaintiffs therefrom. Appellants contend these findings are utterly without support in the evidence. This contention must be sustained.

"Respondents' only witnesses were the appellants themselves, called under Section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Their testimony, in so far as it relates to the matter now under discussion, contains nothing that could be construed as sustaining the above findings and on the contrary would support a conclusion that the notice of termination was given for good cause. Busby testified that Nuland purchased the bulk of the parts that were acquired and never obtained defendants' permission as required by the agreement. Pruyn testified that Nuland and Archer did not close their radio store in San Francisco, although the agreement specifically provided that Nuland was to devote not less than five eight-hour days each calendar week to the partnership business and Archer was required to devote his full and exclusive time thereto, accepting no other or different employment of any kind. He was to work not less than six eight-hour days each calendar week. Finch, who had been employed in the shop between the date of the agreement and the giving of notice, testified that he never saw Nuland in the shop and that Archer was not an experienced or qualified radio repairman, but on the contrary was an amateur. In entering into the agreement both men had represented that they were expert radio service and repairmen, experienced and qualified in the matter of repairing, rebuilding and servicing radio receiving sets. The foregoing is the only testimony contained in the record bearing on the question of whether or not the notice of termination was given without cause. Although respondents were present in court, they did not take the stand to deny or refute or explain such evidence, but remained silent. Under this state of the record, not only were the trial court's findings above referred to without support in the testimony, but they were in conflict with the only testimony given in the case. The significance of this lack of support for the court's finding of wrongful exclusion will now be discussed.

[5] "The notice of termination given by appellants to respondents on September 6, 1944, was in writing and it was stated therein that it was for cause. It was declared to be effective as of its date. Partners may among themselves contract freely concerning many matters, including the right on the part of any of the members to terminate the partnership. On this matter the agreement contained the following provision: 'In the event of a breach or violation of the terms and conditions of the within agreement by the party of the second part, either jointly or severally, the first party may at its option and election, forthwith cancel and terminate the within agreement by giving written notice of its intention so to do to the second party or any member thereof.' If this notice of termination was in fact given for just cause, as the only evidence taken upon that point indicated that it was, then the partnership ended as of the date of its giving, and while the respondents, even so, might well have been entitled to an accounting on the theory that the parties had been co-partners, yet that accounting must have proceeded upon different principles than did the accounting which was actually taken. If the partnership was by the notice rightfully dissolved on September 6, 1944, appellants' rights would have been as follows: They would have been entitled to have their ownership in the assets determined as of that date and paid over to them in money or in kind; if this was not done and their property was used in the business they would have had, on account being taken, an election to receive their property and to share in the profits made thereafter in the proportion their property bore to the whole or to be paid interest on the value of their property so used. See Annotation to Forbes v. Becker, 80 A.L.R. 12, concerning accountability of partner or joint adventurer for profits earned subsequently to death or dissolution, Subdivision VI (p. 58). It is therein stated that: 'Admitting the liability of a partner to an accounting for profits earned subsequently to dissolution, as established by cases cited in prior divisions of the annotation, the question is at once presented, to what extent the other partner or his legal representatives shall be entitled to share in such profits, or, in other words, how shall the subsequently earned profits be apportioned between the parties. * * * The basis upon which a partner or his legal representative is held entitled to an accounting for profits earned after dissolution has been said to be, the use to which his interest in the capital of the firm has been put in earning such profits.' White v. Reed, 124 N.Y. 468, 26 N.E. 1037, is cited by the author of the annotation as holding that 'the granting relief of that character does not proceed on the ground that the party seeking it is a member of a continued partnership, but rests upon the fact that, when he retired from the firm, he had some remaining interest in the capital appropriated and used in the continuance of business by the other partners.' Massachusetts cases are cited as holding 'the liability of the surviving members is simply to make compensation for the money they have used.' It is then stated that 'In accordance with this view, it has been held that one claiming an interest in profits earned subsequently to the dissolution of a partnership is entitled to such share of the profits as his interest in the capital of the firm bears to the total capital, or, in other words, such share of the profits as can rightly be attributed to the continued use of his property or capital in the business. Such would seem to be the generally accepted rule.' Cited in support of this statement are the following California cases: Painter v. Painter, 4 Cal.Unrep. 636, 36 P. 865 (later appeal in 6 Cal.Unrep. 677, 65 P. 135); Ruppe v. Utter, 76 Cal.App. 19, 243 P. 715.

[6] "On the contrary, for wrongful expulsion and continued use of assets, as found by the court, a different rule applies generally, based upon an assumption of a continued partnership, with full participation in profits according to the ratio set up in the articles of partnership, at least for the period from the wrongful expulsion to actual dissolution by circumstances or decree of court.

"It is apparent in this case that it was this latter theory upon which the court here made its final judgment after the referee had filed her report.

"From the report filed by the referee, it sufficiently appears that she determined the liability of appellants to respondents upon the basis of profits to be equally shared by all of the parties, including in the amounts going to make up her ultimate findings the money received on sale of the business. In effect, the referee found that from the beginning of the partnership to the closing-out sale the appellants were chargeable with an excess of receipts over disbursements in the sum of $16,156.20, one-fourth of which each partner was entitled to. And the court, adopting this result, gave judgment in accordance therewith, adjudging that each of the respondents should recover from the appellants jointly and severally the sum of $4,039.05, together with interest at the rate of seven per cent upon such sum from the 19th day of March, 1946, which appears to mark the end of the period over which the accounting was taken.

"From what has been said it is apparent that the judgment given by the court cannot be sustained in the absence of a finding justifiably made and supported by the evidence that from the time the notice of termination was given the appellants wrongfully excluded respondents from the partnership affairs. As we have pointed out heretofore, such a finding has no support in the evidence, and on the contrary is in opposition to the only evidence addressed to the question of whether or not respondents had so breached their agreement that the appellants were given and exercised the right to terminate the partnership.

"For these reasons the judgment must be reversed, and in reversing the same we deem it proper to order a new trial as to all of the issues tendered by the pleadings, including those involving the interpretation of the contract between the parties. We have heretofore expressed no opinion as to a proper interpretation of that document and deem it best that no such opinion be expressed. We hold that the instrument is unclear and ambiguous in respect of this matter to a degree requiring that the parties be afforded an opportunity to introduce evidence of the facts and circumstances attending its execution and of the conduct of the parties thereunder in aid of its interpretation by the trial court. It is apparent from this record that the issue was not approached from that point of view. While the trial court did not refuse to receive such evidence, it is clear from the record that the learned trial judge considered the document to be of such nature that it could and must be construed by consideration of its terms alone, in which conclusion we cannot join. It may well be that when the matter is approached from the point of view that such evidence is admissible, testimony may be forthcoming which will definitely clear away the uncertainties inherently within the written contract, and, as stated by the Supreme Court in Barlow v. Frink, 171 Cal. 165, 152 P. 290, it is advisable that we leave 'the matter of its construction to be determined by the trial court under such evidence as the parties desire to present, unrestrained or controlled by any expression of opinion on the subject by this court.' "

The judgment is reversed and a new trial ordered upon all issues in conformity with this opinion.

WEST et al. v. HOUSE et al.

Civ. 17510.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Sept. 26, 1950.

Homer West and another brought an action against Irvin B. House and another to recover for damages resulting from an automobile collision. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Fred Miller, J., entered judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Wood, J., held that there was evidence from which the trial court could have inferred that the named plaintiff was negligent in operating his automobile and that such negligence was the sole proximate cause of the accident.

Affirmed.

1. Automobiles ⇐245(17)

In action for damages resulting from collision between moving automobile and open door of parked automobile, accident having occurred on Aug. 2, 1947, it was question of fact whether or not driver of parked automobile was negligent in relying upon rear view mirror in opening door without looking backward to ascertain whether vehicles were coming. Vehicle Code, § 596.6.

2. Automobiles ⇐247

In action by driver of moving automobile for damage resulting when moving automobile collided with open door of parked automobile, finding that driver of parked automobile had not so negligently operated his automobile as to cause vehicle to come in contact with moving vehicle was implied finding that driver of parked vehicle was negligent but not so negligent that he caused accident.

3. Automobiles ⇐247

In action by driver of moving automobile for damage resulting when moving automobile struck open door of parked automobile, trial court's finding that it was not true that injuries or damages sustained by occupants of moving vehicle were due to any carelessness, negligence or recklessness of driver of parked vehicle was in effect finding that any negligence of driver of parked vehicle was not proximate cause of damages.

4. Appeal and error ⇐1008(1)

In action by motorist to recover for damage resulting when his automobile struck open door of parked vehicle, whether negligence of driver of parked vehicle was proximate cause of accident was question of fact for trial court.

In action by motorist for damage incurred when his automobile struck open door of parked automobile where there was evidence that plaintiff was driving 20 to 25 miles per hour and that he drove within three inches of parked automobile, trial court could have inferred that negligence of plaintiff was sole proximate cause of accident, in that he was driving too fast on narrow street and too close to parked automobile.

In action by motorist to recover for damage incurred as result of collision with open door of parked automobile, where trial court found that plaintiff had operated his motor vehicle in negligent manner and that damage sustained by plaintiff was not due to any negligence of defendant, trial court impliedly found that negligence of plaintiff was sole proximate cause of accident.

In action brought by passenger in moving automobile to recover for injuries incurred as result of collision of moving automobile with open door of parked automobile, where trial court impliedly found that negligence of driver of parked automobile was not proximate cause of accident, plaintiff was not entitled to recover against driver of parked automobile even though trial court found that passenger and driver of moving vehicle were not engaged in joint enterprise and that any negligence on part of driver of such vehicle was not imputable to passenger.

In action brought by passenger in moving automobile against operator of parked automobile to recover for injuries resulting from collision of moving automobile with open door of parked automobile, where trial court found that there was no liability on part of driver of parked automobile, trial court did not err in refusing to make findings as to extent of passenger's injuries and medical expenses.

9. Automobiles ⇐247

In action by automobile passenger to recover from operator of other vehicle for injuries resulting from collision, where trial court impliedly found that negligence of plaintiff's driver had been sole proximate cause of collision and entered judgment for defendant, there was no fatal inconsistency in trial court's finding untrue allegations of defendant's third defense, presenting basic issue as to whether plaintiff and her driver were engaged in joint enterprise, notwithstanding that trial court had inadvertently failed to except from that finding defendant's allegation that plaintiff's driver was negligent.

James C. Webb, Long Beach, for appellants.

Eugene S. Ives, Los Angeles, for respondents.

WOOD, Justice.

In this action for damages resulting from a collision of automobiles, judgment was for defendants. Plaintiffs appeal from the judgment.

Plaintiff Mr. West was driving his automobile east on 10th Street in Long Beach. The street extends easterly and westerly, is 36 feet wide, and a single white line is in the center of it. Plaintiff Mrs. Buell, who is a sister of Mr. West, was riding with him as a passenger.

Mr. West testified that he was driving about 12 miles per hour, about 4 feet from the white line, and about 2½ feet from the automobiles parked on the south side of the street; he was driving slowly because the street is narrow, dangerous, and a bad spot; he did not know there was going to be an impact; that "it seemed like there was a sort of a flash, and something came towards me, and that is all I know"; the right side of his automobile came in contact with the door of an automobile parked on the south side of 10th Street, and it threw his automobile out of control and over in the other lane, the north half of 10th Street, and an automobile going west in that lane hit his automobile and turned it over on the sidewalk on the north side of the street; he did not notice the parked automobile before the accident; there was no damage to the front of Mr. West's automobile.

At the time of the accident, defendant Mr. House was in the driver's seat of his automobile which was parked (facing east) on the south side of 10th Street—the right wheels being about 6 inches from the south curb, and the rear wheels being about 14 feet from the intersection of 10th Street and Hoffman Street. (Hoffman Street extends northerly and southerly and is west of the scene of the accident.) The left front door of his automobile is 4 feet wide, is hinged at the front and opens from the rear. He looked, by use of the rear-view mirror, to the rear of his automobile and did not see any automobile approaching. Then he opened the left front door about 10 inches, that is, about 3 inches beyond the outer edge of the "fender line." (It is 7 inches from the closed door to the outer edge of the fender.) He held the door open, to that extent, about 40 seconds or "not over 2 minutes," and then it was struck by Mr. West's automobile. The impact did not pull the door out or away from the automobile—just pushed the door, "kind of telescoped it." There was no damage to any other part of Mr. House's automobile.

Mr. Lee, the driver of the automobile which struck Mr. West's automobile, testified that he (Mr. Lee) was driving west on 10th Street about 25 miles per hour and about 2 feet from the center line; a few automobiles were traveling in each lane on that street, and some automobiles were parked at each side of the street; he saw Mr. West's automobile very shortly before he struck it; that automobile was going "pretty fast" diagonally across 10th Street and toward Mr. Lee's automobile; Mr. Lee applied his brakes but the front of his automobile struck the "midsection" of the right side of Mr. West's automobile; Mr. Lee's automobile stopped immediately after the impact but Mr. West's automobile went on across the street, over the curb, across the sidewalk and turned over; after that impact Mr. West's automobile went 18 or 20 feet before it turned over; Mr. West said to him, "Why did you run into me?" Mr. Lee replied: "I couldn't help it. You came across the street right in front of me, and you hit the car parked over there." Mr. West said, "What car? I didn't know I hit a car." (Mr. West denied that he had that conversation or conversation to that effect.)

Mr. English, a witness called by defendants, testified that he saw Mr. West's automobile prior to the accident when it was about 50 feet away from Mr. House's automobile and it was going about 20 to 25 miles per hour; and the door of Mr. House's automobile was open 8 or 10 inches.

[1] Appellants (plaintiffs) contend that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that Mr. House did not negligently cause the door of his automobile to come in contact with Mr. West's automobile. They argue that as a matter of law Mr. House was negligent. In support of that argument they refer to the facts that the street was narrow, and that only the door of Mr. House's automobile was damaged. They refer further to the testimony of Mr. House that he held the door open for 40 seconds or not over 2 minutes; that when he opened the door he did not look backward to ascertain whether vehicles were coming but he looked in the rear-view mirror. They argue further that he should not have relied on the rear-view mirror, but he should have looked to the rear and continued to look there while the door was open. Whether or not the defendant Mr. House was negligent was a question of fact for the determination of the trial court. There was evidence that Mr. House's automobile was parked properly, that he looked to the rear through a mirror and did not see any approaching automobile, and that he opened the door to the extent of 3 inches beyond the fender line. It was not unlawful on August 2, 1947, the date of the accident, to open a door of a vehicle on the side available to moving traffic. It is true that at present there is a provision in the Vehicle Code, Sec. 596.6, to the effect that no person shall open the door of a motor vehicle on the side available to moving traffic unless and until it is reasonably safe to do so, nor shall any person leave a door open on such side for a period longer than is necessary to load or unload passengers. That section became effective September 19, 1947. Under the circumstances here, it cannot be concluded as a matter of law that Mr. House was negligent.

[2] It appears, however, that the court did not find that Mr. House was not negligent. The court found that it is not true that the defendants or either of them did so negligently operate, manage and control said defendants' vehicle "as to cause, or it did cause," said vehicle to come in contact with plaintiff's vehicle, or did cause plaintiff's vehicle to go out of control and into the path of an on-coming vehicle from the opposite direction. It is to be noted that the finding is to the effect that neither of the defendants did "so negligently" operate their automobile "as to cause" or that "it did cause" their vehicle to come in contact with Mr. West's vehicle. (Italics added.) In other words, it appears that the court found that Mr. House did not operate or control the automobile so negligently "as to cause" the accident or so negligently that "it did cause" the accident. It is implicit therein that Mr. House was negligent but not so negligent that he caused the accident.

[3-6] The court also made a finding, under the heading of Conclusions of Law, that "it is not true that the injuries or damages sustained by the plaintiffs, or either of them, was due to any" carelessness, negligence, or recklessness of the defendants or either of them. That is in effect a finding that any negligence of defendants or either of them was not a proximate cause of the damages. Whether or not negligence of Mr. House was a proximate cause of the accident was a question of fact for the trial court. The court could have inferred that, under the circumstances here, negligence of Mr. West was the sole proximate cause of the accident, in that, he was driving too fast on the narrow street and too close to the parked automobile. There was evidence that he was driving 20 to 25 miles per hour and "pretty fast," and after the impact his automobile crossed the street, went over the curb and turned over; and that he drove within 3 inches of the parked automobile. The court found that immediately prior to and at the time of the occurrence of the accident Mr. West was negligent in that, among other things, he operated his vehicle in a negligent manner in that he failed to exercise for his own safety that degree of care which a reasonably prudent person under the same or similar circumstances would have exercised. In view of that finding and the finding above mentioned that it is not true that the damages sustained by plaintiffs were due to any negligence of either defendant, it appears that the court found impliedly that the negligence of Mr. West was the sole proximate cause of the accident.

[7] Appellants also contend that appellant Mrs. Buell was entitled to judgment. She was a passenger in Mr. West's automobile, and the court found that she and Mr. West were not engaged in a joint enterprise, and that any negligence on his part was not imputable to her. Since, as above mentioned, the findings were to the effect that negligence of Mr. House was not a proximate cause of the accident, she was not entitled to a judgment in her favor.

[8] Appellants also contend that the court's refusal to make findings respecting paragraphs III and IV of the second cause of action constitutes prejudicial error. The allegation in said paragraph III is in substance that as a direct and proximate result of the aforesaid negligent acts of defendants the plaintiff Mrs. Buell was thrown violently about and she sustained personal injuries and was forced to incur medical expenses to her damage in certain sums of money. The allegation in said paragraph IV is that her injuries are permanent and that in the future she will suffer pain therefrom and will be forced to incur additional medical expense to her further damage in a certain sum of money. In the findings it is stated that it is not necessary to the decision to make findings as to the injuries or damages sustained by plaintiff Mrs. Buell and therefore the court makes no findings as to said paragraph III and IV. It was not necessary to make findings as to the extent of Mrs. Buell's injuries and medical expenses, since the court found there was no liability on the part of defendants or either of them. As to the allegation in paragraph III regarding the "proximate result of the aforesaid negligent" acts of defendants, it was not necessary to make a finding with special reference thereto, since the matter of negligence was covered in other findings.

[9] Appellants contend further that the court made inconsistent findings with respect to whether Mr. West was contributively negligent. One of the findings referred to, paragraph (4), was made by stating that the allegations of the second defense are true. Those allegations, in part, were substantially as follows: That Mr. West was himself negligent in that he operated his vehicle in a negligent manner in that he failed to exercise for his own safety that degree of care which a reasonably prudent person under the same circumstances would have exercised. The other finding referred to, paragraph (5), stated that the allegations of the third defense are not true. Those allegations, in part, were substantially as follows: That Mr. West in the operation of his automobile failed to exercise that degree of care for his own safety, as well as that of Mrs. Buell, which a reasonably prudent person under the same circumstances would have exercised. All the allegations of the second defense, considered together, show that the issue presented therein was contributory negligence on the part of Mr. West. In addition to finding the allegations of that defense to be true, the court found, under the heading of Conclusions of Law, that such injuries as plaintiffs sustained were proximately caused by the negligence of Mr. West. It is clear that the court found that Mr. West was guilty of negligence proximately causing the accident. All the allegations of the third defense, considered together, show that the basic issue presented therein was that Mrs. Buell was engaged in a joint enterprise with Mr. West. As a part of the defense based on that issue it was alleged further that Mr. West was negligent, as above stated, and that his negligence was imputable to her. In finding that the allegations of that defense are not true, it is apparent, in view of the basic issue of joint enterprise therein and in view of findings elsewhere that Mr. West was negligent, it was intended to find that they were not engaged in a joint enterprise and that any negligence on his part was not imputable to her. It is apparent that the court, in making the finding by reference to all the allegations of that defense, inadvertently failed to except, from the finding that those allegations were not true, the allegation that Mr. West was negligent.

LAURENT v. CITY & COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al.

No. 14282.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 28, 1950.

Frank Laurent filed a petition against the City and County of San Francisco, a municipal corporation, Philip F. Landis and others, as members constituting the Public Utilities Commission of the City and County of San Francisco, and others, for a writ of mandate to compel respondents to formally accept the bid of petitioner and to execute a lease with petitioner covering land devoted to airport purposes. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Milton D. Sapiro, J., rendered a judgment adverse to the petitioner, and petitioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Goodell, J., held that under charter the Commission and not the Director of Property had power in its discretion to reject the bid.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Municipal corporations ⇐58

A city charter provision is subject to same rules of interpretation as a statute.

2. Municipal corporations ⇐226

The mode prescribed by city charter for entering into contracts constitutes the measure of the power.

Municipal corporations ⇐722

Under charter of city and county authorizing Public Utilities Commission to lease lands devoted to airport purposes, and requiring Director of Property to arrange for lease, the Commission and not the Director of Property had power in its discretion to reject a bid.

4. Mandamus ⇐84

When Public Utilities Commission of City and County of San Francisco has exercised its discretion to reject a bid for a lease of land devoted to airport purposes, commission cannot be compelled by mandate to accept the bid.

Dion R. Holm, City Attorney, A. Dal Thomson, Public Utilities Counsel, San Francisco, for respondents.

GOODELL, Justice.

Appellant filed in the Superior Court his petition for a writ of mandate to compel respondents as members of the Public Utilities Commission and J. H. Turner as manager of Public Utilities and B. M. Doolin as manager and chief engineer of the Airport department "to formally accept the bid of petitioner and to execute a lease with petitioner, * * *" covering a certain area at the San Francisco Airport near South San Francisco. Respondents' return raised issues of law and fact. The court's ruling denying the writ amounted to the sustaining of a demurrer to the petition.

The petition alleges that at the direction of the Commission a call for bids was issued by the Director of Property, reciting that sealed bids would be received up to October 21, 1948 at 10 a. m. for leasing for automobile parking and "U" Drive purposes an area approximately 229 feet by 310 feet at the Airport, north of the Administration Building. The call recited that the lease would be for 3 years, subject to the covenants, terms and conditions set forth in the proposed lease on file in the office of the Director and that it would be "awarded to the highest responsible bidder subject to confirmation by the Public Utilities Commission." It concluded with the statement "Right reserved to reject any and all bids" and was signed by Eugene J. Riordan, Director of Property.

The petitioner alleges that at the time and place mentioned he and others were present and "bids were opened and examined and your petitioner was thereupon publicly declared by the respondent Turner to be the highest bidder and the winner of the lease."

There are allegations that appellant thereupon made arrangements and purchases preparatory to entering into possession under the prospective lease, and disposed of other business interests.

It is then alleged that about November 22, 1948, the Commission adopted a resolution rejecting petitioner's bid and on the 24th notified him in writing of such resolution and rejection. It appears from the record that the Commission rejected not only appellant's bid but all bids.

Appellant argues that "The mode provided for the leasing of lands devoted to airport purposes is clearly and intelligibly set forth in section 93 of the charter and no mode other than that provided by the statute may be followed."

[1, 2] We agree with appellant that a charter provision is "subject to the same rules of interpretation as a statute". Braun et al. v. McGuire, 201 Cal. 134, 143, 255 P. 808, 811. We agree, also, that the rule that the mode constitutes the measure of the power is one of long standing. Zottman v. San Francisco, 20 Cal. 96, 102, 81 Am.Dec. 96.

The sole inquiry on this appeal is, "Where does the authority reside to accept or reject bids?"

Section 93 of the charter provides inter alia that "the public utilities commission may provide, by resolution, that lands now devoted to airport purposes or lands that may hereafter be acquired and devoted to airport purposes may be leased or rented for a period not to exceed forty years, and the director of property shall arrange for such lease to the highest responsible bidder at the highest monthly or annual rent, and thereafter the administration of any and all such leases shall be by the public utilities commission; * * *."

There is no express language in § 93 respecting the right to reject bids, but appellant concedes "that the right to reject any and all bids may be reserved." However, that concession is coupled with the claim that "such right may be reserved only by the official authorized to call for and accept bids."

The charter vests in the Director the authority to "arrange" for the lease "to the highest responsible bidder" and that is all the authority the Director is expressly given by the charter. Appellant in contending that the Director "was the only person empowered to accept or reject the bid" does not point to any charter language or any other authority supporting his contention. His petition, however, is inconsistent with that contention since it alleges that the "Director of Property * * * at the direction of the * * * Commission, caused to be published" the invitation for bids, and its prayer is for a writ "commanding respondents composing the Public Utilities Commission * * * and J. H. Turner, as Manager * * * and B. M. Doolin, as Manager and Chief Engineer of the Airport Department * * * to formally accept the bid of petitioner and to execute a lease with petitioner, in accordance with the terms set forth in its call for bids * * *." (Emphasis added). Thus the pleader recognizes that the duties to accept the bid and make the lease reside in the Commission and that the call for bids was "its"—the Commission's—call. If so, then of course the reservation of the right to reject was the Commission's reservation. The provision in the call "subject to confirmation by the Public Utilities Commission" is simply an amplification of the reservation of the right to reject bids, designed "to make assurance doubly sure."

To hold that the call was made by the Commission (although arranged by the Director) and that the right reserved to reject bids was its right, is not at all at war with the language of the charter, but wholly consistent with it. Respondents argue that "Since neither the charter nor any municipal ordinance enacts any procedure with reference to a lease of this character, it follows that the Director * * * may insert, in the call for bids, such reasonable provisions as are appropriate for the protection of the city. Among these provisions is the clause that the bid is subject to confirmation by the * * * Commission." This is a reasonable view, and we agree with it.

If the charter, instead of using general language (as such organic instruments ordinarily do) had prescribed definite procedural machinery with respect to bidding, and the call for bids had gone beyond it or the Director or the Commission had imposed other or more burdensome or inconsistent provisions, then an entirely different problem would arise, such, for example, as was presented in Neal Publishing Co. v. Rolph, 169 Cal. 190, 146 P. 659, and City of San Buenaventura v. Ventura County Star, Inc., 29 Cal.App.2d 41, 83 P.2d 975, cited by appellant. But no such problem is presented.

Appellant states in his brief that the Director accepted the check for $1000 but does not state that he accepted the bid, and does not so allege in his petition. The petition alleges that when the bids were opened "your petitioner was thereupon publicly declared by the respondent Turner to be the highest bidder and the winner of the lease." Respondent Turner is the manager of Public Utilities, but it nowhere appears that he has authority to speak or act for the Commission in such a matter as this. It is argued that the Director was present when respondent Turner made the announcement (the record does not show this), but it does not appear that he said anything, and his silence is understandable on the assumption that he considered the acceptance or rejection of bids no concern of his, although he was the one to receive them together with the accompanying checks.

[3, 4] The appellant, as we have seen, contends that the authority and power to accept or reject bids resided in the Director and not the Commission. Notwithstanding this claim the appellant does not allege in his petition that the Director accepted the bid, and, as the trial judge points out, the Director was not joined as a respondent in the proceeding. The petition alleges that appellant's bid was declared to be the highest and winning bid by respondent Turner who, of course, is not the Director of Property. It prays for a writ compelling the Commission to formally accept the bid and execute the lease. If, as we have held, the power and authority reside in the Commission, it was within the Commission's discretion to reject all the bids tendered, and it cannot be compelled by mandate to do otherwise. Stanley-Taylor Co. v. Board of Supervisors, 135 Cal. 486, 488, 67 P. 783. The petition does not state facts sufficient to justify the issuance of a writ of mandate.

Respondents' motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the questions raised by the petition have become moot is denied.

BENNETT v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR SAN DIEGO COUNTY et al.

Civ. 4222.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Sept. 22, 1950.

Proceeding on petition of Vernon F. Bennett for a writ of certiorari against the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of San Diego, and Honorable Dean Sherry, Judge of said Superior Court, to review an order of respondent court adjudging petitioner guilty of contempt. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that the record did not sustain the charge that the conduct of the petitioner amounted to contempt.

Order annulled.

1. Contempt ⇐60(3)

In personal injury action, where attorney for plaintiff was adjudged guilty of contempt, record showed that although trial could have been more expeditiously conducted fault, if any, was not that of plaintiff's attorney alone, and that therefore prolongation of trial by objections, interruptions and statements made by plaintiff's attorney had not constituted contempt of court.

2. Contempt ⇐60(3)

In personal injury action tried to court, where judgment was entered for defendant and plaintiff's attorney was adjudged guilty of contempt, record did not sustain trial court's charge that plaintiff's attorney had attempted to prevent defendant from having fair trial.

3. Depositions ⇐92

Documents not signed by witness were not admissible in evidence as depositions.

4. Witnesses ⇐379(8)

Sworn statements made by witness before notary public and court reporter could be used for purpose of cross-examination. Code Civ.Proc. § 2052.

5. Contempt ⇐67

In reviewing order of Superior Court adjudging attorney guilty of contempt, judgment was to be construed strictly in favor of accused and no intendments or presumptions could be indulged against him. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 1.

6. Contempt ⇐3

Contempt of court is a specific criminal offense.

7. Contempt ⇐67

In certiorari to review contempt proceeding, unless record shows affirmatively upon its face existence of all necessary facts upon which jurisdiction depends, order must be annulled.

8. Contempt ⇐30

The power of court to punish for alleged contempt of its authority, though undoubted, is in its nature arbitrary and its exercise is not to be upheld except under circumstances and in manner prescribed by law.

9. Contempt ⇐10

Attorney has duty to protect interests of his client, and has right to press legitimate argument and to protest erroneous rulings, and if in discharging his duty he happens to be persistent or vehement, or both, in presentation of his points, he is still within his legitimate rights as attorney, so long as his language is not offensive or in contravention of common rules of decorum and propriety.

10. Contempt ⇐60(3)

Record was insufficient to sustain order adjudging attorney guilty of contempt on grounds of constant and repeated interruptions of his adversary, interposition of objections, indulgence in argument in bad faith, attempt to introduce in evidence certain documents as depositions, argument of objections after court's ruling thereon and making irrelevant and immaterial statements, quarreling and bickering with opposing counsel, and including in his questions repetitious and immaterial matter.

Vernon F. Bennett, San Diego, in pro per.

MUSSELL, Justice.

In this proceeding in certiorari, petitioner, an attorney, seeks to annul an order of the superior court adjudging him guilty of contempt and assessing a fine therefor in the sum of $500.

Petitioner, representing plaintiff Ruth E. Hunt, filed an action for damages for personal injuries in the superior court of San Diego county against the San Diego Transit System. The trial was had before respondent judge, without a jury, and at the conclusion thereof, the court ordered a judgment in favor of the defendant and also issued a written order adjudging petitioner guilty of contempt. The order recites "That during said trial the conduct thereof was unduly delayed by conscious, wilful and contumacious action and conduct upon the part of said Vernon F. Bennett, with a view of preventing the defendant named from having a fair and just trial in said action upon the issues joined, and of unnecessarily consuming the time of said court. All of said contumacious conduct of said Vernon F. Bennett herein mentioned was committed in the immediate presence of the court, while the court was in session, and during said trial, and said conduct is shown in part by the quotations from the testimony and proceedings at said trial, particularly as follows:" Numerous excerpts from the testimony and proceedings, which were relied upon by the court to show the alleged contumacious conduct of petitioner, are then set forth. These excerpts, according to the order, show constant and repeated interruptions and statements by the petitioner during the examination of witnesses by opposing counsel; the interposition of objections and the indulgence in argument in bad faith; the attempt to introduce in evidence certain documents as depositions; the argument of objections after the court's rulings thereon; the making of irrelevant and immaterial statements, frequent quarreling and bickering with opposing counsel; and the inclusion in questions of repetitious and immaterial matter. The gist of the charge set forth in the order is that the conduct of the trial was unduly delayed by the acts of petitioner and that his actions and conduct constituted an attempt to prevent the defendant from having a fair trial.

It appears from the petition for the writ herein, the allegations of which are not denied, that the trial of the action began on June 14, 1950; that on the 16th day of June the trial judge, at his own instance, continued the matter to June 19th at 2:00 o'clock P. M.; the trial proceeded from 2:00 o'clock P. M. to 4:30 P. M. on that date and was continued by the trial judge to June 21st, without request of counsel for either of the parties. The trial was resumed at 2:00 o'clock on June 21st and continued throughout that day. The following day it was again continued by the trial judge to June 26th and the taking of evidence was concluded on June 27th; that the court was always recessed by the trial judge at 4:30 P. M. each afternoon and on a few occasions before that time; that on many occasions the recesses in the morning and afternoon sessions extended for longer than ten minutes; that many witnesses were produced and testified upon behalf of plaintiff and defendant; that the examination of the witness was very lengthy and repetitious and consumed a great deal of time; that the trial court "took off" two full days during the trial of said cause and the court was not always convened promptly at the morning or afternoon sessions; that different persons came frequently to see the trial judge and the trial of the case was either not begun or delayed while matters were being discussed with the trial judge.

In addition to the matters set forth in the petition, it appears from the excerpts set forth in the order that considerable of the time of the court and of the trial was consumed and delay occasioned by the conduct of the attorney for the defendant in said action. It also appears that the trial court, in many instances, interrupted counsel on both sides. Its comments made in connection with rulings on objections and statements of counsel consumed much of the time of the trial.

[1, 2] A careful examination of the contents of the order and of the reporter's partial transcript of the proceedings impel us to conclude that the trial could have been more expeditiously conducted, and the fault, if any, lies not alone upon petitioner. The prolongation thereof by objections, interruptions and statements of the petitioner, under the circumstances shown, did not constitute a contempt of court. The charge that the petitioner was attempting to prevent the defendant from having a fair trial does not find substantial support in the record. This was not a jury case and judgment was entered for the defendant.

The questions asked by the petitioner and his statements to the court which evidently precipitated the trial court's action in adjudging petitioner guilty of contempt, as shown by the partial transcript and the excerpts therefrom set forth in the order, occurred during the cross-examination of a defense witness in reference to a so-called deposition and were as follows:

"By Mr. Bennett: Q. And you were also asked on this same day, were you not, as to how long you had been a student operating buses and you refused to answer, did you not? A. I don't remember.

"Q. You don't remember? A. (No answer.)

"Mr. Bledsoe: I am going to object, if the Court please, to Counsel attempting to impeach the witness with that unsigned deposition. It is not a deposition. He has refused to have the deposition drawn up. That is only a portion of it. The witness has never had an opportunity to sign and subscribe to it. I don't know what the rest of it says. I have that portion myself, a copy.

"The Court: You can ask him questions. Unless you have the deposition, it is not admissible. You cannot ask him about any document, sir.

"Mr. Bledsoe: This is not a party, if the Court please, and he can call the reporter in or anything else. If the reporter says it is it, I—

"Mr. Bennett: I call your attention to page 15, line 15 and the question:

"Q. How long had you been a student, Mr. Lovett—" And he never was permitted to answer the question, and:

"Do you refuse to answer the question? A. Yes."

And Mr. Bledsoe knows it and—

"The Court: You can ask him then.

"Mr. Bennett: All right. I will ask him.

"The Court: No, because the charge that that document you have there before you is an unsigned document.

"Mr. Bledsoe: Not only that, but isn't complete and he was asked the question here. Counsel tried to take the deposition in two parts and he was—

"The Court: He has answered your question anyway. He said he doesn't remember. Go on.

"Mr. Bennett: He also said—

"The Court: I don't care to hear from you. Either go on with this cross-examination or the witness will be excused.

* * * * * *

"By Mr. Bennett: Q. And did you, as you read over the transcript of the questions asked you and the answers given by you on April 20, 1950, did you make any corrections in the copy that you read? A. No.

"Q. You didn't. You saw no occasion to make any corrections, is that right?

"Mr. Bledsoe: Objected to as argumentative.

"The Court: Objection sustained.

"By Mr. Bennett: Q. And you answered on and found in reading that, that you refused, did you not, to answer the question as to how long you had been a student?

"Mr. Bledsoe: I want to object to that as already asked and answered.

"Mr. Bennett: I haven't got an answer yet, your Honor.

"The Court: Objection sustained. He said he didn't remember.

"Mr. Bennett: Well, I can refresh his recollection by a document he has read and a transcript of the statement that he made.

"Mr. Bledsoe: I object to that. If he wants to impeach this witness—he brought this about. Let him call the reporter in and have the reporter go through his notes. Alan Randol.

"The Court: Objection sustained.

"Mr. Bennett: May I say, your Honor, he read this and made no corrections.

"The Court: Now, if there are any more voluntary statements such as now, I will excuse this witness. You have done enough procrastinating here. Just nothing but down right pettifogging, sir.

"By Mr. Bennett: Q. And when you appeared before Judge Glen and you were ordered to answer the question, you answered, did you not, that you did not know whether you had operated on any other route that day or not? A. I don't know. I don't know what questions were asked me that day.

"Q. I see. And then you were asked at the time of the taking of that deposition as to whether you recalled Mr. Street speaking to you between First and Sixth Streets and you refused to answer that question, did you not? A. I don't remember.

"Q. You don't remember. Calling your attention to page 23—

"Mr. Bledsoe: Now, I want to make that same objection. The Court has ruled on it and walks up there—

"The Court: Now, Mr. Bennett, the Court will take rather unusual measures to prevent you and warns you now that you shall not show that witness that document again. The Court has already passed on it and it is contemptuous conduct for you to persist in trying to get that matter in the record and if you persist any more, you will do so at your peril.

"Mr. Bennett: May I discuss it with your Honor?

"The Court: What?

"Mr. Bennett: May I discuss it with your Honor?

"The Court: No, sir, you may not discuss it.

"Mr. Bennett: All right, your Honor.

"By Mr. Bennett: Q. Mr. Lovett, how is your recollection with reference to the circumstances connected with the happening of this occurrence on December 2, 1947? A. Well, very good, I think.

"Q. You do. Now, have you refreshed your recollection in any way before coming to testify yesterday? A. No, nothing more than just reading over that deposition.

"Q. You read over the deposition, did you? A. Sometime ago.

"Q. And that was in Mr. Cameron's office or Mr. Bledsoe's office? A. Yes.

"Q. And you read it over completely? A. No.

"Q. You didn't read all of the deposition? A. No.

"Mr. Bledsoe: Well, it isn't all written up, Mr. Bennett.

"By Mr. Bennett: Q. That is, did you read—

"Mr. Bledsoe: I want to object to Counsel referring to this as a deposition. If he wants to refer to questions and answers —We have gone into this. There is an affidavit in the file it was taken but he used this to cross-examine two witnesses we had under—present since they were necessary parties, then immediately dismissed and didn't write up half of it.

"The Court: Well, whether or not that was an ethical practice—

"Mr. Bledsoe: I can't go into that.

"The Court: —is certainly questionable, but is not now here for decision.

"Mr. Bledsoe: I have argued—

"The Court: However, what Counsel uses to cross-examine a witness, this Court has nothing to do with. He can look at the Holy Bible or a funny sheet and use that as a basis for cross-examination. However, he has been admonished not to refer to a book and page number in the document that is—may be termed for the purpose of convenience, an unsigned deposition.

"Mr. Bledsoe: No. It is only a partial transcript of a deposition.

"The Court: He can take a partial transcript that a reporter or somebody that made a transcript—he can take that transcript and do anything he wants, but he cannot ask this witness, 'Didn't you testify such and such a thing on such and such an occasion'—

"Mr. Bledsoe: I think the Court is aware of the authorities a deposition has to be taken in manner provided by the Code.

"The Court: No question about that.

"Mr. Bledsoe: Can we refer to it as a document when it isn't a deposition?

"The Court: Yes, and Mr. Bennett has been admonished not to refer to a deposition that does not exist. That is going outside the record. It is highly improper and unethical for an attorney to do that and if he does that in the face of the admonition of the Court, he does it at his peril in this department. Let's understand each other. I have warned you yesterday about it. If it happens once more, I shall not warn you again. What is the question please?

"Mr. Bennett: May I say this, your Honor? You have listened to Counsel. I would like the privilege of presenting some authorities of my own.

"The Court: What is the question? (Record read.)

"The Court: Now, I warned you yesterday not to refer to this document which is admittedly unsigned as a deposition. I don't want to hear it any more, sir.

"Mr. Bennett: I will do my best to comply with your Honor—

"The Court: If you don't, you do it at your peril. I assure you, I have warned you the last time.

"Mr. Bennett: May I say this, your Honor? If this proceeding—if there had been another trial of this matter or this matter had been questioned about this witness and a transcript had been made of the testimony of this witness, I would have a perfect right to refer to that transcript of his testimony without the witness even having had an opportunity to refer to it or to read it. I could show it to him on the witness stand. Now, it so happens a deposition was taken or attempted to be taken on the 20th day of April, 1950, with the proper proceedings leading up to the taking of that deposition. A reporter was present and took the—

"The Court: We have gone into that. I don't care to hear any more about it. I understand the circumstances. I have been told several times as to the circumstances under which that statement of the witness was made. Call it testimony if you want, but it is no deposition and you know it is no deposition. Now, I don't want to hear any more about that document.

"Mr. Bennett: Very well, your Honor.

"By Mr. Bennett: Q. At—on April 20, 1950, you appeared in my office pursuant to a subpoena and you there answered certain questions which were propounded to you, did you not? A. Yes.

"Q. And at the time that was being done, you were under oath at that time, were you not? A. Yes.

"Q. You were sworn to testify to the truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God, at that time by Mr. Alan Randol, a notary public and court reporter, were you not? A. Yes.

"Q. And during all of the time that you were in my office on April 20, 1950, Mr. Alan Randol, the reporter and notary, was present, was he not? A. Yes.

"Q. And during all of that time he was taking down the questions and the answers which were asked and the answers given by you, did he not?

"The Court: You don't know whether he was taking it down or not, do you?

"The Witness: No. He was—

"By the Court: Q. You know he was writing there? A. He was writing. That's all I know.

"By Mr. Bennett: Q. And since that time, you have read over a transcript of what took place on April 20, 1950, have you not?

"The Court: Mr. Bennett, the Court finds you in contempt of Court and sentence will be deferred until the conclusion of the trial.

"Mr. Bledsoe: May I—

"The Court: All right.

"Mr. Bledsoe: A transcript, of course, if certified by the reporter. We don't have anything. It hasn't been drawn up yet. Nobody can certify— * * *."

The record before us contains many pages of questions and answers, interruptions, and statements of similar nature as those set forth in the quoted portions of the transcript and that which is set forth herein serves to illustrate the conduct of the trial of the instant action.

[3, 4] The documents referred to as depositions, not having been signed by the witness, were not admissible in evidence as depositions. Thomas v. Black, 84 Cal. 221, 226, 23 P. 1037. However, the use of statements made by the witness under the circumstances shown was permissible for the purpose of cross-examination. Code Civ. Proc. Sec. 2052.

[5] In reviewing the proceedings before us, the judgment is to be strictly construed in favor of the accused and no intendments or presumptions can be indulged against him. Bennett v. Superior Court, 73 Cal. App.2d 203, 224, 166 P.2d 318. There is also the presumption "that a person is innocent of crime or wrong". Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1963, subd. 1.

[6, 7] "Contempt of court is a specific criminal offense". Hotaling v. Superior Court, 191 Cal. 501, 504, 217 P. 73, 74, 29 A.L.R. 127. Unless the record before us, reviewed in the light of the foregoing rules, shows affirmatively upon its face the existence of all the necessary facts upon which jurisdiction depended, the order must be annulled. Bennett v. Superior Court, supra, 73 Cal.App.2d 211, 166 P.2d 318.

As was said in Re Lake, 65 Cal.App. 420, 426, 224 P. 126, 128: "There is no deviation from the rule that, unless the affidavit charging constructive contempt 'contains a statement of facts which shows on its face that a contempt has been committed the court is without jurisdiction to proceed in the matter, and any judgment of contempt thereon is void.' 5 Cal.Jur., pp. 938, 939. There is the same unanimity of opinion supporting the rule that in cases of direct contempt the order of commitment is void, 'unless it shows on its face acts sufficient to constitute a legal contempt. The order must contain a statement of facts equivalent to those which the law says must be incorporated in an affidavit for constructive contempt; and such facts must prove the contempt. Mere conclusions are not sufficient.' 5 Cal.Jur., pp. 950, 951."

[8] In Re Shortridge, 5 Cal.App. 371, 375, 90 P. 478, 479, quoting from Batchelder v. Moore, 42 Cal. 415, the court said: "'The power of the court to punish for an alleged contempt of its authority, though undoubted, is in its nature arbitrary, and its exercise is not to be upheld except under the circumstances and in the manner prescribed by law. It is essential to the validity of proceedings in contempt, subjecting a party to fine and imprisonment, that they show a case in point of jurisdiction within the provisions of the law by which such proceedings are authorized, for mere presumptions and intendments are not to be indulged in their support.'"

The first specification of alleged contemptuous conduct, according to the order, is that there were constant and repeated interruptions by the petitioner of his adversary in the examination of witnesses and in making statements to the court. However, interruptions of opposing counsel are not always improper.

As was said in Re Shortridge, supra, 5 Cal.App. 377, 90 P. 480: "Every interruption of the proceedings of the court is not a contempt, nor unlawful, nor necessarily improper. Many interruptions are lawful and proper. Every time an attorney in the performance of his duty objects to a question asked a witness, or objects to any other proceeding in the action, he may be said to interrupt the proceedings. The particular circumstances of the interruption—the concrete facts constituting the interruption—must be set forth, in order that the commitment shall show upon its face and without the aid of presumptions that the accused has been guilty of a contempt."

It was further stated, 31 Cal.2d at page 796, 192 P.2d at page 913: "An attorney has the duty to protect the interests of his client. He has a right to press legitimate argument and to protest an erroneous ruling."

This court said in Bennett v. Superior Court, supra, 73 Cal.App.2d 218, 166 P.2d 326: "We know of no rule of law permitting a court to punish an attorney because he is honestly mistaken in his interpretation of the law when he presents his mistaken views to the court in a proper and respectful manner."

In this connection, it should be observed that there is no claim that the questioning of witnesses by the petitioner or his remarks to the court were in any instance of a disorderly, contemptuous or insolent character. There is no question raised as to the tone, look or the manner and emphasis placed upon petitioner's remarks, as in Re Hallinan, 126 Cal.App. 121, 14 P.2d 797 and Rose v. Superior Court, 140 Cal.App. 418, 35 P.2d 605.

The record before us indicates that petitioner's tones were unmarked by excitement or anger. His conduct was apparently respectful and courteous toward both the court and opposing counsel, and even, at times, apologetic.

[10] We conclude from a careful examination of the entire record in this case that while there was no doubt an appreciable prolongation of the trial by interruptions, statements of counsel and the court, the conduct of the petitioner did not amount to a contempt within the meaning of the rules set forth in the preceding decisions.

The order is annulled.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Sept. 26, 1950.

Will E. Norris was convicted in the Superior Court of Tulare County, Glenn L. Moran, J., for grand theft of jewelry entrusted to defendant by jeweler for sale by defendant on a commission basis, and he appealed from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that evidence justified conviction.

Judgment and order affirmed.

In prosecution for grand theft in that defendant fraudulently appropriated to his own use jewelry entrusted to defendant by jeweler for sale by defendant on commission basis, evidence that defendant, representing himself as an insurance adjuster, had previously obtained a ring from another jeweler, and that a memorandum was drawn up for ring, and that defendant left with ring and never returned, was admissible. Pen.Code, §§ 484, 506.

6. Criminal law ⇐1169(11)

In prosecution for grand theft in that defendant fraudulently appropriated to his own use jewelry entrusted to defendant by jeweler for sale by defendant on commission basis, admission of evidence that defendant had failed to remit funds due to insurance company for which defendant as agent sold policies, if error, was not reversible error. 7. Criminal law ⇐1129(3)

Where particular questions objected to by defendant, charged with grand theft in nature of embezzlement, as being an attempt to introduce evidence solely to defame character of defendant, were not set forth in specification of error, but only conclusion that it was misconduct was set forth in specification, conduct of prosecuting attorney would not be held to have been prejudicial or offensive to defendant. Pen. Code, §§ 484, 506.

Pen.Code, §§ 484, 506.

Arthur J. May, Tulare, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, and Gilbert Harelson, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

MUSSELL, Justice.

Defendant was charged with the crime of grand theft and by a jury was found guilty as charged in the information. He applied for probation, made a motion for a new trial, and after the denial of probation and of the motion, was sentenced to the state prison at San Quentin.

This appeal is from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying the motion for new trial. The grounds of appeal are (1) That the evidence is insufficient to sustain the judgment of conviction; (2) That the court erred in the admission of evidence; (3) That the prosecuting attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct; and (4) That the court misdirected the jury in matters of law.

On October 18, 1948, defendant obtained a watch and a diamond ring from Mr. Lewis, a jeweler in Tulare. The watch (sales price $342) and the ring (sales price $125) were delivered to defendant at the Lewis jewelry store and were taken by defendant on "memo" for the purpose of sale on consignment. Defendant agreed to sell the articles on commission and to return the property or pay for it. It was understood that the title thereto did not pass by virtue of the "memo" and that the accounting period under such circumstances was generally from five to fifteen days.

On October 30th defendant again went to the Lewis store and stated that he had some prospects for the ring and watch previously taken out and that he had a "hot" prospect for some diamonds and wanted to know if he could take some diamonds out on "memo" on the same arrangement as before. Mr. Lewis agreed and the defendant signed a memorandum for two diamonds, valued at $1,135 retail, and a 17 jewel diamond Bulova wrist watch of the retail value of $674. Defendant stated that he would sell these articles on the same basis as the merchandise he obtained on the 18th of October, but if he didn't sell them, he would bring them back.

On November 1st defendant purchased a topaz ring from Mr. Lewis and on November 26th brought a lady's wrist watch to Mr. Lewis and requested that he obliterate the name inscribed on it.

On or about the 28th day of November, defendant took a pair of lady's earrings and a lady's small diamond ring to Lewis and asked that the diamond be taken out of the ring and mounted on one of the earrings. Defendant then ordered an additional diamond, left the store and did not thereafter return or communicate with Mr. Lewis. The jewelry received by defendant was not returned to Lewis or paid for.

On December 3d a statement was sent to defendant for all the merchandise that he had taken out on memorandum and for the amount remaining due on the topaz ring which he had purchased. Defendant's wife brought the statement to the Lewises and informed them that defendant was gone. Mr. Lewis then swore out a warrant for defendant's arrest. He was apprehended in Houston, Texas, in October of 1949, and returned to California for trial in January, 1950.

The defendant testified in his own behalf and stated that it was agreed between him and Mr. Lewis that he (defendant) was to sell the jewelry on commission and was either to return it or the money therefor; that he had received the statement for the jewelry and left Tulare on December 5, 1948, because of family difficulties; that just before he left Tulare, he placed the stones that he had obtained from Mr. Lewis in an envelope at the Owl Cafe with instructions for his wife to return them. He stated that he had not sold any of the jewelry and had not checked to see if it had been given back to Mr. Lewis.

Defendant's wife testified that she was running the Owl Cafe in Tulare on December 4 and 5, 1948, and that the defendant had left town on December 5th. She testified that no package or envelope containing the jewelry was ever left with her and denied that the defendant had left a package of jewelry addressed to her at the cafe.

Appellant's contention that the evidence does not sustain the judgment of conviction is without merit. The evidence is sufficient to show the commission of embezzlement under section 484 of the Penal Code, defining theft.

Defendant was the agent of the complaining witness and entrusted with the control of the personal property of Mr. Lewis for the purpose of sale on commission. Defendant fraudulently appropriated such property to his own use, contrary to the provisions of section 506 of the Penal Code, which provides generally that any person entrusted with or having in his control property for the use of any other person, who fraudulently appropriates it to any use or purpose not in the due and lawful execution of his trust, or secretes it with a fraudulent intent to appropriate it to such use or purpose, is guilty of embezzlement. People v. Applegate, 91 Cal.App.2d 163, 173, 204 P.2d 689.

Defendant contends that when he was billed for the jewelry on December 3, 1948, it was the intention of Mr. Lewis that it was merely an account between them and that title vested in defendant to the property entrusted to him. However, the defendant and Mr. Lewis both testified that the memorandum did not pass title but only turned over custody of the jewelry. Defendant's contention is further refuted by his testimony that he returned the jewelry to the Owl Cafe with directions to return it to Mr. Lewis. The demand mailed to defendant on December 3d was a request for the return of the jewelry or the money therefor, if it had been sold, and was in accordance with the prior agreement between the two men. The jewelry was never returned to the complaining witness nor was it sold in accordance with the terms of the agreement. The intent of the defendant to unlawfully deprive the prosecuting witness of his jewelry was a question of fact provable like any other fact by the acts, conduct and circumstances connected with the offense. People v. Fewkes, 214 Cal. 142, 148, 4 P.2d 538; People v. Van Wyke, 91 Cal.App.2d 839, 843, 206 P.2d 53.

substantial support in the evidence, the finding of the jury as to such intent is conclusive upon appeal. People v. Raines, 66 Cal.App.2d 960, 962, 153 P.2d 424. The defendant's denials and assertions with reference to the circumstances under which he took the jewelry and his subsequent disposition of it merely created a conflict in the evidence which the jury resolved against him. Since the circumstances reasonably justify the verdict of the jury, its finding will not be here interfered with. People v. Huizenga, 34 Cal.2d 669, 675, 213 P.2d 710.

The defendant's contention that the court erred in the admission of evidence has to do with the testimony relating to other offenses and was introduced by the prosecution for the purpose of establishing fraudulent intent. This testimony was substantially that the defendant, representing himself as an insurance adjuster for the Farmers Insurance Company, in October of 1948, obtained a ring from a jeweler in Oakland; that a memorandum was drawn up for the ring and defendant left with it, never to return.

Evidence was also introduced to the effect that the defendant was employed as an agent by the Farmers Insurance Group on June 21, 1948, and left their employ on September 13th of that year; that he sold eight policies during the time of his employment and failed to remit funds due his employer.

[4-6] The evidence as to the Oakland transaction was clearly admissible under the circumstances, as in the prosecution of grand theft in the nature of embezzlement, evidence is admissible of acts of a similar nature committed by the defendant before and after the date of the act upon which the conviction is predicated. People v. Kendall, 65 Cal.App.2d 569, 570, 151 P.2d 39; People v. Thompson, 85 Cal.App.2d 261, 264, 192 P.2d 802. While the admission of the evidence relating to the defendant's failure to remit moneys to the Farmers Insurance Group was questionable, the error, if any, is not sufficient to justify the reversal of the judgment.

[7] It is contended that the prosecuting attorney was guilty of misconduct in introducing the testimony relative to other offenses and in attempting to introduce evidence for the sole purpose of defaming the character of the defendant. The particular questions objected to are not set forth in this specification of error but only the conclusion that it was misconduct. In the absence of a showing that the prosecuting attorney asked questions solely for the wanton purpose of creating a prejudice against the defendant or that his acts mitigated against a fair and orderly procedure, it cannot be said that his conduct was prejudicial or offensive. People v. Horowitz, 70 Cal.App.2d 675, 693, 694, 161 P.2d 833.

[8, 9] Finally, it is contended that the trial court erred in instructing the jury on the subject of flight. It is not contended that the instruction was in itself faulty but it is argued that there was no evidence of flight. The defendant left California on December 5, 1948, and went to Houston, Texas, where he was arrested in September of 1949. The question as to why he left this state was one for the jury. People v. Gregoris, 70 Cal.App.2d 716, 720, 161 P.2d 568; People v. Goodwin, 202 Cal. 527, 541, 261 P. 1009. The evidence was sufficient to warrant the giving of the instructions regarding flight. People v. Peak, 66 Cal.App.2d 894, 910, 911, 153 P.2d 464. The jury, under the circumstances herein, could not have been misled by the instruction given.

[10] The defendant complains of an instruction defining a trustee. This instruction merely stated that a trustee is one who is in a fiduciary relationship to another and that a fiduciary is under a duty to act for the benefit of the other as to matters within the scope of the relation. We see no error in not giving additional instructions on the definition of a trustee, particularly where no such additional instructions were requested.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

FOWLER v. KEY SYSTEM TRANSIT LINES et al.

Civ. 14131.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 22, 1950.

Hearing Granted Nov. 20, 1950.*

Action by Jessie Fowler against the Key System Transit Lines, a corporation, and others, for damages for personal injuries arising when plaintiff fell after alighting from defendant's bus. The Superior Court in and for the County of Alameda, A. J. Woolsey, J., entered a verdict in favor of defendants and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Goodell, J., held that where issue of contributory negligence was at issue in case, evidence relating to a custom whereby defendant's bus usually stopped at intersection in question on the crosswalk so that alighting passengers would not have to step into a gutter, as plaintiff did in case, was admissible.

Reversed.

1. Negligence ⇐124(3)

Evidence of custom is ordinarily admissible in negligence cases.

2. Carriers ⇐345

In action for damages arising when a passenger on defendant's bus stepped off bus on a dark night at an intersection into a gutter which caused passenger to fall and injure herself, where contributory negligence of passenger was an issue in case, evidence relating to a custom, whereby bus usually stopped at intersection in question at crosswalk and thereby passengers alighting from bus would not have to step into gutter as plaintiff did, was admissible, notwithstanding that a positive statute prevented a bus from stopping at crosswalks. Vehicle Code, § 586.

3. Appeal and error ⇐216(1)

Where appellant did not request trial court to give a particular instruction, appellant could not claim upon appeal that trial court erred in failing to give instruction in question.

4. Appeal and error ⇐110, 870(6)

Order of trial court denying a new trial is not an "appealable order," and is only reviewable on appeal from judgment itself. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 956, 963.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Appealable Order".

James G. Quinn, Jr., William H. Quinn, Oakland, Max Radin, Berkeley, for appellant.

Donahue, Richards, Rowell & Gallagher and Bryant M. Bennett, all of Oakland, for respondent.

GOODELL, Justice.

Appellant sued for damages for personal injuries. The verdict was in favor of respondent for its costs. A new trial was denied and this appeal was taken.

On Sunday evening July 7, 1946 about 8:30, appellant, a woman of 70, was a passenger on a Key System bus traveling easterly on San Jose Avenue in Alameda. She signalled for a stop at Paru Street and the bus stopped at the southwest corner of the two streets with its front door a short distance westerly of the north-and-south crosswalk. The night was dark and the intersection was but dimly lighted. As appellant left the bus by its front door she stepped into the gutter, which was about 8 inches deep, its bottom paved with cobble-stones; it was rough and uneven and contained debris, rocks and pebbles. She lost her balance and fell against the curb before getting a foothold on the sidewalk, and fractured her left hip. When the bus stopped it was inclined toward the sidewalk, on an angle, which left the appellant very little room, and put her in fear of being struck by it when it started up. Appellant was found lying where she fell, by a police officer, who had to use the spotlight on his car to make sure a human being was lying there.

Appellant's principal contention is that the court erred in excluding the testimony of two witnesses as to the customary stopping place of the busses.

At San Jose Avenue and Paru Street the crosswalk is flush with the sidewalk so that a pedestrian crossing the avenue would not have to step up or down at a curb and over a gutter, but would keep walking along on the same plane as the sidewalk, which situation appears clearly in three photographs in evidence. The gutter into which appellant stepped was at the opening of the culvert which runs under the crosswalk.

The two witnesses testified that the customary bus stops were within the area of the crosswalk, which the witnesses marked on the photographs. It is evident that had the bus stopped at any of the accustomed places within the flat area as they portrayed them, appellant would have stepped onto the crosswalk and not into the gutter as she did.

The testimony of both witnesses was stricken out on defendant's motion, which left the record as if it had been rejected in the first place. Appellant's counsel in urging its retention assured the court that Mrs. Fowler would testify "that it was the place where the bus always stopped to permit her to alight in the past," and that he had "under subpoena several witnesses to testify in addition to the two already, that use that bus regularly, that that is the regular place * * *."

Appellant does not contend that the failure to stop at the accustomed place on this occasion was negligence per se, but she does contend that "The custom of the bus in stopping regularly at a particular place on the route, the place at which the plaintiff expected to alight and at which she thought she was alighting, was brought into the trial as one of the elements necessary to show the defendant's negligence in this particular case." She contends further that she "was entitled to show the custom of this respondent as establishing a standard of safety in this case and this case only, and her reliance upon that standard so adopted by respondent itself."

In Ross v. San Francisco, etc., Railways Co., 47 Cal.App. 753, 766, 191 P. 703, 709, the court said "The settled practice of stopping a streetcar at a particular place becomes a rule of conduct upon which the public has a right to rely to a reasonable extent, and a departure from such rule is a vitally important element in determining the question of negligence, for it constitutes a departure from the standard of safety which the defendant has itself adopted. [Citations.]"

[1] There can be no doubt that evidence of custom is ordinarily admissible in negligence cases. Cases so holding are Hennesey v. Bingham, 125 Cal. 627, 635-636, 58 P. 200; Adamson v. City of San Francisco, 66 Cal.App. 256, 260, 225 P. 875; Thomas v. Southern Pacific Co., 116 Cal.App. 126, 131-132, 2 P.2d 544; Mace v. Watanabe, 31 Cal.App.2d 321, 323, 87 P. 2d 893; Burke v. John E. Marshall, Inc., 42 Cal.App.2d 195, 203-204, 108 P.2d 738; Scott v. Gallot, 59 Cal.App.2d 421, 425-426, 138 P.2d 685.

The evidence rejected in this case was not that of a general custom, but of respondent's own custom and practice, such as that spoken of in Ross v. San Francisco, etc., Railways Co., supra.

In Adamson v. San Francisco, 66 Cal. App. 256, 260, 225 P. 875, 876, this court said: "Where * * * a usual practice or custom has obtained, and * * * the claim is made that one of the parties has, to the discomfiture of the other, without notice, departed from the usual custom, or practice, the courts have by an unbroken line of decisions held that the question of negligence on the part of the defendant, and the question of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, are both questions for the jury to determine in the light of all of the facts, including the evidence tending to establish the alleged custom or practice and the alleged deviation therefrom. [Citations.]" (Emphasis added.)

This was cited approvingly in Polk v. City of Los Angeles, 26 Cal.2d 519, 531-532, 159 P.2d 931, 937, where it was said "Whether negligence or contributory negligence may be predicated upon departure from custom is a question for the jury." The Adamson opinion contains a pertinent quotation from Carter v. Sioux City Service Co., 160 Iowa 78, 89, 141 N.W. 26, 30, on the subject of departure from custom.

From these and other authorities it is settled law that evidence of custom is admissible for its bearing on either negligence or contributory negligence.

Respondents pleaded that plaintiff failed to "exercise ordinary care and caution in conducting herself so as to avoid the alleged accident" and that it was "directly and proximately caused by the contributory negligence of said plaintiff." Contributory negligence thus became an important issue in the case, and if the evidence of custom bore on that issue it should have been admitted for that reason if for no other.

In Scott v. Gallot, supra, 59 Cal.App.2d 421, 138 P.2d 685, the trial court granted a new trial because it had stricken out certain evidence of custom, relevant under the affirmative issue of contributory negligence. The order granting the new trial was affirmed.

In Muir v. Cheney Bros., 64 Cal.App.2d 55, 63, 148 P.2d 138, 141, the court in discussing plaintiff's testimony respecting the customary course of traffic, said: "From the reported decisions it is apparent that the evidence was not admissible for the purpose of excusing the plaintiff for the violation of any provisions of the law. However, it was admissible as a part of the res gestae for the purpose of giving to the jury full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances which existed at the time and place of the accident, which were known to the parties, so as to permit the jury to pass upon the question of whether plaintiff conducted himself as an ordinary and reasonable person would have conducted himself in the light of all of the circumstances. [Citations.]" (Emphasis added.) Carter v. Sioux City Service Co., quoted in the Adamson case, supra, is substantially the same.

Respondents attempt to justify the court's ruling by invoking the familiar rule that "Custom cannot overcome unequivocal statutory provisions." The basis for this is the provision of § 586, Vehicle Code, that "No person shall stop * * * any vehicle * * * on a crosswalk." Of the five California cases they cite on this point only one is a negligence case. None of them is in point since appellant had no such purpose as those cases disclose. In Hurtel v. Albert Cohn, Inc., 5 Cal.2d 145, 52 P.2d 922, the plaintiff sought to excuse her own violation of an ordinance dealing with stop-and-go signals by showing that everybody violated it. In Kohn v. Sacramento, etc., Co., 168 Cal. 1, 141 P. 626, 629, it was contended that non-negotiable bonds should be treated as negotiable instruments because for years everybody had so treated them, and the courts should "make the letter of the statutes bend" to the custom. Respondents' cases are not to be criticized for they all enforce the rule stated above, but they simply do not touch this case.

The excluded evidence was not offered for the purpose of opposing custom to statute law. Appellant had not disobeyed any law and was not seeking to excuse any violation by invoking custom.

The evidence might have shown repeated violations of § 586 but they were not appellant's violations. If respondent railway habitually stops its busses in the crosswalk, that is a matter between it and the law enforcement authorities, and appellant is concerned therein only in so far as such stops tend to establish the bus line's own standard of safety for its passengers, and in so far as such stops had afforded appellant a safe place to alight.

Appellant is no more affected or concerned with the violations of § 586 than was the passenger-plaintiff in Clarkson v. United Railroads et al., 67 Cal.App. 372, 227 P. 710, 712, concerned with the written contract between the United Railroads and the Western Pacific. There the custom, which departed from the contract, of handling trains was put before the jury and an instruction on the subject was given. With respect to the attack on the instruction this court said: "* * * this is an action based on the alleged negligence of the parties to the alleged written agreement, and the action is being maintained by one who was not a party to that written agreement. As to each of the defendants the issue in this case was negligence or no negligence." The court then restated what it said in Adamson v. San Francisco, supra, and concluded: "As between the two defendants in this case we think it is clear that the same rule should apply. The question was not what each of the defendants had agreed to do, but the question distinctly was what custom or practice theretofore had obtained."

By relying on § 586 respondents in effect say to appellant: "In giving you in the past a safe place to alight we violated § 586, but you are now foreclosed from proving our custom for the very reason that we were transgressors." Respondents are thus taking advantage of their own violations of law, Civ. Code, § 3517; Hedlund v. Sutter Medical Service Co., 51 Cal.App. 2d 327, 333-334, 124 P.2d 878, to keep from the record evidence which otherwise would be clearly admissible.

The precise question is, whether evidence of a custom which violates positive law is to be rejected for that reason alone, or whether it is nevertheless admissible if it bears on negligence or contributory negligence. Neither side has produced any California authority on precisely this problem. There are, however, cases in other jurisdictions directly in point, the leading one of which seems to be Langner v. Caviness et al., 1947, 238 Iowa 774, 28 N.W. 2d 421, 423, 172 A.L.R. 1135. Therein it appears that the law of Iowa requires persons in vehicles meeting each other on the highway to give half the traveled way by turning to the right, and a violation is prima facie evidence of negligence. However, a well-established custom existed between truckers when working upon public works that the driver of an empty truck would yield the right of way to the driver of a loaded truck when about to meet in a narrow or defective place in the highway. Defendants in a negligence case arising out of a collision between trucks filed a counter-claim, wherein they pleaded the existence of such custom. On plaintiff's motion, that part of the answer was stricken out on the ground that it stated "no defense or excuse for failure to exercise the statutory care required of defendants in the operation of their truck." A verdict was returned for plaintiff and defendants appealed, contending that the stricken allegations properly bore on the issue of plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence. The appeal was "presented by both sides largely as if the trial court had ruled directly against the admissibility of evidence in support of the pleaded custom", 28 N.W.2d 423, which is the way the problem arose here. The court in reversing held that the custom was properly pleaded and that the allegations should not have been stricken out. It said, at 28 N.W.2d 423: "It is generally held * * * that a custom which conflicts with a statutory provision will not be enforced. Where there is such conflict, the statute must control [citations] * * * However, there are decisions that evidence of custom is admissible even for the purpose of excusing noncompliance with a state or municipal regulation. Dugan v. Fry, 3 Cir., 34 F.2d 723, 724, 725; Pollock v. Hamm, 177 Ark. 348, 6 S.W.2d 541; Tobin v. Goodwin, 157 Wash. 658, 290 P. 215. See also Hensen v. Connecticut Co., 98 Conn. 71, 118 A. 464, 467. As stated, defendants do not contend the custom upon which they rely could excuse the negligence charged against Woolums but argue only it may be considered on the issue of plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence. * * * We think the custom pleaded here cannot be invoked to supersede or nullify the above statute. But it does not follow that such custom cannot be considered in determining whether plaintiff was free from contributory negligence."

The court then cites inter alia Mann v. Standard Oil Co., 129 Neb. 226, 261 N.W. 168, and then reaches into California for further authority, citing Muir v. Cheney Bros., supra, and saying: "Muir v. Cheney Bros., 64 Cal.App.2d 55, 148 P.2d 138, 141, involves the question of right of way at an intersection and holds evidence of the customary course of traffic at the intersection was properly received, not to excuse plaintiff's failure to yield the right of way, but to give the jury full knowledge of the circumstances at the time and place of the collision, which were known to the parties, so as to permit the jury to decide whether plaintiff acted as an ordinarily prudent person in the light of such circumstances." (Emphasis added.)

Langner v. Caviness cites authorities from several other states, and at 28 N.W. 2d 424 summarizes the Mann case as follows: "Our conclusion is amply supported by authority. In Mann v. Standard Oil Co., 129 Neb. 226, 261 N.W. 168, defendant offered evidence of a recognized custom to signal a left turn by opening the left door and that its truck driver gave such signal. The statute required an arm signal. The court holds the custom could not supersede the statute but the evidence was admissible upon the issue of plaintiff's contributory negligence."

Respondents cite Glaum v. Cummings et al., decided by the Illinois Appellate Court, and have supplied the full text of the opinion. It is unreported but the syllabi are found in 317 Ill.App. 655, 47 N.E.2d 359. Judgment was entered on a directed verdict for the defendants, which was affirmed. Glaum was injured while alighting from a street car and his claim of negligence was based on the failure to furnish him with a reasonably safe place to alight, and in failing to stop at the regular stopping place. His attempt to prove that it was the railway's custom to stop at a place other than that where he was injured, was met by the railway's showing that the law prohibited it. The court rejected the offer of proof and in affirming the judgment the Appellate Court said: "It has been consistently held that a custom cannot be invoked to avoid a settled rule of law or to prevail against or overcome a statute, and such an alleged custom is therefore not binding. [Citations.]"

The case, while similar, is not in point since Glaum's contributory negligence was so flagrant that the court took the case away from the jury. Hence the rule just discussed was not brought into play, and probably not even considered. What the court said respecting custom is no different from what our California courts have said, and none of the three cases cited in the Glaum opinion is a tort case.

[2] We are satisfied that the evidence in question should have been admitted, and that its rejection was prejudicial error.

Appellant complains of an instruction on "alighting" because as given it "could not help suggesting to the jury that * * * the relation of carrier and passenger had in fact ceased." Counsel suggest that to make the instruction correct "the court should have supplemented this statement with the contrary rule, that when the passenger had not safely alighted, the relation of passenger and carrier had not ceased." It is not necessary to decide whether this instruction was correct. The real complaint is that it should have been amplified and balanced off as indicated. This can be readily accomplished on the next trial by counsel preparing their own conception of how it should be balanced and amplified and tendering it to the court. See Rogers v. Interstate Transit Co., 212 Cal. 36, 44, 297 P. 884.

[3] Appellant also claims the court erred "in not charging the jury specifically that the defendant * * * owed the duty of the highest care and not merely ordinary care." Appellant did not request such an instruction hence she cannot complain. Rogers v. Interstate Transit Co., supra, 212 Cal. 36, 44, 297 P. 884; Peckham v. Warner Bros. Pictures, 42 Cal.App.2d 187, 189, 108 P.2d 699; Greenleaf v. Briggs, 78 Cal.App.2d 720, 178 P.2d 459. On the next trial there is no reason why it should not be tendered and given.

In view of the reversal, nothing is to be gained by discussing the other alleged errors.

[4] In addition to the appeal from the judgment, an appeal was taken from the order denying a new trial, which is not an appealable order. Code Civ. Proc. § 963; 2 McKinney's Dig. Recompiled, p. 161, § 74. Such order is reviewable on the appeal from the judgment itself, Code Civ. Proc. § 956; Casner v. Daily News Co., 12 Cal.2d 402, 404, 84 P.2d 1032. Accordingly, that appeal is dismissed.

The judgment is reversed.

UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY CO. v. JUSTICE COURT OF VISTA TP., SAN DIEGO COUNTY, et al.

Civ. 4204.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Sept. 27, 1950.

Hearing Denied Nov. 20, 1950.

Certiorari proceedings by the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company against Justice Court of Vista Township, San Diego County, and others, to review an order forfeiting bail bond. The Superior Court, San Diego County, John A. Hewicker, J., entered judgment for petitioner, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that bonding company was obligated until defendant complied with judgment of conviction and that bond was not exonerated by operation of law on day sentence was imposed on defendant.

Reversed.

1. Criminal law ⇐1001

Court has no power to suspend execution of sentence except as incident to granting probation, and an order suspending sentence is in legal effect the equivalent of an order granting probation. Pen.Code, § 1203.

2. Bail ⇐75

Where defendant was at liberty under bail bond which provided that defendant would appear for judgment and render himself in execution thereof, and defendant was subsequently convicted, but court at his request extended time of payment of fine 10 days, and suspension was not intended as exercise of authority under probation law, and it did not appear that bail was present in court at time of sentence or made any demand or request that bail be exonerated, bonding company was obligated until defendant complied with judgment and bond was not exonerated by operation of law on day sentence was imposed.

3. Bail ⇐74(1)

Sureties on a bond conditioned that principal shall abide judgment of court, or that he will appear for judgment and render himself in execution thereof, are not discharged by a conviction and pronouncement of sentence, and principal must further submit to such punishment as shall be adjudged.

MUSSELL, Justice.

On June 27, 1947, one Cyrus L. Morris was convicted in the Justice Court of Vista Township, county of San Diego, of a violation of Vehicle Code section 502. Morris was at liberty under a bail bond issued by the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company, which bond contained the following language: "Now we, United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company, a Maryland corporation, hereby undertake that the above named defendant, Cyrus L. Morris, will appear and answer the charge above mentioned in whatever court it may be prosecuted and will at all times hold himself amenable to the orders and process of the court, and if convicted, will appear for judgment and render himself in execution thereof; or, if the said defendant fails to perform either of these conditions, that we will pay to the people of the State of California the sum of Two Hundred Fifty Dollars lawful money of the United States. If the forfeiture of this bond be ordered by the court, judgment may be summarily made and entered forthwith against the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company, a Maryland corporation, and the said defendant if he be a party to the bond, for the amount of their respective undertakings herein as provided by Section 1305 and 1306 of the Penal Code."

After conviction, Morris waived time and sentence was imposed that he pay a fine of $250 or serve ninety days in jail. Morris then requested, and the court granted, ten days time to pay. The fine was not paid within the ten-day period and Morris failed to appear and surrender himself in execution of the judgment.

On July 11, 1949, the bail bond was declared forfeited and on October 11, 1949, a summary judgment of forfeiture was made and entered and a bench warrant was issued at the request of the bonding company. However, the defendant Morris was not thereafter apprehended.

The bonding company filed a petition in the superior court in San Diego, praying that a writ of certiorari be issued to the respondent Justice of the Peace commanding him to certify and return to the court the proceedings had against the defendant Morris in order that the same might be reviewed. The writ was issued and after hearing thereon, the trial court concluded that the surety bond was exonerated by operation of law on the 27th day of June, 1949, the day sentence was imposed upon Cyrus L. Morris. Judgment was entered accordingly and this appeal followed.

The principal question presented is whether the trial court was correct in its conclusion that the bond was exonerated under the facts related, which facts are not questioned. The question must be answered in the negative.

When the justice court granted Morris ten days within which to pay the fine, it thereby stayed the execution of the judgment for that period and Morris was not required to surrender himself in execution of the judgment until that time had expired.

The bond, by its plain language, provides that the defendant will appear for judgment and render himself in execution thereof. He appeared for judgment and at his request the time when he should again appear for the purpose of surrendering himself in execution thereof was fixed. He failed to comply with the condition of the bond that he render himself in execution of the judgment. The petitioner herein, as surety, was liable for his appearance in accordance with the terms of the bond. County of Los Angeles v. Maga, 97 Cal. App. 688, 690, 276 P. 352.

The question of the liability of a surety on its bail bond, where pronouncement of sentence was continued at the defendant's request for a period of forty days, was before this court in General Casualty Co. v. Justice's Court, 41 Cal.App.2d 784, 107 P.2d 663. In that case several authorities were discussed bearing upon the question involved, among them being Commonwealth v. Turpin, 98 Ky. 9, 32 S.W. 133; State v. Blum, 57 N.D. 619, 223 N.W. 697; State v. Helgerson, 59 S.D. 516, 241 N.W. 325, and In re Howard, 72 Cal.App. 374, 237, P. 406.

It was held in the Commonwealth v. Turpin case, supra, where, in a prosecution for a misdemeanor, the court permitted the defendant to go to his home for the purpose of making arrangements to pay his fine, that the surety was liable upon his disappearance without its payment. The bond in that case, as here, contained the condition that the defendant, if convicted, should render himself in execution of the judgment.

In State v. Blum, supra, the undertaking of bail was conditioned that the defendant would appear for judgment and render himself in execution thereof and after plea of guilty, and the passing of sentence upon him, the defendant escaped from the courtroom and failed to surrender himself to the sheriff in execution of the judgment. The court held that the sureties on the undertaking of bail were liable because of the defendant's failure to comply with the order of the court.

In State v. Helgerson, supra, the defendant was on bail. Judgment was entered against him on November 23, 1929, he being present in court at the time. The court then ordered the commitment to be stayed until December 14, 1929. The defendant did not appear at the conclusion of the stay and his bond was declared forfeited. The court said, 241 N.W. at page 326: "After sentence, without express order to the contrary, there is an implied legal change of custody from the bail to the law, especially where the bond contains no condition requiring the defendant to abide the final judgment or, if convicted, to render himself in execution of the judgment. 20 A.L.R. 629, note; 6 C.J. 1032; Detroit Fidelity & Surety Co. v. United States, 6 Cir., 36 F.2d 682, 683. But here the bond contained the condition that the principal therein should 'render himself in execution of the judgment.' Furthermore, the very part of the judgment which respondents claim freed them from liability on their bond, negatives any implication of change of custody from the bail to the law. As stated by the Court of Appeals in Detroit Fidelity & Surety Co. v. United States, supra; 'Nothing in the judgment, either expressly or by implication, changed the right of the surety to arrest and deliver its principal as authorized by law.' The bondsmen in the case at bar had less cause to be released from their liability than the bondsmen in the case last cited, because the language of the present bond was more comprehensive, and there was nothing whatever to prevent respondents from arresting their principal and surrendering him to the law."

In Re Howard, supra, the defendant pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor charge on May 13, 1924, and was sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail for the term of 180 days. At the same time, the court made this order "execution suspended for 3 days." At that time the defendant was in fact allowed his leave without any order of court to that effect, other than a supposed implication from the suspension of execution. On February 17, 1925, the defendant was arrested and imprisoned in the city jail to begin service of said sentence. The commitment bore the date of May 13, 1924. It was contended that the imprisonment was illegal because the defendant was allowed to remain at liberty throughout the maximum term of his sentence and during that period of time there was no revocation of the suspension of execution and no authority thereafter existed to imprison him in satisfaction of such judgment. The court, in discussing the effect of the three-day suspension, of execution, held that an order of suspension of execution for such a brief period as three days should not be presumed to be an attempted exercise of authority under the probation law, and said, 72 Cal.App. at pages 378, 379, 237 P. at page 408: "Common sense indicates that none of the purposes of probation would be advanced by an unexplained three-day order of this kind. We think that in such an order, thus briefly limited as to time, there should be something further on the face of the order to indicate that it was an exercise of authority under the probation law, before it can be construed as of that character. * * *"

[1] It seems well settled that since the enactment of Penal Code section 1203, the court has no power to suspend execution of sentence except as an incident to granting probation, People v. Sidwell, 27 Cal. 2d 121, 162 P.2d 913; People v. Williams, 93 Cal.App.2d 777, 779, 209 P.2d 949, and that an order suspending sentence is, in legal effect, "the equivalent of an order granting probation". In re Herron, 217 Cal. 400, 404, 19 P.2d 4, 6.

It has also been held that "Probation is not a judgment", People v. Williams, supra, 93 Cal.App. page 779, 209 P.2d 950, and that where the rendition of the judgment and imposition of sentence is suspended and a defendant granted probation, no final judgment has been entered and no appeal lies from the "judgment". People v. Guerrero, 22 Cal.2d 183, 184, 137 P.2d 21.

In Re Phillips, 17 Cal.2d 55, 58, 109 P.2d 344, 346, 132 A.L.R. 644, the court, in discussing the power of the trial court to grant probation after conviction, used the following language: "The power of the trial court to grant probation after a conviction may be exercised in either of two ways: the court may suspend the imposition of the sentence, in which case no judgment of conviction is rendered, or it may impose the sentence and thereafter suspend its execution. Penal Code, §§ 1203.1, 1203.2. In the latter case a judgment of conviction has been rendered from which an appeal can be taken, and upon affirmance, it becomes a final judgment. In the former situation, however, where the court suspends the imposition of the sentence, that is, the rendition of a judgment of conviction, there is no judgment from which the defendant can prosecute an appeal. (People v. Von Eckartsberg, 133 Cal.App. 1, 3, 23 P.2d 819; People v. Noone, 132 Cal.App. 89, 92, 22 P.2d 284; People v. DeVoe, 123

Cal.App. 233, 236, 11 P.2d 26; 8 Cal.Jur. 493), and thus there can be no final judgment of conviction."

[2] In the instant case, as in the Howard case, supra, there was nothing on the face of the order of the justice court to indicate that it was intended as an exercise of authority under the probation law. No change of custody of the defendant was contemplated by the court or the defendant. No reference of the case was made to the probation officer, and if such a reference had been made, it would not have had the effect of placing the defendant in custody of such officer. In re Giannini, 18 Cal.App. 166, 169, 122 P. 831. The court, in effect, pronounced judgment that the defendant pay a fine of $250 within ten days or serve ninety days in jail. In this connection it should be noted that the bonding company had the right to surrender the defendant at any time if it so desired and that no proceedings were had at the time of pronouncement of judgment indicating that the surety desired to be relieved from its obligation under the bond.

According to the plain terms of the order, the defendant was required to render himself in execution of the judgment if the fine imposed was not paid within ten days from the time of the entry of the judgment. The order was valid whether it be considered as a granting of probation or not. Since the bond provided that the defendant would at all times hold himself amenable to the orders and process of the court, and render himself in execution of the judgment, the bonding company was obligated until a compliance with the judgment.

[3] As is said in 8 C.J.S., Bail, § 79, subd. g, p. 158: "Sureties on a bond conditioned that the principal shall abide the judgment of the court, or that he will appear for judgment and render himself in execution thereof, are not discharged by a conviction and pronouncement of sentence, and the principal must further submit to such punishment as shall be adjudged."

It is argued that the bail bond was exonerated upon pronouncement of judgment by the court where the defendant was present in court for that purpose, and as authority for this contention, two cases are cited: Rodman v. Superior Court, 13 Cal. 2d 262, 89 P.2d 109, and People v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 107 Cal.App. 160, 290 P. 59. In the Rodman v. Superior Court case the defendant, after his conviction, was before the court for the pronouncement of judgment and a motion for exoneration of bail was made. The question of the disposition of cash bail was the only problem considered. The question as to whether after sentence and prior to execution thereof the bail remained in force was not directly passed upon. The court pointed out that a bail has a right to surrender the defendant in exoneration thereof and that this was, in effect, done; that where cash bail has been deposited in a criminal case, not by the defendant but by a third party, the third party is entitled to the return of his money upon application therefor when the defendant has, in effect, surrendered himself by appearing in court for the pronouncement of judgment. The Fidelity and Deposit case, likewise, did not involve the problem of probation or suspension of sentence. Neither case is decisive of the question before us.

As heretofore noted, in the present case it is not shown by the record that the bail was present in court at the time of sentence or that any demand or request was then made that the bail be exonerated. The defendant did not thereafter appear and the judgment was still in force and unsatisfied.

In view of what we have here said, it is not necessary to pass upon other points raised.

Judgment reversed.

WOODS et al. v. EASTRIDGE et al.

Civ. 3961.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Sept. 25, 1950.

Action by Willie H. Woods and another against Gladys Eastridge, Betty A. Pierce, and others, for damages sustained in automobile collision. The Superior Court, San Diego County, L. N. Turrentine, J., entered judgment for plaintiffs, but, upon motion by second named defendant, entered an order setting aside and vacating the judgment, and entered judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appealed, and defendant appealed from original judgment. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, Acting P. J., held that defendant's motion was filed within statutory limit of 60 days from date of original judgment, and that where transferor, upon sale of automobile, made endorsement and delivery of certificates of ownership and registration to transferee, transferor was not liable for subsequent negligent operation of automobile by another.

Affirmed. Defendant's appeal dismissed.

1. Time ⇐9(5, 8)

Where original judgment for plaintiffs was entered on September 14, motion for order setting aside judgment and directing another and different judgment filed by defendant on November 13 was filed within statutory limit of 60 days. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 12, 663, 663a; Rules on Appeal, rules 2, 3.

2. Automobiles ⇐19

Statutory provision requiring that transferor of motor vehicle make proper endorsement and delivery of certificates of ownership and registration to transferee as provided in code for his release from liability for negligence as owner was not inconsistent with statutory provisions requiring that transferor notify Motor Vehicle Department of the transfer, and that transferee deliver to department such certificates with transfer fee. Vehicle Code, §§ 177, 178, subd. 1, 186, 402.

Transferor, who made endorsement and delivery of certificates of ownership and registration of automobile to transferee, was not liable for subsequent negligent operation of automobile by another, although transferor had not given notice and transferee had not delivered such certificates with transfer fee to Motor Vehicle Department, and rule of estoppel could not be applied. Vehicle Code, §§ 177, 178, subd. 1, 186, 402.

4. Appeal and error ⇐790(1)

Defendant's appeal from original judgment became moot and would be dismissed when defendant prevailed on plaintiff's appeal from order setting aside the original judgment and from judgment subsequently entered.

Burton D. Wood, San Diego, for defendant-respondent-appellant Betty A. Pierce.

GRIFFIN, Acting Presiding Justice.

This action arose out of an automobile collision in which the plaintiff Willie H. Woods was the driver, plaintiff Otis Nelson was the guest in that car, defendant Gladys Eastridge was the driver, and defendant Betty A. Pierce was the alleged owner of the other car. After a trial by the court a judgment was entered on September 14, 1948, in favor of plaintiff Woods for $1316, and in favor of plaintiff Nelson for $1000 against defendant Betty A. Pierce, based on a finding that Betty A. Pierce was the owner of the car which was being driven by defendant Gladys Eastridge. During the trial defendant Gladys Eastridge was dismissed from the action, as were the fictitious defendants. Thereafter, defendant Pierce made a motion under sections 663 and 663a of the Code of Civil Procedure for an order setting aside and vacating the judgment and directing another and different judgment, which motion was granted by an order dated December 13, 1948. A second judgment, so signed, amended the conclusions of law by finding that the defendant Pierce, at the time of the accident, was not the owner of the automobile responsible for plaintiffs' injuries, and directed a judgment in favor of the defendant Betty A. Pierce. On February 3, 1949, plaintiffs appealed from the order granting the motion setting aside the judgment and from the judgment that followed. On February 24, 1949, defendant Betty A. Pierce appealed from the original judgment entered on September 14, 1948, pursuant to Rule 3(b) (2), Rules on Appeal. The appeals are on the judgment roll.

Plaintiffs first claim that the judgment made by the trial court, entered on September 14, 1948, which was in favor of plaintiff, became final, so that it would deprive the trial court of jurisdiction to make and enter the second judgment.

[1] It is argued that under Rule 2 of the Rules on Appeal, the notice of appeal should have been filed within 60 days from the date of entry of the judgment unless extended by Rule 3; that since the judgment was entered on September 14, 1948, in computing the time, September 14 is counted as the first day, and under this computation the 60 days would expire on November 12. Therefore, since the motion to set aside the judgment was not filed until November 13, it did not extend the time under Rule 3, and the original judgment became final and the court had no jurisdiction to set it aside and make a different judgment, citing Municipal Improvement Co. v. Thompson, 201 Cal. 629, 632, 258 P. 955. We see no merit to this argument. Section 12 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the time in which any act provided by law is to be done is computed by excluding the first day and including the last, unless the last day is a holiday, and then it is also excluded. See, 24 Cal.Jur. p. 579, sec. 9. This section has been construed as applicable to the filing of a notice of appeal, Hoover v. Sweitzer, 34 Cal.App.2d 441, 93 P.2d 831; as to a motion for new trial, Payne v. Hunt, 214 Cal. 605, 7 P.2d 302; and as to the time for filing a verified claim against municipalities, Shea v. City of San Bernardino, 7 Cal.2d 688, 695, 62 P.2d 365. See Ley v. Dominguez, 212 Cal. 587, 299 P. 713, as to a discussion of the holding in Municipal Improvement Co. v. Thompson, supra, cited by defendant.

Apparently the trial court found, in the first instance, that defendant Pierce's liability was based on her ownership of the car. On the motion to enter a different judgment the court concluded, from the detailed statement of facts found, that she was not an owner within the meaning of sec. 402 of the Vehicle Code.

The facts found are that defendant Gladys Eastridge negligently operated the automobile in which she was riding and that plaintiffs were injured to the extent mentioned. The court found that plaintiffs were not guilty of contributory negligence; that it was not true that defendant Eastridge was the agent or servant of defendant Pierce in the operation of the automobile. It then specifically found that defendant Pierce purchased the automobile and became the registered owner in August, 1944; that the Pacific Finance Corporation became the legal owner; that in January, 1946, and at all times subsequent to August, 1944, the records of the Department of Motor Vehicles showed defendant Pierce as registered owner and the finance corporation as the legal owner; that in the early part of 1945, defendant Pierce made a bona fide conditional sale of the car to one Luevano, and at the time of making such sale delivered possession of the automobile and of the certificate of registration issued by the department to Luevano; that Luevano had possession of said car and the certificate of registration and that defendant Pierce did not at any of said times have possession or use thereof or of said certificate of registration; that on November 15, 1945, the finance company endorsed the certificate of ownership in such manner as to effect a relinquishment of its rights as legal owner and delivered the said certificate of ownership, so endorsed, to defendant Pierce; that defendant Pierce had possession of the certificate of ownership so endorsed at all times subsequent to November 15, 1945, until approximately the hour of 5 o'clock p. m. of January 5, 1946; that on January 5, at the hour mentioned, Luevano delivered and paid to defendant Pierce the balance due from him to her on account of the purchase price of the automobile pursuant to a conditional sales agreement; that at that hour defendant Pierce properly endorsed the certificate of ownership, so bearing the endorsement of the finance company, as aforesaid, by writing her signature in the appropriate space on the certificate of ownership for the transfer, by the registered owner, of the motor vehicle described, and at the same time delivered the certificate of ownership, as so endorsed by her and the finance company, to Luevano. This transfer and delivery of the certificate of ownership happened approximately three and one-half hours prior to the accident here involved. It then found that prior to the happening of the accident, and without the knowledge of defendant Pierce, Luevano delivered said certificate of ownership, so endorsed by defendant Pierce and the finance company, to defendant Gladys Eastridge; that defendant Eastridge, at some time subsequent to January 5, 1946, and a day or two prior to January 28, 1946, wrote her signature and address on the reverse side of that certificate of ownership in the space provided therefor as transferee and forwarded the certificate of ownership by mail to the Motor Vehicle Department and that it was received in that office on January 28, 1946, and the department then issued a new certificate of ownership showing defendant Eastridge both as registered and legal owner thereof; that defendant Pierce did not give to the department any notice of the transfer of any interest in the automobile except such notice as above mentioned; that defendant Eastridge was driving the automobile with the express permission of Luevano and that defendant Pierce never gave defendant Eastridge permission to operate or drive the car. The amended conclusions then recite that from the facts found defendant Betty A. Pierce was not the owner of the automobile within the meaning of section 402 of the Vehicle Code, and therefore plaintiffs were not entitled to recover from her.

The facts found show that defendant Pierce fully complied with sec. 178, subd. (1) of the Vehicle Code as a bona fide sale was made, possession was delivered, and under subdivision (1) thereof, the owner made proper endorsement and delivery of the certificate of ownership and certificate of registration prior to the hour of the accident.

As we construe the plaintiffs' argument, in addition to complying with subdivision (1) of section 178, supra, defendant Pierce was also required to comply with secs. 177 and 186 of the Vehicle Code in regard to the sale of her car to Luevano. It is claimed that she failed to have the transfer of title made on the Motor Vehicle Department records and failed to give notice as required by those sections and that such failure to so record the transfer of the vehicle allowed her, under the holding of the trial court, to use sec. 178 of the Vehicle Code as a shield to defeat the liability imposed upon her under sec. 402 of the Vehicle Code and that a member of the public who sustains injury, under those circumstances, should be entitled to rely on the records of the Motor Vehicle Department to fix her liability and that defendant Pierce should be estopped from invoking the provisions of sec. 78, subdivision (1) of the Vehicle Code, citing Boles v. Stiles, 188 Cal. 304, 204 P. 848, and Dennis v. Bank of America, 34 Cal.App.2d 618, 94 P.2d 51. In the last case cited, a fraud of the transferor was involved. The other case involved a car registered in a partnership name. There is no fraud or negligence of the transferor found in the instant action and the instant case is factually dissimilar to the cases cited.

Probably defendant Pierce, for her own protection, should have given the notice provided by section 177 of the Vehicle Code during the period before the sale to Luevano ripened into an absolute sale upon the delivery by her to him of the properly endorsed certificate of ownership. During such period, and in the absence of compliance with that section, she may have been liable for the negligent operation of the automobile. However, that question became moot upon the consummation of an absolute sale and transfer by the delivery of the certificate of ownership, because she was then in a position to, and did comply with the alternative provision by which she could secure relief from liability.

Section 177 of the Vehicle Code does direct that when an owner sells a car and delivers possession thereof, he shall notify the Department of Motor Vehicles on an appropriate form. Section 179 of the Vehicle Code requires the transferee to apply for transfer, when he has received a properly endorsed certificate of ownership and registration card, and make application for transfer of registration. Section 186 of the Vehicle Code provides that no title passes until the parties have fulfilled either of two requirements: (1) The transferor shall have made proper endorsement and delivery of the certificate of ownership and delivery of the registration card to the transferee, and the transferee has delivered to the department such certificate and card, etc.; or (2) The transferor shall have delivered to or mailed to the department the appropriate documents for the transfer of registration of such vehicle pursuant to such sale (except as provided in sec. 178). The exception noted in sec. 178, pertaining to liability for negligence, is that if a bona fide sale is made of a vehicle and possession delivered and the owner either has made a proper endorsement and delivery of the certificate of ownership "as provided in this code" or has delivered or mailed to the department either a notice required by sec. 177, or appropriate documents for registration of such vehicle, he shall not be deemed the owner for the purpose of subjecting such owner to civil liability by reason of such ownership.

[2] Plaintiffs lay considerable stress upon the words "as provided in this code" under subdivision (1), section 178 above italicized. They argue that these words require a compliance with secs. 177 and 186 of the Vehicle Code. This same question was presented in Piacun v. Hexem, 18 Cal. App.2d 145, 63 P.2d 315, and decided adversely to plaintiffs' argument. Those sections deal solely with the transfer of title or interest and declare when such title or interest shall pass. Section 178 of the Vehicle Code is an exception mentioned in subdivision (2) of section 186 and relates solely to the release from liability for negligence of an owner who has made a bona fide sale or transfer of a vehicle. This section is not inconsistent with the other sections mentioned. The provisions of sec. 178 are not new. Sec. 45¾ of the Vehicle Code of 1931, Stats. 1931, chap. 1026, had a similar provision in reference to the owner notifying the Division of Motor Vehicles of a sale, but provided that in the event said notice is given or in the event of the failure to give said notice, an owner who has made a bona fide sale and delivered possession and who has made proper endorsement and delivery of the certificate of ownership, shall not, by any provisions of the act, be deemed the owner so as to subject him to liability under sec. 1714½ of the Civil Code. In 1935 that section was redrafted as section 178 of the Vehicle Code, Stats. 1935 chap. 27, p. 115, and contained a similar provision. In 1941 that section was revised and amended to its present form, Stats. 1941, chap. 1053. The leading case of Piacun v. Hexem, supra (hearing denied by the Supreme Court), was decided under section 45¾, supra. The facts of that case are in many respects strikingly similar to those of the present case. In its opinion the District Court of Appeal expressly recognized that under the applicable statute, which is essentially the same in substance as the one with which we are here concerned, an owner who has made an unconditional sale or transfer of an automobile and who has made proper endorsement and delivery of the certificate of ownership to the transferee is forthwith relieved from liability. It expressly holds that it is not necessary for him to give any notice to the Motor Vehicle Department. To the same effect is Weinberg et al. v. Whitebone et al., 87 Cal.App.2d 319, 196 P.2d 963.

[3] Since there was sufficient compliance with the statute by defendant Pierce relinquishing her ownership liability at the time of the accident and no sufficient finding is made whereby the doctrine of estoppel might be properly applied, no liability could be imposed. To rely on the rule of estoppel in any case involving the transfer of a motor vehicle, a good factual basis must be presented for its application. Wargin v. Wargin, 29 Cal.2d 843, 180 P.2d 349; Weinberg v. Whitebone, supra, 87 Cal.App.2d page 323, 196 P.2d 963.

[4] Since the defendant prevailed on plaintiffs' appeal from the order setting aside the original judgment and from the judgment subsequently entered, defendant's appeal from the original judgment becomes moot and should be dismissed.

Appeal from original judgment dismissed. Order setting aside original judgment, and the judgment thereafter entered affirmed.

CLARK v. STATE et al.

Civ. 7724.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Sept. 25, 1950.

Hearing Denied Nov. 20, 1950.

Action by Lyman Clark against the State and another for death of plaintiff's wife, when struck by state automobile driven by its employee while decedent was crossing highway at dusk. The Superior Court, Butte County, Ben R. Ragain, J., entered judgment on a verdict in favor of defendants and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Adams, P. J., held that refusal to give requested instructions defining proximate cause and setting forth right of a person exercising ordinary care to rely on assumption that others will perform their duty under the law and the giving and repetition of defective instructions as to contributory negligence constituted reversible error.

Judgment reversed and new trial ordered.

1. Appeal and error ⇐1067

In action for death of pedestrian struck by automobile while she was crossing highway, refusal to give requested instruction defining proximate cause was serious error in view of facts of case and jury's evident concern over issue of contributory negligence.

2. Death ⇐58(1)

In wrongful death action, decedent was presumed to have taken ordinary care for her own safety. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 4.

3. Automobiles ⇐242(8)

In action for death of pedestrian struck by automobile while she was crossing highway, defendants had the burden of proving contributory negligence of decedent. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 4.

Automobiles ⇐246(58)

In action for death of pedestrian who, while crossing highway at dusk, was struck by automobile displaying only parking lights, plaintiff was entitled to instruction as to right of one exercising ordinary care to rely on assumption that others will perform their duty under the law, in view of defendants' contention that decedent must have been contributorily negligent in failing to look before crossing highway or she would have seen approaching automobile, and refusal to give such requested instruction was grave error.

5. Trial ⇐260(8)

Where Approved Form instructions containing basic definition of negligence and elaboration thereof were given, refusal to give requested instructions defining negligence and ordinary care was not error.

Automobiles ⇐246(50)

Instruction as given as to statutory duty of driver of vehicle to yield right of way to pedestrian crossing roadway at intersection sufficiently covered question of right of way as presented by evidence in action for death of pedestrian struck by automobile while she was crossing highway and refusal to give instructions requested by plaintiff defining right of way was not substantial error. Vehicle Code, § 560.

Instructing jury to measure conduct of decedent, in determining whether she was contributorily negligent, by the standard of the average person of her age and intelligence was erroneous, but harmless in view of other instructions correctly stating the standard of care.

8. Negligence ⇐82

If negligence of plaintiff, amounting to absence of ordinary care, contributes proximately, in any degree, to injury, plaintiff cannot recover therefor, but it cannot be said that any degree of negligence, however slight, which directly concurs in producing injury will bar recovery.

9. Appeal and error ⇐1064(1)

In action for death of pedestrian when struck by automobile while she was crossing highway, instructing jury to find for defendants if decedent was guilty of contributory negligence, no matter how slight, which proximately contributed to accident and death and repetition of such instructions without stating reciprocal duties of driver when jury requested further instructions as to contributory negligence constituted prejudicial error, since jurors were thereby permitted to continue in mistaken belief that they were concerned with degree of negligence as distinguished from degree of proximate contribution of such negligence to happening of accident.

Clewe, Deahl & McClarrinon, Oroville, for appellant.

J. Oscar Goldstein, P. M. Barceloux, Burton J. Goldstein, and Goldstein, Barceloux & Goldstein, all of Chico, for respondents.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

Appellant, Lyman Clark, brought this action to recover damages for the death of his wife alleged to be due to the negligence of James F. McClaskey, an engineer for the State Division of Highways, in the operation of a state automobile. Contributory negligence on the part of decedent was alleged by defendants. A jury returned a verdict in favor of defendants and from the judgment which followed this appeal has been taken.

Appellant relies upon asserted error on the part of the trial court in the giving and in the failure to give certain instructions.

When the accident occurred Mrs. Clark was on her way to her home after her day's work in Oroville, and, when struck by respondents' car, had just alighted from a Greyhound bus and was in the act of crossing the highway at a point in front of the entrance to what was designated as "Old Army Barracks," and at the intersection of Harlan Street with the highway. The bus after crossing the entrance to the Barracks on the east side of the highway moved forward up a rise. Mrs. Clark then started across the road to the southward, bound for her home which was on the southwest corner of the highway and Harlan Street, which street intersected the highway at a right angle from the south, just opposite the entrance to the Barracks. In the meanwhile defendant McClaskey, traveling eastward, topped the rise above the place of the accident. His speed, he said, was then about forty-five miles per hour which he reduced to about forty miles per hour when he saw the bus. His car was dark green in color, and was being operated with parking lights only. The date was October 23, 1947. The time of the accident was in controversy, the testimony varying as to whether it was between 5:45 and 6:00 p. m., or between 5:30 and 5:45 p. m. Testimony as to visibility was conflicting, but it was generally agreed that it was dusk or twilight, and the bus driver and an investigating patrolman testified that it was dark enough for headlights. McClaskey, though, in an apparent effort to offset his failure to use headlights, said that it was not dark, yet he said that when he first saw decedent about 20 to 25 feet away she appeared only as a "dark object." After being struck Mrs. Clark's body was carried on defendants' car some distance and her clothing and personal articles scattered along the road. Defendants' car came to rest about 84 feet from the point of impact, but decedent's body was found eastward therefrom about 19 feet.

Appellant's first assignment of error is the court's failure to give instruction 21 (BAJI 104), which appellant had requested. It reads:

"Negligence is of no consequence unless it was the proximate cause of an injury.

"The proximate cause of an injury is that cause which, in natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any efficient intervening cause, produces the injury, and without which the result would not have occurred. It is the efficient cause—the one that necessarily sets in operation the factors that accomplish the injury. It may operate directly or through intermediate agencies or through conditions created by such agencies."

The court refused to give this instruction, indicating that it had been given, though no instruction defining proximate cause is found in the record of those given. It is conceded by respondents that such an instruction is usually given. The term "proximate cause" was used by the trial court in sixteen of the instructions given. Failure to define the term was held to be error in Spear v. Leuenberger, 44 Cal.App. 2d 236, 246, 112 P.2d 43, though there were other errors in that case and all the errors were considered, collectively, to constitute ground for reversal. Also in Brower v. Arnstein, 126 Cal.App. 291, 298-299, 14 P.2d 863, 865, failure to define proximate cause was said to be a "most serious omission," but was not held sufficiently serious to justify a reversal of a judgment for plaintiff, the court saying that defendants had not requested an instruction defining proximate cause, and that it was incumbent upon them to do so. In Long v. Barbieri, 120 Cal.App. 207, 217-218, 7 P.2d 1082, 1087, failure to give what was designated as "this always related and ever essential principle of the doctrines of negligence and contributory negligence" was one of the errors for which the judgment for defendant was reversed.

[1] Here respondents urge that any negligence on the part of decedent must have been the proximate cause of decedent's death and that therefore failure to define proximate cause was harmless. But the instructions on contributory negligence which were given plainly puzzled the jury, for after some consideration they returned to the courtroom for further instructions, whereupon the foreman said they desired a re-reading of the instructions as to negligence on the part of decedent, saying that the jury seemed to be under the impression that the instructions stated that negligence of the decedent "in even the tiniest little bit, that would go against the plaintiff, they would have to render decision for the defendant." He said further, "I think if there is the least bit of negligence on the part of the plaintiff, if we found there is negligence there of any kind, we would have to find for the defendant." The court then reread several of defendants' requested instructions dealing with what, if found, would constitute negligence on the part of decedent. They are discussed hereinafter. But the omission of any definition of the term "proximate cause" was not supplied. In view of the specific request and of the facts as hereinbefore stated and of the jury's evident concern over the issue of contributory negligence, we think it was error of a serious nature to refuse the requested instruction.

Appellant's second assignment of error is the court's failure to give his requested instruction No. 36 of the Approved Forms of Instruction (BAJI No. 138) which reads:

"A person who, himself, is exercising ordinary care has a right to assume that others, too, will perform their duty under the law, and he has a further right to rely and act on that assumption. Thus it is not negligence for such a person to fail to anticipate injury which can come to him only from a violation of law or duty by another. However, an exception should be noted: the rights just defined do not exist when it is reasonably apparent to one, or in the exercise of ordinary care would be apparent to him, that another is not going to perform his duty. [One is not justified in ignoring obvious danger although it is created by another's misconduct, nor is he ever excused from exercising ordinary care.]"

Respondents' contentions in this case are that regardless of whether or not McClaskey was negligent, the jury was justified in finding that Mrs. Clark was guilty of contributory negligence in these respects, to wit: That she could not have looked up the road prior to reaching the center line for, had she done so, she would have seen the approaching car; that before crossing the highway she did not make the effort of a reasonably prudent person to determine whether it was safe for her to do so; and that had the jury been given the requested instruction it "would not have changed the jury's task with respect to contributory negligence."

[2] We are not in accord with this conclusion. For instance, Mrs. Clark, who is presumed to have taken ordinary care for her own concerns, Code Civ. Proc. section 1963 (4), may have looked up the road prior to reaching the center line, and have failed to see the approaching car because of its failure to use regulation headlights instead of parking lights. The bus driver testified that he was looking continuously up the highway and that he did not see McClaskey's car until it was directly upon him. She might have seen the parking lights of McClaskey's car but because of their dimness been unable to estimate the speed of his car; she might have looked and not have seen the parking lights, and have assumed that any approaching car would carry headlights, and, since none were visible, it was safe for her to cross. One of the purposes of requiring lighted headlights is to warn a pedestrian of a vehicle's approach; and the other is to enable the driver to see the highway ahead of him and thus avoid striking obstacles thereon. In Sawdey v. Producers' Milk Co., 107 Cal.App. 467, 475, 290 P. 684, 687, the court said:

"It must be borne in mind that the purpose of lights is twofold, namely, to enable one to see and to be seen. And in this section the intent of the Legislature is manifest. When darkness is of a density to obscure an object 200 feet distant it provides that there must be lights. Obviously, to overcome the darkness existing to the extent of disclosing the presence of the car, which otherwise would not be clearly discernible."

Also see Mardorf v. Penniman, 68 Cal. App. 696, 698-699, 230 P. 12; Tieman v. Red Top Cab Co., 117 Cal.App. 40, 43, 3 P.2d 381.

In Robbiano v. Bovet, 218 Cal. 589, 596-597, 24 P.2d 466, it was said that plaintiff had the right to presume that those using the highway in front of him were obeying the law and were performing their duty in having their machines properly equipped with headlights. From all the evidence as to the amount of light there was, including the specific testimony of McClaskey that at twenty-five feet decedent appeared to him as just a dark object, the jury may have felt that it was dark enough to have made headlights imperative. Had the requested instruction been given they might further have believed decedent had a right to assume and did assume that no car was coming because no headlights were visible, and that, so rightfully assuming, she went forward to her death.

[3, 4] The burden of proof to show contributory negligence on the part of Mrs. Clark was upon defendants, and we think that plaintiff was entitled to have this requested instruction given to be weighed against the foregoing assumptions upon which respondents rely. There is nothing to show negligence on decedent's part as matter of law. See Dickinson v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 55 Cal.App.2d 824, 827, 131 P.2d 401. The refusal of the instruction was, we think, under the facts of this case, error of grave import.

[5] Appellant's third assignment of error is that the court failed to give his requested instructions defining negligence and ordinary care. He proposed instructions 18 and 20 of the Approved Forms (BAJI 101-A and 102-A), the former defining negligence, and the latter adding to the definition given in BAJI 101 the fact that it is a relative term. The court gave BAJI instructions Nos. 101 and 101-B, the basic definition of negligence, and the elaboration thereof; and while 101-A, and 102-A, might well have been given we do not consider failure to give them as serious error.

[6] The fourth assigned error is the court's refusal to give any of plaintiff's requested instructions on right of way, to wit: BAJI 150, 160-A, and 150-B. The court gave an instruction on section 560 of the Vehicle Code, to the effect that the driver of a vehicle shall yield the right of way to a pedestrian crossing the roadway within any unmarked crosswalk at an intersection, and followed that by an instruction defining "roadway", "crosswalk" and "intersection", adding that conduct in violation of section 560 constitutes negligence per se, but also adding that such a presumption is not conclusive. The instructions which plaintiff requested on this subject matter are concerned mainly with a description and a definition of what is meant by the phrase "right of way." They might properly have been given, but we do not think that the failure to give them, standing alone, would be sufficient to constitute substantial error, since the instructions as a whole sufficiently took care of the question of right of way as presented by the evidence in the case.

Appellant further contends that the court committed error in giving at defendants' request the following instruction:

"In determining whether or not Susie Mae Clark, the deceased, was guilty of contributory negligence, you must measure her acts and conduct by the standard of the average person of her age and intelligence as the same are shown by the evidence in this case. If you believe from the evidence that she was guilty of the slightest degree of negligence, measured by that standard, and that such negligence proximately contributed to the accident and her death, the plaintiff is not entitled to a verdict and your verdict must be for the defendants."

[7, 8] First, appellant complains that this instruction sets up as the standard of care to be applied by the jury "the standard of the average person of her age and intelligence." From a critical point of view the criticism is sound, but we do not think in view of other instructions correctly stating the standard of care that any harm came from this part of the instruction. But appellant more justly complains of a group of instructions given by the court at defendants' request which as to the point now under consideration may be summarized as follows: The court told the jury that if the decedent was guilty of contributory negligence, no matter how slight, which proximately contributed to the accident their verdict must be for the defendants. Again the court said that in determining whether or not decedent was guilty of contributory negligence "if you believe from the evidence that she was guilty of the slightest degree of negligence * * * and that such negligence proximately contributed to the accident and her death" the verdict must be for the defendants. As said by the Supreme Court of California in Strong v. Sacramento & P. R. R. Co., 61 Cal. 326, 328:

"The rule is, not that any degree of negligence, however slight, which directly concurs in producing the injury will prevent a recovery; but, if the negligence of the plaintiff, amounting to the absence of ordinary care, shall contribute proximately, in any degree, to the injury, the plaintiff shall not recover."

[9] Ordinarily we would not be disposed to attach great importance to this defect in the instructions, but there is, in the record here, matter which we have hereinbefore referred to, indicating that the defect may have wrongfully damaged plaintiff's case. We refer to what has been hereinbefore said concerning the situation presented when the jury returned to the court for further instructions, particularly on the matter of contributory negligence. What the foreman said to the court at that time amounted in substance to a statement that the jury were discussing the question of decedent's negligence exactly in the light of the court's erroneous statement. The foreman said: "We would like to have a re-reading of your instructions as it pertains to any negligence on the part of the plaintiff. They seem to be under the impression that your instructions are that negligence in even the tiniest little bit, that would go against the plaintiff, they would have to render decision for the defendant." The court replied: "It is not quite clear, is it?" And the foreman answered: "I think if there is the least bit of negligence on the part of the plaintiff, if we found there is negligence there of any kind, we would have to find for the defendant." The court then, among other instructions, re-read to the jury the same faulty instructions we are now considering, which were repetitious and tended to overemphasize the obligations of decedent, without stating the reciprocal duties of the defendant driver. As was said in Taha v. Finegold, 81 Cal.App.2d 536, 544-545, 184 P.2d 533, the stress placed upon the duties of the pedestrian in this case may well have been the deciding factor in the minds of the jurors.

While the lawyer and also the layman recognize that there are differing degrees of negligence, here ordinary negligence was the only degree of negligence involved, and to permit the jury to continue in their mistaken belief that they were concerned with the degree of negligence as distinguished from the degree of proximate contribution of that negligence to the happening of the accident and the infliction of the injury, was detrimental to plaintiff's interests, to say the least.

Appellant urges that errors were committed other than the foregoing, but as we consider those above discussed as sufficient to justify reversal, other suggested errors need not be considered.

The judgment appealed from is reversed and a new trial as to all issues is ordered.

MEHERIN v. MEHERIN.

Civ. 17600.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 25, 1950.

Action by Thomas J. Meherin against Florence Meherin, to determine rights to proceeds of insurance policy. The Superior Court, Santa Barbara County, Ernest D. Wagner, J., entered judgment for plaintiff and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that under a property settlement agreement, wife was not entitled to proceeds of the insurance policy.

Judgment affirmed.

Insurance ⇐585(3)

Where husband and wife entered into agreement whereby they settled their rights as to community property and whereby wife released to husband all interest in husband's life policy wherein she was named beneficiary and agreed to execute instruments necessary to carry out agreement, although wife never executed any other instrument and husband had not reserved right to change beneficiary, wife was not entitled to proceeds of policy.

Charles C. Morrison, West Los Angeles, for appellant.

Canfield & Westwick, Santa Barbara, for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from the judgment; the record on appeal is the judgment roll only.

The facts as recited in appellant's brief are as follows:

"The defendant, Florence Meherin and decedent, John B. Meherin were married on June 1, 1916, at Bakersfield, California.

"That said John B. Meherin died on or about December 2, 1944 leaving said Florence Meherin as his surviving widow.

"That on or about the 28th day of August, 1918, the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company issued its policy of insurance on the life of said John B. Meherin and agreeing to pay on receipt of due proof of the death of said insured, the sum of $1,000.00 to the beneficiary named therein, Florence Meherin, the wife of said John B. Meherin.

"That at all times since said policy of insurance was issued, and at the time of the death of said John B. Meherin, said Florence Meherin, wife of decedent, was the named beneficiary of said policy of life insurance herein referred to.

"That the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company paid the sum of $1,324.18 into Court as proceeds of said insurance policy and the action as to said company was dismissed.

"That on or about the 28th day of July, 1942, said John B. Meherin and said Florence Meherin entered into an agreement settling their rights as to their community property and creating a division of the same, by the terms of which the policy of insurance herein involved was assigned to John B. Meherin.

"That the portion of the agreement by which said policy of insurance was assigned to John B. Meherin reads as follows:

"1. The wife hereby released to the husband and he shall be entitled to all the interest in and to that certain insurance policy with the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, bearing the number 918996-7-C, and the wife does hereby grant, assign and sell to the husband all of her right, title and interest in and to said policy and the interest and benefits therein. Wife further agrees to execute any instrument or documents required by the husband or the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company to carry out the intention of this paragraph.

"The husband, John B. Meherin executed a will on December 2, 1944, the day of his death, in which he left all of his property to his brother, Thomas J. Meherin, plaintiff and respondent herein.

"That the estate of John B. Meherin was probated in the County of Kern, State of California, and on the 29th day of September, 1947, all of the property and estate of John B. Meherin, deceased, was distributed to Thomas J. Meherin, the respondent.

"While not raised by the pleadings, the Court found that it was the intention and belief of John B. Meherin that Florence Meherin would take no part of the proceeds of said policy, either as beneficiary or otherwise.

"Florence Meherin claims the proceeds of said insurance as the beneficiary named in said policy on the date of death of the insured.

"Thomas J. Meherin claims the proceeds of said insurance under the decree of distribution dated September 29, 1947."

It is appellant's contention that,

"1. The Court's interpretation of the property agreement was unreasonable.

"2. The Court erred in finding as to the belief and intent of one of the parties only.

"3. Appellant was not deprived of her right to receive the proceeds of the insurance as the named beneficiary.

"4. The findings of fact do not support the judgment."

The property settlement agreement was quite comprehensive and clearly established that a complete and final settlement was intended. For example, it further provided, "That said parties hereto each hereby waives any and all right to the estate of the other left at his or her death, and forever quitclaims any and all right to share in the estate of the other, by the laws of succession and said parties hereby release, one to the other, all right to be administrator or administratrix or executor or executrix of the estate of the other, and hereby release and waive all right to inherit under any will of the other, and the said parties hereby waive any and all right to the estate, or any interest in the estate, of the other". It should be noted also that the insurance policy in question provided "that the insured, John B. Meherin, had no right to change the beneficiary thereof".

Appellant argues that, "A wife as beneficiary under an insurance policy retains her status as such unless it clearly appears from the agreement that in addition to the segregation of the property of the spouses, it was intended to deprive her of the right to take under the insurance contract as beneficiary. * * * Such rights are waived only when it appears that the attention of the parties was directed to such expectancies and their intention to disclaim future rights that might develop from such expectancies was made clear in the contract." Appellant relies in particular on the provision in the contract above noted that, "The wife further agrees to execute any instrument or documents required by the husband or the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company to carry out the intention of the parties". It is urged in this connection that, "Under this provision her rights as the named beneficiary remain vested subject to becoming divested upon the happening of a future contingency, i. e., the execution of any instrument or document required by the husband or the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. No request has ever been made by either on the appellant to execute any instrument or document whatever and her rights remained vested in her at the time of the death of John B. Meherin, the insured."

It is quite evident, from an examination of the record, that the trial court's interpretation of the agreement is not unreasonable as contended by appellant. It is also evident that although the findings perhaps could have been more comprehensive nevertheless, in effect, the court's judgment was based on the intention of the parties as expressed in the agreement. The findings of fact support the judgment.

The court in effect found that the provision upon which appellant relies, namely, the "wife further agrees to execute any instrument or documents", etc., above quoted, when considered in connection with the other provisions does not establish the intention of the parties as contended by appellant. The trial court obviously considered the above provision with relation to the other provisions of the contract and concluded that whether "any instrument or document" was "required by the husband or the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company to carry out the intention of this paragraph" was for them to determine and did not effect the disposition of the property as the contract elsewhere provided.

There are no errors in the record and the judgment is affirmed.

SPOLTER et al. v. FOUR-WHEEL BRAKE SERVICE CO. et al.
Civ. 14173.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 28, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 28, 1950.

Actions by Annette Spolter and others, by Ethel Truncale and Helen J. McNeill and by Morris Roberts against Four-Wheel Brake Service Company and others for wrongful death of driver and injuries sustained by passengers when left rear wheel of automobile fell off eight days after it had been removed and replaced by named defendant's employees in the course of relining brakes. The cases were consolidated. The Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, John J. McMahon, J., entered judgments on verdicts in favor of plaintiffs and orders denying motions for judgments notwithstanding the verdicts and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that the evidence warranted inference that wheel had been negligently replaced by named defendant's employees, thus proximately causing it to come off, that whether such inference had been rebutted was a question for jury and that any error in admitting evidence was not prejudicial.

Judgments and orders affirmed.

1. Automobiles ⇐368

In actions for death of driver and injuries sustained by passengers when wheel of automobile fell off, evidence warranted inference that wheel which had been removed and replaced by defendant's employees in course of relining brakes eight days before accident had been negligently replaced by such employees thus proximately causing it to come off after being driven only approximately 300 miles.

In civil cases reasonable probability is sufficient to support jury's finding and absolute demonstration is not required.

3. Trial ⇐142

If conflicting inferences may reasonably be drawn from the evidence, even though it is uncontradicted, which inference shall be drawn is entirely a jury question.

4. Evidence ⇐587

In civil cases, plaintiff need not exclude the possibility of every other reasonable inference from the proved facts in order to support an inference based on circumstantial evidence.

5. Trial ⇐311

Where circumstantial evidence is relied upon, jurors may draw upon their own experience to determine the proper inferences to be deduced therefrom in so far as matters within the realm of common experience are concerned.

6. Evidence ⇐587

Where circumstantial evidence does not go directly to the fact in issue, but to the facts from which the fact in issue is to be inferred, jury must first ascertain the truth of the fact to which the evidence goes, and then infer the truth of the fact in issue.

7. Evidence ⇐474½, 587

Jury must draw inference from circumstantial evidence and opinion evidence is inadmissible where drawing such inference depends upon experience of such a nature that it may be presumed to be within the common experience of all men of common education moving in the ordinary walks of life.

8. Evidence ⇐588
Trial ⇐139(1), 140(1)

In an action tried to jury, the credibility of witnesses and the weight to be accorded their testimony are questions for jury which under proper circumstances may accept all or such part of the testimony of any witness as it believes to be true and reject all or any part which it believes to be untrue.

9. Trial ⇐142

The trier of the facts may infer from circumstantial evidence the existence of a fact, even though the evidence contrary thereto is uncontradicted, unless the inference is rebutted by clear, positive and uncontradicted evidence of such a nature that it is not subject to doubt in the minds of reasonable men, but any reasonable doubt as to whether the inference, as a matter of law, has been rebutted should be resolved in favor of submitting the question to trier of the facts.

10. Automobiles ⇐368

In actions for death of driver and injuries sustained by passengers when left rear wheel of automobile fell off, whether inference that wheel had been negligently replaced by defendant's employees after being removed in the course of relining brakes eight days before accident was rebutted by testimony of defense witnesses that other tires had been on left rear wheel after brakes were relined was a question for jury and jury was warranted in disbelieving inconsistent testimony of such witnesses.

Any error in admitting testimony that witness knew of no new tires being purchased by her husband during specified month for the purpose of establishing that there had been no such purchase was not prejudicial.

Testimony that it was custom of witness' husband, since deceased, to pay for all purchases by check and that no check to tire dealer had been drawn by husband during specified period, supported by introduction in evidence of husband's checks, had some probative value to establish that husband purchased no tires during such period and was admissible in actions to recover on basis of circumstantial evidence for death of husband and injuries sustained by passengers when wheel fell off husband's automobile.

Where the evidence is entirely circumstantial a party should not be deprived of competent, relevant evidence merely because it is not of great strength.

14. Evidence ⇐99

Any evidence which may have a tendency to illustrate or throw any light on the transaction in controversy or have any weight in determining the issue is generally admitted, leaving the strength of such testimony or the amount of such weight to be determined by jury.

15. Evidence ⇐99

In determining the relevancy of evidence, much depends upon the nature of the issue and a wide discretion is left to trial judge in determining whether the evidence is admissible.

Cooley, Crowley & Gaither, San Francisco, for appellants.

Hallinan, MacInnis & Zamloch, James Martin MacInnis, and P. Paul Vlautin, Jr., all of San Francisco, for respondents Spolter.

Michael L. Haun, James A. Toner, for respondents Truncale & McNeill.

Maurice A. Harband, San Francisco, William F. Cleary, San Francisco, of counsel, for respondent Roberts.

DOOLING, Justice.

Ralph T. Spolter died on July 30, 1946 from injuries received in an accident which occurred July 28, 1946. Deceased was the owner and driver of the automobile at the time of the accident. Ethel Truncale, Helen J. McNeill and Morris Roberts, who, with a Mr. Wilkie, were guest passengers of Spolter at the time of the accident were injured in the same accident. Spolter's wife and two minor children, suing for the wrongful death of Spolter, are plaintiffs in one of the combined cases, and the injured passengers, suing for their personal injuries, are plaintiffs in the others.

The accident on July 28, 1946 occurred about 7 p. m. when the left rear wheel fell off the left rear axle of the 1942 Buick convertible owned and being driven along the highway by Spolter at a speed of approximately 45 miles per hour. Upon losing the wheel the automobile overturned resulting in the injuries outlined above. On July 20, 1946 the car had been in defendant's shop where its wheels were removed and replaced by defendant's employee in the course of relining the brakes.

The car had been driven between 314 and 320 miles from July 20, 1946, the date defendant's employee replaced the wheels, and July 28, 1946, the date of the accident. The tire on the left rear wheel of Spolter's car when the accident occurred was a Fisk Airflight deluxe, size 700 x 16, in new condition.

The jury returned verdicts for the plaintiffs. Defendant assails the verdicts on three grounds. One, that there was insufficient evidence from which the jury could draw the inferences of negligence necessary to support the verdicts; two, that even if the jury could draw the necessary inferences from the evidence to support the verdicts, as a matter of law these inferences should be held to be rebutted by the "clear, positive, uncontradicted testimony of eyewitnesses who are unimpeached"; and three, that the necessary inferences are founded upon incompetent hearsay testimony admitted over proper objection, which error is prejudicial.

Expert witnesses testified that loose insertion of the lugs into the axle could cause the wheel on the Buick to come off. Witness Greer testified that the only cause could be improperly tightened lug bolts. The wheel which came off the axle and the axle itself were introduced in evidence. These were examined by the jury. The testimony indicated that at least three, and possibly four, of the five lug holes were distorted indicating that one or two lugs had never been inserted or that they had been loosely inserted and had worked out of the lug holes quickly without distorting the holes in the wheel or stripping the threads of the lug holes in the axle. All of the experts were of the opinion that if all of the lugs were properly and tightly inserted that they should not have worked loose within 300 miles of driving.

[1] The witness Steine, who was produced by appellant, testified that in 1946 he had a service station in Sonoma, that he sold a new Fisk tire to Spolter from one to three weeks prior to the accident and mounted it on the left rear wheel. The witness Lynch, who introduced Spolter to Steine, also produced by appellant, fixed the time of this sale from two to three weeks before the accident. We are satisfied that from these facts the jury could conclude that it was reasonably probable that the Fisk tire remained on the left rear wheel from the time Steine put it there and that appellant's employees negligently replaced this wheel on July 20 thus proximately causing the wheel to come off on July 28.

[2] It must not be forgotten that in civil cases the law does not require absolute demonstration but only reasonable probability to support the finding of the jury. Juries in civil cases are so instructed every day. See Calif. Jury Instructions, Civil, 3d Rev.Ed., Nos. 21, 21–A, 21–B. This court recently had occasion to point out that "moral certainty is not required in civil cases; there 'reasonable probability' * * * is normally sufficient and is used as a counterpart to 'preponderance of the evidence.'" Wirz v. Wirz, 96 Cal.App.2d 171, 175, 214 P.2d 839, 842. "In civil cases which are decided in favor of the litigant upon a mere preponderance of evidence, the rule of decision is, after all, but a rule of probability, and this is well recognized. Says Greenleaf: 'In civil cases * * * it is not necessary that the minds of the jurors be freed from all doubt. It is their duty to decide in favor of the party on whose side the weight of evidence preponderates, and according to the reasonable probability of truth.'" Liverpool, etc., Ins. Co. v. Southern Pac. Co., 125 Cal. 434, 440–441, 58 P. 55, 58; and see 10 Cal.Jur., Evidence, sec. 94, pp. 791, 793; Travelers Ins. Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 33 Cal.2d 685, 203 P.2d 747; Fireman's Fund etc., Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 93 Cal.App.2d 244, 208 P.2d 1033.

[3] It is equally well settled that if conflicting inferences may reasonably be drawn from the evidence, even though it is uncontradicted, which of such inferences shall be drawn is entirely a jury question. Said the court in Mah See v. North American Acc. Ins. Co., 190 Cal. 421, 426, 213 P. 42, 44, 26 A.L.R. 123:

"This court has frequently held that, even though all the facts are admitted or uncontradicted, nevertheless, if it appears that either one of two inferences may fairly and reasonably be deduced from those facts there still remains in the case a question of fact to be determined by the jury * * *, and that the verdict of the jury * * * thereon cannot be set aside by this court on the ground that it is not sustained by the evidence." See to the same effect Webster v. Board of Dental Examiners, 17 Cal.2d 534, 539–540, 110 P.2d 992; Hamilton v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 12 Cal.2d 598, 602–603, 86 P.2d 829; Tobola v. Wholey, 75 Cal.App.2d 351, 355, 170 P.2d 952; Gute v. Halstead, 75 Cal.App.2d 369, 370, 170 P.2d 1016.

[4] It is corollary of the last stated rule that in order to support an inference based on circumstantial evidence it is not incumbent upon the plaintiff to exclude the possibility of every other reasonable inference from the proved facts. "It is not necessary, in order to establish a theory by circumstantial evidence, that the facts be such and so related to each other that such theory is the only conclusion that can fairly or reasonably be drawn therefrom, because it is now settled law that 'circumstantial evidence in civil cases, in order to be sufficient to sustain the verdict, need not rise to that degree of certainty which will exclude every reasonable conclusion other than that arrived at by the jury'." Co., 131 Cal.App. 427, 431–432, 21 P.2d 662; Chalmers v. Hawkins, 78 Cal.App. 733, 739, 248 P. 727; opinion of Supreme Court denying a hearing in Estate of Wallace, 64 Cal.App. 107, 116, 220 P. 682; cf. Barham v. Widing, 210 Cal. 206, 214–215, 291 P. 173.

[5-7] Where, as in this case, circumstantial evidence is relied upon, the jurors may draw upon their own experience to determine the proper inferences to be deduced insofar as matters within the realm of common experience are concerned. Our courts have more than once quoted with approval the following statement of the proper function of the jury in a case based on circumstantial evidence from New England Glass Company v. Lovell, 7 Cush., Mass., 319, 321:

"In applying circumstantial evidence which does not go directly to the fact in issue, but to the facts from which the fact in issue is to be inferred, the jury have two distinct duties to perform: First, to ascertain the truth of the fact to which the evidence goes, and thence to infer the truth of the fact in issue. This inference depends upon experience. When this experience is of such a nature that it may be presumed to be within the common experience of all men of common education moving in the ordinary walks of life, there is no room for the evidence of opinion; it is for the jury to draw the inference." (Emphasis ours.) Shafter v. Evans, 53 Cal. 32; Redfield v. Oakland C. S. Ry. Co., 112 Cal. 220, 225–226, 43 P. 1117; Phœnix Assur. Co. v. Texas Holding Co., 81 Cal. App. 61, 69, 252 P. 1082.

In this day and place when the ownership and operation of automobiles has become an almost indispensable commonplace of our normal life the jurors from their common experience are in a position to draw the inference that a new tire mounted on a wheel from two to three weeks before the accident would in the meantime with reasonable probability not have to be replaced. Since reasonable probability is all that the law requires we cannot hold that the evidence above summarized is insufficient to support the jury's verdict.

[8] Appellant points to the fact that the witness Steine, who testified that he originally mounted the Fisk tire on the left rear wheel, also testified that a day or two before the accident Spolter returned to his service station in Sonoma at which time the Fisk tire was in the turtle-back of Spolter's car with a leaking valve which Steine repaired. The jury was entitled to disbelieve this part of Steine's testimony. The witness Roberts testified that he was with Spolter from the time that Spolter left San Francisco on July 27 for Sonoma and the Agua Caliente Hotel except when the two retired to their rooms to sleep, and that Spolter's automobile was not taken to any service station or garage for any kind of work on that trip. Mrs. Spolter testified that Spolter on July 26 returned home early from work at about 2:30 in the afternoon. Since his normal business was in and about San Francisco, he reported at the Call-Bulletin office every day and on that day, and had a radio program on K.S.F.O. in San Francisco on that day, the unlikelihood of Spolter's driving approximately 90 miles round trip to Sonoma from San Francisco on Friday, July 26 may well have impressed the jury. If they concluded that Spolter did not visit Steine's service station in Sonoma "a day or two before his accident" they could not credit that portion of his testimony, but they were still entitled to believe that he had earlier sold the Fisk tire to Spolter and mounted it on the left rear wheel of his automobile, particularly in view of the witness Lynch's corroboration of that circumstance. In "this state the credibility of a witness and the weight to be accorded to his testimony are questions directed to the trial judge, who under proper circumstances may accept all or such part of the testimony of any witness as he believes to be true, or may reject all or any part which he believes to be untrue." Bechtold v. Bishop & Co., Inc., 16 Cal.2d 285, 291, 105 P.2d 984, 988; Wright v. Delta Properties, Inc., 79 Cal.App.2d 470, 476, 180 P.2d 57.

Appellant's second point is that even if the evidence recited would, if uncontradicted, support the inference that the wheel was negligently attached by his employees on July 20 when the brakes were relined the inference was in fact rebutted by the clear, positive and uncontradicted testimony of eyewitnesses who are unimpeached. Engstrom v. Auburn Auto. Sales Corp., 11 Cal.2d 64, 77 P.2d 1059; Crouch v. Gilmore Oil Co., 5 Cal.2d 330, 54 P.2d 709; Maupin v. Solomon, 41 Cal.App. 323, 183 P. 198. The rule of these cases has more recently been restated with some shift of

"Appellant contends that the inference was rebutted as a matter of law. Such contention is not sound. The trier of the facts is the exclusive judge of the credibility of the witnesses. § 1847, Code Civ. Proc. While this same section declares that a witness is presumed to speak the truth, it also declares that 'This presumption, however, may be repelled by the manner in which he testifies, by the character of his testimony * * * or his motives, or by contradictory evidence.' In addition, in passing on credibility, the trier of the facts is entitled to take into consideration the interest of the witness in the result of the case. See cases collected 27 Cal.Jur. 180, § 154. Provided the trier of the facts does not act arbitrarily, he may reject in toto the testimony of a witness, even though the witness is uncontradicted. Blank v. Coffin, supra; Hinkle v. Southern Pacific Co., 12 Cal.2d 691, 87 P.2d 349; Barsha v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 32 Cal.App.2d 556, 90 P.2d 371; Burke v. Bank of America, etc., Ass'n, 34 Cal.App.2d 594, 94 P.2d 58; People v. La Fleur, 42 Cal.App.2d 50, 108 P.2d 99; see cases collected in 27 Cal.Jur. 182, § 156; Kelly v. Jones, 290 Ill. 375, 125 N.E. 334, 8 A.L.R. 796. As a general rule, therefore, the trier of the facts is free to disbelieve the evidence as to the nonexistence of the fact of permission, and to find that it does exist solely on the basis of the inference. Blank v. Coffin, supra; Bushnell v. Yoshika Tashiro, supra [115 Cal.App. 563, 2 P.2d 550]; Day v. General Petroleum Corp., 32 Cal.App.2d 220, 89 P.2d 718. In discussing the rule that the trier of the facts may find the fact of permission to exist based on the inference even where the evidence contrary thereto is uncontradicted, the court, in Market Street Ry. Co. v. George, 116 Cal.App. 572, 576, 3 P.2d 41, 43, stated: 'It has always been the rule that courts and juries are not bound by mere swearing no matter how positive, unless it be credible swearing. It may bear within itself the seeds of its own destruction, as where it is inherently improbable, or its destruction may be wrought from without, as where the person swearing is in some manner impeached. In either case court and jury are entitled to disbelieve the testimony if they choose, and, if they do refuse it credence, it is of no more effect than if it had not been given. It disappears from the case and the inference opposed to it is no longer contradicted.'

"To these well settled rules there is a common sense limited exception which is aimed at preventing the trier of the facts from running away with the case. This limited exception is that the trier of the facts may not indulge in the inference when that inference is rebutted by clear, positive and uncontradicted evidence of such a nature that it is not subject to doubt in the minds of reasonable men. The trier of the facts may not believe impossibilities. When the rebutting testimony is of such a nature that the minds of reasonable men cannot differ on the subject, then the trier of the facts cannot, and should not be permitted to, indulge in the inference. If there is any reasonable doubt as to whether the inference, as a matter of law, has been rebutted, that doubt should be resolved in favor of submitting the question to the trier of the facts. This limited exception was expressed as follows in Blank v. Coffin, supra, 20 Cal.2d at page 461, 126 P.2d at page [868] 870: 'If the evidence contrary to the existence of the fact is clear, positive, uncontradicted, and of such a nature that it cannot rationally be disbelieved, the court must instruct the jury that the nonexistence of the fact has been established as a matter of law;' citing Engstrom v. Auburn Auto. Sales Corp., 11 Cal.2d 64, 77 P.2d 1059; Crouch v. Gilmore Oil Co., Ltd., 5 Cal.2d 330, 54 P.2d 709; Maupin v. Solomon, 41 Cal.App. 323, 183 P. 198. In the same case, after pointing out that the jury is the sole judge of the credibility of the witnesses and may disbelieve an uncontradicted witness if there is any rational ground for doing so, the court stated, page 461 of 20 Cal.2d, page [868] 870 of 126 P.2d: 'In most cases, therefore, the jury is free to disbelieve the evidence as to the nonexistence of the fact and to find that it does exist on the basis of the inference.' "

[10] An examination of the testimony of the three witnesses relied on by appellant to destroy the inferences of the jury, in the light of the other testimony in the case, satisfies us that the jury had a rational basis for disbelieving their testimony. The witness Maria O'Mea testified that she met Spolter at the Agua Caliente Hotel on July 21, that he complained to her that he had been having a great deal of trouble with tires and told her: "At this point I have an undersized tire on the car. I will have to get a new one as soon as I get back to San Francisco;" and that he walked over to the car and showed her the tire on the left rear wheel. The witnesses Igel and Fulger sold Spolter a new Atlas tire on July 23. They mounted it on the right rear wheel. They both testified that at that time the tire on the left rear wheel was also badly worn and that they tried to sell Spolter a new tire for that wheel but that Spolter said that he could not afford to buy it.

Set out thus badly against one another the inconsistency in the two stories speaks for itself. Miss O'Mea remembers that Spolter showed her an undersized tire on the left rear wheel of his automobile because he pointed it out to her and said: "I will have to get a new one as soon as I get back to San Francisco." Fulger and Igel remember that Spolter had a worn tire on his left rear wheel two days later because they tried to sell him a new one to replace it and he refused to buy it. It would require no particular acuteness on the part of the jurors to view such inconsistent testimony with distrust.

Add the facts that as early as May Spolter ran a story in his column in the Call-Bulletin about his own difficulty in getting new tires, that he had an income of from $1,000 to $1,200 per month and that the witnesses were testifying to what, to them, must have been rather casual incidents which had occurred over two years before their testimony was given and the jurors as reasonable men and women were not bound to give credence to their stories.

Finally appellant complains of the admission of Mrs. Spolter's testimony that she knew of no new tires being purchased by her husband in July and from an examination of his checks for that period found no check for any such purchase. She supported this by testimony that it was her husband's custom to pay for all purchases by check and to draw checks to cash for pocket money. The checks were produced and introduced into evidence.

[11] As to Mrs. Spolter's lack of knowledge of any purchase of new tires, if the admission of that evidence was error, we cannot hold it prejudicial. The court stated: "It is just so far as her knowledge goes * * *. That is limited to her knowledge." We cannot find how the jury could be misled since it was made clear that all that Mrs. Spolter was testifying to was in effect that no such purchase had been brought to her attention and it clearly appeared that she had not been with Mr. Spolter in the car during most of that period when any such purchase might have been made. We must ascribe ordinary common-sense to the members of the jury and we can find no prejudice in the admission of this answer.

[12, 13] Insofar as the checks and the supporting testimony of Spolter's habit of paying by check are concerned we think that the evidence had probative value in what was necessarily a case based upon circumstantial evidence. "Where the evidence is entirely circumstantial a party should not be deprived of competent, relevant evidence because it is not of great strength. Many threads may make a rope." Whittemore v. Lockheed Aircraft Corp., 65 Cal.App.2d 737, 753, 151 P.2d 670, 678.

[14, 15] The absence of any check to a dealer in tires drawn by Spolter during that period supported by Mrs. Spolter's testimony of his habit of paying for all purchases by check had some probative value. "The tendency of modern decisions is to admit any evidence which may have a tendency to illustrate or throw any light on the transaction in controversy, or any weight in determining the issue, leaving the strength of such tendency, or the amount of such weight, to be determined by the jury; and, in determining the relevancy of evidence that may be offered upon an issue of fact, much depends upon the nature of the issue * * * and a wide discretion is left to the trial judge in determining whether it is admissible or not." Moody v. Peirano, 4 Cal.App. 411, 418, 88 P. 380, 382; Firlotte v. Jessee, 76 Cal.App.2d 207, 210–211, 172 P.2d 710; In re Estate of Ades, 81 Cal.App.2d 334, 342, 184 P.2d 1; Schomaker v. Provoo, 96 Cal.App.2d 738, 216 P.2d 562.

The judgments and orders denying motions for judgments notwithstanding the verdicts are affirmed.

HARDY v. SAN FERNANDO VALLEY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE et al.

Civ. 17569.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Sept. 22, 1950.

Lester E. Hardy brought action against the San Fernando Valley Chamber of Commerce and others to recover attorney's fees. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Arnold Praeger, J., rendered an order expunging a lis pendens from record, orders sustaining a demurrer to each of the counts of the complaint, and a judgment for certain of the defendants, and the plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that first count which sought to recover for legal services performed by plaintiff's assignor at a time when he was no longer licensed to practice law within the state failed to state a cause of action, but that second cause of action alleging that plaintiff himself as an attorney performed services for certain of the defendants pursuant to contract sufficiently stated a cause of action.

Order expunging lis pendens affirmed, appeals from minute orders sustaining demurrers dismissed, and part of judgment dismissing action on first count of complaint affirmed, and part of judgment dismissing action on second count reversed.

1. Lis pendens ⇐3(1)

A lis pendens may or must be recorded in actions affecting the title to or the right of possession of realty, or to determine adverse claims to and clouds on title to realty, for partition, and in proceedings in eminent domain. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 409, 749, 755, 1243.

2. Lis pendens ⇐20

In action to recover attorney's fees for services rendered by plaintiff and his assignor in defending an action against defendants for specific performance of contract for sale of realty under alleged contracts whereby plaintiff and his assignor were to receive certain percentages of profits from sale of realty, order expunging lis pendens was proper. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 409, 749, 755, 1243.

3. Appeal and error ⇐102, 782

Appeal from orders sustaining demurrers to both counts of complaint would be dismissed, since an appeal does not lie from an order sustaining a demurrer.

4. Attorney and client ⇐11

The practice of law by one not an active member of the state bar is unlawful. Business and Professions Code, §§ 6125, 6126.

5. Attorney and client ⇐136

One may not recover compensation for services as an attorney at law unless at the time the services were rendered he was a member of the state bar.

6. Attorney and client ⇐165

Where assignor of plaintiff was not licensed to practice law after December 15, 1947, and, though suit was filed August 1, 1947, it was not tried until October 4, 1948, and no segregation was made in first count of complaint in suit to recover attorney's fees between services performed by assignor before Dec. 15, 1947, and those performed after that, first count did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Business and Professions Code, §§ 6125, 6126.

7. Attorney and client ⇐165

The second count in complaint alleging an express agreement of employment by defendants of plaintiff as an attorney, separate and apart from employment of third person who at time suit was tried was no longer licensed to practice law, and that the plaintiff assumed sole control of defense of suit against defendants, and that there was an agreement to pay a fixed measure of compensation, performance of services, success, demand, and refusal by defendants to pay was sufficient to allege a cause of action.

8. Attorney and client ⇐159

Where measure of compensation of an attorney is fixed by express agreement, he may have his action for amount agreed on.

9. Appeal and error ⇐917(1)

On appeal from judgment sustaining a demurrer to a complaint, allegations of the complaint must be regarded as true.

10. Pleading ⇐34(1)

Pleadings must be reasonably interpreted and must be read as a whole and each part must be given the meaning that it derives from the context wherein it appears. Code Civ.Proc. § 475.

11. Pleading ⇐205(1)

All that is necessary as against a general demurrer is to plead facts entitling the plaintiff to some relief.

12. Pleading ⇐204(2)

In determining whether a complaint is sufficient, as against demurrer, on ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, the rule is that if, on a consideration of all facts stated, it appears that plaintiff is entitled to any relief at hands of court against defendants, complaint will be held good, though facts may not be clearly stated, or may be intermingled with a statement of other facts irrelevant to the cause of action shown, or although the plaintiff may demand relief to which he is not entitled under facts alleged.

13. Pleading ⇐34(1)

In passing on the sufficiency of a pleading, its allegations must be liberally construed with a view to substantial justice between the parties.

Lester E. Hardy, Los Angeles, for appellant.

George M. Pierson, Los Angeles, for respondents.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Plaintiff commenced this action against defendants to recover attorney's fees. He recorded a lis pendens. His fourth amended complaint contained two counts. Defendants' demurrer to the first count was sustained without leave to amend. Their demurrer to the second count was sustained with leave to amend. Plaintiff declined to amend. He appeals from an order expunging the lis pendens from the record, from the minute orders sustaining the demurrer to each count, and from the judgment which followed.

We briefly summarize the allegations of the complaint.

First Count

Plaintiff at all times mentioned was and now is an attorney at law, admitted to the bar and licensed to practice in California. At all times prior to December 15, 1947, defendant Stillwell was an attorney at law, admitted to the bar and licensed to practice in California. On January 2, 1947, defendants Courtney owned a parcel of realty. On that date they entered into a written contract in which they agreed that defendant San Fernando Valley Chamber of Commerce, referred to as the corporation, which they and Stillwell controlled, would sell the realty to the Canfields. On March 24, 1947, the Courtneys deeded the realty to the corporation. The corporation has since been the record owner of the property.

On August 1, 1947, the Canfields sued the corporation, the Courtneys and Stillwell for specific performance of the contract.

No relief was sought against Stillwell other than a determination of his interest in the property and its subjection to the claim of the Canfields. Prior to September 25, 1947, William R. Courtney, for himself and his wife, entered into a verbal agreement with Stillwell in which it was agreed that Stillwell would file an answer for the defendants in said action and if he deemed it advisable, would secure the services of some other attorney to defend, and if the defense was successful, the corporation would reconvey the realty to the Courtneys who would then remove restrictions and place the property on the market for sale and pay to Stillwell for his services 50% of the sales price over and above the amount which the Canfields would have had to pay for the property should their action be successful. It was further agreed that Stillwell might sell the property to a purchaser secured by him for not less than $12,000 in the event the property was not sold by Courtney, in which event the fee of Stillwell would be paid out of escrow. Stillwell fully performed his part of the agreement.

On October 10, 1947, Stillwell, with the knowledge and consent of the Courtneys, asked plaintiff to take complete charge of the defense of the action. Plaintiff agreed to do so provided that if he won the case, the Courtneys would remove all restrictions on the property, sell it immediately and from the escrow pay him as his fee 25% of the amount received over what the Canfields would have had to pay for it if they were successful. Stillwell relinquished to plaintiff all the papers and files in the action. On October 16, 1947, Courtney signed a substitution of attorneys, substituting Stillwell and plaintiff as attorneys of record. At all times since, the Courtneys have been fully informed and had full knowledge of each and every step taken in the action. The action between the Canfields and the others was tried October 4, 1948. Plaintiff acted as attorney for the defendants therein. Judgment was for the corporation and the Courtneys on a cross-complaint and in favor of all defendants. The Courtneys were present at the trial. The judgment became final December 5, 1948. Thereafter the Courtneys refused to sell the realty.

The amount due Stillwell under the terms of his agreement with the Courtneys had the property been sold would have been 50% of $6,566.50, less $3,283.25 to be paid to plaintiff. Stillwell has been damaged in the sum of $3,283.25. On March 24, 1949, Stillwell, in writing, assigned his claim against the corporation and the Courtneys to plaintiff.

Second Count

The second count realleges all of the facts alleged in the first count except the allegation that Stillwell was prior to December 15, 1947, an attorney at law, admitted to the bar and licensed to practice in California, and the allegations as to what occurred after the judgment in the action between the Canfields and the corporation, et al., became final. The second count also alleged:

On October 10, 1947, Stillwell asked plaintiff to represent the corporation, the Courtneys and Stillwell in the Canfield action and told him that he was authorized in their behalf to secure plaintiff's services to conduct the defense. The Courtneys told plaintiff that Stillwell had authority to employ him and that he, plaintiff, had full authority to act for them. Plaintiff told the Courtneys and Stillwell that he would represent them and the corporation if, in the event he was successful, they would remove the restrictions from the realty, sell it, and pay him from escrow 25% of the amount realized from the sale over and above the amount due the Courtneys from Canfield in the event Canfield was successful. Stillwell told plaintiff they would do so. On October 16, 1947, the Courtneys signed a substitution of attorneys in the Canfield action, substituting Stillwell and plaintiff as attorneys of record. From that time on plaintiff assumed sole control of the defense of the action. After the judgment in the Canfield action became final the Courtneys refused to sell the property.

The defendants have failed and refused to fulfill any part of their agreement with plaintiff. Plaintiff has been damaged in the amount of $3,283.25 by reason of defendants' refusal to fulfill their agreement with him. Plaintiff has made demand on defendants for the sum of $3,283.25 as assignee of Stillwell and for $3,283.25 as attorney's fees agreed to be paid to him. Defendants have not paid.

[1, 2] The order expunging the lis pendens was proper. A lis pendens may or must be recorded in actions affecting the title to or the right of possession of real property, or to determine adverse claims to and clouds upon title to real property, for partition, and in proceedings in eminent domain. Code Civ.Proc., secs. 409, 749, 755, 1243; 16 Cal.Jur. 652, sec. 9. Neither count of the complaint pleads facts bringing it within either of these actions.

[3] An appeal does not lie from an order sustaining a demurrer. The appeals from those orders must be dismissed. Weiss v. Garofalo, 89 Cal.App.2d 811, 201 P.2d 845.

The first count, as we construe it, is for compensation for services performed by Stillwell as an attorney at law in the Canfield suit from its inception to its conclusion. It is not for the reasonable value of services performed by him prior to December 15, 1947. The suit was filed August 1, 1947. Stillwell was not licensed to practice law after December 15, 1947. The suit was not tried until October 4, 1948. No segregation is made between services performed before December 15, 1947, and those performed after that date.

[4–6] It is unlawful for a person not an active member of the State Bar to practice law in this State. Bus. & Prof.Code, sec. 6125. Practicing without being a member is a misdemeanor. Bus. & Prof.Code, sec. 6126. No one may recover compensation for services as an attorney at law in this State unless he was at the time the services were performed a member of the State Bar. See 7 C.J.S., Attorney and Client, sec. 165, p. 1022, and cases cited; 5 Am.Jur. 353, sec. 156 and cases cited; Annotation, 118 A.L.R. 652. Plaintiff, as assignee, stands in Stillwell's boots. As Stillwell cannot recover for services performed by him as an attorney at law after December 15, 1947, neither can plaintiff recover for those services. We think it clear that the first count does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer to the first count was properly sustained.

[7] The second count appears to be for compensation for services performed by plaintiff. While not a model of pleading, it states all facts necessary for recovery: an express agreement of employment of plaintiff separate and apart from the employment of Stillwell, agreement to pay a fixed measure of compensation, performance of the services, success, demand and refusal to pay. Respondent argues that because it is alleged that the substitution of attorneys dated October 10, 1947, substituted plaintiff and Stillwell for Stillwell "he [plaintiff] is still tied in with Stillwell." We do not so construe the second count as a whole. It alleged that from the time of substitution plaintiff assumed sole control of the defense of the Canfield suit. It does not appear from plaintiff's allegations that his employment was conditional upon the continued performance of services by Stillwell or that plaintiff was to receive the agreed compensation only in case Stillwell performed his agreement. An entirely different situation would be presented if plaintiff rendered his services with the understanding that he was to receive one-half of Stillwell's compensation. But the complaint shows that in any event plaintiff rendered some services for which he should be paid on the basis of their reasonable value.

[8–13] It is the rule that where the measure of compensation of an attorney is fixed by express agreement, he may have his action for the amount agreed upon. 3 Cal.Jur. 683, sec. 84. The second count of the complaint is independent of the first count and is a complete cause of action in itself. Cookson v. Fitch, 116 Cal.App. 544, 549, 3 P.2d 27. On appeal from a judgment sustaining a demurrer to a complaint the allegations of the complaint must be regarded as true. The court must, in every stage of an action, disregard any defect in the pleadings which does not affect the substantial rights of the parties. Code Civ.

Proc., sec. 475. "Pleadings must be reasonably interpreted; they must be read as a whole and each part must be given the meaning that it derives from the context wherein it appears." Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters, 29 Cal.2d 34, 42, 172 P.2d 867, 872. All that is necessary as against a general demurrer is to plead facts entitling the plaintiff to some relief. Tristam v. Marques, 117 Cal.App. 393, 397, 3 P.2d 947. "In determining whether or not the complaint is sufficient, as against the demurrer upon the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, the rule is that if, upon a consideration of all the facts stated, it appears that the plaintiff is entitled to any relief at the hands of the court against the defendants, the complaint will be held good, although the facts may not be clearly stated or may be intermingled with a statement of other facts irrelevant to the cause of action shown, or although the plaintiff may demand relief to which he is not entitled under the facts alleged." Matteson v. Wagoner, 147 Cal. 739, 742, 82 P. 436, 438. In passing upon the sufficiency of a pleading, its allegations must be liberally construed with a view to substantial justice between the parties. Buxbom v. Smith, 23 Cal.2d 535, 542, 145 P.2d 305; Gerritt v. Fullerton U. H. School Dist., 24 Cal.App.2d 482, 486, 75 P. 2d 627. "While orderly procedure demands a reasonable enforcement of the rules of pleading, the basic principle of the code system in this state is that the administration of justice shall not be embarrassed by technicalities, strict rules of construction, or useless forms." Buxbom v. Smith, 23 Cal. 2d 535, 542, 145 P.2d 305, 308.

Applying these rules to the second count of the complaint, we are of the opinion that a triable cause of action was pleaded and that the demurrer thereto should have been overruled.

The order expunging the lis pendens is affirmed. The appeals from the minute orders sustaining the demurrers are dismissed. That part of the judgment dismissing the action on the first count of the complaint is affirmed. That part of the judgment dismissing the action on the second count of the complaint is reversed, with directions to overrule the demurrer thereto. Each party is to bear his own costs on this appeal.

EPSTEIN et al. v. ZAHLOUTE.
Civ. 17702.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.
Oct. 2, 1950.

Jacob Epstein and others sued Lamia Zahloute to quiet title to a residential apartment and to cancel a lease executed to defendant as tenant whereunder defendant was granted option of renewal for each succeeding year following two-year term of lease. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Charles P. Johnson, J., rendered a judgment adverse to plaintiffs, and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Wilson, J., held that the lease was invalid as providing for a perpetuity.

Judgment reversed with instructions.

1. Landlord and tenant ⇐83(1)
Perpetuities ⇐6(17)

A lease of an apartment to an individual for two-year term with option of renewal by tenant each succeeding year thereafter created a perpetuity contrary to statute and was invalid. Civ. Code, § 718.

2. Landlord and tenant ⇐72
Perpetuities ⇐6(17)

A lease which covers a city lot or a portion thereof is invalid if for a period in excess of 99 years regardless of whether tenant is a corporation or an individual. Civ. Code, § 718.

Plaintiffs' predecessor in interest executed a lease to defendant of an apartment for the term of two years "with option for renewal each succeeding year thereafter, * * *." Subsequently to the expiration of the two-year term plaintiffs brought this action to quiet title to the property and to cancel the lease. They have appealed from the judgment rendered in favor of defendant.

[1] The effect of the quoted provision of the lease amounts to the creation of a perpetuity. "A covenant for a lease to be renewed indefinitely at the option of the lessee, is, in effect, the creation of a perpetuity; it puts it in the power of one party to renew forever, and is therefore against the policy of the law." Morrison v. Rossignol, 5 Cal. 64, 65, 66. In Becker v. Submarine Oil Co., 55 Cal.App. 698, 700, 204 P. 245, it is said that a clause in a lease providing for perpetual renewals at the option of the lessee is enforceable when it is clear that the parties intended the lessee to have that right. However, the lease in question in the Becker case was an oil and gas lease and what the court there said must be considered in the light of the fact that such a lease creates a profit a prendre and vests in the lessee an estate in real property. Gavina v. Smith, 25 Cal.2d 501, 505, 154 P.2d 681; Callahan v. Martin, 3 Cal.2d 110, 122 ff., 43 P.2d 788, 101 A.L.R. 871. An assignment by the landowner of an interest in his oil rights without limitation as to time does not violate the rule against perpetuities. Callahan v. Martin, supra, 3 Cal.2d at page 124, 43 P.2d 788.

[2] The Becker case is distinguishable for the further reason that the lease was not for a city lot while the lease in the instant case covers a city lot or a portion thereof and such a lease is invalid if for a period in excess of 99 years. Civil Code, sec. 718. A lease of a city lot, with the right of perpetual renewal, to a corporation whose term of existence is without limitation as to time would manifestly be equivalent to a lease in perpetuity and contrary to the inhibition of section 718. A similar lease to a natural person would be of like effect since the length of the lessee's life would be indeterminable. The court cannot conclude that the lessee in the instant case will not survive for a period exceeding 99 years hence the right to an annual renewal for an unlimited number of years purportedly granted to her by the lease is in violation of section 718. In Hart v. Hart, N.Y., 22 Barb. 606, a lease for 12 years with a covenant for renewal for 12 years if the lessor should live and for continued renewals for every 12 years during lessor's life, was held valid for the original 12 year term but void as to the covenant for renewals for the reason that it was in contravention of the constitutional inhibition of leases of agricultural land for a period longer than 12 years.

Reversed with instructions to enter judgment in favor of plaintiffs quieting their title and canceling the lease.

GRAY et al. v. JONES.

Civ. 4210.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Sept. 26, 1950.

Action by Fred I. Gray and another against Alice B. C. Jones to quiet title to realty. The Superior Court of San Diego County, C. M. Monroe, J., entered judgment for plaintiffs and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that an omission of property from the tax rolls, in absence of any reason therefor, was not a jurisdictional error so as to render tax levy invalid and omission would be corrected by the curative statute.

Affirmed.

1. Constitutional law ⇐193

The legislature may cure irregularities or omissions to comply with provisions of a statute which could have been omitted in first instance, and legislature cannot cure defects which are sometimes termed jurisdictional, but after jurisdiction is acquired and mandate of due process is complied with, manner or procedure is a matter within legislative discretion and may be subject to exercise of healing power, as long as further constitutional inhibitions are observed.

2. Taxation ⇐437, 439

An omission of property from tax rolls, in absence of any reason therefor, was not of a jurisdictional character and did not render tax levy invalid, and omission would be corrected by curative statute. Gen. Laws Act, 8443b, §§ 3, 4(a).

MUSSELL, Justice.

Action to quiet title to real property.

This is an action to quiet title to lot 76, Highdale Addition to Encanto Heights in the city of San Diego. The plaintiffs claim under deed issued by the tax collector of San Diego county based upon a tax deed to the state on August 1, 1935, for a delinquency of 1929. The defendant is successor in interest to the record owner.

The complaint is in the usual form and, among other things, it is alleged therein that the plaintiffs are the owners of the real property described therein and that the defendant asserts or claims some right, title, interest, estate or lien therein adverse to the rights of the plaintiffs.

The answer denies ownership in plaintiffs, admits that the defendant claims some right, title or interest in the property, and contains a prayer for an order quieting title in the defendant.

The evidence is that the lot in question is situated in what is known as Zone K, in Acquisition and Improvement District No. 13, and was sold to the state on August 1st, 1935, for 1929 delinquent taxes and assessments; that it was deeded by the county tax collector of San Diego county to plaintiffs on February 4, 1947, and that the deed was duly recorded. The defendant produced no evidence with respect to her own title but introduced various tax records in an attempt to show that the deed to the state on August 1, 1935, was invalid.

The court found that the plaintiffs were and are the owners in fee and entitled to the possession of the lot; that the defendant has no right, title or interest therein; that assessments for certain property in the acquisition and improvement district, embracing the property herein involved, were omitted from the tax roll, thereby increasing the tax burden on the lot in question and the court concluded that any defects or irregularities occasioned by the omission of such property from the tax rolls were cured by the validating act of 1947. 1947 Statutes, Chapter 605, Act 8443b, Deering's General Laws, Supplement. Judgment was entered accordingly and defendant appeals.

The sole question presented on this appeal is whether the trial court was correct in its conclusion that the omission of property from the tax rolls, under the circumstances here presented, was cured by the said validating act.

"Sec. 3. Every act and proceeding heretofore taken by any taxing agency or revenue district or the officers thereof relative to the preparation, transmitting, computing, determining or fixing the budget or the tax rate or rates of any taxing agency or revenue district, or to the assessment or equalization of property or to the levy of taxes thereon or to tax sales or certificates of tax sales, tax deeds or other conveyances, are hereby confirmed, validated and declared legally effective.

"Sec. 4. (a) This act is limited to the correction of defects, irregularities and ministerial errors which the Legislature originally could have omitted from the statutory requirements of law under which the acts hereby confirmed, validated and declared legally effective were taken. (b) This act is limited to the validation of acts and proceedings to the extent to which the same can be effectuated under the State and Federal Constitutions."

The record before us does not disclose the reason for the omission of the property from the tax rolls. The suggestion in the briefs is that the omitted property had been sold for taxes. If it was sold to the state for delinquent taxes, and state owned, it was properly omitted from subsequent assessments.

The Acquisition and Improvement Act, 1925 Statutes, Chapter 419, page 849, applicable here, provides in part as follows: "The lands upon which said special assessment taxes shall be levied shall be all those lying within the assessment district, including any lands which are the operative property of any public utility; provided, said lands shall not include any lands belonging to the United States government or the State of California, but they shall include all lands belonging to any county, municipality, district, public agency, mandatory of the government, school board, educational, penal or reformatory institution, or institution for the feeble-minded or insane, included within the assessment district, whether being in use in the performance of any public function or otherwise; * * *." Section 5.

The act further provides for the omission of certain property from the levy and collection of special assessment taxes. State owned lands are also exempt under the provisions of Article XIII, Section 1 of the State Constitution.

It may be presumed that official duty has been regularly performed, Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1963, subd. 15, and that the lands were thus excluded in accordance with the law.

[1] The rule concerning the applicability of curative statutes, such as the one here involved, is stated in Miller v. McKenna, 23 Cal.2d 774, 782, 147 P.2d 531. Generally, it is there held that the legislature may cure irregularities or omissions to comply with provisions of a statute which could have been omitted in the first instance; that the legislature cannot cure defects which are sometimes termed jurisdictional but that the manner or procedure, after jurisdiction is acquired and the mandate of due process are complied with, is a matter within the legislative discretion and may be subject to the exercise of the healing power as long as further constitutional inhibitions are observed.

In Union Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Thorp, 94 Cal.App.2d 421, 423, 424, 210 P.2d 905, 907, this court had before it for consideration the contention that a tax assessment was defective because of omission from the assessment roll of various pieces of property. The contention was disposed of in the following language:

"It is next contended that the tax assessment for 1929 was defective because the assessor omitted from the assessment roll for that year various parcels of land in Districts No. 17 and No. 8, which had the effect of increasing the assessments on the portions of the half lot in question which were in the various zones, these portions being charged with a percentage of whatever delinquencies had occurred with respect to other property. This is the objection which has frequently been raised to the "pyramiding" of assessments in the so-called Mattoon districts. By section 41 of the 1925 act, St.1925, p. 890, and as provided for in the Resolutions of Intention of these districts, any land belonging to the state of California was excluded. Such state-owned lands are within the exemption provided for in the Constitution. Sutter-Yuba Inv. Co. v. Waste, 21 Cal.2d 781, 136 P.2d 11. The exclusion of such lands under these circumstances has frequently been upheld. Any injustice resulting therefrom is a matter for legislative and not judicial correction. American Securities Co. v. Forward, 220 Cal. 566, 32 P. 343, 96 A.L.R. 1268. The appellant admits that this point was unsuccessfully raised in Davault v. Essig, 80 Cal. App.2d 970, 183 P.2d 39, but argues that in the later decisions of Hall v. Chamberlain, 31 Cal.2d 673, 192 P.2d 759 and Tannhauser v. Adams, 31 Cal.2d 169, 187 P.2d 716, 5 A.L.R.2d 1015, 'a different theory seems to have been presented.' We are unable to see that any different theory was followed in those cases, with respect to the point now under consideration."

[2] The record before us does not disclose an omission of "jurisdictional requisites" and under such circumstances the curative statute is applicable. City of Compton v. Boland, 26 Cal.2d 310, 316, 158 P.2d 397.

[3] The effect of the statutes of limitation, Secs. 175 and 3522 of the Revenue and Taxation Code, is not here decided as the statutes were not pleaded or referred to at the trial and cannot be invoked for the first time on appeal. Union Sugar Co. v. Hollister Estate Co., 3 Cal.2d 740, 745, 47 P.2d 273.

JORDAN v. O'CONNOR et al.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 26, 1950.

Action by Evelyn T. Jordan against Jane O'Connor and Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Company, a corporation, for damages for alleged negligence of notary in taking and certifying acknowledgment of a signature of a maker of a deed of trust. The notary died after commencement of the action which proceeded to trial against second named defendant only. The Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, Samuel F. Finley, J., entered judgment for defendant and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that act of the notary in taking and certifying acknowledgment of the signature of the maker of a deed of trust which was a forgery, was not the cause of plaintiff's loss of alleged loans made in reliance on deed of trust.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Evidence ⇐594

As general rule, testimony of witness which is not contradicted by that of any other witness may not be disregarded, but should be accepted by court or jury as proof of facts adduced by that witness.

2. Appeal and error ⇐994(3)

Conflicts in testimony of a witness must be resolved by trier of facts.

3. Evidence ⇐588

Manner of witness in testifying may impress court with doubt as to accuracy of his statement and influence it to disregard witness' positive testimony as to a particular fact.

4. Appeal and error ⇐1012(1)

It is province of trial court to determine what weight shall be given to testimony of any witness, and appellate court cannot control finding or conclusion of trial court denying testimony credence, unless it appears that there are no matters or circumstances which impair its accuracy.

5. Notaries ⇐11

In action against notary public's surety for damages for alleged negligence of notary in taking and certifying acknowledgment and signature of a maker of a deed of trust, evidence supported finding that plaintiff did not rely on notary's acknowledgment in making any of alleged loans, did not alter her position to her detriment based on actions of notary, and did not suffer loss or damages as result of actions of notary.

6. Appeal and error ⇐1071(6)

In action against notary public's surety for damages for alleged negligence of notary in taking and certifying acknowledgment of signature of maker of deed of trust, alleged failure of court to make certain findings relating to notary's negligence, was immaterial in view of findings to effect that act of notary was not causative factor in effecting plaintiff's loss.

7. Notaries ⇐10, 11

Notary public and surety on his official bond are liable in damages to persons injured by official misconduct or negligence of notary.

8. Notaries ⇐10, 11

Where notary certified acknowledgment of signature of maker of deed of trust and such signature was in fact a forgery, but plaintiff had not relied on notary's acknowledgement in making any alleged loans in reliance on security of deed of trust, act of notary was not efficient cause of plaintiff's loss, if any, sustained, and neither notary nor surety was liable.

Phil F. Garvey, Francis C. Starr, San Francisco, James A. Himmel, San Francisco, of counsel, for appellant.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment for defendant in an action against a notary public and her surety for damages for alleged negligence of the notary in taking and certifying the acknowledgment of the signature of the maker of a deed of trust. The notary died after commencement of the action, which proceeded to trial against the surety only, before the court without a jury.

The deed of trust, according to its terms, was executed by one Marie Russell as trustor to secure payment to appellant of indebtedness evidenced by a promissory note for $1,200 executed by trustor, and to secure any additional sums which appellant might thereafter lend the trustor. It was dated July 6, 1946.

The certificate of acknowledgment, executed by defendant Jane O'Connor as notary public, read as follows: "On July 10th 1946, before me, Jane O'Connor, a Notary Public, in and for said City and County and State, personally appeared Marie Russell, a married woman, known to me to be the person whose name is subscribed to the within instrument, and acknowledged that she executed the same."

The promissory note bore date July 6, 1946, was purportedly signed by Marie Russell as maker, in favor of appellant as payee; was in the principal sum of $1,200, payable one year after date; bore interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, payable monthly, and recited that if any of the interest were not paid within 10 days after it became due, the whole of the principal sum would forthwith become due and payable at the election of the holder, without notice.

A second promissory note, dated October 9, 1946, likewise was purportedly signed by Marie Russell in favor of appellant as payee; was in the principal sum of $700, payable 90 days after date; and bore interest at the rate of 8 per cent per annum, payable at maturity.

The signature to each of these three instruments was a forgery. Marie Russell, the owner of the property described in the deed of trust, had no knowledge of the transaction. She neither signed nor did she authorize anyone to sign her name to any of these instruments; nor did she ever appear before the notary or acknowledge the signature to the deed of trust as her signature. It is not known who signed any of the documents; nor who, if anyone, appeared before the notary and acknowledged the signature to the deed of trust.

Appellant claimed that she made these loans in reliance upon the security of the deed of trust and the notary's certificate of acknowledgment of the trustor's signature, that the notary was negligent in taking and certifying the acknowledgment, and that such negligence was the proximate cause of her loss of the money loaned and certain costs incurred in unsuccessfully attempting to enforce the security given for the loan.

The court found that it is not true that appellant loaned the signer of said notes and deed of trust $1,900 in reliance upon the security mentioned in the deed of trust and the signatures and acknowledgment on said instruments; that appellant did not rely on the notary's acknowledgment in making any of the alleged loans; that appellant did not alter her position to her detriment based on the actions of the notary; that appellant did not suffer loss or damage as the result of the actions of the notary nor did she place any trust or reliance on the notary's acknowledgment to the deed of trust; that appellant suffered no damage as a result of negligence of the notary; that the deed of trust was not made as security for the $1,200 note; and that the alleged loan was made, if at all, four days prior to the notary's acknowledgment on the deed of trust, therefore no reliance was placed by appellant on the notary's acknowledgment.

Appellant claims that these findings are not supported by the evidence; also, that the court erroneously failed to make findings on certain material issues.

The alleged loans were made at the request of one Lyman Russell. Marie Russell, his wife, was the purported grantor of the deed of trust and maker of the promissory notes. Lyman Russell was a real estate broker who handled loans and mortgages for clients. Appellant testified that he had been her broker for over 10 years and had invested considerable sums of money for her. The usual procedure in making a loan was for Russell to make the contact, collect the data and give it to appellant. She or her mother would inspect the property, get Russell's advice and then decide whether to make the loan. Payments on these loans were made to Russell and he would send them to appellant. Sometimes he would let the payments "bank up three or four months" before remitting to her. Appellant claimed that the money purportedly loaned to Marie Russell came from collections which Russell had made and held for appellant's credit in his office.

The only written statements or reports from Russell to appellant prior to July 1946, as to which appellant testified, were statements made in August 1945 and in February, March and May 1946, in which he reported and remitted collections of $146.28, $250.29, $134.37, and $185.35, respectively. No earlier statements of his were offered in evidence. No later written accounting was made by him except one in October 1946, reporting and remitting a collection of $25.

When Russell made no payment to her in July of 1946, she called it to his attention and he said he would get everything in order and take care of everything the first of the year. She was "anxious to get everything all fixed up," "wanted to get out of this," and he assured her he would have his accounts in order the first of 1947. He stated he was not in good health and was going to curtail his activities in this field after the first of the year. From May 1946 until his death in January 1947, he gave her no statements or accounts, except that of October 1946, relying on the fact that his wife, as appellant understood it, was to inherit some money and he was counting on this money to clear up all his accounts and get them all in order and have a general accounting on the first of the year. He asked her to lend his wife, Marie Russell, $1,200 out of the money he had on deposit, and appellant did that. The $700 loan made in October 1946 was likewise made at Russell's request and from the same source.

As to the amount of her money that Russell actually had on deposit when the $1,200 loan was made, appellant did not know how much more than $1,200 it was; that up until May 1946 he rendered reports to her. In that month the report showed, she stated, he had about $1,400 on hand for her credit; and then, she said, it was not in cash, it was $1,400 outstanding, due on other accounts, she did not have a statement on that now but she could make it up. Later, she testified that over $1,400 had been there for two years, which he had not invested for her, was holding for a two-year period. From papers in her possession, she testified that the money he had on hand to her credit was $3,150, in May and also on July 7, 1946, made up of various sums which he had collected and not paid over to her. These included collections of $350, $193, and $314, made in 1942, 1943, and 1944, which he never reported to her, one of which he effected through the medium of a forged substitution of trustees which she learned about after his death; another collection of $350 in 1942; one of $407 in 1944, in connection with which she stated he forged a substitution of trustee; and collections of $1,320, $214, $106, and $232, the dates of which do not clearly appear.

When asked what money, on any of those accounts, Russell actually collected in June of 1946, appellant replied that all of this came to light after he passed away; in January (1947) he was supposed to clear all of this up, and get it all cleared, so she could not have any more business like this; when he passed away she had to go into it very thoroughly; she contacted all these people and found they had paid him different amounts of money that he made no record to her of, and altogether her loss on all those properties stands well over $3,000.

Yet, in another part of her testimony appellant said that just prior to the making of this $1,200 loan she had a conversation with Russell as to the amount of her money he had on hand in his possession at that time; that he said he had over $3,150. In response to a question whether she then discussed with him the source of those funds, from whom he collected them, and as to the various accounts, she replied: "The accounts that I have listed, that he gave the itemized list of moneys due of the amount he had on credit in his office"; that she discussed those accounts with him and the various payments he had received. These are the very accounts substantial items of which she had earlier testified were unknown to her until after his death.

Although appellant several times stated positively, as if of her own knowledge, that Russell had more than sufficient money of hers to make these loans of $1,200 and $700 (using such expressions as "I know the money was in the office," "he had the money," "It was on deposit"), she admitted, when pressed by respondent's counsel for an answer, that all she knew was that there was a credit in her favor on her account for that money, she did not know whether he actually used that money himself or not. The following questions by the court, and her responses, are significant:

"Q. Let me ask you this: Isn't it true that all you had, all you knew about it was that as far as the accounts were concerned and considering the date on which payments should have been made, that Mr. Russell should have had in his possession $3,150 that belonged to you? A. Yes.

"Q. You don't know whether he actually had it or not? A. I know he had some of it, your Honor, because different accounts had been settled.

"Q. I mean, now, you know that he should have had, but whether he actually did have it— A. He told me had it.

"Q. But you don't know? A. That was the reason, your Honor—

"Q. Disregarding what he told you, now, for a minute, you really know nothing about it excepting that those accounts should have been paid and he should have had the money upon the dates when the payments should have been made, that he should have had the money in his possession, is that right? A. Yes."

It was after he told appellant how much he had on deposit for her account that Russell mentioned this particular loan to Marie Russell, and the San Bruno property to secure it, telling her that Marie Russell was his wife and the owner of that property. Concerning the $1,200 loan, appellant upon cross-examination said that she was not at the time familiar with the signature of Marie Russell; that she relied on Mr. Russell's statements to her that it was Marie Russell's signature. When the $1,200 note was given her on July 6, appellant took his word that that was Marie Russell's signature. The same condition existed with reference to the second note. Appellant was not familiar with the signature of Mrs. Russell and merely took Mr. Russell's word. Later, upon redirect examination she said that in making the $1,200 loan she relied on the security of the deed of trust, would not have made that loan without the security of the deed of trust.

Upon cross-examination, she stated she did not recall having any conversation with Mr. Russell, prior to accepting either of those two notes, regarding the existence of a mortgage on the San Bruno property. Later, upon redirect examination she stated that the $1,200 note was to be secured by a second deed of trust against the San Bruno property. It was to be secured by a deed of trust subject to a first mortgage of the Hibernia Bank, which was already on the property.

As to the time and sequence of delivery of the notes and deed of trust, appellant testified that she received the deed of trust after it was recorded, and received those two promissory notes at the same time. Later, she did not remember when she first saw the deed of trust, nor if she saw it before the first note was executed; imagined it was given to her at the time the note was given; did not know whether she received the deed of trust and the note at the same time, but was quite sure she did; the deed of trust was delivered to her after recordation July 16, whether by the title company or Mr. Russell she did not remember; did not remember whether the notes and deed of trust were delivered to her at the same time or different times; all eventually came into her possession after July 16; did not remember whether she herself recorded the deed of trust; did not know whether the first note was handed her by Mr. Russell or if it was mailed to her; she imagined it was handed to her.

Despite appellant's claim that Russell held $3,150 of her money from May 1946 on, he made no loans for her after that, outside of the two loans to Marie Russell. Also, after May 1946 she received no money from him, except the $25 collection in October 1946; and no money from his wife or any other person on his behalf. Yet, she let him hold the difference between $3,150 and $1,200 in July, and the difference between $3,150 and $1,900 in October and subsequently. Russell did not tell her what he was doing with that money of hers which he was holding.

Although the $1,200 note called for interest payments monthly, with acceleration of the principal if any interest payment became delinquent for 10 days, appellant never made any demand upon either Mr. or Mrs. Russell for payment of principal or interest on either note until after Mr. Russell's death, at a meeting of appellant and Mrs. Russell with their attorneys in February 1947.

The unusual character of this lending transaction, the circumstances attending it, and the uncertainties and conflicts in appellant's testimony, it would seem, prompted the trial court to ask the following questions of appellant: "Just tell me this, Mrs. Jordan, how did this transaction come about? How did you happen to loan him this $1200 and this $700? Was it at his request? A. Yes.

Q. Did you feel you [he?] might not have had the money for it? A. No, we had no idea, your Honor.

"Q. What did he say he wanted it for? A. He wanted us to lend the money on property owned by his wife and, as I said before, we were going to close all dealings on the first of the year and he had this money on deposit.

"Q. Is that what he told you? A. Yes, he told us definitely.

"Q. Did he tell you that he had $3,150? A. He had $3,150.

"Q. He said, 'If you will loan me $1200—'

"Mr. Garvey [counsel for appellant]: Not him, your Honor; Marie Russell.

"The Witness: Yes, Marie Russell, not to lend him the money out of the money he had on deposit, and we did that.

"The Court: Q. Then when he paid no interest on this $1200 between then and the time you made the loan of $700, did that raise any question in your mind? A. No, because his health was so poor and he was so anxious himself to close up all his dealings and he was going to make a general accounting on the first of the year.

"Q. Didn't you say, 'Well, all right, I will loan you this money and you turn the balance over to us now, there is no use to have it in your office'? A. No, we didn't go into that at all, because we had trusted him, your Honor, we had dealt with him over a period of ten years."

These further questions and comments by the court are of similar significance:

"Q. Didn't you question it at all when these checks failed to come in? A. No, because we had known that he was in poor health and that he had told Mother that he was going to get out, because his health was so bad and so we just—due to his past record of good judgment and handling money over a period of ten years, we had no occasion to question any dealings at all. Q. Let me ask you this: When you took this note for $1200, why didn't you take a note at that time for all that was remaining due, instead of just part of it—all that, according to your figures, that he owed you?" This question was not answered by appellant. Her attorney interrupted to say and did say: "May I explain to your Honor, that wasn't the transaction at all. I think your Honor has misconceived all this transaction here. This was not a transaction whereby he was giving her a note and security for any balance that she may have had on deposit with him there. The transaction was this—". Thereupon the court made this comment: "According to the testimony that is in the record—we are getting down to the truth of this thing—I would like to find out why all of a sudden this transaction came up in this way. In other words, here this lady had $3,150 that was supposed to be in his hands and all at once he comes and wants to borrow $1200," and asked this question: "Was that his suggestion or yours?" to which appellant responded, "It was his."

Concerning Russell's statements of account to appellant, the court asked appellant: "Well, Mrs. Jordan, let me ask you this question: Q. Were these statements by Mr. Russell—they were made each month, were they, over a period of time? A. Over a period of time, they were rendered about every other month, they were given.

"Q. Were they to bring you up to date, were they statements—wasn't in effect Mr. Russell saying, 'I have collected this much money; this is what belongs to you and this is what I am turning over to you'? A. No, we understood he was holding other money in his possession for deposit to our account."

The court continued with the following inquiries: "Let me ask you this question: Was there any account rendered by Mr. Russell to you which gave you information how much he was holding for you, or were you, as you might say, in the dark as to how much he was holding for you? A. We knew pretty well what he had on deposit.

"Q. But he didn't render you any regular accounts to show you? A. No.

"Mr. Garvey: Your Honor will recall the testimony of the witness that he did acknowledge he had on hand a certain amount.

"The Court: I recall that. I am talking about these statements, I am just asking her if he rendered regular statements which indicated to her how much he was holding for her, from time to time. A. At the time—if I may go on to help you a little bit—at the time these loans were made, he told us that he had a definite amount of money on deposit for us, and for that reason asked if he could use $1200 of the money he had on deposit on this new loan and again, in October, the additional $700.

"The Court: I understand that was your testimony. It was his proposal. A. Yes."

It is apparent that appellant's testimony did not convince the court that the transaction was as claimed by her. Proof was lacking that Russell actually had on hand sufficient money, or any money, of hers to make the purported loans to Marie Russell. Appellant's conduct and testimony support the conclusion that appellant relied upon her own agent in entertaining and consummating this transaction, upon him to make out the necessary papers, and upon his assurance, not the notary's certificate of acknowledgment on the deed of trust, that trustor's signature and the signatures on the notes were genuine. The evidence further supports the conclusion that appellant's loss, if any, occurred prior to and independently of this transaction, as a result of the conduct of her agent, Russell.

[1–4] Appellant directs attention to the fact that appellant's testimony is not contradicted by that of any other witness and invokes the general rule that the testimony of such a witness may not be disregarded but should be accepted by the court or jury as proof of the facts adduced by that witness. This rules has its exceptions. Conflicts in the testimony of a witness must be resolved by the trier of the facts. The most positive testimony of a witness may be contradicted by inherent improbabilities as to its accuracy contained in the witness' own statements. There may be circumstances in evidence in connection with the matter which satisfy the court of the inaccuracy or falsity of that testimony. The manner of the witness in testifying may impress the court with a doubt as to the accuracy of his statement and influence it to disregard the witness' positive testimony as to a particular fact. It is the province of the trial court to determine what weight shall be given to the testimony of any witness. An appellate court cannot control the finding or conclusion of the trial court denying the testimony credence, unless it appears that there are no matters or circumstances which impair its accuracy. Young v. Tassop, 47 Cal.App. 2d 557, 561, 118 P.2d 371, and cases therein cited.

[5] We conclude that the findings challenged by appellant are supported by the evidence, except the finding which seems to predicate appellant's nonreliance upon the notary's acknowledgment upon the fact that the loan was made, if at all, four days prior to the acknowledgment. This exception does not affect the other findings, which are amply supported by the evidence.

Appellant claims error for asserted failure of the court to find that Marie Russell did not sign the deed of trust and that her purported signature thereto was forged. This was fully covered by a finding which, by declaring true the allegations of paragraph IX of the complaint, found that the signatures of Marie Russell on the trust deed and the promissory notes were forged and were not genuine signatures.

[6] Appellant also asserts error of the court in declining to find that at the time the notary took the acknowledgment she did not know whether the person making the acknowledgment was the person described in the trust deed and did not know whether or not the person named therein executed the same and that the notary did not procure satisfactory or any evidence or information to show that the same was named therein as trustor. The court predicated this declination upon the fact that no evidence was presented covering these allegations. This failure to find, whether correct or not, is immaterial in view of the findings to the effect that the act of the notary was not a causative factor in effecting appellant's loss.

Appellant suggests that the court erroneously found "That the notary was not guilty of official misconduct and negligence." The record does not disclose any such finding.

[7, 8] The authorities upon which appellant relies correctly hold that for the official misconduct or negligence of a notary public he and the surety on his official bond are liable to the persons injured thereby for all the damages sustained. But those authorities are not applicable here for in each it appeared that the plaintiff had parted with his money in reliance upon the notarial certificate and that the notary's negligence or official misconduct was the proximate cause of his loss. While the notary's act, if relied upon, need not be the sole cause, Homan v. Wayer, 9 Cal.App. 123, 98 P. 80; Inglewood Park M. Co. v. Ferguson, 9 Cal. App.2d 217, 49 P.2d 305, it must be an efficient cause of the loss. Overacre v. Blake, 82 Cal. 77, 22 P. 979; McAllister v. Clement, 75 Cal. 182, 16 P. 775; Burck v. Buchen, 46 Cal.App.2d 741, 746, 116 P.2d 958, and cases cited; White v. Rosenstein, 8 Cal. App.2d 217, 47 P.2d 358; Riverside P. C. Co. v. Maryland C. Co., 46 Cal.App. 87, 189 P. 808. Where, as here, the act of the notary was not an efficient cause of the loss, if any, sustained, there can be no recovery from the notary or her surety.

GRADDON et al. v. KNIGHT et al.

ANGLO SAFE DEPOSIT CO. et al. v. GRADDON et al.

Civ. 14257.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 28, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 28, 1950.

Peyton S. Graddon and others, sued Ralph C. Knight and others, to recover damages suffered by plaintiffs when a largely completed residence being constructed by defendant Knight for plaintiffs was destroyed by fire, and defendant Knight filed a cross-complaint and the Anglo Safe Deposit Company intervened, and plaintiffs and defendant Knight filed cross-complaints against intervenors and the intervenors cross-complained against plaintiffs. The Superior Court in and for the County of Santa Clara, M. G. Del Mutolo, J., entered a judgment in favor of the Graddons and Knight on the cross-complaints against the bank, and entered a judgment in favor of defendants Knight and his employees and the plaintiffs Graddon on the Graddons' complaint, and entered a judgment in favor of cross-defendant Graddon on Knight's cross-complaint against them, and entered a judgment in favor of Knight and the Graddons on the cross-complaint of the bank against them, and the Graddons appealed from the judgment against them and in favor of Knight and his employees on the Graddons' complaint, and the intervenors appealed generally from all judgments. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that under deed of trust executed by plaintiffs, plaintiffs and not the bank were required to procure fire insurance.

Under deed of trust executed by veteran who borrowed money from bank to construct a residence, providing for borrower to keep buildings insured against loss by fire, and containing provision that deed of trust was subject to Servicemen's Readjustment Act, and regulations issued pursuant thereto, one of which regulations provided that lender should require insurance to be procured and maintained, veteran and not bank had duty to procure fire insurance, the word "require" being satisfied by provision for borrower to procure insurance. Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended in 1945, 38 U.S.C.A. § 693 et seq.

2. Evidence ⇐397(2), 448

A fully integrated, unambiguous and certain written agreement may not be varied by parol evidence.

3. Appeal and error ⇐173(9)

Where no estoppel was pleaded by plaintiffs and question of estoppel was not presented by instructions, plaintiff could not on appeal attempt to invoke an estoppel against defendant in attempting to support judgment.

4. Appeal and error ⇐882(3)

A party cannot try his case on one theory and on appeal shift to another theory which was neither presented to jury nor considered by jury in deciding case.

5. Appeal and error ⇐1001(1)

Where evidence will reasonably support inferences of jury an appellate court cannot interfere.

6. Negligence ⇐136(17, 25)

In action for damages resulting when a largely completed residence being constructed by defendant for plaintiff was destroyed by fire, whether defendant's employees left a fire burning inside of residence when they left work for day, which proximately caused burning of residence, and whether a fire left burning in yard 72 feet from apparent origin of fire caused fire in residence, was for jury.

7. Costs ⇐233, 236

Where judgment for defendants in action on complaint for negligence was affirmed on appeal, defendants were entitled to costs on appeal, and where money judgments in favor of plaintiff and defendants on their cross-complaint against intervenors were reversed, intervenors were entitled to costs.

DOOLING, Justice.

In June 1949 the plaintiffs Graddon, husband and wife, desiring to construct a residence procured for that purpose a so-called G.I. loan from the intervener, the Anglo California National Bank, hereinafter called the Bank. To secure the loan the plaintiffs executed a deed of trust with intervener, Anglo Safe Deposit Company, named as trustee. The Graddons entered into a contract with defendant Knight for the construction of such residence. When the residence was largely completed it was destroyed by fire.

The Graddons filed a complaint against Knight and certain of his employees charging that the fire was caused by the negligence of, and violation of a county ordinance by, Knight's employees. Knight filed a cross-complaint against the Graddons charging a breach of the Graddons' contract with Knight to keep the building insured against loss by fire during construction payable to Knight as his interest might appear.

The Bank and its trustee filed a complaint in intervention in which they sought a recovery against Knight and his employees for the damages suffered by them, based on similar allegations of negligence and violation of ordinance to those in the Graddons' complaint. The Graddons and Knight each filed cross-complaints against the interveners counting on their alleged duty under the deed of trust to procure and maintain fire insurance on the uncompleted building for the protection of the interests of the Graddons as parties to the deed of trust and of Knight as a third party beneficiary. Finally the interveners cross-complained against the Graddons alleging their substitution of a cost plus contract with Knight without the knowledge or consent of the interveners for the flat price contract upon which the loan was based.

Upon this complicated set of pleadings the case was tried before a jury resulting in verdicts and judgments in favor of the Graddons and Knight on their cross-complaints against the Bank for money judgments based on the Bank's failure to procure and maintain fire insurance; a verdict and judgment in favor of defendants Knight and his employees against the plaintiffs Graddon on the Graddons' complaint; a verdict and judgment in favor of cross-defendants Graddon on Knight's cross-complaint against them; and a verdict and judgment in favor of Knight and the Graddons on the Bank's cross-complaint against them. No verdict or judgment was returned or entered expressly adjudicating the Bank's original complaint in intervention.

The Graddons appeal from the judgment against them and in favor of Knight and his employees on the Graddons' complaint, and the interveners appeal generally from all of the judgments.

We shall first consider the Money Judgments Against The Bank.

The deed of trust was executed on a printed form in use by the Bank. Paragraph Third of the printed deed of trust provides: "The Trustor (the Graddons) agrees at all times during the continuation of these trusts to keep the buildings and improvements * * * on said property, insured against loss or damage by fire * * * to the amount of their full insurable value (or less in the discretion of Beneficiary) * * * with loss made payable to Beneficiary * * *."

A Paragraph Twenty-third was added in typewriting reading in part: "This deed of trust * * * is made in accordance with and subject to the provisions of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended in 1945 [38 U.S.C.A. § 693 et seq.], and the Rules and Regulations of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs issued pursuant thereto * * *."

Section 36.4326 of Regulations, Administrator (of Veterans' Affairs), Feb. 27, 1946 (5 Code of Fed.Reg. 5953 (Supp.

1946)) provides: "Hazard Insurance. The holder shall require insurance policies to be procured and maintained in an amount sufficient to protect the security against the risks or hazards to which it may be subjected to the extent customary in the locality. All monies received under such policies covering payment of insured losses shall be applied to restoration of the security or to the loan balance."

Pursuant to, and in explanation of, this regulation the Veterans Administration issued a bulletin or notice reading: "The obligation upon the lender * * * to see that insurance in sufficient amount and types to protect the security against risks and hazards to the extent customary in the locality is procured and maintained, is clearly set forth in Section 36.4326."

It was proved that it was customary in the locality to procure and maintain fire insurance on a building under construction, and it was the claim of the Graddons and Knight that by Paragraph Twenty-third read in connection with Section 36.4326 of the Regulations above quoted the contract duty was assumed by the Bank to procure and maintain such insurance.

The court, on the theory that Paragraph Third under which the Graddons agreed to keep the buildings insured against fire was inconsistent with Paragraph Twenty-third which incorporated Section 36.4326 of the Regulations thereby creating an ambiguity, allowed oral testimony to aid in the construction of those provisions. It is the theory of the Graddons and Knight that, at least in the light of this oral testimony, the jury was entitled to find that the Bank had assumed the obligation itself to procure and maintain fire insurance on the building. At the request of Knight the jury was instructed: "If you find that the bank and Graddon executed a deed of trust and that this deed of trust provided that the bank was to procure insurance against loss by fire * * * and that the bank and Graddon expressly intended and agreed in the deed of trust that the insurance * * * was to be for the benefit of Graddon and the contractor Knight, and that the bank and Graddon did not rescind the deed of trust * * * and if you find that the bank did not procure or maintain insurance against loss by fire * * * then cross-complainant Knight is entitled to recover against the bank * * *."

Thus the Graddons and Knight both relied on the theory that under the deed of trust the Bank had bound itself to the Graddons that the Bank would procure and maintain such insurance and that the failure to do so was a breach of its contract with the Graddons.

We agree with the Bank that under the plain and unambiguous terms of the deed of trust the Graddons assumed the duty to procure and maintain such insurance and the Bank did not promise the Graddons that the Bank would itself procure or maintain it.

Under Paragraph Third the Graddons clearly and unequivocally agreed that the Graddons were "to keep the buildings and improvements * * * insured against loss or damage by fire * * *." Under section 36.4326: "The holder shall require insurance policies to be procured and maintained * * *." "Require" is a transitive verb meaning "To demand; to claim as by right and authority; to exact" and its synonyms are "claim, necessitate, ask, enjoin, compel, force." Webster's New International Dictionary, 2d Ed., Unabridged.

[1] If the regulation had provided that "the holder shall procure and maintain insurance" the plain duty of the Bank would be to secure the insurance itself, but the regulation does not so provide. The verb "require" is satisfied by action directed to another and clearly permits the Bank to "require" the Graddons to carry the insurance. This is exactly what the deed of trust in plain, direct and unambiguous language does.

[2] A fully integrated, unambiguous and certain written agreement may not be varied by parol evidence. Civ.Code secs. 1625, 1638, 1639; Code Civ. Proc. sec. 1856; Pendleton v. Ferguson, 15 Cal. 2d 319, 323, 101 P.2d 81, 688; In re Estate of Gaines, 15 Cal.2d 255, 264–265, 100 P.2d 1055; Brant v. California Dairies, Inc., 4 Cal.2d 128, 133–134, 48 P.2d 13.

It may be that the deed of trust could be reformed if it did not truly express the intention of the parties, but here there were no allegations of fact to support a decree of reformation nor any attempt to invoke the equity powers of the court to reform the instrument. The parties saw fit to stand on the deed of trust as written and as written the deed of trust does not support the recovery by the Graddons and Knight against the Bank.

[3, 4] The Graddons attempt in support of the judgment to invoke an estoppel against the Bank. No estoppel was pleaded nor was the question of estoppel presented to the jury by any instruction. The claim that the Bank might be held liable on the theory of negligence was also neither pleaded nor presented to the jury. It is axiomatic that a party cannot try his case on one theory and on appeal shift to another theory which was neither presented to the jury nor considered by it in deciding the case. Ernst v. Searle, 218 Cal. 233, 240–241, 22 P.2d 715; Mathews v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 47 Cal.App.2d 424, 428, 118 P.2d 10; 2 Cal.Jur. 237.

The Judgment In Favor Of Knight And His Employees Absolving Them Of Responsibility For The Fire.

The jury verdict was in favor of Knight and his employees on the Graddons' complaint. The Graddons for a reversal argue: 1. that Knight and his employees violated a fire ordinance of Santa Clara County and sections 13000 and 13001 of the Health and Safety Code which proximately caused the fire; 2. that the circumstances of the fire made a case of res ipsa loquitur which imposed upon defendants the burden of showing their freedom from fault which they failed to do.

Both arguments are subject to the same vice and so may be considered together. Appellants Graddon assume that the jury was bound as a matter of law to find that fire started and left burning by Knight's employees proximately caused the burning of the building. Under the evidence we are satisfied that the question of proximate cause was one of fact for the jury.

The fire occurred in December. Knight's employees, who were working inside the house, lighted a fire in the living room fireplace for warmth. They also had a fire outside the house for burning rubbish. About 4:15 or 4:20 p. m., according to the testimony of one of Knight's employees, he took all of the ashes and live coals out of the fireplace and dumped them on the fire outside. The fire outside was not completely extinguished. There may have been "very few, a little" live coals in the outside fire. A witness who lived across the street testified that after the workmen left she saw through the living room window "quite a small blaze" in the living room fireplace. Another witness testified that at about 6 p. m. she looked into the living room window and saw no sign of any fire. There was also evidence that the fire probably originated in the den and not in the living room. The outside fire was from 18 to 22 feet from the carport, which was not burned, and 72 feet from the den where the fire apparently originated. The weather was wet and foggy and there were puddles between the site of the outside fire and the house. A wind up to 8 miles per hour was blowing in a northwesterly direction, not from the site of the outside fire toward the house.

[5, 6] Under these facts the jury were entitled to find: 1. that no fire was left burning inside the house, and 2 that the few live coals left in the yard 72 feet from the apparent point of origin of the fire did not cause the fire in the house. Where the evidence will reasonably support the inferences of the jury an appellate court cannot interfere. Powell v. Pacific Electric Railway Co., 35 Cal.2d 40, 216 P.2d 448; Moran v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 32 Cal.2d 301, 308, 196 P.2d 20; Crawford v. Southern Pacific Co., 3 Cal.2d 427, 429, 45 P.2d 183; 2 Cal.Jur. 934. It follows that the judgment in favor of Knight and his employees on the complaint of the Graddons must be affirmed.

There was no express verdict finding on the issue between the interveners and Knight and his employees on the interveners' complaint in intervention against Knight and employees charging their tort liability for the burning of the building. The interveners argue that this issue has not been adjudicated and that they are accordingly entitled to have it retried. Irelan-Yuba, etc., Min. Co. v. Pacific G. & E., 18 Cal.2d 557, 570–571, 116 P.2d 611; Portman v. Keegan, 31 Cal.App.2d 30, 34, 87 P.2d 400.

On the oral argument and by letter dated July 13, 1950 counsel for Knight and his employees have (quoting from the letter) "conceded the Bank to be entitled to a new trial of those particular issues." On this point we need therefore say nothing further.

[7] The money judgments in favor of the Graddons and Knight against the Bank are reversed. The parties should be allowed to amend their pleadings if they see fit in the light of this opinion. The issues presented by the complaint in intervention against Knight and his employees should be retried. In all other respects the judgments are affirmed. Interveners are entitled to costs on their appeal against the Graddons and Knight. Knight and employees are entitled to costs against the Graddons on the Graddons' appeal. See Baldie v. Bank of America, 97 Cal.App.2d 614, 217 P.2d 1011.

Civ. 17928.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Sept. 25, 1950.

Hearing Denied Nov. 20, 1950.

Tad Travers brought action against Harry R. Sime and others, claiming a half interest in a judgment obtained by defendant Sime. Plaintiff obtained temporary injunction restraining defendants from collecting or attempting to collect more than one-half of the proceeds of the judgment obtained by defendant Sime and defendants appealed from the order of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Alfred E. Paonessa, J., granting the injunction. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that a temporary injunction restraining the use of any sum in excess of that which plaintiff would probably recover if successful in the main action was erroneous.

Order reversed with directions.

Joint adventures ⇐5(2)

Complaint stating that plaintiff and defendant were joint adventurers in transactions culminating in defendant's obtaining judgment in another action, that cause of action was prosecuted by defendant for joint benefit of plaintiff and defendant, stated cause of action, and granting of temporary injunctive relief to prevent defendant from disposing of plaintiff's alleged share of proceeds was proper.

2. Appeal and error ⇐1024(3)

On appeal from order granting temporary injunction in action to establish one-half interest in judgment, where complaint stated cause of action, appellate court would not weigh conflicting evidence before trial court.

3. Injunction ⇐137(1)

Complaint alleging one-half interest in proceeds of judgment obtained by defendant as joint adventurer, but not attacking contingent fee arrangement with attorneys who prosecuted action, stated no ground for temporary injunctive relief against attorneys.

In action to establish one-half interest in proceeds of judgment obtained by alleged joint adventurer, temporary injunction restraining use of any sum in excess of that which plaintiff would probably recover if successful, was erroneous.

George Acret, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Ralph W. Swagler, Burbank, for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Harry R. Sime recovered judgment against certain individuals which was affirmed on appeal. Sime v. Malouf, 95 Cal. App.2d 82, 212 P.2d 946. When the judgment debtors were ready to pay the judgment it amounted to about $88,000. The present action was filed by Tad Travers, claiming a half interest in the judgment, and an order was issued against Sime and the other defendants herein restraining them temporarily from collecting more than one-half of the judgment. The judgment debtors paid one-half of the judgment to defendant Pyle, as assignee of Sime, and under order of the superior court in Sime v. Malouf, supra, pursuant to a written agreement with the present defendants, deposited the remainder, amounting to $44,315.15 with the county clerk, to be held subject to further order of the court in said action. The judgment was thereupon satisfied in full and the sum deposited still remains in the custody of the court. Thereafter upon the hearing of the order to show cause a temporary injunction was issued restraining the defendants from collecting or attempting to collect any of the money on deposit with the county clerk until the final determination of the present action. Defendants appeal from this order.

The complaint of Travers alleges that he and Sime were joint adventurers in the transactions which culminated in Sime's obtaining the judgment above mentioned, and that the cause of action was prosecuted by Sime for the joint benefit of himself and Travers. A history of the factual background of that litigation will be found in our opinion above cited, to which reference is hereby made.

The Travers' complaint alleges, and defendants admit, that the judgment was assigned by Harry S. Sime to E. C. Pyle, who assigned one-half thereof to Sime's wife, Iona H. Sime, and one-fourth to George Acret. Plaintiff also alleges that the assignment to Mrs. Sime was without consideration and in fraud of creditors, which the defendants deny. It is not disputed that E. C. Pyle and George Acret each acquired one-fourth interest in the judgment in consideration of legal services rendered in the case of Sime v. Malouf. Of the sum of $44,315.15 that was paid to Pyle, $1,584.57 was paid to Sime as one-half of his costs in the former case, $21,365.24 was paid to Acret and $21,365.24 was retained by Pyle.

[1,2] Upon the hearing of the order to show cause defenses to Travers' action and his application for an injunction were presented by means of answers and affidavits. It was denied that any joint venture was ever undertaken by Travers and Sime. The affidavits of defendants furnished evidence as to the relationship of the parties and the conduct of Sime which the defendants contended in the trial court, and contend here, is sufficient to disprove and dissipate the claims of Travers to any interest in the judgment or the money on deposit. It is insisted on this appeal that the court should have decided on the evidence before it that Travers' claims are groundless and that the defendants alone are entitled to receive the money in question. This contention cannot prevail. Travers' complaint states a cause of action, and although his allegations were denied, it will require a trial of the action to determine the factual issues raised by the pleadings. Upon the record before us it does not appear as a matter of law that the action is without merit and we cannot, of course, undertake to weigh the conflicting evidence that was before the trial court. We may add, however, that both plaintiff and defendants are in error in their attempts to find something in our opinion in Sime v. Malouf which would have a bearing upon the merits of the present action. There is nothing in that opinion which remotely suggests that Travers has or has not a meritorious claim to an interest in the recovery.

[3] Upon the uncontroverted evidence produced at the hearing, no ground existed for an injunction against defendants Pyle and Acret. Defendants' affidavits stated that Pyle and Acret conducted the former litigation pursuant to an agreement that they would be paid 50 per cent of the net recovery. It appeared without question that each of them had been paid the sum of $21,365.24 and these sums with the sum of $1,584.67 paid to Sime in partial reimbursement of expenses amount to the one-half of the judgment that has heretofore been paid. Although these facts were known to plaintiff before he filed his amended complaint no cause of action was stated therein against defendants Pyle and Acret for the recovery of a judgment against them for any part of the sums they have received. Nor was any attack made upon the validity of the contingent fee agreement or its effectiveness to bind Travers as a joint adventurer, if he was such.

[4] The injunction, as we have seen, has the effect of impounding the entire sum of $44,315.15, and this in view of the undisputed fact that Travers' interest in the fund, if it should be established, would be chargeable with his proportionate share of the costs and expenses, including reasonable attorneys' fees, paid or incurred in the prosecution of the case of Sime v. Malouf. It was shown in defendants' affidavits, and not denied, that Sime's court expenses amounted to $3,169.35, that the trial of the action in the superior court extended over a period of eight months, that it was held upon 151 trial days, and that the services of the attorneys extended over a period of approximately five years in which they devoted some 12 months' service to the Malouf litigation. The good faith of the parties in entering into the contingent fee arrangement was not questioned in the complaint or affidavits of Travers. It would be manifestly unjust, in any event, to deprive defendants Sime in the present action, even temporarily, of the use of any sum in excess of that which Travers would probably recover if he should be successful. This sum would not exceed what might be found to be Travers' interest in the net recovery, that is to say, the sum remaining after deducting from that share of the money a proportionate share of the costs, expenses and attorneys' fees of the litigation in which the judgment was recovered.

The order was erroneous for the reasons stated, and should be reversed for further proceedings in the trial court.

There was no showing that any of the defendants is insolvent. The question will arise in the course of further proceedings whether there is necessity for an injunction on the ground of insolvency, or upon the ground that the identity of the fund should be preserved as the property of a joint venture. Another question will be whether the court would be authorized to treat the amount on deposit as a trust fund for the purpose of retaining control of a sufficient amount to satisfy any judgment in favor of plaintiff, if he should prevail. See Code Civ.Proc. sec. 572. The briefs do not discuss these questions and we express no opinion on them.

The order is reversed for further proceedings not inconsistent with the views we have expressed.

Cr. 822.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District. California.

Sept. 29, 1950.

Ted Johnson was convicted in the Superior Court of Tulare County, Glenn L. Moran, J., of grand theft on two counts, and from the judgment and from an order denying a motion for new trial, he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, Acting P. J., held that evidence sustained conviction, that charge was not reversibly erroneous, that allegedly improper arguments of district attorney were not prejudicially erroneous, and that prosecution sufficiently established that theft occurred in the County of Tulare.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Criminal law ⇐1144(13)

District Court of Appeal was required to assume in favor of verdict of guilty the existence of every fact which the jury could reasonably have deduced from the evidence and then to determine whether such facts were sufficient to support the verdict.

2. Criminal law ⇐742(1)

In prosecution for grand theft, it was for jury to determine question of veracity of testimony of defendant and his witnesses.

3. Larceny ⇐65

Evidence, which was mainly circumstantial, was sufficient to sustain grand theft convictions of one charged with taking a trailer load of cotton and with taking a cotton trailer.

In grand theft prosecution, evidence justified giving of instruction pertaining to aiding and abetting. Pen. Code, §§ 31, 32.

5. Criminal law ⇐772(6)

Where evidence in grand theft prosecution was undisputed that some one stole personalty of the complaining witness, instruction that the fact that others have violated the law with impunity is no defense, was not erroneous.

An instruction in a criminal prosecution must be viewed as a whole.

7. Larceny ⇐77(2)

Where there was sufficient circumstantial evidence in grand theft prosecution to show that stolen cotton was on ranch of defendant and was apparently under his dominion and control, and that the cotton was subsequently loaded by defendant and taken by another to gin mill by authority of defendant to be ginned for him, it was proper to instruct that possession of stolen property is a circumstance to be considered in connection with other evidence in determining question of innocence or guilt.

8. Criminal law ⇐810

In grand theft prosecution, instruction that it was not necessary that there should exist an intent to violate the law or to do a wrong because criminal intent exists whenever a person does that which the law declares to be a crime, was not in conflict with instruction that in every crime there must exist a union of act and intent.

In absence of a request for an instruction to a certain effect, defendant was in no position on appeal to complain for the first time because of the failure to give such an instruction.

10. Criminal law ⇐814(1, 19)

Where defendant in grand theft prosecution was not charged with being an accessory after the fact nor with crime of receiving stolen property, trial court had no duty to submit to the jury forms of verdict as to such offenses. Pen. Code, §§ 971, 972.

11. Criminal law ⇐1171(3)

Statement of district attorney in argument that the sheriff's office and the district attorney's office seemed to think that defendant was guilty, was not prejudicial error, where such particular statement was not objected to or assigned as error, and where such statement, when examined in relation to entire argument, showed that district attorney was basing his remarks on an analysis of the evidence in the case.

Statement of district attorney in argument that a number of character witnesses had testified for defendant, but that government official, who had recently been much in the news, had prominent character witnesses but was nevertheless convicted, and that certain labor leader who had been much in the news, had brought in a priest as a character witness, but that he had still been found guilty, was not prejudicial error, in absence of an objection to the argument.

Where court in grand theft prosecution instructed jury that neither prosecution nor defense was required to call as witnesses all persons shown to be present at any of the events involved in the evidence or who might appear to have some knowledge of the matters in question in the trial, and counsel for defendant explained to jury that reason for his failure to call defendant's father as a witness was because he did not wish to embarrass defendant's father or jury by reason of some facial impediment which the defendant's father possessed, and defendant's counsel made no assignment of misconduct in relation to argument of district attorney with reference to failure to call defendant's father as a witness and did not ask the court to admonish the jury in respect thereto, such argument of the district attorney was not reversible error.

Where court in grand theft prosecution instructed jury to effect that if jury was convinced, beyond a reasonable doubt, that defendant, either actively and personally committed offense charged or aided "and" abetted any other person or persons to commit the offense, then it must find defendant guilty, and that all persons concerned in the commission of a felony, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense or aid "and" abet in its commission, though not present, shall be tried as principals, jury was sufficiently informed that before it could convict defendant as one who aided and abetted another in commission of offense charged, it was necessary to prove that he not only aided in its commission but that he did so with a guilty knowledge of the wrongful purpose of the perpetrator with an unlawful intent. Pen. Code, §§ 31, 32, 971, 972.

15. Criminal law ⇐564(5)

In grand theft prosecution in the County of Tulare, evidence that stolen property was located at the Village of Yettem was sufficient to establish that the theft occurred in the county of Tulare, since court would take judicial knowledge of the fact that Yettem is in the county of Tulare.

Morris B. Chain, Bakersfield, Bradley & Bradley, Visalia, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Dan Kaufmann, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Acting Presiding Justice.

It is charged in an information containing four counts, first, that on December 12, 1949, defendant unlawfully committed the crime of grand theft by voluntarily taking a trailer load of cotton belonging to one W. H. Richards; second, that he unlawfully took a four-wheel cotton trailer belonging to Kenneth Richards, without his consent; and the third and fourth counts charged respectively that on November 8, 1949, defendant unlawfully took a trailer load of cotton and also a trailer from one Robert Hamilton.

A trial by jury resulted in a conviction on the first two counts and a verdict of not guilty on a third and fourth count. Defendant appealed from the judgment pronounced. He first challenges the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict.

On December 12, the prosecuting witness, Richards, a cotton raiser who resided in Dinuba, was picking cotton by machine at a ranch which was located about a mile south and a little west of the ranch owned by defendant at Yettem. He left his field about 6 o'clock in the evening, after dark, and at the time of his departure there were three trailer loads of cotton in his field. When he returned the next morning about 9 o'clock, he discovered that one of the trailers was gone. It had contained a normal load of cotton (about 7,600 pounds or about 7 bales, approximately, valued at $900). The cotton was owned by Richards, and the missing trailer was owned by a cousin of his. Richards summoned the sheriff. At the location where the trailer had been left the previous evening they found tire tracks with 7 grooves in a saw-tooth pattern. Similar tracks were noted the same day at the same place by others. One rear tire of the missing trailer had a diamond-type tread with a smooth place in the center. The other rear tire had a "W" type of tread with a smooth place in the center. The tread marks of these rear tires appeared at the scene where the trailer had been loaded the previous evening. These tire tracks indicated that the vehicle, bearing the 7-groove saw-tooth tread tires, had backed up to the trailer. It was hitched onto it and then hauled from the Richards property to the near-by county oiled road. Defendant's ranch adjoined that of Richards. To the east of defendant's home was a road running in a north and south direction and parallel to defendant's fields, which fields were divided into parcels by a ditch. Eighty acres of the defendant's land was denominated the "south 80 acres". The north 15 acres adjoined defendant's house. A witness Hamilton, who had previously lost a trailer load of cotton, testified that when he learned of the loss by the witness Richards, he chartered an airplane and flew over the area looking for the abandoned trailer and a new cotton stock pile, because he knew stock-piling was not necessary at that time of the year because the gin was "ginned up" within 24 hours. He testified that he was unable to locate the type of trailer described by Richards but he criss-crossed over the Yettem area to cover the Johnson families' ranches; that he located what he thought was an abandoned trailer and what looked like an old stock pile near it; that after further search he noticed, on the ranch of defendant Ted Johnson, a full cotton trailer in front of his house and an empty trailer on the road in front of it; that particularly in the 80-acre field, he noticed in a cleared area, evidence of recent stock piling; that it stood out very plainly from the air as though it was painted white because the other stock piles were a dull grey due to rains which occurred about December 7; that he landed at the airport and reported his findings to the deputy sheriff. The following day he accompanied the deputy sheriffs, constable, and other interested parties to the ranch operated by defendant. The Richards trailer was found abandoned about 10 miles north of Yettem on the paved highway. It had mud on the tires and under the bed of the trailer. The racks were laid on top and tied down. One of them appeared to have been pried off with a bar or an automobile jack, which cut into the timbers and caused them to splinter and shatter and break off some of the wood. The tires from this trailer were offered in evidence. Sketches, photographs and plaster casts of tire tracks found not only upon the Richards property but upon the property owned by defendant, were made and received in evidence. One inverted "W" track was found between the defendant's house and the canal where the tire had passed through soft mud. In another place was found the indentation of the "diamond" marked tread similar to one of the tires received in evidence. A similar mark was found in the cleared area on the south 80 acres. Tractor tire marks apparently had pretty well obliterated all tracks surrounding that area. This cleared area gave evidence of the fact that a short time previous to the officers' visit to defendant's ranch a trailer load of cotton had been dumped from the Richards trailer onto the ground and had been re-loaded onto another trailer and hauled to the gin. A fresh tire mark, similar to those received in evidence, was found under the remains of the cotton stack left upon the ground. One of the officers discovered pieces of wood missing from the sideboards of the Richards trailer at that spot. Samples of the wood particles were sent to the State Division of Criminal Identification and Investigation for examination. Soil samples were also taken from the mud on the tires and body of the trailer as well as those of Tom Johnson's truck. This truck was owned by defendant's father, and tire marks similar to the tires on that truck were found on the Richards' ranch as well as on defendant's ranch, particularly at the cleared spot indicated on the south 80 acres. The result of this examination showed that the wood particles found on defendant's ranch and those on the Richards trailer were identical and that these parts fitted together perfectly. The result of the soil analysis indicated that the mud on the trailer and the Johnson truck were similar and that the soil samples taken from the Richards ranch and that taken from the mud on the truck and trailer were dissimilar.

Defendant's brother, who testified on behalf of the people, stated that on December 13, he worked for his brother on his brother's ranch; that he helped him load the cotton off the ground into a trailer from the cleared area; that his other brother Unica, and Paskell January also helped; that they started to load it with hay forks but later defendant went home and brought back the picking machine and loaded it with that; that one trailer and a part of another were thus loaded; that the trailer was then hauled out of the field with a tractor and left in front of defendant's house; that in the evening of the day previous to the loading, defendant Johnson told him that he wanted him to help him load cotton the next day. The loaded trailer, containing about 6,006 pounds, was hauled to the gin by defendant's father, Tom Johnson. The other trailer contained about 3½ bales of cotton, which defendant took to the gin. An investigation of the 80 acres on defendant's south field showed that only 27 rows had been picked between the time of the rain and the time when the examination was made. Estimates of the yield from these 27 rows varied from a bale and a half suggested by one witness, to 3½ bales suggested by a defense witness, and all cotton picked in that area had been previously taken to the gin. Records of the gin were received in evidence and showed that defendant delivered 4,570 pounds or 3 bales on December 12, 9,580 pounds or 7 bales on December 13, and on the 27th of December 4 bales; January 5, 1950, 4 bales; January 7, 3 bales; and January 9, 3 bales. The manager of the gin where the defendant took his cotton testified that he had previously estimated defendant's total yield as 80 bales and that he had, up to that time, received 97 bales. However, he did testify that his estimate was only an estimate and there could possibly be this much variance. There was evidence that about December 11, defendant returned a cotton loader, of which he was a part owner, to his neighbor, stating that he was through with it. Defendant also admitted that he was working in this field in the late evening of December 12 and that he dug holes in the ground for the purpose of setting a trailer in them to make it easier to load. Defendant also admitted having a conversation with Richards on the evening of December 13. Although he told Richards nothing about it, he stated he had previously heard of the theft of the cotton.

There is evidence that the officers made search of the automobiles and trucks in the vicinity of Yettem for tires similar to those which were on the Johnson truck and were unable to find any of that particular type and marking. One of the officers at the gin, after hearing of the theft, also made investigation of trucks, over a period of time, coming into the gin for unloading purposes, and found no trucks having tires of this particular design.

Defendant's answer to the charge was that after working late in the field that evening, he went home, had dinner, went to a near-by grocery store with his wife, and then visited a neighbor until about 11 p. m.; that at that time he and his wife returned home and retired. He denied leaving the house that night. He also denied taking the trailer or the cotton or having any part in such taking. He produced several corroborating alibi witnesses as well as a group of character witnesses who testified as to his general reputation in the community. He also produced the testimony of his brothers endeavoring to corroborate his story in reference to his cotton picking activities for the previous week, which varied somewhat from the testimony produced by the people's witnesses. There was evidence that automobile tire tracks similar to the tires on Tom Johnson's truck, were found on the property of Mr. Hamilton at the time he lost his cotton trailer and load of cotton.

The force of defendant's argument is that since the prosecution did not produce any direct evidence to connect him with the commission of the alleged offenses; that since no one saw him at or in the vicinity of the cotton that was supposedly stolen; and that since no one saw him in possession of the trailer that was taken, the prosecution failed to produce sufficient evidence upon which to convict him; that since defendant established that he did not deliver cotton to the gin in any unusual quantity, that since he showed that he was picking cotton on his own premises at the time the theft occurred, and that he had nothing whatever to do with the cotton or trailer of the complaining witnesses, and since all of the people's testimony was "buttressed" by the testimony of numerous character witnesses who testified to the good character of defendant, and since the prosecution failed to rebut their testimony, the defendant more than overcame any indication of guilt on his part that may have been established by the circumstances presented, citing People v. Flores, 58 Cal.App. 2d 764, 137 P.2d 767; and State v. Henry, 66 Idaho 60, 154 P.2d 184.

[1] The evidence is mainly circumstantial and must be examined in the light of the well established rules on appeal. We must assume in favor of the verdict the existence of every fact which the jury could reasonably have deduced from the evidence and then determine whether such facts are sufficient to support the verdict. People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778.

[2, 3] The evidence clearly establishes that the complaining witness's trailer and load of cotton were stolen some time after dark on the evening of December 12, or the morning of December 13. Counsel for defendant concedes this fact. The evidence sufficiently establishes that it was Tom Johnson's truck that hauled the trailer and cotton onto the defendant's premises, and that the same trailer was unloaded there. Whether defendant Ted Johnson was actually driving the truck is not clearly determinable. There is evidence that defendant was, in fact, late that evening, working in the south 80 acres near the complaining witness's ranch and that he was the guiding hand in supervising the employment of persons for the purpose of loading stock piled cotton into a different trailer the following morning. The cotton so loaded was taken by defendant's father by means of the same truck, the following day, to the cotton gin, and the proceeds were credited to defendant. The jury was justified in believing that if defendant did not actually drive the truck from the complaining witness's premises that he did in fact aid and abet another or others in the commission of that offense. The finding of the several pieces of sideboard of the complaining witness's truck on defendant's property at the place indicated was strong evidence that the contents of the complaining witness's truck were removed to defendant's premises, and the circumstances surrounding the disposition of the cotton and the trailer thereafter point directly to the defendant Ted Johnson as having committed the offenses charged or aided and abetted in their commission. The jury was the one to determine the question of the veracity of the testimony of defendant and his witnesses, as opposed to the circumstances related and as to whether or not defendant had sufficiently established an alibi. People v. Ash, 88 Cal.App.2d 819, 826, 199 P.2d 711; People v. Egan, 77 Cal. App. 279, 281, 246 P. 337. The jury might well have believed that the defendant committed or aided and abetted in the commission of the crimes notwithstanding the testimony of the character witnesses. People v. French, 137 Cal. 218, 69 P. 1063.

[4] The next complaint pertains to the giving of certain claimed erroneous instructions pertaining to aiding and abetting. Instructions were given embodying Penal Code sections 31 and 32, as to who are principals and who are accessories, together with a general instruction to the effect that the fact that others "have violated the law with impunity is no defense and if you believe beyond a reasonable doubt that Ted Johnson and others who are not before the court took and carried away the personal property of * * *" W. H. Richards, or that they "drove and moved the trailer of Kenneth Richards, without the consent of the owner thereof, and with intent to deprive the owner thereof of the said vehicle, you must find the defendant, Ted Johnson, guilty as alleged * * *"

It is defendant's contention that the trial court should not have instructed the jury on aiding and abetting because there was no evidence to show he aided or abetted any one. There is no merit to this contention for the reasons heretofore expressed. People v. Latona, 2 Cal.2d 714, 726, 43 P.2d 260; People v. Burke, 18 Cal.App. 72, 104, 122 P. 435. The jury was fully instructed as to the quantum of evidence necessary to be established before defendant could be convicted.

[5, 6] It is claimed that one of the instructions which states that "The fact that others have violated the law" with impunity is no defense, is in effect a statement by the trial judge to the jury "as a fact, that someone has violated the law and has told the jury that as an undisputed fact there has been a theft of cotton and that someone other than defendant participated in that theft". The evidence is undisputed that some one did violate the law and did take and carry away the personal property of the complaining witness. Counsel for defendant, not only in his brief but in his argument before the jury, conceded this fact but denied that defendant Ted Johnson had any part in it. The remaining portion of that instruction clarifies the former portion of it. Under the facts established no error was committed. The instruction must be viewed as a whole. People v. Garnier, 95 Cal.App.2d 489, 213 P.2d 111; People v. Weatherford, 87 Cal.App.2d 275, 278, 196 P.2d 832.

[7] It is next claimed that the trial court committed error in instructing the jury in the language of Instruction No. 235 CALJIC, pp. 192-193, on the law pertaining to the possession of stolen property. The instruction told the jury that the mere possession of stolen property unexplained by the person having possession, is not sufficient to justify a conviction. However, it may be a circumstance to be considered in connection with other evidence in determining the question of innocence or guilt. Defendant's complaint of this instruction is that there is no evidence showing that the defendant ever had possession of the stolen property and therefore such an instruction should not have been given. Since it has been determined that there is sufficient circumstantial evidence to show that the stolen property was on defendant's ranch and was apparently under his dominion and control, and that the cotton was subsequently loaded by him and taken to the gin mill by his authority to be ginned for him, soon after the theft, this instruction was proper. People v. Taylor, 4 Cal.App.2d 214, 40 P.2d 870. This conclusion is not contrary to the holding in People v. Hurley, 60 Cal. 74, 44 Am.Rep. 55, cited by defendant.

[8] The next complaint is that since the standard instruction was given to the effect that it was not necessary that there should exist an intent to violate the law or to do a wrong because criminal intent exists whenever a person does that which the law declares to be a crime, such instruction is contrary to an instruction given to the effect that in every crime there must exist a union of act and intent, citing People v. Gherna, 80 Cal.App.2d 519, 524, 182 P.2d 331. We see no merit to this complaint. Defendant does not deny that the jury was instructed on the necessity of finding a specific intent in order to convict. This requirement was covered by several of the given instructions. Comparable instructions were given in People v. Raffington, 98 Cal.App.2d 455, 220 P.2d 967. A similar contention was there made. The court held that the instructions were proper.

[9] Defendant argues that a violation of section 499b of the Penal Code was an included offense under a charge of violation of Vehicle Code section 503, and that it was the duty of the trial judge, on his own motion, to have instructed the jury of this fact. No authority is cited in support of this argument. The issue before the jury was whether or not the defendant committed the offenses charged or participated therein, and on this issue the jury was fully instructed. In the absence of a request for an instruction to this effect, the defendant is not in any position to complain for the first time on appeal. People v. Ross, 89 Cal.App. 132, 139, 264 P. 314; People v. Owens, 79 Cal.App.2d 290, 300, 179 P.2d 401. Furthermore, under the evidence, it can scarcely be contended that the defendant took the trailer within the meaning of the so-called "joy-ride statute", Sec. 499b, Penal Code. See People v. Orona, 72 Cal.App.2d 478, 164 P.2d 769.

[10] Then follows the statement that prejudicial error was committed by the court in failing and refusing to submit to the jury verdicts on the offense of being an accessory after the fact, and on the offense of receiving stolen property, after having been instructed as to those offenses. The defendant was not charged with the crime of being an accessory after the fact nor was he charged with the crime of receiving stolen property and accordingly, not being an included offense within the charge, there was no duty upon the trial court to submit to the jury forms of verdict as to these offenses. Secs. 971 and 972, Penal Code; 7 Cal.Jur. p. 891, sec. 40; People v. Stakem, 40 Cal. 599; People v. Hawkins, 34 Cal. 181; Sec. 496, Penal Code. Furthermore, the instruction on the subject of accessory after the fact was given in connection with section 31, as well as sections 971 and 972 of the Penal Code, in defining who are the principals concerned in the commission of a crime and whether or not they directly committed the act constituting the offense or aided or abetted in its commission or, not being present, have advised or encouraged its commission. We find no instruction given by the court, and counsel for defendant has not called our attention to any instruction, in which the court defined the offense of receiving stolen property as denounced by Penal Code sec. 496, or which would in any wise indicate that the jury could find the defendant guilty of such an offense.

Prejudicial error is claimed by reason of the alleged misconduct of the district attorney in his argument to the jury. During the course of the argument the prosecutor stated that the mere filing of an information did not make the defendant guilty and that he is presumed to be innocent "but on the other hand, both the sheriff's office and the district attorney's office seem to have spent a lot of time on this case and they seem to think that they have a guilty man; and they seem to think the guilty man is Ted Johnson." Defendant cites 8 Cal.Jur. 268, sec. 329; People v. Edgar, 34 Cal.App. 459, 467, 167 P. 891; and People v. Cooper, 36 Cal.App.2d 6, 12, 96 P.2d 1012, wherein it is stated that the prosecutor should not attempt to argue to the jury as an individual rather than in his official capacity, and that he should not add the weight of his personal opinion to the evidence in support of his cause. The record shows that Tom Johnson, defendant's father, and owner of the truck here involved, was not called as a witness on behalf of the defendant to testify as to either his whereabouts or the whereabouts of the truck on this particular evening. In summing up the case, the district attorney remarked: "Incidentally, where is this Tom Johnson? We hear about Tom Johnson all during the trial, but Tom Johnson never took the stand in favor of his son. I wonder why not? * * * I wonder if it could be that Tom Johnson fears the very fate, Paskell January, impeachment * * *. Do you suppose Mr. Smee, in the investigating of this case, along with the deputy sheriffs, would not have taken a statement from Tom Johnson? * * * He is the owner of those tires. He has been in and out of this thing all the time * * *. Maybe Tom Johnson is so afraid of making a statement that he would incriminate himself * * *." It is claimed that the inflammatory and prejudicial nature of the above arguments is self-evident; that they are unfounded upon any testimony, and are remarks that are not based on any evidence in the case; that a comment on the failure of any certain witness to appear is prejudicial error, particularly where such witness was equally available to either party, citing People v. Frank, 129 Cal.App. 119, 125, 18 P.2d 719; and People v. Piazza, 84 Cal.App. 58, 83, 257 P. 592.

In discussing the production by the defendant of a goodly number of character witnesses, the prosecutor stated: "Alger Hiss had some character witnesses * * I think that the character witnesses that Alger Hiss put on were of considerable more prominence than those this defendant put on. Yes, sir, Hiss brought two United States Supreme Court Justices in to testify to his character, and as to his truth, * * * and that in itself didn't stop Alger Hiss from being convicted * * *. As a matter of fact, Harry Bridges was convicted by a jury recently. He brought in some character witnesses and I think he brought in a Catholic Priest as a character witness and that didn't stop the jury one bit. They still found him guilty. The mere fact that a number of people—and I certainly am not casting any aspersions on them at all, I am sure they are telling Ted Johnson's reputation up until now has been good. Neither am I saying that the Supreme Court Justices that appeared for Alger Hiss were in any way misstating the truth, because apparently in the past Alger Hiss did have a good reputation."

It is claimed that it was prejudicial misconduct on the part of the prosecuting attorney to refer to the Alger Hiss trial and the Harry Bridges trial in a repeated attempt to depreciate the force of the testimony of the defendant's character witnesses; that it was debatable whether the facts of these cases might have been matters of common knowledge and that the average layman might not even be aware that character witnesses were put on the stand in either of these cases. Counsel for defendant concedes that he did not object to nor did he move to strike the argument of Counsel to the jury pertaining to the matters set forth and did not ask the court to admonish the district attorney in reference thereto. He claims that this failure to object was not vital because the misconduct was apparent and sufficient to cause a possible miscarriage of justice, citing People v. Hadley, 84 Cal.App.2d 687, 692, 191 P.2d 517; People v. De Vries, 52 Cal.App. 705, 710, 199 P. 867; and People v. Gilliland, 39 Cal.App.2d 250, 264, 103 P.2d 179.

[11] As to the first claimed error regarding the expression of opinion that the sheriff's office and district attorney's office seemed to think that Ted Johnson was the guilty man, the defendant is segregating a small portion of the record from its context. When that portion is examined in relation to the entire argument it is clear that he was basing his remarks upon an analysis of the evidence in the case. It did not therefore constitute prejudicial error, particularly where such statement was not objected to nor assigned as error. People v. Owens, 11 Cal.App.2d 724, 54 P.2d 728. It does not appear from the statement that the jury could have been misled into accepting any substitute for evidence. In the Cooper case, relied upon by defendant, no objection was made to the argument, and the court affirmed the judgment of conviction. In the Edgar case, supra, strenuous objection was made and the judgment of conviction was reversed but the court pointed out that the misconduct of the district attorney in that case was objected to and the prosecutor continued such misconduct in spite of the warnings of the trial court. This charge cannot be laid at the door of the district attorney in the instant case.

[12] As to the prosecutor's reference to the Alger Hiss and Harry Bridges trials and as to the character witnesses appearing therein, it might be properly questioned whether all of the facts of those cases were of such notoriety that they became commonplace and within the wide range of discussion, illustration and augmentation of counsel, but it can hardly be said that the trials, some of the claimed facts and the results were not generally known or of common knowledge. The gist of this portion of the prosecution's argument was to illustrate that persons who are of good character, as shown by the best intention character witnesses, may still be found guilty if the evidence is present to show the commission by them of the crime charged. No objection was made to this illustration or discussion at the time and the court was not asked to admonish the jury or the prosecuting attorney in respect thereto. It is the general rule that in the argument of the district attorney before the jury, the range of discussion, illustration and argument is properly very wide, and matters of common knowledge and historical facts may be referred to and interwoven in such argument. People v. Burke, 18 Cal.App. 72, 122 P. 435. Under the circumstances related and in the absence of an objection to the argument, we conclude that the statement did not constitute prejudicial error. People v. Stembridge, 99 Cal.App. 2d 15, 221 P.2d 212; People v. Agnew, 16 Cal.2d 655, 107 P.2d 601; People v. DuBois, 16 Cal.App.2d 81, 87, 60 P.2d 190, and cases there cited.

[13] These same authorities would be cited and the same conclusion must be reached in reference to the prosecutor's statement in reference to the failure of Tom Johnson, father of defendant, to testify in defendant's behalf. It must be remembered that throughout the trial the prosecution was insisting that either defendant himself or some one other than defendant drove the truck and hauled away the trailer and its contents onto the defendant's premises and that defendant and his father later conveyed them to the cotton gin. It is quite apparent that neither the prosecution nor the defense was obliged to call Tom Johnson as his own witness. The court instructed the jury that neither the prosecution nor the defense was required to call as witnesses all persons who were shown to be present at any of the events involved in the evidence or who might appear to have some knowledge of the matters in question in the trial. It does appear unusual that the defendant, under the circumstances related, preferred not to call him as his witness. It might have been error for the district attorney to discuss unfavorably the failure of the accused to produce witnesses, and to make other insinuations resulting from such failure, when the witness was equally available to the state. People v. Harris, 80 Cal.App. 328, 251 P. 823; People v. Piazza, 84 Cal.App. 58, 257 P. 592. We do not conclude that it was prejudicial misconduct, particularly where counsel for defendant endeavored to explain to the jury the reason for his failure to call that witness and predicated it upon the fact that he did not care to embarrass the witness or the jury by reason of some facial impediment which the witness possessed, and where counsel made no assignment of misconduct in relation to the prosecutor's argument and did not ask the court to admonish the jury in respect thereto. Counsel for defendant actually undertook to answer the prosecutor's argument, indicating thereby that at the time, there was no thought in his mind that the prosecutor's remarks were not proper.

The reason for the rule requiring assignment of misconduct and a request that the jury be instructed to disregard it is that the trial court must be given the opportunity to obviate the harmful results, if any, by appropriate instructions to the jury. Furthermore, the trial judge had an opportunity to consider the alleged misconduct on the motion for new trial and his rejection of the contention indicates the lack of prejudice to the defendant. People v. Macias, 77 Cal.App.2d 71, 89, 174 P.2d 895; People v. Sarazzawaski, 27 Cal.2d 7, 15, 161 P.2d 934.

Defendant cites the case of People v. Ponce, 96 Cal.App.2d 327, 215 P.2d 75, for the proposition that it was error for the trial judge to fail to define the words "aid and abet" to a greater extent than defined by the proffered instructions.

The court instructed the jury in the exact language of sections 31 and 32 of the Penal Code to the effect that if it was convinced, beyond a reasonable doubt, that defendant, either actively and personally committed the offense charged or aided and abetted any other person or persons to commit that offense, then it must find the defendant guilty. In another instruction embodying the provisions of sections 971 and 972 of the Penal Code, the jury was told that all persons concerned in the commission of a felony, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense or aid and abet in its commission, though not present, shall be tried as principals. This was followed with an instruction that in every crime there must exist a union of act and intent, and that criminal intent exists wherever a person intentionally does that which the law declares to be a crime.

Under the instructions given then, the jury was, in effect, told that if defendant aided and abetted in the commission of the crime, before he could be found guilty of such crime, there must exist a union of act and intent to commit such crime.

[14] People v. Ponce, 96 Cal.App.2d 327, 215 P.2d 75, 77, relied upon by defendant, was a case construing secs. 209 and 210 of the Penal Code, which use the term "aids or abets". It properly held that the instruction should have been "aid and abet", notwithstanding the language of the sections. Defendant's counsel seeks some comfort in the dicta set out in the opinion pertaining to the necessity of giving a further instruction, on the court's own motion, defining the term "aid and abet". The case there cited as authority for this statement is People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 486, 55 P. 581, 68 Am.St.Rep. 50. That case does not support the dicta. It clearly holds that it would be error to use the term "aids or abets" for the reasons stated but if the court had used the term "aid and abet", the use of these words in the conjunctive included not only aiding in the commission of the crime but doing it with the "knowledge of the wrongful purpose of the perpetrator". To the same effect is People v. Wong Hing, 176 Cal. 699, 169 P. 357, 359, criticized in People v. Ponce, supra. There the Supreme Court again held that "The term 'aiding and abetting' are commonplace words, the meaning of which the jurors must be deemed to have understood; hence, and especially in the absence of a request therefor, the court was not called upon of its own motion to define them." See, also, 7 Cal. Jur. 889, sec. 39. Webster's New International Dictionary, 1929, defines "abet" "* * * 2. To instigate, encourage, support, or uphold, as by aid or countenance; —now chiefly in a bad sense, and distinguished from aid as implying a guilty knowledge and wrong intent; as, to abet a crime; to abet an insurrection." See, also, Vol. 1 Words & Phrases Permanent Edition, Perm. Ed., p. 70. We conclude that the jury was sufficiently informed by the instructions given that before it could convict the defendant as one who aided and abetted another in the commission of the offense charged, it was necessary to prove that he not only aided in its commission but did so with a guilty knowledge of the wrongful purpose of the perpetrator with an unlawful intent.

[15] Next, counsel for appellant contends that the prosecution failed to show that the theft occurred in the County of Tulare. The charge is that it occurred in that county and the evidence shows that the complaining witness' property was at the village of Yettem. No contention was made of this point during the trial. The court will take judicial knowledge of the fact that Yettem is in Tulare County. All of the evidence clearly indicates that the offense occurred in that county.

Finally, it is claimed that the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to grant a new trial. The arguments made under this contention are but restatements of the arguments made on the appeal from the judgment. The jury's verdict was supported by the evidence. The verdict was reached under proper instructions. Defendant was accorded a full and fair trial, and no prejudicial error resulted.

Civ. A. 7417.

Superior Court, Appellate Department, Los Angeles County, California.

Sept. 15, 1950.

Action by Lyle V. Finley and another against Walter Lee Winkler, for damages arising out of an automobile collision, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint. The Municipal Court of City of Pasadena, William E. Fox, J., entered a judgment that neither plaintiffs nor defendant recover judgment for damages and plaintiffs appealed. Some time after the accident in question and after filing of the complaint but before trial, plaintiffs Finley and Ruth Hershey were married. The Appellate Department of the Superior Court, County of Los Angeles, Stephens, J., held that the negligence of a husband is not imputable to the wife as to a cause of action existing in favor of wife prior to marriage.

Judgment affirmed in part and reversed in part with directions.

1. Appeal and error ⇐717

The Appellate Department of the Superior Court could consider the written opinion of trial judge to determine process by which judgment was reached or basis upon which trial court acted.

2. Property ⇐5½

The right to recover damages for personal injuries, as well as money recovered as damages, is property, and may be regarded as a chose in action. Civ. Code, §§ 14, subds. 1, 3, 654, 655, 953, 1427, 1458.

3. Husband and wife ⇐248½

A chose in action accruing to a wife before her marriage is wife's separate property. Civ.Code, §§ 157, 162.

4. Negligence ⇐89(2)

Negligence of a husband is not imputable to the wife as to a cause of action existing in favor of wife prior to marriage.

5. Automobiles ⇐244(2, 41)

Evidence sustained finding of trial court that both plaintiff driver and defendant motorist were guilty of negligence in an automobile collision.

Forgy, Reinhaus & Forgy, and Mark A. Soden, all of Santa Ana, for appellants.

John H. Poole, Pasadena, for respondent.

STEPHENS, Judge.

Plaintiff Lyle Finley was the driver and plaintiff Ruth Hershey was a passenger in an automobile which collided with another car driven by defendant. Plaintiffs brought this action alleging negligence on the part of defendant, and the latter answered alleging contributory negligence on the part of driver Finley, and also filed a cross-complaint. The case was tried by the court without a jury, findings were waived, and judgment was that neither plaintiffs nor defendant recover judgment for damages. Plaintiffs appeal. Sometime after the accident and after filing of the complaint, but before trial, plaintiffs Finley and Hershey intermarried.

It appears from the settled statement that after trial and submission, the following "opinion" was rendered by the trial judge on November 22, 1949:

"The Court finds from all the circumstances and from the evidence given at the trial of this case, that the operators of both vehicles were each guilty of negligence which contributed to the happening of the accident in question.

"The plaintiff Ruth Hershey, now being the wife of the plaintiff Lyle V. Finley, his negligence is imputed to her, which also bars her recovery.

"The judgment will therefore be: That the plaintiffs will take nothing by reason of their complaint on file herein and that defendant will take nothing by reason of his cross-complaint on file herein. Neither party to recover their costs of Court. See 2 Cal.Jur.Supp. 610."

Two problems are presented upon this appeal: (1) may this "opinion" of the trial court be considered by us for the purpose of discovering the process by which the trial judge arrived at his conclusions and, (2) the cause of action having accrued in favor of Ruth Hershey, a single woman, would any award of damages therefor made to her after her marriage be community property and consequently be defeated by reason of the contributory negligence of her then husband?

[1] Upon the first point, we have concluded that in such a situation as that herein presented the rule that it will be presumed by a reviewing court that the trier of facts made all determinations of fact and that all findings should be implied which are necessary to support the judgment or order and which would find support in the evidence has now been relaxed at least to the extent that we may now consider the written opinion of the trial judge to determine the process by which judgment was reached or the basis upon which the court acted. This was clearly decided by the Supreme Court in Union Sugar Co. v. Hollister Estate Co.,

As the opinion of the trial judge states that "The Court finds from all the circumstances and from the evidence given at the trial of this case, that the operators of both vehicles were each guilty of negligence which contributed to the happening of the accident in question"; and "The plaintiff Ruth Hershey, now being the wife of the plaintiff Lyle V. Finley, his negligence is imputed to her, which also bars her recovery," we are now brought to the second problem.

[2] A reading of the following several Civil Code sections bearing upon the subject discloses beyond question that the cause of action in favor of plaintiff Ruth Hershey was property: Section 14, Civil Code, provides that "1. The word 'property' includes property real and personal. * * * 3. The words 'personal property' include money, goods, chattels, things in action, and evidences of debt"; section 953, "A thing in action is a right to recover money or other personal property by a judicial proceeding"; section 654, "The ownership of a thing is the right of one or more persons to possess and use it to the exclusion of others. In this code, the thing of which there may be ownership is called property"; section 655, "There may be ownership of * * * all obligations * * *"; section 1427, "An obligation is a legal duty, by which a person is bound to do or not to do a certain thing"; and section 1458, "A right arising out of an obligation is the property of the person to whom it is due * * *." In Scott v. McPheeters, 1939, 33 Cal.App.2d 629, 632, 92 P.2d 678, 680, 93 P.2d 562, the court quotes this broad definition of property from 50 Corpus Juris, page 736, section 7, " 'Generally, the subjects of property comprise all valuable rights or interest protected by law. * * * In the broad sense of the term, 'property' includes * * * choses in action. * * * In modern legal systems, property includes practically all valuable rights. The term is indicative and descriptive of every possible interest which a person can have, extends to every species of valuable right or interest, and comprises a vast variety of rights. The right to be protected in a person's privileges belonging to him as an individual or secured to him as a member of the commonwealth is property, as is any valuable interest in or to any object of value that a person may lawfully acquire or hold.' " To this the Court adds: "That definition certainly includes the right to compensation for personal injuries wrongfully inflicted by the wilful or negligent acts of another person." See also Hunt v. Authier, 1946, 28 Cal.2d 288, at page 296, 169 P.2d 913, 171 A.L.R. 1379, where the above case is quoted for the same definition, and Ponsonby v. Sacramento Suburban Fruit Lands Co., 1930, 210 Cal. 229, 232, 291 P. 167, for a similarly broad definition. See also Mortimer v. Young, 1942, 53 Cal.App.2d 317, at page 321, 127 P.2d 950, 952, where it is said that, "A cause of action for tort is, as held in the case last cited, [Everts v. Will S. Fawcett Co., 1937, 24 Cal.App.2d 213, 74 P.2d 815] a 'thing in action.' It is therefore within the provision of section 691 of the Code of Civil Procedure for 'selling the things in action' of the judgment debtor on execution." In the early case of McFadden v. Santa Ana etc., 1891, 87 Cal. 464, at page 467, 25 P. 681, 682, 11 L.R.A. 252, it is said: "The right to recover damages for a personal injury, as well as the money recovered as damages, is property, and may be regarded as a chose in action".

As the cause of action was her property before she was married, it continued to be her separate property after marriage. The fact that any recovery of damages to which she may be entitled upon such cause of action occurs after the marriage does not in any way affect her property right therein any more than would the recovery after marriage upon a promissory note (a chose in action) which she owned before; or the changing of previously owned real property into money after marriage. We might well rest our decision upon the case of Morrissey v. Kirkelie, 1935, 5 Cal.App.2d 183, 42 P.2d 361, which is on all fours with ours; in that case an engaged couple, while returning from the courthouse where they filed their notice of intention to wed, met with the accident which resulted in that action, and the same contention now presented was made upon the trial. The court disposed of the contention as follows, 5 Cal.App.2d at page 184, 42 P.2d at page 361: "The further point is urged that the negligence of the driver is imputable to plaintiff because they were husband and wife at the time of trial. Plaintiff's recovery is not community property, since her rights thereto accrued before marriage. The rule that the negligence of a husband is imputable to his wife does not apply here."

There would be no occasion for further prolonging this opinion were it not for the discussion in the more recent case of Franklin v. Franklin, 1945, 67 Cal.App.2d 717, 155 P.2d 637. In that case an interlocutory decree of divorce had been entered, awarding certain property to the wife, and before the final decree was granted the defendant husband suffered injuries for which he brought suit for damages. Upon motion of the wife, the court, in the final decree, awarded her a half interest in defendant's cause of action for damages. In reversing this portion of the decree, the District Court discussed the awkward and impractical situation which would result from such undivided interests in a cause of action and said, 67 Cal.App.2d at page 727, 155 P.2d at page 642: "The limitations upon the right to transfer such a cause of action, or an interest in it, are well illustrated by the rule, which is supported by the great weight of authority, that it is not capable of transfer for the benefit of creditors." The decision then goes on to say, 67 Cal. App.2d at page 727, 155 P.2d at page 642: "The powers of the court were limited to making a division of the community property, and the cause of action was something that could not be partitioned, directly or indirectly, before it had been reduced to judgment. Only then or in the event of a settlement could it be said that defendant had acquired 'property' which was subject to the community property laws." In view of the preceding statement, 67 Cal.App.2d at pages 722, 723, 155 P.2d at page 640, that "It is the ownership of the recovery, and not the mere right to sue, that is controlling", the decision seems to imply that in some manner the ownership of the recovery ceases to be the same as the ownership of the right of action. If this is its purport, we most respectfully disagree; and we are strengthened in this view by the following comment of the Supreme Court in Zaragosa v. Craven, 1949, 33 Cal.2d 315, at page 320, 202 P.2d 73, at page 76, 6 A.L.R.2d

461: "Hence, it must be considered as the present law of this state that the cause of action for personal injuries suffered by either spouse during marriage, to whatever extent such cause of action may constitute property (see 67 Cal.App.2d page 725, 155 P.2d 637, Franklin v. Franklin, supra), as well as any recovery therefore, constitutes community property—at least in the absence of agreement otherwise between the spouses. Any contrary implications which may be derived from the language of the Franklin case are disapproved." (Emphasis added.)

[4] By a coincidence, the distinguished author of the Franklin decision is also the author of the decision in Morrissey v. Kirkelie, 5 Cal.App.2d 183, 42 P.2d 361, supra. As the latter holds directly that the negligence of the husband is not imputable to the wife as to a cause of action existing in favor of the latter prior to marriage and this decision is not mentioned in the Franklin case involving a different situation, we do not consider that the discussion in the Franklin case, hereinabove referred to, in any way weakens the effect of Morrissey v. Kirkelie.

[5] The appeal is by both plaintiffs. We have examined the record as disclosed by the settled statement and find that there is sufficient evidence to support the conclusion of the trial judge that both plaintiff Lyle V. Finley and defendant Winkler were guilty of negligence, and therefore we do not find it necessary to order a new trial upon the question of negligence.

The judgment is affirmed as to plaintiff Lyle V. Finley. The judgment that plaintiff Ruth Hershey take nothing is reversed and it is ordered that a new trial be had as to the amount of damages to be awarded, and thereafter that judgment be entered in favor of plaintiff Ruth Hershey (Finley) in the amount awarded.

Sept. 28, 1950.

Frederick Jackson brought action against Universal International Pictures, Inc., and others for damages because of the use of the title of plaintiff's play for the title of a moving picture. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Henry M. Willis, J., rendered a judgment for the plaintiff, and certain of the defendants appealed. The Supreme Court, Edmonds, J., held that whether title of the play had acquired a secondary meaning, so as to be entitled to protection, was for jury, that question whether secondary meaning of title had been abandoned was for jury, that certain instruction was correct, that damages were not excessive, and that cross examination of an expert witness of the named defendant was not reversible error.

Judgment affirmed.

Prior opinion, 212 P.2d 574.

1. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇐71

An author of a play has no inherent right in the title to his production, and only when the title has acquired a secondary meaning identifying it in the public mind with the play is he entitled to its exclusive use.

2. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇐71

Regardless of any deliberate use by moving picture company of title of play with knowledge of prior use of the title by the author of the play, he was not entitled to damages unless the title had acquired a secondary meaning.

3. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇐71

If words have been used by an author or a manufacturer in such a manner that public has learned to associate the words with the product, book, or play, the words acquire a secondary meaning, so that they are entitled to protection.

4. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇐71

A play may become known to the public by its title, so that it thereby acquires a secondary meaning and attains a protectible status.

5. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇐71

The question whether a title of a literary production has acquired a secondary meaning, so that it will be protected, is one of fact.

6. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇐71

No particular period of use of the title of a literary production is required in order to give the title a secondary meaning which will be protected.

7. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇐71

Where play entitled "Slightly Scandalous" was publicized in three of the largest cities in the country, and rehearsal and production of the play were announced in dramatic and motion picture journals in Hollywood and New York, and the play was advertised in Philadelphia and New York City where it was produced, it could not be said as a matter of law that the title had not acquired a secondary meaning so as to entitle author to recover damages for use of the title by moving picture company for a moving picture, though the play received adverse notices from critics, only about 3,750 persons attended performances of the play, and about two years elapsed before moving picture was released and distributed.

8. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇐71

The title of a play produced only in New York City may acquire a secondary meaning which entitles it to protection throughout the United States.

9. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇐71

A literary product need not be popular before its title acquires a secondary meaning, so that the title will be protected, since notoriety and adverse discussion may bring about widespread identification of the play by its title and may pique the public interest.

10. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇐71

The title of a literary production is not required to be associated specifically with the author in order to give the title a secondary meaning which will be protected.

11. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇐71

Question whether the author of a literary production has abandoned the secondary meaning of its title, so that it is no longer entitled to protection is a fact question to be determined by a jury on substantial evidence.

12. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇐71

Fact that author of play had not produced the play for two years after it had closed in New York, did not compel a holding, as a matter of law, that he had abandoned his rights with respect to secondary meaning which the title to the play had acquired.

13. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇐99

In action by author of play against moving picture company to recover damages because of the unauthorized use by the company of the author's title, instruction given at request of author, that referred to exhibits showing cost of the advertising of the play in certain cities, and that directed jury to limit its consideration to value of title in question and whether it had acquired a secondary meaning as a result of advertising, was proper.

14. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇐98

A verdict of $17,500 to author of unsuccessful play, the title of which had acquired a secondary meaning, for unauthorized use of the title by moving picture company as the title of a moving picture, was not excessive.

15. Appeal and error ⇐1048(6)

In action by author of play against moving picture company to recover damages because of the unauthorized use by the company of the author's title, conduct of counsel of author in asking expert witness of company on cross examination whether he was prejudiced because company had been held for $25,000 damages in another action of the same kind, was not prejudicial, where objection of company was sustained, and jury was directed to disregard the whole incident.

EDMONDS, Justice.

Frederick Jackson, the author of a play which was not a theatrical success, sued to recover damages assertedly resulting from the unauthorized use of its title. The principal ground relied upon as requiring a reversal of the judgment in his favor is that the evidence shows no acquisition by the title of a secondary meaning.

The first count of the complaint alleged that Jackson is the author of a play which he entitled "Slightly Scandalous." The play was rehearsed in Los Angeles and produced in Philadelphia and New York with publicity announcing the times of performance. The title thereby acquired a secondary meaning. Later, Universal produced a motion picture under the same title. Universal's distribution, advertising and showing of its picture misled the public and infringed upon Jackson's right in the title of his play. The second count of the complaint alleged that Universal had made a "deliberate, wrongful and unfair misappropriation and use of plaintiff's name and title" in connection with the motion picture. Universal denied these allegations generally.

The evidence presented upon trial may be summarized as follows:

Jackson is a writer with about 40 years of experience. He has written plays which were produced in New York and London and sold the motion picture rights to several of them. In 1943, he wrote "Slightly Scandalous." In the following year, while the play was being rehearsed in Los Angeles prior to production, a press agent was employed to publicize it. During the next two months about 40 stories concerning it were prepared and distributed to 550 metropolitan and suburban newspapers.

Only a small percentage of this material was published. A one-inch item appeared in the Hollywood Reporter, a trade journal. It stated that the play would open in Philadelphia and be presented in New York two weeks later with Janet Beecher in the leading role. The Los Angeles Evening Herald-Express, with a daily circulation of 325,000, reported that the author was adding final directorial touches to "Slightly Scandalous" before its initial production in Philadelphia.

Variety, a theatrical magazine having a circulation of 600,000 and sold at newstands in the principal cities, included reference to the play in a section entitled "Shows in Rehearsal." The Los Angeles Times, which has a daily circulation in excess of 280,000, mentioned in a story concerning another play that the title of the one in which Janet Beecher was to be starred had been changed to "Slightly Scandalous." Rehearsal would commence in Hollywood immediately, it was said, preparatory to a New York appearance.

The play opened in Philadelphia as scheduled. It was advertised in newspapers there prior to and during its two weeks run, in space ranging from 10 to 60 lines. The producer also placed 20,000 "heralds" in hotels and restaurants and used outdoor advertising with "24-sheets" on 50 poster boards.

The play ran for almost two weeks in Philadelphia. The drama critics were uncomplimentary, and although the theater was nearly filled to its capacity of 1,500 persons at one performance, attendance at all of the others averaged about 200. The total of the audiences at the 15 performances did not exceed 3,000.

The New York opening followed, but the play closed after seven performances. Advertising was carried by 10 newspapers there in space varying from 12 to 50 lines. But, as in Philadelphia, the newspaper comments were critical and the public showed little interest. In a theater which seated 1,000 there was an average attendance of about 100 at each performance. The play has not since been presented.

A witness for Jackson, after qualifying as an expert, testified that "Some of the most successful pictures have been made of plays that have been flops." Examples were cited. This testimony was corroborated by other witnesses.

To establish a secondary meaning to the title of his play, Jackson presented the testimony of five witnesses. Three of them told the jury that they had seen reviews or advertisements of the play and thought that the picture was based upon it. The testimony of the other two was substantially to the same effect.

Other testimony showed that Jackson's agent requested Universal Pictures to "cover" the eastern production of the play after it had been submitted to that company's West Coast story editor during the period of rehearsal in Los Angeles. A report concerning the play and its reception on Broadway was sent to the company's executive offices.

About two years later, Universal released and distributed throughout the country a motion picture by the same name. It was stipulated that three months before this picture was released, Universal knew of Jackson's play and referred to their attorneys the question as to whether the title "Slightly Scandalous" should be selected for their production. The picture originally carried the title, "Oh Say Can You Sing." The attorneys for Universal were notified by Jackson's attorney that his client would sue for damages if the title to his play were used.

Jackson does not claim that there is any similarity whatever between the picture and the play. He bases his cause of action entirely upon the use of the title.

The evidence offered by Universal generally is to the effect that the public did not connect the motion picture with Jackson's play and only a handful of people had previously heard of the title. In the company's defense, its witnesses stressed the unsuccessful presentations in Philadelphia and New York.

As grounds for the reversal of the judgment, Universal asserts that the evidence is not sufficient to justify the conclusion that "Slightly Scandalous" had acquired and retained a secondary meaning with relation to Jackson's play. The company also challenges an instruction as incorrect and prejudicially erroneous. Instructions offered by it were erroneously refused, it is asserted, and Jackson's damages in the amount of $17,500 are excessive. It is also claimed that the title was abandoned by Jackson's two year non-use of it. Finally, the appellant charges, Jackson's attorney was guilty of prejudicial conduct.

The position of Jackson is that the question as to whether a secondary meaning has attached to a literary or dramatic title is a question of fact. As substantial evidence sufficient to justify the jury's verdict, he refers to the testimony concerning prior use, advertising, and the general impression of the public in New York, Philadelphia and Los Angeles. He also relies upon the statements of his five witnesses that because of the title they associated the play with the motion picture. Nation-wide knowledge of a title is not essential to the acquisition of a secondary meaning, he declares, nor is success of the play a requirement. The correct test, as he analyzes the question, is whether an effect or reaction is created upon the public mind. He also contends that deliberate and unauthorized appropriation of a prior user's name, title or trademark is actionable.

As to the claimed procedural errors, the conduct of counsel was not prejudicial, he asserts, because it was promptly cured by an instruction to the jury. Moreover, the denial of the motion for a new trial was a determination that it did not influence the jury.

The points presented by amici curiae for Jackson are broader in scope. It is claimed that secondary meaning is established when the title is identified by the general public and it does not depend upon popularity. Although a play is unpopular or "panned" by the critics, unfavorable comments, or any discussion of the play, fixes the title in the mind of the general public as the product of a particular playwright. Moreover, widespread publicity and advertising renders a title valuable and subject to protection entirely apart from rights derived from secondary meaning. The "general public," they say, need only be a substantial number of people not necessarily residing throughout the nation.

[1, 2] An author of a play has no inherent right in the title to his production. Paramore v. Mack Sennett, Inc., D.C. 9 F.2d 66, 67; Martenet v. United Artists Corp., D.C., 56 F.Supp. 639, 640. Only when the title has acquired a secondary meaning identifying it in the public mind with the play is he entitled to its exclusive use. Warner Bros. Pictures v. Majestic Pictures Corp., 2 Cir., 70 F.2d 310, 311; Amusement S. Corp. v. Academy Pictures D. Corp., 162 Misc. 608, 294 N.Y.S. 279; see Nims, Unfair Competition and Trade Marks [4th Ed.1947], sec. 274-a. Therefore, regardless of any deliberate use by Universal of "Slightly Scandalous" with knowledge of Jackson's prior use, he is not entitled to damages unless his literary product had acquired a secondary meaning.

[3, 4] There is no initial property right in household semantics or words which are merely descriptive, fanciful or geographic in nature. G. & C. Merriam Co. v. Saalfield, 6 Cir., 198 F. 369, 373. However, if words have been used by an author or manufacturer in such a manner that the public has learned to associate them with the product, book or play, they acquire a "secondary meaning". This principle, which was first applied in trademark cases, renders the words or symbols protectible and transferable because of that association. A play may become known to the public by its title, which thereby acquires a secondary meaning and attains a protectible status. Manners v. Triangle Film Corp., 2 Cir., 247

F. 301; Hemingway v. Film Alliance of the United States, Inc., 174 Misc. 725, 21 N.Y.S.2d 827.

[7] There is substantial evidence in the record to support the implied finding of the jury that "Slightly Scandalous" had acquired a secondary meaning. Jackson's play was publicized in three of the largest cities in this country. The rehearsal and production of the play were announced in dramatic and motion picture journals in Hollywood and New York. Although only about 3,750 persons attended performances of the play, there is no basis for a holding, as a matter of law, that they and the undetermined number who saw the advertising are not sufficient in number to provide a basis for secondary meaning. The precise size of this segment of the public is important in connection with the amount of damages which should be awarded, but it does not determine whether the title has acquired a secondary meaning.

[8] This court, in speaking of the word "public", has said that it "'* * * does not mean all the people, nor most of the people, nor very many of the people of a place, but so many of them as contradistinguishes them for a few'." Mary Pickford Co. v. Bayly Bros., Inc., 12 Cal.2d 501, 514, 86 P.2d 102, 108. The title of a play produced only in New York may acquire a secondary meaning which entitles it to protection throughout the United States. Aronson v. Fleckenstein, C.C., 28 F. 75; Hemingway v. Film Alliance of the United States, Inc., 174 Misc. 725, 21 N.Y.S.2d 827; Frohman v. Payton, 34 Misc. 275, 68 N.Y.S. 849. And the writer of a play recovered damages for the unauthorized use of its title although it was never produced in any city in the United States but had run for some weeks in Paris, France. Frohman v. Wm. Morris, 68 Misc. 461, 123 N.Y.S. 1090.

[9] Popularity is not a requirement for secondary meaning because notoriety and adverse discussion may bring about widespread identification of the play by its title and may pique the public interest. Likewise, advertising, even of an unpopular play, may cause the public to identify it as one which has been a "Broadway production".

Although some decisions indicate that the word or phrase constituting the title must have been used "* * * long and * * * exclusively by one producer with reference to his article * * *", G. & C. Merriam Co. v. Saalfield, 6 Cir., 198 F. 369, 373, and, in some cases, the length of the use may be persuasive, the essence of the acquisition of secondary meaning is the impact upon the public mind. "The duration of user required to create a secondary meaning can be measured by no accurate test. In the Yorkshire Relish case the time was twenty-five years, * * * in the Anatolia Licorice case, six weeks. From these instances it will be seen that there is no rule as to the length of time required." Nims, Unfair Competition and Trade Marks [4th Ed.1947], vol. 1, sec. 38a, p. 162.

Judge Learned Hand has said in relation to trademarks that "* * * it is the priority of user alone that controls, even though, when the defendant comes into the field, it may not be fully established, or may not even be enough established to have become associated largely in the public mind with the plaintiff's make. * * * Were it not so, it would be of extreme difficulty to show at just what point in time the mark became associated with the maker in enough of his customers' minds to justify the inference that the defendant's use might have become confusing. Therefore, once his use begins, the rest of the public must avoid his fanciful mark." Waldes v. International Manufacturers' Agency, Inc., D.C., 237 F. 502, 505.

[10] Universal claims that, in order to gain secondary meaning, the title must be associated specifically with the author of the play rather than with the play. The contention is unrealistic and contrary to authority. "Secondary meaning may exist between a name and the manufacturer or seller whose identity is not known to the buyer * * *. He [the buyer] does not know its [the manufacturer's] name, or its location, or whether it is a corporation or an individual." Nims, Unfair Competition and Trade Marks [4th Ed.1947], vol. 1, sec. 42, pp. 169, 170.

In all probability only a very small percentage of persons who know something about plays can remember or identify the names of the authors. Usually, advertising and publicity are concentrated upon the title and the actors rather than the name of the playwright. There is no logical basis for holding that a public well acquainted with the title and the play could not confer secondary meaning upon that title merely because of unfamiliarity with the author's name.

[12] In the present case, there is evidence that several plays written by Jackson had been sold to motion picture producers, from two to ten years after they were produced in New York. It is also significant that in the United States, copyrights protect literary and dramatic properties for an initial period of 28 years with the right of renewal. The evidence, that Jackson had not produced his play for two years after it had closed in New York, does not compel a holding, as a matter of law, that he had abandoned his rights.

[13] The instruction given at the request of Jackson and attacked as prejudicially erroneous refers to exhibits showing the extent of the advertising in the eastern cities at a total cost of $3,300. It is argued that although the court correctly directed the jury not to allow compensation for this expense, the cost of the advertising charges should not have been allowed in evidence. But the instruction directed the jury to limit its consideration to "* * * the value of the title in question and whether it had acquired a secondary meaning as hereinbefore defined, as a result of volume or extent of advertising." Considering the instruction as a whole, it correctly presented the applicable rule of law.

The rejected instructions concerned the principle that there is no property right implicit in the name or title of a literary work until a secondary meaning has attached to it. But in at least five different instructions, one of which was requested by Universal, the jury was told that the burden of proving a secondary meaning to the title of his play rested upon Jackson. Read together, they adequately covered the subject.

[14] Considering the issue of damages, the sum of $17,500 does not appear to be excessive. The record includes testimony to the effect that other titles to unsuccessful plays have been sold for larger amounts. The value of property wrongfully taken is a matter for the determination of the jury and the evidence as a whole supports the award in Jackson's favor.

[15] The conduct of counsel attacked as prejudicial was the cross-examination of an expert witness of Universal. He was asked whether he was prejudiced because his employer "was just held for $25,000 damages in an action [of the same kind]." The objection of Universal was sustained, and the jury directed to disregard the whole incident. Another occurrence, cited as misconduct, involved a quarrel between counsel as to which of them submitted a certain document.

There is no showing that the reference to other litigation was untrue. Considering the record as a whole and the ruling upon the motion for a new trial, it cannot be said that the misconduct was prejudicial.

CLEMONS v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al.

L. A. 20873.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

Sept. 28, 1950.

Action by Charles L. Clemons against the City of Los Angeles, a municipal corporation, wherein certain other defendants intervened, for declaratory and injunctive relief to test the validity of an ordinance of the City of Los Angeles limiting the subdivision of property to certain minimum lot requirements. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, W. Turney Fox, J., rendered a judgment for defendants and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court, Spence, J., held that the ordinance providing that no lots in a certain area held in separate ownership and used for dwelling purposes should be reduced below a minimum width of 50 feet, and an area of 5,000 sq. feet, was constitutional and valid.

Judgment affirmed.

SPENCE, Justice.

This action for declaratory and injunctive relief was brought to test the validity of an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles limiting the subdivision of property to certain minimum lot requirements. The trial court held that the ordinance was "constitutional, valid and enforceable," and that certain transactions concluded by plaintiff in violation thereof were "null and void." The propriety of such adjudication cannot be successfully assailed in the light of settled legal principles.

It appears from the agreed statement of facts that within two years prior to the commencement of this action on December 12, 1946, plaintiff purchased the property in question, a bungalow court of nine units which had been built some twenty years previously and had been used continuously for residential purposes. Located in zone C-2 on Beverly Boulevard, the property was subject to section 12.21-C of the Los Angeles Municipal Code (Ordinance No. 77,000 adopted September 28, 1936, as amended by Ordinance No. 90,500, adopted March 7, 1946) providing that no lot "held under separate ownership" at the law's effective date and "used * * * for dwelling purposes" shall be "reduced in any manner below the minimum lot area, size or dimensions" prescribed—"a minimum average width of fifty (50) feet and a minimum area of five thousand (5000) square feet."

Following his purchase, plaintiff subdivided the property into nine separate parcels, each averaging 925 square feet (25' x 37') and having a bungalow thereon. Through sale or 99-year lease arrangements plaintiff conveyed eight of these parcels to various individuals—transactions contrary to the minimum lot area and width requirements of the ordinance as a zoning regulation. Each parcel was conveyed with an easement to Beverly Boulevard over the walkways within the bungalow court. Two of the parcels had no frontage on any street or alley. The entire property was serviced by only one incinerator and two sewer connections.

[1] Threatened with arrest and prosecution for violation of the ordinance, plaintiff instituted this action for declaratory and injunctive relief from the enforcement of such municipal regulation against him as a property owner, charging that it transcended the legitimate scope of the exercise of the police power and constituted "an unwarranted and arbitrary interference with [his] constitutional rights." Several persons intervened in this action, among whom were Joseph Girofilo and Blanche M. Girofilo, who filed a "cross-complaint in intervention." The trial court upheld the validity of the ordinance both in its general aspects and in its application to plaintiff's property, and declared that certain transactions made contrary thereto were "null and void." Plaintiff has appealed from the adverse judgment accordingly entered and also from the court's order denying his motion for a new trial. Since said order is not appealable, Code Civ.Proc. § 963; Pipoly v. Benson, 20 Cal.2d 366, 368, 125 P.2d 482, 147 A.L.R. 515, plaintiff's purported appeal therefrom must be dismissed and only the appeal from the judgment remains for consideration.

[2, 3] The constitutionality of the principle of zoning is no longer an open question, and a restrictive regulation in this field pursuant to a municipality's comprehensive and systematic plan of community development, when reasonable in object and not arbitrary in operation, will be sustained as within the legitimate exercise of the police power. Miller v. Board of Public Works, 195 Cal. 477, 488–490, 234 P. 381, 38 A.L.R. 1479; Zahn v. Board of Public Works, 195 Cal. 497, 503, 234 P. 388, affirmed 274 U.S. 325, 328, 47 S.Ct. 594, 71 L.Ed. 1074; Wilkins v. City of San Bernardino, 29 Cal.2d 332, 337, 175 P.2d 542. Such an enactment is considered with every intendment in favor of its validity, and a court will not, except in a clear case of oppressive and arbitrary limitation, interfere with the legislative discretion which has been exercised in the adoption of the regulation. Jardine v. City of Pasadena, 199 Cal. 64, 72, 248 P. 225, 48 A.L.R. 509. It is presumed that the measure as a whole is justified under the police power and adapted to promote the public health, safety, morals, and general welfare. Lockard v. City of Los Angeles, 33 Cal.2d 453, 460, 202 P.2d 38, 7 A.L.R.2d 990. The courts may differ with the zoning authorities as to the "necessity or propriety of an enactment", but so long as it remains a "question upon which reasonable minds might differ," there will be no judicial interference with the municipality's determination of policy. Miller v. Board of Public Works, supra, 195 Cal. at page 490, 234 P. at page 386; see, also, Acker v. Baldwin, 18 Cal.2d 341, 344, 115 P.2d 455. The mere fact that some hardship may be experienced is not material, for "[e]very exercise of the police power is apt to affect adversely the property interest of somebody." Zahn v. Board of Public Works, supra, 195 Cal. at page 512, 234 P. at page 394. Consonant with

Zoning is an essential part of a city's overall master plan for community development, Planning Act of 1929, Stats.1929, p. 1805, as amended, 2 Deering's Gen.Laws, Act 5211b; later superseded by Conservation and Planning Act, Stats.1947, ch. 807, p. 1909, as amended, 2 Deering's Gen.Laws, Act 5211c, and a city is vested with control of "the design and improvement of subdivisions", subject to judicial review as to reasonableness. Subdivision Map Act, Stats.1937, p. 1864, as amended, now Bus. & Prof.Code, sec. 11500 et seq.; sec. 11525. The word "design" is defined in the latter Act to include, among other things, provision for "minimum lot area and width", Bus. & Prof.Code, sec. 11510, by "local ordinance." Ibid. secs. 11506, 11526. Consistent with this state recognition of municipal functions and in line with its autonomous character, Cal.Const. art. XI, sec. 6; West Coast Advertising Co. v. San Francisco, 14 Cal.2d 516, 519–521, 95 P.2d 138, the city of Los Angeles adopted the zoning ordinance prohibiting the reduction of residential lots below the specified minimum of 5,000 square feet in area and 50–foot frontage. The city's charter expressly contemplates the adoption of regulations pursuant to the authority granted by the Subdivision Map Act, charter, sec. 95(g), and on this point the trial court found that the ordinance "* * * constitutes an essential part of the master plan for the comprehensive development of the City of Los Angeles in that it is designed to prevent the cutting up of lots into unduly small areas and into parcels of economically unusable widths; that the ordinance * * * supplements the California Subdivision Map Act in that it prevents lots sold pursuant to said Act from being further subdivided, and in so doing, the ordinance prevents or diminishes the possibility of circumvention of [said] Act." In support of its view that the "ordinance is an important factor in the orderly development of the city," the trial court found that the "attempted cutting up" of such property as plaintiff's bungalow court would "tend to create and accelerate the creation of slum conditions" and "overcrowd[ing]," thus "militating against orderly, quiet and peaceful living"; that "health and sanitary regulations and laws would be more difficult to enforce" if the bungalow units "were sold to various separate owners"; and that therefore "said ordinance has a reasonable relation to the public health, safety and general welfare, and was enacted for the public good."

[4, 5] Where from a consideration of the evidence the trial court has found certain physical facts and conditions to exist in relation to the particular property restriction involved as would justify regulation by the city through the exercise of its police power, all intendments must be indulged to sustain such findings and resulting judgment. Ayres v. City Council of Los Angeles, 34 Cal.2d 31, 39, 207 P.2d 1, 11 A.L.R.2d 503. So significant are these factors in accord with the objectives found by the trial court to be within the design of the ordinance. The benefits of the Subdivision Map Act would be of little practical value in aid of desirable community planning if following the subdivider's compliance for the terms of the initial sale, the purchasers of the lots could erect multiple dwellings thereon according to authorized specifications and then "cut up" the units for separate sale. In this regard the ordinance clearly appears to supplement the state Act and to operate in avoidance of its circumvention as the trial court found. Likewise appropriate for consideration here is the memorandum opinion filed by the trial judge and included in the record, Rules on Appeal, rule 5(a), 22 Cal.2d 1, 4, as bearing on the interpretation of the findings. Trans-Oceanic Oil Corp. v. Santa Barbara, 85 Cal.App.2d 776, 790, 194 P.2d 148. The comment is there made that according to the view of experts in the field of community development, the subdivision of "bungalow courts into separate parcels" tends "to create slum conditions" because it would be unlikely that a uniform state of repair would be maintained by the various owners and a "hodge-podge appearance" would result, with a consequent depreciation in value of the entire property; "overcrowding" develops because where it is "a common practice for landlords to limit the number of people who may occupy a bungalow in a court," such restriction would not apply under separate ownership of the various units, and the probable increase and concentration of people within the limited area would "add to the noise and other irritations that militate against orderly, quiet and peaceful living"; "health and sanitary regulations" become "more difficult to provide for and enforce," and particularly where such "close living" in separately owned bungalow units contemplates "each person * * * constantly making use of easements over the others' property, and where there is no one to make or enforce any rules touching items of common necessity to all, such as, for example, use of incinerators or other disposal of trash, and keeping clean the common walkways," the situation could create disturbing tensions. As is further there said, the "City Council may well have had all these matters in mind in passing the ordinance here under attack and may have concluded that it was necessary in furtherance of the general welfare of the city and its orderly development."

A zoning law which prescribed a minimum area of one acre for residential lots was recently upheld in Simon v. Town of Needham, 311 Mass. 560, 42 N.E.2d 516, 141 A.L.R. 688, as a reasonable and valid restriction in view of the location of the district, the physical characteristics, and other circumstances present. Among the factors considered pertinent in relation to the municipality's power to so regulate the size of house lots in a district which appeared "admirably suited for one family residences" were the following, 42 N.E.2d at page 518: avoidance of "congestion in the streets"; prevention of "overcrowding of land"; facilitation in furnishing "transportation, water, light, sewer and other public necessities"; provision of recreational space for "children to play"; encouragement of the "cultivation of flowers, shrubs and vegetables." While the court recognized that there might be a "difference of opinion" as to the real advantages that would accrue from the larger lots and whether they were such as to lead one to the conclusion that the adoption of the one-acre area would result in a "real and genuine enhancement of the public interests", still a belief that such a result would be realized under the particular circumstances was "not unreasonable" and precluded "the measure" from being held "invalid." 42 N.E.2d at page 518. Similar factual considerations prevailed and a like rationale was followed in the case of Greenway Homes v. Borough of River Edge, 137 N.J. L. 453, 60 A.2d 811, with regard to a zoning regulation prescribing a minimum frontage of 75 feet in residential districts.

[6] While the validity of the respective zoning laws in these two cited cases arose in connection with the power of the municipality to disapprove map plans for proposed subdivisions and to deny permits for the erection of dwellings thereon unless the minimum lot requirements were observed, such difference in the stage of development of the land at the time of litigation as compared with the present case does not militate against the principle of decision sustaining the propriety of such type of regulation. So here the factors listed by the trial court as constituting a basis for the adoption of the ordinance in question appear to bear a reasonable relation to the public interests—the general welfare of the community—and properly bring the regulation within the purview of the police power. Thille v. Board of Public Works, 82 Cal.App. 187, 190–193, 255 P. 294.

Food Stores, Inc., v. City of Tulare, 43 Cal. App.2d 616, 111 P.2d 424, second-hand and pawned merchandise, In re Holmes, 187 Cal. 640, 203 P. 398; the quantity of farm produce that may be marketed, Agricultural Prorate Comm. v. Superior Court, 5 Cal.2d 550, 55 P.2d 495; and articles at auction. Hart v. City of Beverly Hills, 11 Cal.2d 343, 79 P.2d 1080. The right of free bargaining does not preclude legislation directed toward the curbing of predatory merchandizing practices which tend to injure or destroy fair and open competition. Wholesale Tobacco Dealers Bureau v. National Candy & Tobacco Co., 11 Cal.2d 634, 82 P.2d 3, 118 A.L.R. 486. A property owner may not divide his tract of land into lots to sell before developing or improving them without complying with the Subdivision Map Act. Cowell v. Clark, 37 Cal.App. 2d 255, 99 P.2d 594. These various instances illustrate the expanding concept of the exercise of the police power consistent with "the gradual regulation of the individual in his liberty of action and ownership of property for the public good." Max Factor & Co. v. Kunsman, 5 Cal.2d 446, 458, 55 P. 2d 177, 182; see, also, Miller v. Board of Public Works, supra, 195 Cal. 477, 484, 234 P. 381. Likewise here the zoning ordinance as above considered in relation to the city's accomplishment of a comprehensive and systematic plan of community development shows the challenged regulation to have been reasonably adopted in furtherance of the "general welfare," and plaintiff's individual liberty in the disposition of his property may be curtailed to that extent in the public interest. Moreover, it should be noted that plaintiff still has the right to sell the property as he bought it—the bungalow court as a single entity—and he has only been deprived of his right to "cut it up" into individual units for conveyance to separate individuals, to what reasonably appears would be to the public detriment and at variance with the dictates of the city's overall plan of community design.

[8] Plaintiff further argues that the zoning ordinance is unreasonable and arbitrary in its application to his property because his subdivision and separate conveyance of the bungalow units to various individuals would effect only a change in ownership, and not a change in their use for dwelling purposes. In this connection reliance is placed on these factors: that the bungalow units were constructed on plaintiff's property some twenty years before the adoption of the ordinance in question; that the city laws do not purport to require the removal of these improvements nor cessation of the present use thereof; that the property would remain exactly as it has been in the past, without a change in its improvements, its use or its existing yard areas, and the sole difference would be the circumstance of single ownership of the bungalow units through the respective conveyances; and that the city manifestly does not consider such bungalow courts a nuisance, for the very ordinance here considered permits the present construction of just such improvements on 5,000-square-foot lots held under single ownership in the C-2 zone (where plaintiff's property is situated), with a requirement of only 800 square feet of lot area per dwelling unit—while each of the parcels into which plaintiff has subdivided his property contains approximately 925 square feet. But the mere fact that the property in its existing condition is not deemed a nuisance per se nor objectionable as a "near-nuisance" in constituting a menace to health, safety or morals in the strict sense of the phrase does not strengthen plaintiff's position. Jones v. City of Los Angeles, 211 Cal. 304, 310, 295 P. 14. The "police power, as evidenced in zoning ordinances, has a much wider scope than the mere suppression of the offensive uses of property * * * it acts, not only negatively, but constructively and affirmatively, for the promotion of the public welfare." Miller v. Board of Public Works, supra, 195 Cal. 477, 487–488, 234 P. 384.

[9-11] The ordinance here challenged is grounded in considerations of the "general welfare" pursuant to the city's comprehensive and systematic plan of community development, and consistent with the "tendency to a more liberal construction of the police power, as applied in zoning and other regulatory laws", Thille v. Board of Public Works, supra, 82 Cal.

App. 187, 189, 255 P. 294, 295, plaintiff's right to the unlimited and uncontrolled disposition of his property may properly be subordinated to the public good. Miller v. Board of Public Works, supra; Zahn v. Board of Public Works, supra, 195 Cal. 497, 234 P. 388. The various factors above reviewed as found by the trial court to be possible motivating forces in the city's adoption of the ordinance show it to have a reasonable relation to the interests of the community as a whole in establishing a recommended residential pattern through regulation of minimum lot areas under single ownership. Moreover, it is fairly arguable that numerous other advantages might well suggest themselves when one attempts to visualize the appearance of a sizable area of a city subdivided into lots akin in dimension to those of plaintiff, upon each of which there stood an individually owned and maintained dwelling—in support of the legislative discretion exercised in the enactment of this regulation. See Simon v. Town of Needham, supra, 311 Mass, 560, 42 N.E.2d 516, 518. The zoning ordinance is not objectionable upon retroactive grounds in destroying plaintiff's vested property rights, Jones v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 211 Cal. 304, 310-311, 295 P. 14, but it only looks to the future in guiding a pattern of home development in the enhancement of the public interest. Acker v. Baldwin, supra, 18 Cal.2d 341, 346, 115 P.2d 455. While it may be that plaintiff could realize a greater profit in the aggregate from the disposition of the various bungalows in single units to different individuals, such consideration does not make the zoning ordinance arbitrary in its application to his property, Wilkins v. City of San Bernardino, supra, 29 Cal.2d 332, 338, 175 P.2d 542; Lockard v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 33 Cal.2d 453, 466-467, 202 P.2d 38, nor preclude the regulation of his individual rights in the promotion of the general welfare. Miller v. Board of Public Works, supra, 195 Cal. 477, 487-488, 234 P. 381.

There remains for discussion the further contention—a matter vigorously argued on behalf of plaintiff by amicus curiæ, the California Land Title Association—that the trial court erred in declaring void certain transactions of plaintiff in violation of the ordinance. The principal attack is directed at paragraph 2 of the judgment, which reads: "* * * the purported sales made by plaintiff and referred to in the amended complaint and in the findings of fact were made in violation of said Section 12.21C of the Los Angeles Municipal Code and are null and void." It is argued: (1) that the city had no power to enact legislation which would render void any transfer of title to real property; and (2) that even assuming the existence of such power, the ordinance should not be construed as having that effect.

[12, 13] We may assume, without deciding, that ordinarily a city has no power to legislate concerning the validity of transfers of title to real property, for it has been said: "The state has full control over the subject of the mode of transferring and establishing titles to property within its limits." Robinson v. Kerrigan, 151 Cal. 40, 46, 90 P. 129, 131, 121 Am.St. Rep. 90, 12 Ann. 829. In this connection it may be observed that the ordinary municipal zoning ordinance is concerned only with the regulation of the use of land as distinguished from the ownership thereof. But in the present case, the state legislation embraced in the Subdivision Map Act, Stats. 1937, p. 1864, as amended, now Bus. & Prof. Code, § 11500 et seq., dealt with the subject of transfers of ownership and the validity of transfers made in violation of its terms, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 11540, and it expressly empowered the cities to supplement that act in the manner provided by the section of the ordinance under attack. Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 11510, 11525. The only reasonable conclusion to be drawn from a reading of the state act and the municipal ordinance is that the state intended by its legislation to empower the cities to impose the same civil sanctions for violations of supplementary municipal ordinances as those found in the Subdivision Map Act, and that the city here intended, by the enactment of its ordinance, to exercise the power so conferred. Under these circumstances, it is immaterial that the ordinance did not expressly declare the title consequences of a violation of the terms of said section 12.21-C. Smith v. Bach, 183 Cal. 259, 262-264, 191 P. 14. We conclude that plaintiff's transactions in violation of the ordinance were not void ab initio but were voidable at the option of the other parties to said transactions as provided in the state act. Bus. & Prof. Code, § 11540.

This conclusion is in line with the argument of counsel for plaintiff and counsel for amicus curiæ as found in their joint petition for rehearing herein. It is there said: "Even if the city had power to affect land titles, the ordinance should be construed as attaching to a conveyance violative of its terms the same voidable character as is provided by the Subdivision Map Act for conveyances made in violation thereof. * * * We submit that such a construction would be entirely permissible in view of the apparent fact that the ordinance was enacted pursuant to the authority granted by the Subdivision Map Act and for the purpose of supplementing its provisions." In passing, it should be noted that this litigation arose prior to the addition in 1949 of section 11540.1 of the Business and Professions Code. Stats. 1949, ch. 1100, p. 2001.

Having concluded that plaintiff's transactions in violation of the ordinance were not void but were voidable as provided in the Subdivision Map Act, now Bus. & Prof. Code, § 11540, we turn to a consideration of the disposition to be made of the judgment from which the appeal is taken in the light of the record before us. The short record in the form of an agreed statement contains, among other things, the findings, judgment, notice of appeal, and written opinion of the trial judge but does not include any of the pleadings, reference to which pleadings is made in the findings. From the judgment and notice of appeal, it appears that there were numerous intervenors, who were represented by separate counsel, in addition to Joseph Girofilo and Blanche M. Girofilo, who were designated as "cross-complainants in intervention" and who appeared without counsel. The judgment is in six numbered paragraphs: Paragraph 1 adjudges the validity of said section 12.21-C of the ordinance; Paragraph 2, as set forth above, declares that the sales "referred to in the amended complaint" are "null and void"; Paragraph 3 declares that the transactions with the Girofilos are "null and void" and fixes the amount which was paid by the Girofilos in those transactions; Paragraphs 4 and 5 award costs to "defendants" and to "plaintiffs in intervention," respectively; and Paragraph 6 awards judgment for $1,862.14 and costs to the "cross-complainants in intervention," the Girofilos. Plaintiff appealed but no appeal was taken by any intervenor; and no briefs have been filed herein by any of the parties other than plaintiff and the defendant city.

[14] Upon this record we find no justification for the reversal or modification of the portion of the judgment declaring certain transactions "null and void," or for the reversal of any other portion of the judgment. This appeal, as originally developed by the briefs, was concerned only with the constitutionality of the ordinance in question. In the petition for rehearing and on rehearing, the main question presented was the propriety of the portion of the judgment declaring certain transactions in violation of the ordinance "null and void" rather than voidable. It appears, however, that this declaration in the judgment was made only with respect to those specific transactions referred to in the pleadings, which pleadings are not before us; and, in the absence of any contention to the contrary, we deem it appropriate to assume that a full transcript containing all pleadings and all proceedings on the trial would show that the validity of these particular transactions was properly challenged by the intervenors. As we have concluded that such transactions were voidable, and as we may assume that the intervenors could and did properly challenge their validity, there is no error in the trial court's declaration that such particular transactions are "null and void." Such is the legal effect of the avoidance of a voidable transaction by a party entitled to exercise that right. Depner v. Joseph Zukin Blouses, 13 Cal.App.2d 124, 127, 56

P.2d 574; see, also, Myrick v. O'Neill, 33 Cal.App.2d 644, 648, 92 P.2d 651; 6 Cal. Jur. § 12, p. 29. As we read paragraph 2 of the judgment, it does not purport to be a declaratory judgment to the effect that all transactions in violation of said section 12.21-C are "null and void" ab initio rather than voidable, but only that certain specific transactions, which had been avoided by the intervenors, are now "null and void."

The purported appeal from the order denying a new trial is dismissed. The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concur.

CARTER, Justice.

I dissent.

Plaintiff, in 1945, bought a piece of property on which some nine bungalows had been built some twenty years previously. He then subdivided the property into nine parcels which averaged 925 square feet in size. Eight of these parcels were sold to individual purchasers in violation of a municipal ordinance which prohibited reduction of residential lots below 5,000 square feet of area with a fifty-foot frontage. The property purchased by the plaintiff is in a C-2 Zone, and the ordinance permits the present construction of the same type of units as those owned by the plaintiff on a lot area of 800 square feet per dwelling unit. But these units must be held in single ownership.

The property here involved is situated in a C-2 Zone for which the ordinance provides in part as follows:

"C-4. Lot Area. Buildings hereafter erected and used wholly or partly for dwelling purposes shall comply with the lot area requirements of the R4 Zone—Sec. 12.11-C,4."

"Section 12.11-R4.

"C-4. Lot area. Every lot shall have a minimum average width of fifty (50) feet and a minimum area of five thousand (5000) square feet. The minimum lot area per dwelling unit shall be eight hundred (800) square feet." [Emphasis added.]

In Devaney v. Board of Zoning Appeals, 132 Conn. 537, 45 A.2d 828, 829, the Supreme Court of Connecticut aptly stated that "Zoning consists of a 'general plan to control and direct the use and development of property in a municipality or a large part of it by dividing it into districts according to the present and potential use of the properties.'" It has also been said that a zoning statute or ordinance is one regulating by districts the building development and uses of property and imposing restrictions on the use of the land itself. The term "zoning" within the meaning of a constitutional provision permitting laws authorizing zoning ordinances means a separation of the municipality into districts and the regulation of buildings and structures in such districts in accordance with their construction and the nature and extent of their use and the dedication of such districts to the particular uses designed to subserve the general welfare and pertains not only to use but to structural and architectural design of the building. Yokley, Zoning Law Practice. In Goodrich v. Selligman, 298 Ky. 863, 183 S.W.2d 625, it was said that the theory of zoning is to foster improvements by confining certain classes of buildings and uses to certain localities without imposing undue hardship on property owners.

It would seem that the ordinance here involved is not the usual type of zoning ordinance, nor does it fall within the definitions given above insofar as it applies to the ownership of lots of a certain size. By it a restriction is placed on the ownership, not the use, of parcels of land below a certain specified area.

I concede that the objectives of zoning are within the police power—that the public health, safety, morals and general welfare must be safeguarded. But there must be a rational connection between the means used and the end result to be attained. The majority opinion sets forth the reasons why this ordinance providing for single ownership of the units, rather than individual ownership, is a rational basis for the ordinance enacted under the police power of the municipality. These reasons would have validity if, and only if, the ordinance prohibited more than a single dwelling or two on each 5000 square foot parcel of land (which was heretofore used by the occupants of the nine bungalows). These reasons are: (1) Avoidance of congestion in the streets. The absurdity of this is apparent—because a man owns his own home, does he tend to make for greater congestion in the streets? (2) Prevention of overcrowding the land—because a man owns his land, does he tend to have more children, more guests, more relatives? (3) Facilitation in furnishing transportation, water, light, sewer and other public necessities—I may be obtuse, but it appears that this reason is less than valid. In bungalow courts, unfurnished apartments, and the like, each tenant usually pays for his own water, light, and public utilities—These facilities are furnished to him as an individual tenant, and have nothing whatsoever to do with his ownership of the property. The transportation argument seems so ridiculous as to require no answer. (4) Provision of recreational space for children to play—how can individual ownership of the various units have the slightest bearing on such space? (5) Encouragement of the cultivation of flowers, shrubs, vegetables—it has been my experience that individual ownership tends toward the encouragement of interest in the land, rather than tending to diminish it, and the same argument applies so far as the upkeep of property is concerned. Tenants are only too willing to let the landlord take care of any repairs, and if the landlord fails to do so, the tenant is not willing to expend his funds on someone else's property. (6) As another reason we are told that a "probable increase in occupancy" would add to the noise and other irritations which militate against orderly, quiet and peaceful living. As I have pointed out previously, this is a valid argument if we are to prohibit absolutely such bungalow courts, but, in the very nature of things, can have no validity when we take into consideration the fact that these units will be occupied in the same manner whether or not they are individually owned. (7) Health and Sanitary regulations—this argument is equally delusive. There is no one incinerator and two sewer connections servicing the nine units and it would seem that individual ownership would not make these services less adequate. There are common walkways which will need to be cleaned, we are told, and there are easements over other property which will need to be regulated. And on these very speculative and improbable future neighborhood squabbles, we are asked to say that the ordinance has a reasonable basis in that it will tend to promote the public health, welfare, safety and general well-being! A corollary of finding this ordinance a sound and rational exercise of the police power of the municipality is to restrain the free alienation of property.

The majority say that "The courts may differ with the zoning authorities as to the 'necessity or propriety of an enactment,' but so long as it remains a 'question upon which reasonable minds might differ,' there will be no judicial interference with the municipality's determination of policy." I am of the opinion now, as I have been in the past, that this court, when viewing a record on appeal, must sustain the findings of the trial court when there is substantial evidence in support thereof. The evidence in the instant case in support of the reasonableness of the ordinance appears to me to be sadly lacking. I fail to see that there is a question on which "reasonable minds might differ"! It seems to me that this is a clear case of arbitrary interference with the rights of an individual, and that the public gain from that interference is nonexistent.

The majority tell us that "* * * it is fairly arguable that numerous other advantages might well suggest themselves when one attempts to visualize the appearance of a sizable area of a city subdivided into lots akin in dimension to those of plaintiff, upon each of which there stood an individually owned and maintained dwelling * * *." The fact remains that plaintiff's property is in a zone in which these bungalow units (under single ownership) are permitted by this ordinance. Just how an observer would be able to say whether or not they were individually owned and what difference that would make in one's visualization of the area in question, I am at a loss to understand. There is no reasonable relation between a reduction of the area of an improved lot, without change in its improvements, its use or its existing yard areas and the protection of the public health, safety, morals or welfare. The exercise of the police power, though an essential attribute of sovereignty for the public welfare and arbitrary in its nature, cannot extend beyond the necessities of the case and be made a cloak to destroy constitutional rights as to the inviolateness of private property. House v. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist., 25 Cal.2d 384, 153 P.2d 950.

I consider it a duty of this Court—a duty imposed on it by the will of the people of the State—to protect the individual against state or municipal action which deprives an individual of a right guaranteed to him not only by the Constitution of the United States, but by the Constitution of the State of California, when that action is not validly necessary for the benefit of the public at large. I have long argued against stateism and for the protection of individual rights when it is not necessary that those rights should be abridged for the benefit of the public. I consider that the people of this State and of the United States voluntarily relinquished certain of their rights that they collectively might benefit, but that they did not intend that all individual rights should be so relinquished. Our Constitutions embody that intent, and they stand as shields protecting the individual against arbitrary state action. It is the duty of this Court to hold those shields. I do not feel that the declaration in the majority opinion that this ordinance is a reasonable and valid exercise of the police power has any support in reason.

In affirming the judgment, the majority fall into the error of assuming, just because municipal legislation on zoning is involved, that every such restriction is valid and that it is beyond the power of this Court to inquire into the reasonableness thereof. Ordinances are held invalid and unconstitutional, Page v. City of Portland, 178 Or. 632, 165 P.2d 280; Lee v. City of Chicago, 390 Ill. 306, 61 N.E.2d 367; Koch v. Toledo, 6 Cir., 37 F.2d 336; American Wood Products Co. v. Minneapolis, 8 Cir., 35 F.2d 657; Van Auken v. Kimmey, 141 Misc. 105, 252 N.Y.S. 329; Lombardo v. City of Dallas, Tex.Civ.App., 47 S.W.2d 495; Johnson v. Village of Villa Park, 370 Ill. 272, 18 N.E.2d 887; Village of Terrace Park v. Errett, 6 Cir., 12 F.2d 240; Women's Kansas City St. Andrew's Soc. v. Kansas City, 8 Cir., 58 F.2d 593; Glencoe Lime & Cement Co. v. City of St. Louis, 341 Mo. 689, 108 S.W.2d 143, because unreasonable and discriminatory. "The courts usually will hold a zoning ordinance invalid when it clearly appears that the restrictions are arbitrary and unreasonable and have no substantial relation to health, safety, morals or the general welfare." State ex rel Dixie Inn, Inc., v. City of Miami, 156 Fla. 784, 24 So.2d 705, 706, 163 A.L.R. 577. Zoning restrictions must bear a substantial relation to the promotion of public health, safety, morals or general welfare. Ex parte Angelus, 65 Cal.App.2d 441, 150 P.2d 908; Grant v. Board of Adjustment, 133 N.J.L. 518, 45 A.2d 184; Merrill v. City of Wheaton, 379 Ill. 504, 41 N.E.2d 508; Zadworny v. City of Chicago, 380 Ill. 470, 44 N.E.2d 426; City of Louisville v. Koenig, 290 Ky 562, 162 S.W.2d 19, 140 A.L.R. 1369.

The legislation here considered is arbitrary and discriminatory. It is arbitrary and unreasonable in that it has no substantial justification based on "imperious considerations of public health, morals and safety * * *." Miller v. Seaman, 137 Pa.Super. 24, 8 A.2d 415, 417. It is discriminatory in that it prohibits ownership of small parcels of land in a district where rental of lesser parcels of land is permitted. As the court said in the case cited by the majority, Simon v. Town of Needham, 311 Mass. 560, 42 N.E.2d 516, 519, 141 A.L.R. 688: "A zoning by-law cannot be adopted for the purpose of setting up a barrier against the influx of thrifty and respectable citizens who desire to live there and who are able and willing to erect homes upon lots upon which fair and reasonable restrictions have been imposed nor for the purpose of protecting the large estates that are already located in the district." This ordinance discriminates against those wishing to live in the district in homes owned by them and favors those who wish only to rent property there. It definitely sets up a barrier and discriminates against thrifty persons of small means while favoring those who can afford to buy property and build small homes thereon for rental and income purposes.

In Harmon v. City of Peoria, 373 Ill. 594, 27 N.E.2d 525, the ordinance limited the houses in a district to one family dwellings. Nevertheless, an owner was permitted to use his house for a multiple family dwelling because there was no substantial relation between the police power and the ordinance inasmuch as under it there was no limit on the number of people that could be considered a family. Thus the test in the ordinance was really not the number of people in a house but whether they happened to consist of more than one family. The analogy to the instant case is pronounced. The ordinance here is not aimed at preventing more than one house on each 5000 feet. It only prevents separate ownership of the houses. The court in the Harmon case stated, 27 N.E.2d at page 528: "Here the validity of the ordinance as applied to the entire subdivision is not challenged. In short, it is only to the extent that the ordinance applies to plaintiffs' property that an unreasonable exercise of the police power is claimed. * * * The ordinance, it has been observed, defines a 'family' as one or more persons occupying premises and living together as a single housekeeping unit as opposed to a group occupying a boarding house, lodging house or hotel. Admittedly, a person may legally lodge and board four persons for remuneration upon premises located in an 'A' one-family district and, specifically, in the block where plaintiffs reside. Plaintiffs, it is conceded, enjoy the right under the ordinance to rent rooms to a maximum of four individual roomers and if they so desire, may serve meals to such persons. Indeed, any number of persons may occupy a house as a 'family,' within the contemplation of the ordinance, and divide the housekeeping expenses, provided only they live as a solitary housekeeping unit, using a single kitchen. Manifestly, the term 'one-family dwelling,' bears no relation in fact to the number of persons or families living in a building. On the other hand, the ordinance prohibits plaintiffs from renting their suits of rooms equipped with adequate kitchen facilities to two couples. The harsh reality of the distinction made by the ordinance is evidenced by the refusal of the zoning officials to permit the use last described. Tested in the light of the applicable principles set forth the distinction is unreasonable in the extreme, particularly since less than one-half of the residences in the block are actually used as single-family dwellings. The use of plaintiff's one-family residence by six persons maintaining three separate housekeeping units appears no more inimical to the public welfare than the devotion of their property to the accommodation of four roomers and boarders." [Emphasis added.]

The court states in Women's Kansas City St. Andrew Soc. v. Kansas City, 8 Cir., 58 F.2d 593, 603: "To justify such restriction the police power would have to be extended, not only to restricting certain districts to residence purposes, but to restricting such districts to particular classes of residents, and this has been quite universally condemned by the decisions." [Emphasis added.] The ordinance here restricts the class of persons—residents who may reside in the area involved for it permits renter residents but prohibits owner residents.

A zoning ordinance may be generally valid, but its enforcement with respect to particular property will be restrained by the courts if it is unreasonable, arbitrary and discriminatory in its application thereto. Reynolds v. Barrett, 12 Cal.2d 244, 250, 251, 83 P.2d 29; Skalko v. City of Sunnyvale, 14 Cal.2d 213, 214, 216, 93 P.2d 93; Bernstein v. Bush, 29 Cal.2d 773, 777, 177 P.2d 913; Hagenburger v. City of Los Angeles, 51 Cal.App.2d 161, 163, 164, 124 P.2d 345.

We are supposed to have a constitutional form of government where certain fundamental individual rights are guaranteed and protected. Section 1 of Article 1 of our Constitution provides that "All men are by nature free and independent, and have certain inalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty; acquiring, possessing, and protecting property; and pursuing and obtaining safety and happiness." While I concede that the right to acquire and possess property is subject to the police power of the state in the advancement and protection of public health, safety, morals and general welfare, I think it is time for this Court to declare that the police power of the state is so limited and that the right to own and possess property may not be impaired by the mere whim or caprice of any planning commission, city council, or board of supervisors which may have some pet notion about what use should be made by an individual of property owned by him. In other words, I do not believe that these public agencies should be permitted to interfere with the ownership or possession of property unless it can reasonably be said that such interference is necessary in the interests of public health, safety, morals or welfare. In my opinion, the determination of this issue is for the Courts who must interpret and apply the constitutional safeguards for the protection of the property owner.

I positively do not agree with the philosophy announced in the recent decisions of this Court, Wilkins v. City of San Bernardino, 29 Cal.2d 332, 175 P.2d 542; Lockard v. City of Los Angeles, 33 Cal.2d 453, 202 P.2d 38, 7 A.L.R.2d 990; and Ayres v. City Council of Los Angeles, 34 Cal.2d 31, 207 P.2d 1, 11 A.L.R.2d 503, in which it has completely abdicated its judicial function in favor of the arbitrary and unreasonable action of city councils, as shown by the record in those cases, who recognize no constitutional limitation of their power to control the use of private property.

It may be that we are going to have to stand up and be counted in order to determine whether constitutional rights in the ownership and possession of property still exist. Such rights certainly will no longer exist when the decision in this case takes its place beside the Wilkins, Lockard and Ayres cases herein cited. Under these decisions the right of ownership and possession of real property is subject to the whim and caprice of any planning commission, city council or board of supervisors and the restrictions which any one of them may place upon an individual's right to own, possess or use real property which will be upheld by a majority of this Court is any one's guess—the sky may be the limit—certainly not the Constitution which has become a dead letter—a forgotten document.

When the Constitution is disregarded we reach the perimeter of the police state. True, city councilmen are elected, but what chance has a property owner who may be in the minority to protect himself against arbitrary and unreasonable action by a city council who may see fit to zone his property for a use for which it is wholly unsuited? This Court has said it will not interfere with such action. Of what value to him is the inalienable right guaranteed by the Constitution to acquire, possess and protect property when a city council or board of supervisors tells him he can only use his property for a purpose dictated by whim or caprice and the courts refuse to grant him relief? The instant case is a shining example of such arbitrary action. The bungalow units were legally constructed and have been legally occupied, but they cannot be legally sold in separate units. Does this really make sense? Is there a scintilla of reason or logic behind such a rule? If there is, it is not apparent to me, and I doubt that it would be to any unprejudiced mind.

I am of the opinion that the ordinance is invalid and unconstitutional in its application to these facts in that the evidence discloses that it bears no reasonable relation to the legitimate objectives to be attained by an exercise of the police power, and that it is wholly arbitrary and discriminatory. I would reverse the judgment.

SCHAUER, Justice (dissenting).

I agree with the conclusion of Mr. Justice Carter that the ordinance here involved, in its application to the facts of this case, is arbitrary and discriminatory. On the face of the majority opinion it appears, I think, that the ordinance as applied bears no reasonable relation to legitimate objectives of constitutional police power but, rather, effects an unwarranted curtailment of the rights of private ownership. By heretofore well established standards the judgment should be reversed.

FOX v. ERICKSON.

Civ. 17862.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Oct. 2, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 19, 1950.

Action by Roy Fox, against C. N. Erickson to recover $2,500 which was remainder of sum of $5,000 defendant had agreed to pay plaintiff if he would remain in the employment of corporation which had purchased defendant's manufacturing business. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Otto J. Emme, J., entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Wilson, J., held that plaintiff had continued in the employ of the purchasing corporation both in legal effect and in the spirit of the contract.

Affirmed.

1. Corporations ⇐30(5)

Under contract wherein defendant agreed to pay plaintiff $5,000 if he would continue employed for three years as plant superintendent and designer for manufacturing business purchased by B. corporation, where manufacturing business was later incorporated as E. & J. corporation, which was wholly owned and operated by B. corporation, and both corporations had same president and interlocking directorate, plaintiff's subsequent transfer and employment by E. & J. corporation, which took over manufacturing business, did not invalidate and terminate contract so as to prevent recovery of unpaid balance due.

2. Appeal and error ⇐758(1)

Appellate courts will not act as counsel for either party to appeal and search record to discover errors not pointed out in briefs.

3. Appeal and error ⇐760(1)

Counsel for appellant has duty to refer reviewing court to portion of record to which he objects and to show that appellant was prejudiced thereby.

4. Appeal and error ⇐758(1), 760(1)

Fact that purported errors would amount to great number of references and would be burdensome and cumbersome does not excuse appellant from pointing out errors in brief and referring to portions of record supporting alleged errors.

5. Corporations ⇐30(5)

In action on contract wherein former proprietor of manufacturing business agreed to pay plant superintendent and designer certain sum if he would remain in employment of purchasing corporation continuously for term of three years, where manufacturing business was later incorporated but remained wholly owned subsidiary of purchasing corporation, and plaintiff continued in employment of new corporation, evidence concerning incorporation of manufacturing business and its sole ownership by purchasing corporation was properly admitted.

Walter C. Harbert, Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILSON, Justice.

Action on a contract wherein defendant agreed to pay plaintiff the sum of $5,000 if he would remain in the employment of Don Baxter, Inc., continuously for the term of three years. The sum of $2,500 was paid and this action is for the recovery of the remainder. Judgment went for plaintiff and defendant has appealed.

For several years prior to the date of the agreement plaintiff had been employed as plant superintendent and designer in a business solely owned and operated by defendant under the name of E. & J. Manufacturing Company. The company designed and manufactured life-saving resuscitators and hospital units, the majority of which were designed or developed by plaintiff while in defendant's employ. Plaintiff's knowledge, training and experience were a valuable asset to his employer.

In November, 1945, Don Baxter, Inc., a Nevada corporation, purchased the E. & J. Manufacturing Company from defendant with its assets including patents, patent rights, trade-names and trade-marks. Baxter desired to have plaintiff continue to act as its plant superintendent and designer. For the purpose of assuring that he would so continue, defendant entered into the agreement which is the subject of this action. At the same time plaintiff entered into a contract of employment with Baxter and ever since that time has continued to be plant superintendent of Baxter's E. & J. department.

Shortly after Baxter had purchased E. & J. the latter's business was incorporated as a California corporation known as E. & J. Manufacturing Company. It has always been wholly owned by Baxter, the latter being the owner of the one share of stock issued by the E. & J. corporation. The same person is president of both Baxter and E. & J. corporations, they have an interlocking directorate and maintain their operations on contiguous property.

[1] Upon the organization of E. & J. as a corporation Baxter transferred plaintiff to its E. & J. division where his employment was continued until the trial of this action. Defendant contends that his contract with plaintiff was invalidated and terminated when plaintiff ceased to be on Baxter's payroll and was transferred to that of E. & J. Such argument is without merit. Since E. & J. has at all times been solely owned by Baxter and the latter, for reasons of its own, placed plaintiff on its E. & J. payroll, he has been in the employ of Baxter both in legal effect and in the spirit of the contract between plaintiff and defendant. His services were actually rendered to and his salary paid by Baxter through an intervening instrumentality of which Baxter was sole proprietor.

[2-4] In his brief defendant has specified several alleged errors in the admission of evidence, but has failed to refer to any portion of the record where such evidence may be found or to point out why the evidence was inadmissible. Appellate courts will not act as counsel for either party to an appeal and will not assume the task of initiating and prosecuting a search of the record for the purpose of discovering errors not pointed out in the briefs. It is the duty of counsel to refer the reviewing court to the portion of the record to which he objects and to show that the appellant was prejudiced thereby. In re Estate of Randall, 194 Cal. 725, 728, 230 P. 445; Turgeon v. Barney, 70 Cal.App. 432, 435, 233 P. 394; Phillips v. Wheeler, 55 Cal. App. 236, 237, 156 P.2d 468; Frasier v. Witt, 62 Cal.App. 309, 316, 217 P. 114. In defendant's reply brief he offers as a reason for the deficiency in his opening brief that the purported errors "would amount to a very great number of references" and would be "burdensome and cumbersome." Such fact does not excuse a litigant from the performance of his duty to the court and does not impose upon a reviewing court the burden of searching through a transcript for a possible error. The fact that it would be burdensome and cumbersome to appellant's counsel who are familiar with the record is a sufficient reason for their assistance to the court.

[5] We gather from defendant's belated statement in his reply brief that the error of which he has attempted to complain has reference to evidence introduced concerning the incorporation of E. & J. and its sole ownership by Baxter. There was no error in the admission of such evidence since its purpose was to show the continuity of plaintiff's employment by Baxter through its wholly owned subsidiary.

PEOPLE v. ESTES.

Cr. 4467.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Oct. 2, 1950.

Tommy Barney Estes was convicted in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, William Turney Fox, J., of an attempt to commit an offense of sexual perversion and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that the evidence sustained conviction and was sufficient corroboration of the accomplice.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal law ⇐511(2)

Corroboration is sufficient if, considered by itself, it tends to connect defendant with offense charged in such a way as may reasonably satisfy jury that accomplice is telling the truth, and it is not necessary that independent evidence be sufficient to establish defendant's guilt.

2. Criminal law ⇐1159(2)

Whether corroborating evidence by itself is as compatible with innocence as it is with guilt is a question for trier of facts and not for reviewing court.

3. Criminal law ⇐511(1)
Sodomy ⇐6

Evidence sustained conviction of an attempt to commit a sexual perversion and was sufficient corroboration of the accomplice. Pen.Code, § 288a.

Gladys Towles Root, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Dan Kaufmann, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Defendant was convicted of an attempt to commit the offense denounced by section 288a of the Penal Code. He appeals from the judgment.

The male person who participated in the alleged attempt with the defendant was the principal witness for the prosecution. It appears to be conceded that this witness was an accomplice. See People v. McCollum, 214 Cal. 601, 602, 7 P.2d 301; People v. McRae, 31 Cal.2d 184, 185, 187 P.2d 741. Defendant's claim is that the testimony of the accomplice was not corroborated as required by section 1111 of the Penal Code.

[1, 2] The corroboration is sufficient if considered by itself it tends to connect the defendant with the offense charged in such a way as reasonably may satisfy a jury that the accomplice is telling the truth. If corroborating evidence creates more than a suspicion of guilt, it is sufficient even though it be slight and, when standing by itself, entitled to but little consideration. It is not necessary that the independent evidence be sufficient to establish the defendant's guilt. It is not necessary that the accomplice be corroborated as to every fact to which he testified. Inferences from the defendant's testimony may suffice to corroborate an accomplice. A defendant's admissions, active and passive, may constitute corroboration. A defendant's consciousness of guilt is corroborative of an accomplice. Whether the corroborating evidence by itself is as compatible with innocence as it is with guilt, is a question for the trier of fact, not for the reviewing court. People v. Henderson, 34 Cal.2d 340, 342, 346, 209 P.2d 785; People v. Trujillo, 32 Cal.2d 105, 111, 194 P.2d 681; People v. Malone, 82 Cal.App.2d 54, 61, 63, 64, 185 P.2d 870.

Without relating the sordid details, the record shows the following corroborating evidence. The defendant and the accomplice were together in the front seat of an automobile at 1:15 a.m., in an uninhabited area in Los Angeles. Two police officers saw the car and approached it. The car appeared to be empty. The officers shined a flashlight into the car. The trousers of both men were unbottoned and defendant was exposed. When asked why his trousers were down, defendant said he took them down to tuck his shirttail in. When asked why the accomplice's trousers were down, defendant replied, "I give up." The next morning defendant told a police officer that he had never done anything like this before; he did not know what caused him to do it; he was horribly ashamed of himself; as he attempted to do the act, he became sick and was unable to do it. In his testimony defendant admitted that his statement to the officers that he took his trousers down to tuck his shirttail in was false. The testimony of defendant was an admission that an offense was attempted except that the twenty-three-year-old defendant attempted to shift criminality to the fifteen-year-old accomplice and denied any attempted criminal act.

[3] We are satisfied that the evidence related tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense and was sufficient corroboration of the accomplice. People v. Briley, 9 Cal.App.2d 84, 48 P.2d 734; People v. Nichols, 2 Cal.App.2d 99, 101, 37 P.2d 710.

WALKER v. CALLOWAY et al.

Civ. 17547.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Sept. 27, 1950.

Action by Evelyn Walker against John Calloway, individually and as executor and special administrator of the estate of Joe Wilmond, deceased, and others, for specific performance of an oral agreement to will decedent's entire estate to plaintiff in consideration of services rendered to decedent and to establish a trust therein. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, William S. McKesson, J., entered a judgment dismissing action after sustaining a demurrer to plaintiff's amended complaint without leave to amend, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that a complaint alleging that decedent, who was suffering the last days of cancer and who knew he had not long to live, agreed that if plaintiff, decedent's former wife, would leave her home and come and give him her companionship and affection and solace during his remaining days, he would leave his entire estate to her by will upon his death, and that plaintiff, at an advanced age, agreed and sacrificed her personal comfort, peace of mind and security, abandoned her residence, occupation and home ties and traveled over 2,000 miles to strange surroundings so as to give decedent the solace of her companionship, affectionate care and tender administration, stated sufficient facts to take case out of operation of the statute of frauds.

Reversed.

1. Frauds, statute of ⇦129(6)
Specific performance ⇦45

The mere rendition of services is not usually such part performance of a verbal agreement as will relieve contract from operation of statute of frauds, but if services are of such a peculiar character that it is impossible to estimate value by any pecuniary standard and it is evident that parties did not intend to measure them by any such standard, and if plaintiff, after performance of services, could not be restored to situation in which he was before rendition of services, it is such part performance of a verbal contract as will remove agreement from statute of frauds, and equity will grant specific performance. Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 6; Code Civ.Proc. § 1973, subd. 6.

2. Specific performance ⇦45

Where services rendered by a party consists in nursing and caring for a person enfeebled and suffering from a horrible disease, requiring constant and unceasing watchfulness, destructive to peace and comfort of one performing services, and possibly injurious to health, it is impossible to estimate value by any pecuniary standard, and where it is evident that decedent did not intend so to measure them, it is not within power of any court to restore party to situation in which he was before contract was made or to compensate him therefor in damages.

3. Specific performance ⇐45

To enforce an oral contract to bequeath or devise property in equity by quasi specific performance, it must be shown that contract is definite and certain, consideration adequate, that contract is founded on good morals and not against public policy, that character of services is such that a money payment would not furnish adequate compensation to plaintiff, that there is such a change in plaintiff's condition and relations in reliance on contract that a refusal to complete contract would be a fraud upon him, and that remedy asked for is not harsh, oppressive or unjust to innocent third parties.

4. Pleading ⇐8(4, 6, 20), 9

It is not necessary that complaint for specific performance of an oral agreement state in so many words that there was an adequate consideration for contract or that contract was fair and just or that character of services were such that they were not susceptible of pecuniary measurement, for such allegations, standing alone, constituted mere conclusions and it was sufficient if complaint alleged facts from which these conclusions could be drawn.

5. Frauds, statute of ⇐129(6)

A complaint alleging that decedent, who was suffering last days of cancer and who knew that he had not long to live, agreed that if plaintiff, decedent's former wife, would leave her home and come 2,000 miles to his home and give him her companionship and affection and solace during his remaining days, he would leave his entire estate to her by will upon his death, and that plaintiff, at an advanced age, abandoned her residence, occupation, home ties and associations and traveled 2,000 miles to strange surroundings to give decedent the solace of her companionship, affection and care and tender ministration until his death, stated sufficient facts to take case out of operation of statute of frauds. Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 6; Code Civ.Proc. § 1973, subd. 6.

6. Contracts ⇐61

The extent of consideration in a contract for rendition of personal services is to be measured by breadth of undertaking rather than by eventuality.

7. Executors and administrators ⇐224

Presentation of a claim to executor for services to deceased was not a condition precedent to maintenance of action for specific performance of contract to will property.

Edward S. Cooper and John Boyce-Smith, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Perry Bertram, Los Angeles, for respondent.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment dismissing the action after the sustaining of a demurrer to her amended complaint without leave to amend. The action is for specific performance of an oral agreement to will decedent's entire estate to plaintiff in consideration of services rendered decedent, and to establish a trust therein. Defendant, executor of the estate of Joe Wilmond, deceased, is sued individually and in his representative capacity. No claim was filed in the estate.

Decedent died testate January 6, 1948, leaving an estate of over $40,000 in the county of Los Angeles. His will, dated November 14, 1947, was admitted to probate on August 24, 1949. It appointed defendant executor of the estate, bequeathed $500 to plaintiff and, with the exception of several other bequests, bequeathed and devised the residue of the estate to defendant, a son of plaintiff and decedent. Plaintiff was the first wife of decedent. They were married in 1911, and had three children, including defendant. In 1915, decedent deserted plaintiff and never thereafter contributed anything to her support or to that of the children during their infancy. Decedent secured a divorce from plaintiff. Thereafter he contracted two other marriages, both of which culminated in divorce.

In addition to the foregoing, the amended complaint alleged: In May, 1947, decedent telephoned plaintiff at Dowagiac, Michigan, where she resided and was employed, and told her he was suffering from cancer and did not expect to live much longer, he realized he had treated her badly in deserting her and leaving her to support herself and the three young children, "he had a nurse and did not need a servant or household services," he offered and agreed that if plaintiff would leave Dowagiac and come to Los Angeles "and give him her companionship and affection" and "solace his remaining days," he would leave his entire estate to her by will upon his death. Leaving Dowagiac "meant uprooting her [plaintiff's] whole plan of life at an advanced age, at great sacrifice of her personal comfort, peace of mind and security," but in reliance upon decedent's promise and at his special instance and request, plaintiff abandoned "her residence, occupation and home ties and associations" in Dowagiac and on September 22, 1947, traveled "about 2000 miles to strange surroundings, at an advanced age, to Los Angeles, California." Thereafter and up to the time of decedent's death on January 6, 1948, she gave decedent "the solace of her companionship, affectionate care and tender ministration." She would not have left Michigan and come to Los Angeles if decedent had not induced her to do so by his promise to leave her his property and estate by will. Pursuant to this agreement decedent executed a will in which practically all of his property was left to plaintiff (a copy of the instrument which is signed by decedent and the subscribing witnesses is attached to the complaint as an exhibit). Subsequent to the execution of this will, defendant fraudulently procured decedent to change his will and execute the will admitted to probate. The execution of the latter will was a fraud upon plaintiff's rights and a breach of decedent's agreement. Defendant holds the estate as trustee for the use and benefit of plaintiff by reason of the agreement and performance on her part. Although the agreement is not in writing, plaintiff fully performed the agreement on her part and "changed her position to her great detriment * * * in an amount which cannot be estimated in money, and she has no adequate remedy at law for breach of said agreement," and defendant is equitably estopped from asserting the invalidity of the verbal agreement.

The question is whether plaintiff has pleaded sufficient facts to take the oral contract out of the statute of frauds.

[1] Where a contract is within the statute of frauds, as it is here, Civ. Code, sec. 1624(6); Code Civ.Proc., sec. 1973(6), the mere rendition of services is not usually such a part performance of a verbal agreement as will relieve the contract from the operation of the statute, but "if the services are of such a peculiar character that it is impossible to estimate their value by any pecuniary standard, and it is evident that the parties did not intend to measure them by any such standard, and if the plaintiff, after the performance of the services, could not be restored to the situation in which he was before the rendition of the services, it is such a part performance of the verbal agreement as will remove the contract from the rule, and equity, where other objections are not present, will decree specific performance. But in such cases the reason for the interposition of equity is quite obvious. Plaintiff has rendered service of extraordinary and exceptional character—such service as, in contemplation of the parties, was not to be compensated for in money, and, as in contemplation of law, cannot be compensated for in money. Therefore by no action at law could a plaintiff be restored to his original position. It would be in the nature of a fraud upon him to deny him any relief, and, the law failing by reason of its universality, equity, to promote justice, makes good its imperfections. Wat. Spec. Perf. Cont. § 41; Pom. Spec. Perf. § 114." Owens v. McNally, 113 Cal. 444, 450, 45 P. 710, 712, 33 L.R.A. 369; McCabe v. Healy, 138 Cal. 81, 70 P. 1008; Anno. 69 A.L.R. 14, 120, et seq.; 106 A.L.R. 742, 756, et seq.

The services called for under the contract here were similar in nature to those in Barry v. Beamer, 8 Cal.App. 200, 96 P. 373, and Fowler v. Hansen, 48 Cal.App. 2d 518, 120 P.2d 161, which were held to be of an unusual and exceptional character.

In Barry v. Beamer, supra [8 Cal.App. 200, 96 P. 373], the complaint alleged that decedent, 73 years of age, "'was growing old and had not a great while to live, and he greatly desired in his declining years to have someone of his own blood near him to give to his old age the comforts of a home, to care for him in his sickness, to do his general housekeeping, to see to the cooking of his food, his washing and mending, and particularly to give to him that love and affection due from a sister to a brother.'" In holding there was such a change of position and relationship in reliance upon the oral contract and that the value of the services rendered were not subject to any pecuniary standard, the court said, 8 Cal.App. at page 209, 96 P. at page 377:

"As he [decedent] grew older, naturally life to him under such circumstances became irksome and wearisome, and with his advancing years he, naturally, the more and more yearned for the companionship and the tender care of the one who, of all living persons, could the more completely and satisfactorily fill the long-existent hiatus in an unhappy and then rapidly waning life. He earnestly and, it may be, pleadingly besought his only sister to dispose of her own home—a home where she had spent many of the years of her life in comfortable circumstances, and valued by her not more perhaps because of its intrinsic worth than because to her it was hallowed by pleasant memories and fond associations—and come to him, situated as he was, that he might be given the care and attention which he could under the circumstances only derive through the love and affection of a sister. She not alone complied with his request to live with and take care of him, but turned over to him all her means to be used in his business. * * * She rescued him from a life of uncleanliness and misery and gave him comforts to which he had been unused, and when his last illness attacked him, she tenderly and affectionately cared for him, and thus minimized the sufferings of the last, expiring hours of his life. For five years, he declared, and well could he do so, 'he had lived like a white man.'

"Is there any possible money compensation equal to the service thus rendered and the sacrifices thus made by this sister? Could the plaintiff, under the circumstances disclosed by the record, be placed in statu quo by any known legal remedy? Why should not equity enforce such a contract as is shown here? The evidence shows an adequate consideration; that the contract is just and reasonable as to the parties against whom it is sought to be enforced; that there is no showing, nor an attempt at showing, that the plaintiff practiced fraud or undue influence in securing the contract; that it is certain and definite, * * * and its enforcement will not involve the invasion of the legal or equitable rights of an innocent third party." See also to the same effect McCabe v. Healy, 138 Cal. 81, 70 P. 1008.

In Fowler v. Hansen, 48 Cal.App.2d 518, 120 P.2d 161, 163, plaintiff appealed from a judgment rendered on the pleadings and on a portion of the opening statement, in an action to compel specific performance of a contract to make a will and to impress a trust upon the estate of decedent. The complaint alleged that decedent promised to make a will giving plaintiff and his wife one-half of all her property provided they moved from Texas to Los Angeles and established a home for decedent's mother and "care and provide for the mother and 'administer unto her welfare and wishes and render unto her love and affection until the time of her death'." In reversing the judgment, the court stated [48 Cal.App.2d at page 523, 120 P.2d at page 164] that it was "'out of the power of any earthly tribunal to restore the parties to their original situation and environment.' * * " [48 Cal. App.2d at page 525, 120 P.2d at page 165.] " * * it appears from the pleading itself that the compensation intended by decedent for the peculiar and exceptional services and loving care and attention which they were giving to the mother—and their acts in taking up residence in a city other than that in which they had been living, and, we may assume, undergoing readjustments in their social and economic relationships—was to be, not any payment in dollars and cents during her lifetime, but that upon her death they should benefit to the extent of one-half of her estate."

[2] Where the services rendered by a plaintiff consisted in nursing and caring for a person enfeebled and suffering from a horrible disease, requiring constant and unceasing watchfulness, harrowing to the mind, destructive to the peace and comfort of the one performing the services, and possibly injurious to the health, it has been held that it is impossible to estimate their value by any pecuniary standard; and where it is evident that decedent did not intend so to measure them, it is out of the power of any court, after the performance of such services, to restore the plaintiff to the situation in which he was before the contract was made or to compensate him therefor in damages. See Traver v. Naylor, 126 Or. 193, 268 P. 75; Lothrop v. Marble, 12 S.D. 511, 81 N.W. 885, 76 Am.St. Rep. 626; Velikanje v. Dickman, 98 Wash. 584, 168 P. 465; Howe v. Watson, 179 Mass. 30, 60 N.E. 415; Rhodes v. Rhodes, 3 Sandf.Ch.,N.Y., 279; Bryson v. McShane, 48 W.Va. 126, 35 S.E. 848, 49 L.R.A. 527; Brinton v. Van Cott, 8 Utah 480, 33 P. 218; Fred v. Asbury, 105 Ark. 494, 152 S.W. 155; McCullom v. Mackrell, 13 S.D. 262, 83 N. W. 255; Schoonover v. Schoonover, 86 Kan. 487, 121 P. 485, 38 L.R.A.,N.S., 752; Annotations 69 A.L.R. 149; 106 A.L.R. 760, and cases cited.

[3] To enforce an oral contract to bequeath or devise property in equity by quasi-specific performance, it must be shown that the contract is definite and certain, the consideration adequate, that the contract is founded on good morals and not against public policy, that the character of the services is such that a money payment would not furnish adequate compensation to the plaintiff, that there is such a change in the plaintiff's condition and relations in reliance on the contract that a refusal to complete the contract would be a fraud upon him, and that the remedy asked for is not harsh, oppressive or unjust to innocent third parties. Brown v. Freese, 28 Cal.App.2d 608, 615, 83 P.2d 82; Fowler v. Hansen, 48 Cal.App.2d 518, 522, 120 P.2d 161; Barry v. Beamer, 8 Cal.App. 200, 210–211, 96 P. 373; Shive v. Barrow, 88 Cal.App.2d 838, 199 P.2d 693, 847; Khoury v. Barham, 85 Cal.App.2d 202, 211, 192 P. 2d 823.

[4] It is not necessary that the complaint state in so many words that there was an adequate consideration for the contract or that the contract was fair and just, or that the character of the services rendered were such that they are not susceptible of pecuniary measurement; for such allegations, standing alone, constitute mere conclusions. It is sufficient if the complaint alleges facts from which these conclusions may be drawn. Notten v. Mensing, 3 Cal. 2d 469, 477, 45 P.2d 198; Fowler v. Hansen, 48 Cal.App.2d 518, 525, 120 P.2d 161.

Cases cited by defendant were distinguished at length in Fowler v. Hansen, 48 Cal.App.2d 518, 523, 120 P.2d 161. No purpose would be served in repeating the distinguishing features here. The facts pleaded clearly distinguish the present case from Murdock v. Swanson, 85 Cal.App.2d 380, 193 P.2d 81.

[5] While the complaint here is not an exemplar of model pleading, it sufficiently pleads facts which take the case out of the operation of the statute of frauds. There are sufficient facts alleged, which upon demurrer must be taken as true, from which it appears that the contract was definite and certain, the consideration adequate, that it was not against public policy, that the services alleged to have been rendered by plaintiff were of such an extraordinary and peculiar nature that they could not be, and in the contemplation of the parties were not to be, compensated for in money, and that there was such a change in plaintiff's condition and relations in reliance on the contract that a refusal to complete the contract would be a fraud upon her. An ordinary action at law for breach of the contract would not give plaintiff the thing to which she is entitled under the allegations of her complaint—would not afford her full and adequate relief. The promise came from decedent, who was suffering the last days of cancer and who knew he had not long to live. It was made to a woman who had formerly been his wife, and to whom, in his hour of need, he turned for that comfort, care and consolation which he felt only she could give. He allegedly desired none of the usual services of a nurse or housekeeper. The contract which he proposed, and which plaintiff accepted, answered his special needs. The promise was made to induce, and it did induce, action. Plaintiff assumed an obligation which, under the circumstances of the case, she need not have assumed, and which required of her, at a late stage in life, to abandon her own home and personal comforts, her employment, her old friendships and acquaintances, and to adjust herself to a new pattern of life laid down by the needs and requirements of decedent. The duties which she assumed, by the acceptance of the contract, must, in the very nature of things, have been most exacting and tedious and, at times, distasteful and disagreeable. In rendering the services called for by the contract, defendant received the benefit of plaintiff's society and companionship, "affectionate care and tender ministration" until his death.

[6] Respondent claims that the short duration of plaintiff's services was inadequate as a consideration to sustain specific performance. It sufficiently appears that there was adequate consideration for the contract, for, as stated in Velikanje v. Dickman, supra, 98 Wash. 584, 168 P. 465, 470, in answer to a similar contention, "* * * the extent of the consideration is to be measured by the breadth of the undertaking rather than by the eventuality. Respondent might have had to serve and nurse for many years. Each party to the agreement knowingly stood the loss or gain by that contingency." See Howe v. Watson, 179 Mass. 30, 60 N.E. 415, 418; Annotations 69 A.L.R. 115; 106 A.L.R. 756.

It also appears from the complaint that no injustice or harshness would ensue to respondent, who, since the allegations of the complaint are taken as true, appears not to be an innocent party.

[7] It was not necessary that the complaint show that, before its filing, the plaintiff presented a demand or claim for the property to the executor. Plaintiff is not asserting a claim against the estate. The relief sought is equitable. The law does not require the presentation of a claim as a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action in quasi-specific performance. Furman v. Craine, 18 Cal.App. 41, 46, 121 P. 1007; Trower v. Young, 40 Cal.App.2d 539, 542–548, 105 P.2d 160. See McKay v. Security-First Nat. Bank, 35 Cal.App.2d 349, 355, 96 P.2d 376; Annotation 113 A.L.R. 1070.

We hold that the complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. We do not decide, however, that the complaint may not be subject to special demurrer, and the court may in its discretion require the clarification of uncertainties or ambiguities, if any, in the complaint.

DENCKER v. BERNSTEIN.

Civ. 14519.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Oct. 4, 1950.

Action by Ellen S. Dencker against David Bernstein for broker's commission allegedly earned by plaintiff's assignor. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Preston Devine, J., entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, P. J., held that broker had fully performed contract of employment and was entitled to commission.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Brokers ⇐60

When real estate broker, employed simply to negotiate a sale, produces a contract executed by a solvent purchaser, he is entitled to pay for his services, whether trade is finally consummated or not.

2. Brokers ⇐60

Whether failure to complete the contract of sale of property or transaction negotiated has any bearing upon broker's right to be compensated for his services depends primarily upon terms of employment.

3. Brokers ⇐50

Where contract of employment authorized broker to act as vendor's exclusive agent for period of 30 days to sell and enter into and sign written contract for sale of certain property, and purchaser signed agreement of sale and initialed riders attached thereto modifying agreement within time period, notwithstanding that completed agreement was not delivered to vendor until after period, broker had fully performed contract and was entitled to commission.

Christin, Keegan & Carroll, Charles A. Christin, San Francisco, for appellant.

Theodore M. Monell, San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff, Ellen S. Dencker as assignee of Jack M. Feder, brought an action against defendant David Bernstein for payment of $3,750 plus interest, claiming the sum to be due Feder, a real estate broker, for his services in obtaining a buyer for defendant's property.

On December 15, 1947, appellant entered into a contract with Feder to sell certain property. The Uniform Authorization to Sell read: "In consideration of the listing for sale of the property hereinafter described and in consideration of the services to be performed by the agent, the undersigned, herein designated as the seller, hereby authorizes Jack M. Feder herein designated as the agent, exclusively and irrevocably for the term of 30 days from the date hereof, to sell and enter into and sign a written contract in substantial conformity with the 'Uniform Deposit Receipt and Agreement of Sale' adopted by the San Francisco Real Estate Board on July 1, 1944, in the name of and for the seller, for the sale and conveyance at the price of One Hundred Thousand and no/100 ($100,000.00) Dollars of the following described property * * *". (Emphasis ours.)

On January 13, 1948, Feder presented appellant with an agreement of sale signed by Harry Friedman, the buyer. Appellant proposed that his attorney examine the papers and on the following day, January 14, 1948, the final day covered by the authorization, appellant and Feder met with the attorney at his office, a discussion followed, certain changes were made in the terms of the agreement which appellant desired, which changes were attached as riders to the agreement and Feder instructed to have the purchaser initial the riders. On that same day Feder had the riders initialed by Selby E. Pels who had been authorized by Friedman to sign for him and act as his agent. Although Feder testified he phoned Bernstein the evening of January 14 and told him the riders had been initialed, the completed Agreement of Sale was not delivered to Bernstein on that date. Feder attempted to contact appellant the following day but did not succeed in reaching him until January 16, 1948, at which time appellant refused to consummate the sale on the ground that the authorization of the broker had expired.

The question presented by appellant is: "After the period of a real estate broker's exclusive authorization has expired, is he entitled to a commission if he then presents a written agreement to purchase dated within the period of the broker's exclusive authorization, and the seller refuses to consummate the sale upon the grounds of the late tender?"

The trial court found "that plaintiff's assignor secured an offer to purchase the premises upon the terms prescribed by and within the terms of the authorization executed by defendant" and entered judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $3,750 plus interest.

Appellant contends that the agent, relying upon a written contract, must tender the contract during the period of authorization before the agent may hold the seller liable for the agent's commission. Under the terms of the contract this was not necessary.

The contract provided that within the specified time the agent was authorized "to sell and enter into and sign a written contract * * * in the name of and for the seller, for the sale and conveyance" of the property. This the agent did, and furthermore the seller not only had knowledge of such a contract but had approved it and requested Feder to secure the initials of the buyer to the changes, all within the authorized time. There is no question but that plaintiff's assignor, the agent, fully complied with the terms of the contract within the time specified.

We have found no authority which is directly in point. Those which have been cited and those hereinafter referred to relate to the commonly known broker's contract which calls upon him "to find a buyer who is ready, able and willing to purchase" at the terms and price agreed on. Here the owner employed the broker "to sell and enter into and sign a written contract." This the broker did and this was all he was required to do. And the contract which he signed with the purchaser was accepted and approved by the seller.

[1] As for appellant's contention that the agent, relying upon a written contract, must tender the contract during the period of authorization before the agent may hold the seller liable for the agent's commission it is sufficient to say that the broker's contract did not require him to deliver a contract of sale to the seller within the life of the broker's contract. It did not even require him to communicate the fact of sale to the seller within that time. In this respect the case is similar to Gunn v. Bank of California, 99 Cal. 349, 352, 33 P. 1105, 1106, where the court said: "It is, of course, well settled that when a broker employed simply to negotiate a sale of real estate has found a purchaser able, ready, and willing to purchase upon the vendor's terms, his right to the agreed commission is complete, and does not depend upon the final acceptance by the purchaser of a conveyance of the property sold." Later in the opinion the court quotes from Hayden v. Grillo, 35 Mo. App. 647, the following, 99 Cal. at page 353, 33 P. at page 1107: "'The object of the vendor is to effect a sale of his property, and, when the real-estate broker produces a contract executed by a solvent purchaser, he is then entitled to pay for his services, whether the trade is finally consummated or not * * *.'"

"If a real estate broker fully performs his contract, he cannot be prevented from recovering his commission because the owner subsequently changes his mind about making the sale or imposes such additional terms as to postpone a transfer of the title until after the expiration of the time limited. * * * There must be no breach of faith by the owner of property towards the broker who has been employed to secure a purchaser thereof." Slotboom v. Simpson Lumber Co., 67 Or. 516, 135 P. 889, 136 P. 641, 642, Ann.Cas. 1915C, 339.

[2] "Whether failure to complete the contract or transaction negotiated has any bearing upon a broker's right to be compensated for his services depends primarily upon the terms of the employment. While there are some decisions to the effect that there must be an actual performance of the contract negotiated to entitle a broker to his commissions, even though the contract of employment is silent upon the point, the great weight of authority is that unless the broker and his employer have expressly stipulated to the contrary, the broker is entitled to his compensation upon the completion of the negotiations which he undertook, irrespective of whether or not the contract negotiated is ever actually consummated * * *." 8 Am.Jur., Brokers, § 179.

[3] Far more certain is the right of a broker to his commission under a contract such as we have here where he is required to "sell and enter into and sign a written contract" within a fixed period of time. The broker having fully performed the contract the seller cannot defeat recovery by adding new conditions to the written contract.

BORDEN & BARTON ENTERPRISES, Inc. v. WARNER BROS. BROADCASTING CORPORATION et al.

Civ. 17567.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Oct. 4, 1950.

Action by Borden & Barton Enterprises, Inc., against Warner Bros., Broadcasting Corporation and others to recover damages for alleged plagiarism in copying plaintiff's radio show and for an injunction and an accounting. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Wm. B. McKesson, J., sustained a demurrer to third amended complaint without leave to amend and entered a judgment of dismissal and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran J., held that amended complaint failed to state a cause of action and that sustaining a demurrer thereto without leave to amend was not abuse of discretion.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Copyrights ⇐82

Amended complaint failed to state a cause of action to recover damages for alleged plagiarism in copying plaintiff's radio show where complaint failed to show any novel idea reduced to a concrete form which had been appropriated by defendants, failed to allege any circumstances indicating any implied contract or trust relation and failed to make clear the exact similarity between plaintiff's and defendants' radio shows upon which action was predicated or to allege what portions of plaintiff's show were copied by defendants.

2. Pleading ⇐225(2)

Where third amended complaint, differing only slightly from its predecessors, failed to state a cause of action to recover damages for alleged plagiarism in copying plaintiff's radio show, sustaining a demurrer thereto without leave to amend was not abuse of discretion.

Alexander L. Oster, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Freston & Files and Eugene D. Williams, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

DORAN, Justice.

The judgment from which the present appeal is taken is one of dismissal of plaintiff's cause of action following the sustaining of a general demurrer to a third amended complaint. The original and amended complaints attempt to state a cause of action to recover damages for alleged plagiarism in the copying of plaintiff's radio show without permission and broadcasting the same by means of radio station "KFWB".

Appellant's third amended complaint, differing only slightly from its predecessors, alleges that since March 23, 1948, "plaintiff has been the exclusive owner of a show, transmit by means of the radio, known as a 'Boom Show' ". It is then alleged that "said show is performed on the air by means of the radio as follows: Red, yellow, green, purple balloons of various sizes and shapes are used. Seated on the stage are five contestants. Above and in back of each contestant is a wooden disc. Upon each disc is one letter of the word 'Boom'; * * * the explanation mark makes the fifth. This is for identification purposes. In the center of each disc is a deflated balloon, to which is attached by a long hose an ordinary tire pump. Each contestant uses this tire pump to inflate his balloon until it goes Boom. The first to break his balloon is the winner, and prizes are awarded to the winners".

The complaint alleges that the above show was produced and presented by appellant on June 3, 1948 through the medium of the National Broadcasting Co. studios at Los Angeles, "and a recording was made of said show by plaintiff"; that a copy of the broadcast is not attached to the complaint since "it would be impracticable to attach" such a recording.

The respondents' dereliction is alleged as follows: "That for several weeks last past, the defendants * * * without the permission or consent of plaintiff, have copies and broadcast a show over the air through the medium of Station KFWB, which show is entitled 'Barrel of Dough', and said show contains portions copied from plaintiff's show. Balloons are given to two rows of the theatre audience and at a Go Signal from the Master of Ceremonies, the contestants blow their balloons until three balloons explode. The winner row receive prizes". It is then alleged "That by reason of the unlawful acts of the defendants in using the material belonging to the show owned by plaintiff, the plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of * * * $250,000.00". In addition to the damages claimed, the complaint prays that "defendants be restrained and enjoined from using the material of said Boom Show in the future", and be required to account "for the profits denied the plaintiff".

The only question involved herein is whether the trial court "erred in sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend". It is contended by appellant that the (third amended) complaint "states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, or could be amended to sustain a cause of action", and that the trial court's action "was error and constituted an abuse of discretion".

Respondents' brief, answering the above argument, calls attention to the fact that in plaintiff's allegations "there is no assertion that the plaintiff's show was novel or originated by plaintiff", or that the same "was ever submitted to the defendants for consideration as to possible production or purchase". Likewise, it is particularly noted that "As a radio show, whether recorded or not, either would consist only of sound effects, conversation, description by an announcer or something of the sort, and yet there is no allegation that the two shows, as they appeared over the air in sound, were or could be at all similar".

A survey of the record indicates that the third amended complaint, like its predecessors, alleges nothing by way of pointing out the novelty of plaintiff's "Boom Show" other than by describing the balloon contest involved. Likewise, the similarity between the shows staged by plaintiff and defendants is only made to appear by the short and general description of the two shows. Although it is alleged that the defendants' show "contains portions copied from plaintiff's show", the complaint in question does not allege what portions of the plaintiff's show were "copies". As respondents' brief points out, "the two descriptions indicate no similarity in concrete form but only a similarity in idea, in that in both shows a contest was involved and balloons were used".

The recent case of Stanley v. Columbia Broadcasting System, 35 Cal.2d 653, 656, 221 P.2d 73, 75, decided August 4, 1950, has been cited by both parties. Affirming a judgment of the Superior Court, the opinion in the Stanley case says: "the right of the originator of an idea to recover from one who uses or infringes it seems to depend upon whether or not the idea was novel and reduced to concrete form prior to its appropriation by the defendant, and, where the idea was disclosed by the originator to the appropriator, whether such disclosure took place under circumstances indicating that compensation was expected if the idea was used." It was also held that "The problem of similarity between two compositions, whether literary, musical or dramatic, is a question of fact to be determined ultimately by a comparison of the two works upon the basis of the opinion of the average individual possessing a practical understanding of the subject".

The action in the Stanley case was by a writer to recover on an implied agreement of defendant broadcasting company to pay for a radio program alleged to have been originated by plaintiff and which had been submitted to the defendant in the hope that a purchase or license agreement might result therefrom. From this statement of the facts it is evident that the Stanley case is of no particular assistance in the present controversy. The facts here involved are dissimilar; for example, it is not claimed that appellant's "Boom Show" was ever submitted to respondents. Moreover, the instant appeal only involves the sufficiency of appellant's third amended complaint and the propriety of sustaining a general demurrer thereto without leave to amend. The Stanley case furnishes no support to appellant's contentions.

[1, 2] It cannot be said that the trial court's action in sustaining the demurrer was erroneous or that it amounted to an abuse of discretion. After three attempts to state a cause of action, the third amended complaint fails to allege any circumstances indicating any implied contract or trust relation, and likewise fails to show any novel idea "reduced to a concrete form", which has been appropriated by the defendants. The complaint entirely neglects to make clear what is perhaps one of the most important items, namely, the exact similarity upon which plaintiff predicates a cause of action; it fails to allege what portions of the plaintiff's show were "copies" by the defendants. As respondents' brief points out, the only similarity definitely pointed out is that both shows make use of a balloon contest involving members of an audience, and resulting in an award of prizes.

The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 17694.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 27, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 26, 1950.

See 223 P.2d 255.

Raymond A. Nelson, as special guardian of the person and estate of Jane Standing, an alleged incompetent, brought a proceeding by notice of motion to vacate a judgment appointing Venna Berggren as the incompetent's guardian. From an order of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Philbrick McCoy, J., vacating and annulling the judgment, Venna Berggren appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J., held that the judgment was properly vacated because of failure to serve the citation to appear at the hearing of the petition for the guardian's appointment on the alleged incompetent within the statutory time before hearing and fraud in making a false affidavit of such service.

Order affirmed.

2. Appeal and error ⇐1011(1)

The trial court's findings on conflicting testimony must be followed by appellate court, in absence of clear showing of abuse of trial court's discretion.

3. Appeal and error ⇐996

On appeal from order after trial of issue on affidavits, those favoring respondent's contentions establish not only facts stated therein, but all facts which may be reasonably inferred therefrom.

4. Judgment ⇐443(1)

An equity court, under proper circumstances, will set aside judgment obtained by fraud, but fraud must be extrinsic and collateral.

5. Judgment ⇐443(1)

"Extrinsic or collateral fraud", justifying equity court in setting aside final judgment, must be of such character as to prevent trial of issues presented to court for determination.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Extrinsic or Collateral Fraud".

Collateral fraud practiced outside court, thereby effectively depriving defendant of right to present his case or all of his defense, is "extrinsic fraud," from which equity will give relief by setting aside judgment obtained thereby.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Extrinsic Fraud".

To constitute "extrinsic fraud," justifying equity court in setting aside final judgment obtained thereby, party obtaining judgment must have been guilty of misrepresentation or concealment preventing other party from having his day in court.

8. Judgment ⇐443(1)

A false affidavit of service of process on defendant constitutes "extrinsic fraud" justifying equity court in setting aside judgment for plaintiff, as defendant is thus prevented from having his day in court.

9. Judgment ⇐443(3)

An equity court will relieve defendant from unjust judgment rendered against him without either actual or constructive service of process, thereby depriving him of opportunity to be heard in his defense.

10. Judgment ⇐443(1)

"Extrinsic fraud," warranting equity court in setting aside judgment or decree, consists of false representations preventing real trial of cause on merits, like conduct inducing interested party to refrain from appearing or participating in trial, failure to serve timely notice of hearing, or acts preventing presence of material witnesses at trial.

"Extrinsic or collateral fraud," for which judgment may be set aside, does not operate on matters pertaining to judgment itself, but relates to manner in which it was procured.

12. Insane persons ⇐33(1)

A judgment appointing guardian of incompetent was properly vacated on grounds of failure to serve citation on alleged incompetent within statutory time before hearing and fraud in making false affidavit of timely service thereof. Probate Code, § 1233.

Lindstrom & Bartlett, and William C. Bartlett. Los Angeles, for appellant.

Marshall Stimson and Raymond A. Nelson, Los Angeles, for respondent.

By a verified petition filed June 29, 1948, Venna Berggren sought appointment as guardian of her grandmother, Jane Standing, who was then about 90 years of age. It was alleged therein that by reason of "extreme age and senility" said grandmother had "become mentally incompetent, either to care for herself or to manage her property." The usual citation issued directing Jane Standing to appear on July 16, 1948, the day set for hearing the petition.

On said date the citation was filed upon which was endorsed an unverified affidavit signed by Edith I. Allen, sister of Jane Standing, averring that service thereof was made upon the alleged incompetent on July 1, 1948. Two certificates of Dr. Crakow dated July 15, 1948, were presented certifying that Jane Standing was not physically or mentally capable of handling her own affairs, and was "not physically able to endure a court session."

Under section 1233, Probate Code, as then in effect, no testimony was presented at the hearing, but on the basis of the foregoing documents, the court granted the petition and fixed the bond, whereupon Mrs. Berggren qualified as guardian and entered upon her duties as such.

Thereafter, on December 15, 1948, on behalf of Jane Standing, an amended notice of motion to vacate the judgment appointing guardian, together with points and authorities and supporting affidavits, was served and filed. The grounds of said motion were:

1. That no citation was served upon the alleged incompetent within the time prescribed by law prior to the hearing;

2. That the petition "falsely and fraudulently" omitted reference to a second sister of the incompetent residing within the State.

3. That the order was obtained by fraud.

4. That the first physician's certificate was insufficient under Probate Code section 1461.

Counter affidavits in opposition to the motion were filed, and after a hearing lasting two days, the court vacated the decree appointing Mrs. Berggren as guardian, having found against her on grounds 1, 3 and 4 of the motion.

This appeal is from such order.

For a reversal of the order appealed from, appellant relies upon the following propositions:

(1) The finding of the trial court that the ward was not properly served with process is neither supported by substantial or by any credible evidence.

(2) The fact that the ward was duly served sustains the order appointing the guardian.

(3) There was no fraud.

(4) The motion for new trial should have been granted.

Among other things, the record reveals that Mrs. Standing owns two adjoining lots in Los Angeles. One is improved with a bungalow in which she lives. The other with a four-family flat building which she rents to tenants. One of these tenants, Jemima G. Stoffel averred by affidavit that she had lived in said building for five years, during which time she saw Mrs. Standing "practically every day" ; that Mrs. Standing collected the rents from affiant and other tenants and supervised repairs; and that during June and July of 1948, Mrs. Standing attended to her business; collected rents, went to the bank and grocery stores and performed her usual household duties.

The amended motion to vacate the judgment was supported by several affidavits.

That of Jane Standing, the petitioner, averred that she was not served with copy of the petition for guardianship nor with the citation until after July 16, 1948, the date of the hearing thereof; that she had no knowledge whatsoever of the proceedings for appointment of guardian until she was given copies of the petition and citation during the latter part of July or early August, 1948; that she then conferred with her attorney, Raymond A. Nelson, and handed the papers to him for investigation. She also averred that she was physically able to appear in court on the day of the hearing and had she known about it, she would have been present to oppose the appointment; that no doctor gave her a physical examination prior to the date of the hearing. It was further averred that affiant for the past thirty-eight years had managed her properties: interviewed tenants, collected rents, banked her funds, paid her taxes and other operating expenses as they became due; that she had done all of these things continuously and without interruption "except during the past few months when she had been prevented from doing so by reason of the within proceedings." That prior to July 16, 1948, affiant did her own marketing, made purchases of groceries and other necessities, and prepared her own food. That she "has continued to do so since the said 16th day of July, 1948, and is doing so as of the date of this affidavit."

The affidavit of attorney Raymond A. Nelson was to the effect that he had known Mrs. Standing for four years; that when she needed legal advice she was brought to his home by Mr. Reyes, one such occasion being in June of 1948. That early in August, she came to his home and handed him a copy of the petition for guardianship and citation rehearing thereof on July 16, 1948, and informed affiant that "she had received these papers only a day or two before the day she was at affiant's home" ; that he saw Mrs. Standing on several occasions between early August and October 15, 1948, when he took her to the Superior Court at Glendale, and at no time during this period was she physically unable to attend a court session.

Mr. Reyes averred by affidavit that he had been a neighbor of Mrs. Standing for 25 years, helped her with the work around her place, i.e., burning rubbish, mowing lawns, trimming shrubbery, etc., and that during June and July, 1948, he took her riding in his automobile almost every day, at which time she was physically able to be out and to attend to her affairs.

In her counter affidavit appellant averred that she accompanied her aunt Edith I.

Allen to Jane Standing's home on July 1, 1948; that she then and there saw Mrs. Allen "personally deliver" to Mrs. Standing copies of the petition and citation; that Jane Standing asked "what is this?", to which affiant replied that she was petitioning the Superior Court to be appointed her guardian and that the matter would be heard in Glendale on July 16, 1948; that after reading aloud to Jane Standing the whole of said petition and citation, the latter stated she was glad that affiant was going to help her by being appointed her guardian, because it would relieve her of a lot of worry. That on July 15, 1948, affiant had Jane Standing brought to her home and told her that "the hearing comes up tomorrow and I find I may have to take you to court with me. Do you want to go?" That Jane Standing replied: "I would rather not but if you need me, I will come." That affiant then told her: "I will try to arrange it so you won't have to."

Affiant further averred that thereafter she learned of the certificate of Dr. Crakow and was told by her attorney that it was not necessary for Jane Standing to be present at the hearing. That a few days after the hearing, affiant called at the home of Jane Standing and told her about the appointment, at which time Jane Standing stated: "Well, that's fine, honey."

The affidavit of Mrs. Edith I. Allen corroborates the above affidavit and also avers that Jane Standing "was pleased with the idea that she was going to be taken care of."

At the instant trial, appellant testified that she planned and had Dr. Crakow come to her home the day before the hearing to examine Mrs. Standing; that the latter was there for three or four hours, and the doctor was there about half an hour; that the doctor talked to Mrs. Standing and "held her hand". She further testified as to the unkempt appearance of Mrs. Standing and the unclean condition of her home; and as to the various matters averred in her affidavit hereinabove recited, especially as to the service upon Mrs. Standing of the petition and citation.

Dr. Crakow took the stand and was asked to explain his certificate of July 15, 1948, wherein he stated that Mrs. Standing "is not physically able to endure a court session". He stated that because Mrs. Standing was averse to being examined, he had to make what physical observation and examination he could; that he checked her pulse and found it weak and irregular and that "with her mental condition and physical condition at that time, I did not believe she was in a suitable condition to endure a court session"; that he made an examination as to her mental condition and found a condition of senile dementia which was due to softening of the brain tissue. He examined Mrs. Standing again on December 7, 1948, and found her physical condition slightly improved; that her mental condition was satisfactory at times and then would show memory lapses, confusion and incoherence.

Mrs. Wilson, who frequently visited Mrs. Standing over a period of eight years, testified Mrs. Standing's home was "rather charming", nicely arranged and comfortable, and that she noticed no dust; that Mrs. Standing did her own cooking and was always properly dressed; that she took pride in her personal appearance and when she went out wore a hat and a suitable jacket.

[1] As can readily be seen, the evidence on the question of service was directly conflicting; hence the findings made thereon are conclusive.

[2, 3] In Brainard v. Brainard, 82 Cal. App.2d 478, 480, 186 P.2d 990, 991, it was held: "The total evidence considered by the trial court upon the motion consists of a volume in excess of 110 pages (here 150 pages). It all represents a body of conflicting statements by witnesses called to support the contentions of the respective parties. Whatever might be the impression of the appellate court with reference to the inferences and findings which should be drawn from diverse proofs, it is the rule that the findings must be followed in the absence of a clear showing that discretion was abused. Trujillo v. Trujillo, 71 Cal. App.2d 257, 260, 162 P.2d 640; Cooper v. Deon, 58 Cal.App.2d 789, 790, 137 P.2d 733. In all matters in which an issue is tried upon affidavits it is the rule that those favoring the contentions of respondent establish not only the facts stated therein but also all facts which may be reasonably inferred therefrom. Doak v. Bruson, 152 Cal. 17, 19, 91 P. 1001; Kettelle v. Kettelle, 110 Cal.App. 310, 313, 294 P. 453."

[4-9] On the question of fraud, the case of Sipe v. McKenna, 88 Cal.App.2d 1001, 1004, 200 P.2d 61, 63, is decisive. It was there held: "A court of equity under proper circumstances will set aside a judgment obtained by fraud. 15 Cal.Jur. 8, sec. 120. The fraud must be extrinsic and collateral. Huron College v. Yetter, 78 Cal. App.2d 145, 149, 177 P.2d 367. Extrinsic or collateral fraud is defined in the recent case of Gale v. Witt, 31 Cal.2d 362, at page 365, 188 P.2d 755, thus: 'The fraud which will justify the setting aside of a final judgment by a court of equity must be of such character as prevents a trial of the issues presented to the court for determination. Thompson v. Thompson, 38 Cal.App.2d 377, 101 P.2d 160; Godfrey v. Godfrey, 30 Cal. App.2d 370, 86 P.2d 357. Where the fraud practiced is collateral to and outside of court so that a party is, because of such fraud or concealment, effectively deprived of presenting his case or all of his defense, it is extrinsic and equity will give relief. (31 Cal.2d at page 366, 188 P.2d at page 757) * * * to constitute extrinsic fraud, there must have been some representation or concealment by the defendant which prevented the plaintiff from having his day in court * * *.' It has long been established that a false affidavit of service constitutes extrinsic fraud. A party is thus prevented from having his day in court. Courts of equity will relieve a party from an unjust judgment rendered against him when, without service of process, either actual or constructive, no opportunity has been given him to be heard in his defense. Bernhard v. Waring, 213 Cal. 175, 180, 2 P.2d 32; Parsons v. Weis, 144 Cal. 410, 416, 77 P. 1007; Herd v. Tuohy, 133 Cal. 55, 62, 65 P. 139; Martin v. Parsons, 49 Cal. 94, 100."

[10] In Godfrey v. Godfrey, 30 Cal. App.2d 370, 379, 86 P.2d 357, 362, extrinsic fraud is defined as follows: "Extrinsic fraud, which alone will warrant a court of equity in setting aside a judgment or decree, consists of such false representations as will prevent a real trial of the cause upon the merits of the issues involved, like the conduct which may induce an interested party to refrain from appearing or participating in the trial, a failure to serve timely notice of the hearing, or acts preventing the presence at the trial of material witnesses. (Citation of authorities.)"

[11] "Extrinsic or collateral fraud operates not upon matters pertaining to the judgment itself but relates to the manner in which it was procured." Deyl v. Deyl, 88 Cal.App.2d 536, 540, 199 P.2d 424, 426.

DONOVAN v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY.

Civ. 18067.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 17, 1950.

Proceeding by John F. Donovan against the Superior Court of Los Angeles County. The District Court of Appeal, Per Curiam, held that since no denial of judge's disqualification had been filed within five days and matter was thereafter heard by another judge, it would be assumed that first judge was disqualified and that the matter had been transferred by him to judge who heard the matter.

Petition denied.

Doran, J., dissented.

Appeal and error ⇐911(1)

Where judge against whom an affidavit of prejudice had been filed did not file a denial of his disqualification within five days and matter was subsequently heard by another judge, District Court of Appeal would assume that first judge was disqualified and that the matter was transferred by him to judge who subsequently heard it pursuant to statutory proviso that where there are two or more judges of the same court, action or proceeding may be transferred to a judge who is not disqualified. Code Civ.Proc. § 170.

PER CURIAM.

Petitioner was adjudged guilty of contempt and given four fines of $500 each. He filed an affidavit of prejudice against Judge Rhodes; the matter was continued to a subsequent date and heard by Judge Bartlett. The petition is based on the technical ground that the question of Judge Rhodes' disqualification had to be heard in the manner specified in section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure. However, that section has a proviso reading as follows: "provided, however, that when there are two or more judges of the same court, one of whom is disqualified, the action or proceeding may be transferred to a judge who is not disqualified." Thereafter Judge Rhodes for five days failed to file a denial of his disqualification, and we assume he was disqualified and that the matter was by him transferred to Judge Bartlett. The petition is denied.

DORAN, J., votes to grant the petition.

BARNETT v. FURST.

Civ. 7777.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Oct. 7, 1950.

George S. Barnett sued Leslie Gordon Furst for injuries sustained by plaintiff when defendant's automobile which plaintiff was washing for defendant as defendant's employee rolled forward down slight slope in alley in which plaintiff had parked automobile as instructed by defendant, and struck plaintiff. The Superior Court, Plumas County, J. O. Moncur, J., rendered a judgment adverse to defendant and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Adams, P. J., held that evidence justified judgment for plaintiff on ground that defendant knew brakes of automobile were defective but did not warn plaintiff of such fact, and that accident was not proximately caused by failure of plaintiff to pull emergency brake handle out as far as it would go when plaintiff parked automobile.

Judgment affirmed.

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when defendant's automobile which plaintiff was washing for defendant as defendant's employee rolled forward down slight slope in alley in which plaintiff had parked automobile as instructed by defendant, and struck plaintiff, evidence justified judgment for plaintiff on ground that defendant knew brakes of automobile were defective but did not warn plaintiff of such fact, and that accident was not proximately caused by failure of plaintiff to pull emergency brake handle out as far as it would go when plaintiff parked automobile.

3. Trial ⇐194(16)

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when defendant's automobile which plaintiff was washing for defendant as defendant's employee rolled forward down slight slope in alley in which plaintiff had parked automobile as instructed by defendant, given instructions were not erroneous as constituting statement that brake was defective and thus taking from jury question of whether brake was defective, in view of other given instructions.

$7,500 damages for injuries which were permanent in that head of a plaintiff's left

Russell A. Harris, Sacramento, for appellant.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment for $7500.00 in favor of plaintiff, after a verdict by a jury, in an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff by reason of negligence on the part of defendant.

[1] The evidence, taken in the aspect most favorable to plaintiff, as it must be by this court, shows that plaintiff was employed by defendant to wash the latter's automobile, and was instructed by defendant to take the vehicle to a place in an alley where there was a slight slope; that plaintiff parked the car at the designated place and set the brakes; and that while he was engaged in the process of washing the car, and was bending over a bucket in front of it, to rinse his wash rag, the car rolled forward and struck him, and, as a result, he sustained the injuries for which he sought recovery. The negligence of defendant relied upon by plaintiff was that the brakes on the car were defective, that defendant was aware of that fact, but did not so advise plaintiff, or warn him.

Defendant here contends that the evidence fails to support the implied finding of the jury that defendant was negligent, but, on the contrary, shows that plaintiff's own negligence was the proximate cause of his injuries; that the trial court erred in giving certain instructions; and that the verdict is excessive and obviously the result of passion and prejudice.

[2] As for the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, while there is conflict in some respects, defendant himself, called by plaintiff as a witness under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, admitted that he had trouble with the brakes of his car and had a new brake spring installed which proved inefficient, whereupon he, himself, put in another because the brakes slipped. An automobile mechanic who worked in a service station testified that about three weeks prior to the accident he worked on defendant's car, at which time it rolled backward; that he then checked the brakes, and that the spring was weak; that he mentioned to defendant that the spring was weak and should be checked. Another witness, a garage owner, testified as to the type of brakes on defendant's car, and the manner in which they operated, indicating that the spring might give way at any time. The chief of police of Portola testified that shortly after the accident he talked with defendant about the brakes and that defendant told him that he had trouble with the brake's releasing, and was going to have the manufacturer repair or exchange the brake assembly. Plaintiff testified that he had taken the car to the place indicated by defendant, had put it in low gear and pulled the emergency brake on—had pulled it out as far as it would go and believed it would hold the car. There is no evidence that defendant told plaintiff that the brake spring was defective or that he warned him regarding the possibility of its slipping, or advised him as to what if any precaution he should take to set the brake to prevent its slipping. This evidence is sufficient to sustain the verdict and judgment as to negligence on the part of defendant; and as for defendant's contention that the accident was proximately caused by failure of plaintiff to pull the brake handle out to its full extent, since the jury has found to the contrary, it cannot be said that the testimony does not sustain its conclusion.

Regarding appellant's criticism of three of the instructions given by the trial court, they read as follows:

"The owner of an automobile owes to a person whom he has employed to work on said automobile a duty to advise or warn said person of any mechanical defects of said automobile including defective brakes that he knows or would have known of on making reasonable inspection of said automobile."

"The owner of an automobile owes to his employee engaged to work on said automobile the duty of exercising ordinary care in making inspection of the mechanical condition of the brakes of said automobile and the question of determining whether the defendant herein made reasonable inspection thereof is one of fact for you to determine."

"The length of time during which a defective or dangerous condition existed may be so considerable as to justify an inference that if the owner of the automobile had exercised ordinary care he would have known of the existence of the condition in time to have had reasonable opportunity to repair or improve the same before the accident in question."

[3] Appellant contends that the wording of such instructions constituted a statement by the court that the brake was defective, and thus took from the jury its independent determination of that fact. He says that these were the only instructions given on the topic of the alleged defective brake. He does not contend that such instructions do not state the law correctly, see Miller v. Pacific Constructors, Inc., 68 Cal.App.2d 529, 545, 157 P.2d 57; Dunn v. Shamoon, 37 Cal.App.2d 486, 99 P.2d 1113; Roberts v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 102 Cal.App. 422, 427–428, 283 P. 353, and we are satisfied, after a careful review of the instructions as a whole, that appellant's criticism is without merit. We note particularly that the jury was advised, in an instruction presented by appellant, that plaintiff alleged that defendant was negligent in that he had knowledge of the alleged defective condition of the brakes and failed to warn plaintiff; that defendant denied those allegations; that they were not to assume. Because the accident happened, that defendant was careless or negligent; that the burden was on plaintiff to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that defendant was careless or negligent, and that, if shown, it was the proximate cause of the accident. It was also instructed that it was the exclusive province of the jury to determine the facts, that they were not to be influenced by anything the judge had said or done that might suggest that he inclined to favor either party; that the court had not expressed or intended to express any opinion in regard to what facts had been established or as to what inferences might be drawn; that the law did not require the defendant to prove that he was not negligent or careless, but placed the burden of proof of this issue upon plaintiff. We fail to see that defendant suffered an injury by the three instructions which he attacks.

[4] The remaining complaint of appellant, that the verdict of $7500.00 is excessive and the result of passion or prejudice, is also without merit. The evidence shows that plaintiff's injuries are permanent in that the head of the left thigh bone was forced through the socket of his pelvis, and will remain in that condition, causing him to limp and disabling him for heavy work such as he had done previously; that his knee still bothered him, and that he had had to quit a job of ditch digging because of pain in his left hip and leg; that he was required to wear special shoes, costing $27.00 a pair; and that his only earnings since the accident were for taking care of a sick man for three hours a day for twenty days.

[5] Appellant filed a motion for a new trial asserting as one ground therefor that the verdict was excessive. The motion was denied. It has been noted in numerous recent cases that in view of the decreased value of the dollar, verdicts that might, in earlier years, have been held to be excessive, can no longer be so considered. This was discussed by this court in Brown v. Boehm, 78 Cal.App.2d 595, 603, 178 P.2d 49. Also see our decisions in Couch v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 80 Cal.App.2d 857, 867, 183 P.2d 91; Potter v. Petroleum Corp., 93 Cal.App.2d 757, 761, 209 P.2d 986. Respondent directs our attention to the case of Du Val v. Boos Bros. Cafeteria Co., 45 Cal.App. 377, 378–379, 187 P. 767, decided in 1919, wherein an award of $7500.00 for a broken pelvis and attendant suffering from the accident was upheld as not excessive.

The judgment is affirmed.

Gray Co., legal owner, answered denying the allegations of the notice of seizure and intended forfeiture proceedings. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Philip H. Richards, J., entered judgment of forfeiture, and the Fred W. Gray Company, legal owner, appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that the legal owner had a constitutional right to a trial by jury of the issues of fact of the case, and the denial of a trial by jury to him constituted a miscarriage of justice which required a reversal of the judgment.

Judgment reversed.

In determinig whether action was one triable by a jury at common law, court is not bound by form of action, but rather by nature of rights involved and facts of particular case, and jury trial must be granted where gist of action is legal, where action is in reality cognizable at law.

14. Jury ⇐10

The right of trial by jury is not limited strictly to those cases in which it existed before adoption of Constitution, but is extended to cases of like nature as may afterwards arise, and embraces cases of same class thereafter arising. Const. art. 1, § 7.

15. Jury ⇐19(15)

Where at common law, prior to adoption of Constitution, a party against whom forfeiture of property used in violation of law was sought to be enforced was entitled to a trial by jury, such right exists now.

16. Statutes ⇐234½

The introduction of a new subject into a class renders it amenable to its general rules, not to its exceptions.

17. Jury ⇐19(15)

Where forfeiture proceeding against automobile was commenced under statute providing for forfeiture of vehicles used to unlawfully transport any narcotics, proceeding was type of action cognizable in a common-law court, and triable by a jury in the Court of Exchequer, and owner of automobile had constitutional right to trial by jury of issues of fact in case. Health and Safety Code, §§ 11610–11622; Const. art. 1, § 7.

18. Appeal and error ⇐1035

The denial of a trial by jury to one constitutionally entitled thereto constitutes a miscarriage of justice and requires a reversal of judgment. Const. art. 1, § 7.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal from a judgment ordering the forfeiture of an automobile to the State.

The State instituted this proceeding by filing a "Notice of Seizure and Intended Forfeiture Proceedings" as provided by sections 11612 and 11613 of the Health and Safety Code. The notice alleged that the automobile had been seized pursuant to section 11611 of that Code and that it "was used to unlawfully conceal, convey, carry or transport marihuana, and marihuana was unlawfully in the possession of an occupant." The registered owner and the legal owner answered separately, denying the allegations of the notice. The legal owner alleged that, prior to the seizure, it loaned $886.52 to the registered owner and received a chattel mortgage which was duly filed for record and is a first lien on the automobile. It also alleged that, prior to making the loan, it made a "reasonable investigation of the moral responsibility, character and reputation of the [registered owner] * * * and found the same to be good," and that there was a balance due of $865.57, with interest.

The court found that the automobile was used contrary to the provisions of section 11610 of the Health and Safety Code and that the legal owner did not, prior to the loan, make a reasonable investigation of the moral responsibility, character and reputation of the registered owner. The legal owner appeals from the judgment.

Prior to the setting of the cause for trial, appellant filed a demand for trial by jury. Thereafter respondent filed objections to the demand and a notice of motion to set the cause for trial without a jury. The respondent's motion was granted. When the cause came on for trial appellant renewed its demand and moved the trial judge for a trial by jury. The motion was denied.

Appellant contends it was denied its right to a trial by jury in violation of article I, section 7, of the Constitution of California.

Health and Safety Code section 11610 provides that a vehicle used to unlawfully transport any narcotic, or in which any narcotic is unlawfully kept, deposited or concealed, or is unlawfully possessed by an occupant thereof, shall be forfeited to the State. At the time of the seizure in 1948, section 11611 (amended, Stats.1949, ch. 1475, sec. 22) provided that any peace officer upon making, or attempting to make, any arrest for violation of the narcotics provisions of the Code, shall seize any vehicle so used unlawfully and hold it "as evidence until a forfeiture has been declared or a release ordered." Provision is made for notice to owners, answers, notice of hearing, hearing, and for judgment of forfeiture or release. Health and Safety Code, secs. 11612–11622, both inc.

[1–5] There can be no forfeiture of property without notice to the owner and a hearing at which he can be heard, except in a few cases of necessity, i. e., property kept in violation of law which is incapable of lawful use. Where the property is what is sometimes termed innocent property, threatening no danger to the public welfare, the owner must be afforded a fair opportunity to be heard. This is true whether it be a common-law or judicial forfeiture (one which does not take effect until by a judgment the rights of the state have been established in a suit instituted for that purpose), or a statutory or legislative forfeiture (one where the forfeiture is effective on the commission of the offense). In either case the law requires proceedings to be instituted for the purpose of ascertaining the facts of the forfeiture. People v. Broad, 216 Cal. 1, 3, 7, 12 P.2d 941. A statutory or legislative forfeiture is in rem against the property itself. A common-law or judicial forfeiture is in personam against a defendant, 37 C.J.S., Forfeitures, p. 5, § 2. The forfeiture prescribed by the Health and Safety Code is in rem. People v. Broad, 216 Cal. 1, 12 P.2d 941; 37 C.J.S., Forfeitures, p. 5, § 2. The effect of such a forfeiture is to transfer the title to the vehicle from the owner to the State.

[6–8] "The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate". Cal.Const., Art. I, sec. 7; Cal.Const. of 1849, Art. I, sec. 3. The right to trial by jury guaranteed by the Constitution is the right as it existed at common law at the time the Constitution was adopted. People v. Richardson, 138 Cal.App. 404, 408, 32 P.2d 433. The common law at the time the Constitution was adopted includes not only the lex non scripta but also the written statutes enacted by Parliament. Moore v. Purse Seine Net, 18 Cal.2d 835, 838, 118 P.2d 1. The common law respecting trial by jury as it existed in 1850 is the rule of decision in this State. Farrell v. City of Ontario, 39 Cal.App. 351, 356, 178 P. 740. Any act of the legislature attempting to abridge the constitutional right is void. People v. Kelly, 203 Cal. 128, 133, 263 P. 226; People v. Cal.App.2d Supp. 769, 774, 70 P.2d 721.[1] It is the right to trial by jury as it existed at common law which is preserved; and what that right is, is a purely historical question, a fact which is to be ascertained like any other social, political or legal fact. The right is the historical right enjoyed at the time it was guaranteed by the Constitution. It is necessary, therefore, to ascertain what was the rule of the English common law upon this subject in 1850.

Long before the adoption of the California Constitution there were numerous statutes in England providing for the seizure and forfeiture of property used in violation of law.[2]

At common law the trial of actions for forfeiture to the Crown of property used in violation of law was in the Court of Exchequer. "The term 'Common Law' often refers to those principles of English Law which were evolved in the Common Law Courts, as opposed to the principles which were applied in the Courts of Chancery and Admiralty and the Ecclesiastical Courts. The Courts of Common Law before the passing of the Judicature Acts, 1873-5, were the three Royal Courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas or Common Bench, and Exchequer, which had emerged from the King's Council (Curia Regis) as separate Courts by the end of the thirteenth century." Phillips, The Principles of English Law and the Constitution, 70.[3] The Court of Exchequer was not a criminal court; and all suits for penalties, though for the King, were considered as civil. Burns, Justice of the Peace (23d ed.) Vol. I, p. 806. By the end of the thirteenth century there was a recognized distinction between the Exchequer of Account and Receipt, and the Court of Exchequer or "Exchequer of Pleas." Radcliffe & Cross, The English Legal System, p. 54. The proceedings of the Court of Exchequer were originally confined to bills by the Attorney General to recover money or property for the Crown. Idem. 160. It was originally, and continued to be, a common-law court. Idem. 166; Plucknett, a Concise History of the Common Law, 4th ed., 152. The Court of Exchequer was absorbed by the Supreme Court of Judicature in 1875. Idem. 201.

Blackstone says: "An information on behalf of the crown, filed in the exchequer by the king's attorney general, is a method if fuit for recovering money or other chattels, * * * It is grounded on no writ under feal, but merely on the intimation of the king's officer the attorney-general, who 'gives the court to underftand and be informed of' the matter in question: upon which the party is put to anfwer, and trial is had, as in fuits between fubject and fubject. The moft ufual informations are thofe * * * for any forfeiture due to the crown upon the breach of a penal ftatute." 3 Bl.Com. (12th ed.) 261.[4]

In Moore v. Purse Seine Net, 18 Cal. 2d 835, 118 P.2d 1, 4, certiorari granted, C. J. Hendry Co. v. Moore, 316 U.S. 643, 62 S.Ct. 1036, 86 L.Ed. 1728, it was held that: a proceeding for forfeiture of a fish net used in violation of law is a type of action that was cognizable in a common-law court; "an action in rem can be brought by the state in an ordinary common law court for the forfeiture of goods or articles used in violation of laws imposing such a penalty," 18 Cal.2d page 839, 118 P.2d page 4; "[s]uch forfeiture to the state of illegally used articles has continued as an accepted common law procedure," 18 Cal.2d at page 840, 118 P.2d at page 4; and "the forfeiture of illegally used nets authorized by the California statute involves a traditional common law remedy cognizable in the state courts, even though the statute was enacted long subsequent to the Judiciary Act." 18 Cal.2d at page 842, 118 P.2d at page 5.

While perhaps not binding as a precedent because certiorari was granted, the conclusions of our Supreme Court in the Moore case were followed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the decision of the case, C. In what Dean Dickinson[5] has described as "at once a monumental piece of erudition and a notable contribution to the meaning of the much mooted phrase 'common law remedy,'"[6] Mr. Chief Justice Stone, writing for the court, said, 318 U.S. 133, 63 S. Ct. 501, 87 L.Ed. 666:

chequer. The Exchequer gave such a remedy for the forfeiture of articles seized on land for the violation of law. And, concurrently with the admiralty, is entertained true proceedings in rem for the forfeiture of vessels for violations on navigable waters. Such suits in the Exchequer were begun on information and were against the vessel or article to be condemned. Under the provisions of many statutes the suit might be brought by an informer qui tam, who was permitted to share in the proceeds of the forfeited article; the judgment was of forfeiture and the forfeited article was ordered to be sold. This was the established procedure certainly as early as the latter part of the seventeenth century. * * *

"Separate courts exercising the jurisdiction of the Court of Exchequer were never established in the American Colonies. Instead, that judisdiction was absorbed by the common law courts which entertained suits for the forfeiture of property under English or local statutes authorizing its condemnation. Long before the adoption of the Constitution the common law courts in the Colonies—and later in the states during the period of Confederation—were exercising judisdiction in rem in the enforcement of forfeiture statutes. Like the Exchequer, in cases of seizure on navigable waters they exercised a jurisdiction concurrently with the courts of admiralty. * * * By that time [about 1700], the jurisdiction of common law courts to condemn ships and cargoes for violation of the Navigation Acts had been firmly established, apparently without question, and was regularly exercised throughout the Colonies. In general the suits were brought against the vessel or article to be condemned, were tried by jury, closely followed the procedure in Exchequer, and if successful resulted in judgments of forfeiture or condemnation with a provision for sale. [Italics added.]

"The rise of the vice-admiralty courts—prompted in part by the Crown's desire to have access to a forum not controlled by the obstinate resistance of American juries—did not divest, the colonial common law courts of their jurisdiction to proceed in rem in cases of forfeiture and condemnation. * * *" [318 U.S. 133, 63 S.Ct. at page 501, 87 L.Ed. at page 674.]

"It is noteworthy that Blackstone's Commentaries, more read in America before the Revolution than any other law book, referred to the information in rem in the Court of Exchequer as the procedure by which forfeitures were inflicted for violation of Acts of Parliament. Bk. III, p. 262. And Kent, in his Commentaries, pointed out that 'seizures, in England, for violation of the laws of revenue, trade or navigation, were tried by a jury in the Court of Exchequer, according to the course of the common law; and though a proceeding be in rem, it is not necessarily a proceeding or cause in the admiralty' (12th Ed., Vol. 1, p. 374). He declared that, within the meaning of § 9 of the Judiciary Act, the common law was competent to give such a remedy 'because, under the vigorous system of the English law, such prosecutions in rem are in the Exchequer, according to the course of the common law'. [Italics added.] * * *" [318 U. S. 133, 63 S.Ct. at page 509, 87 L.Ed. at page 675.]

"* * * In all this we perceive a common understanding of judges, lawyers and text writers, both before and after the adoption of the Constitution of the common law nature of the procedure and judgment in rem in forfeiture cases and of its use in such proceedings in the Exchequer and in the American common law courts.

"We conclude that the common law as received in this country at the time of the adoption of the Constitution gave a remedy in rem in cases of forfeiture, and that it is a 'common law remedy' * * *."

There is evidence that at a very early date (1236 and 1299) in the history of the Court of Exchequer the trial of common-law actions was by jury.[7] Apparently during that period the jury consisted of twelve witnesses gathered from the neighborhood to decide disputed questions of fact upon their previous knowledge.[8]

As early as 1301, a case involving forfeiture of a ship and goods for piracy was tried by a jury.[9] In 1457 on an information in the Exchequer for the King's goods which were stolen, the Exchequer Chamber said, "the jurors are the judges of the fact."[10] In 1662 a statute was enacted providing for a jury of "natural and free born fubjects of the King" in actions, suits and informations commenced for the forfeiture of ships or goods used in unlawful importation or exportation.[11] In 1766 a statute was enacted providing that in suits for forfeitures under the Act a defendant could plead the general issue "and if it fhall appear to have fo done, then the jury fhall find for the defendant or defendants." [12]

A case decided in 1766, Mitchell, who prosecutes for the King and Himself, v. Torup,—Exchequer—Parker, 227, 145 Eng. Rep. 764, was an information of seizure. It alleged that the plaintiff seized a ship and goods therein for unlawfully bringing the goods into Britain. The prayer was that the ship and goods remain forfeited. Issue was joined. The cause was tried by a jury. In the course of the opinion the court said: "it is objected, that the penalty or forfeiture, imposed by the fourth clause of the act, is only applicable to cases where there is some crime or guilt; but no crime or guilt can be imputed to the master, mate or owners, without their privity, the mariners being the only criminal or guilty persons, and therefore they ought to be the only sufferers. To which I answer, that though penalty or forfeiture, generally speaking, is the consequences of some crime or guilt, yet neither penalty nor forfeiture necessarily imply the one or the other, though punishment always does. To show this, several instances were mentioned upon the arguments: as where a murder is committed with the sword of an innocent man, the sword is forfeited; the like of all deodands. So, by the 4th of William and Mary, c. 8, the horses of innocent owners, upon which robberies are committed, are forfeited. And by the 8th of Anne, c. 7, s. 17, the vessels, boats, horses and other cattle, and carriages, made use of in the landing or removing, carriage or conveyance of any uncustomed or prohibited goods, are forfeited. And there are several other acts to the same purpose, which I shall barely refer to 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 11, s. 7. 1 W. & M. c. 32, s. 2. 7 & 8 W. 3, c. 28, s. 8. 8 Ann. c. 13, s. 16. 10 Geo. 1, c. 10, s. 27. 12 Geo. 2, c. 24, s. 11. 24 Geo. 2, c. 41, s. 22. But by the 4th clause of the Navigation Act, the forfeiture is not upon the person, but upon the ship; nor is this a proceeding in personam, but in rem, for the condemnation of the ship as forfeited. And I am credibly informed, that the informations upon this clause of the act have been in this form from the time of passing it, which shows how this law has been understood; and as no privity has been laid in them, it was not necessary to prove more than was laid. And though I agree that the jury are not concluded from finding the truth of the fact where it is within the issue; yet here the jury have found the issue for the plaintiff: and their finding the importation to be without the privity of the master, mate or owners, is nugatory goods, were also tried by a jury in the Court of Exchequer.[15]

Many of the English statutes provided for forfeiture of the conveyance used in carrying articles in violation of law, together with all goods therein.[13]

The determination of a question of fact by means of a jury, and public and oral procedure, was common to all the courts of law. Fischel, The English Constitution, 237, 238, 263. "* * * each form of action was started by a different writ and had its own peculiarities, but there was one characteristics possessed by nearly all of them, the submission of issues of fact to a jury. It is true that the common law knew of other methods of trial; appeals of felony and writs of right might result in trial by battle, and the defendant in an action of debt or detinue could resort to 'compurgation'; but, broadly speaking, one may say that actions in the common law courts were tried by jury." Radcliffe & Cross, The English Legal System, p. 83. Blackstone says: "For it is a part of the liberties of England, and greatly for the safety of the

The common-law courts in the Colonies and in the states during the period of Confederation exercised jurisdiction in rem in the enforcement of forfeiture statutes. In general the actions were brought against the article to be condemned, were tried by jury, closely followed the procedure in the Court of Exchequer,[17] and, if successful, resulted in judgments of forfeiture or condemnation with a provision for sale.[18]

In C. J. Hendry Co. v. Moore, supra, 318 U.S. 133, 63 S.Ct. 499, 510, 87 L.Ed. 663, 675, it was said that the court "has repeatedly declared that, in cases of forfeiture of articles seized on land for violation of federal statutes, the district courts proceed as courts of common law according to the course of the Exchequer on informations in rem with trial by jury. Bacon's Abridgement, 5th ed. Vol. 1, p. 61. Bacon says that most penal statutes directed that the penalty might be recovered by action or information, and "a new trial may be had after a verdict for the defendant. Wilfon v. Raftall, 4 Term. Rep. 753," (Idem. Italics added.), and "Such information may demand what is due to the informer, without mentioning what is due to the king; alfo, if the quantum depend on what fhall be found by the jury, a blank may be left for the fum," (Idem. 63. Italics added.) and "Alfo where a ftatute limits fuits by an informer qui tam to other courts, yet any one may, by conftruction of law, exhibit an information in the Exchequer for the whole penalty, for the ufe of the king," (Idem. 65.) and "If the jury find a general verdict with one penalty for the plaintiff, and he apply it to one count, he fhall not be permitted afterwards to apply it to another count. * * *" (Idem. 69.) 3 Bl. In Virginia by 1690 forfeiture cases under the Navigation Acts were tried at common law by a jury. In Maryland forfeiture cases were tried generally in courts of oyer and terminer acting with the jury. In Massachusetts forfeiture cases under the Navigation Acts were regularly tried by the Court of Assistants before juries, apparently in the same manner as other common-law cases. In New Jersey proceedings to condemn forfeited property were tried by a jury as early as 1685. In Pennsylvania forfeiture cases under the Navigation Acts were tried in the common-law courts by a jury. In New Hampshire forfeiture cases were tried in the court of common pleas with a jury as early as 1679. In Connecticut a cargo of a vessel was condemned by a jury in the county court in 1692. In Maine a vessel was cleared by a jury in 1680. Idem. footnote 4. In New York before 1691 forfeiture cases were tried in the General Quarter Sessions of the Peace with a jury; after 1691 in the Supreme Court of Judicature with a jury. C. J. Hendry Co. v. 153 N.Y. 188, 47 N.E. 302, 60 Am.St.Rep. 609,[20] the Supreme Court of Oklahoma in Keeter v. State, 1921, 82 Okl. 89, 198 P. 866, 17 A.L.R. 557,[21] and the Supreme Court of Oregon in State v. 1920 Studebaker Touring Car, 1926, 120 Or. 254, 251 P. 701, 50 A.L.R. 81,[22] held that before a claimant can be deprived of his property in proceedings of this kind he is entitled to a trial by jury as a matter of constitutional right.[23]

We are referred to State v. Lee, 113 Kan. 462, 215 P. 299, and In re One Chevrolet Automobile, 205 Ala. 337, 87 So. 592, in support of the claim that appellant was not constitutionally entitled to a trial by jury. In the Lee case the statute expressly provided that "All automobiles * * * used in the transportation or carrying of intoxicating liquors * * * are hereby declared to be common nuisances", and that if the court after trial "in a summary manner" should find that the automobile was "at the time a common nuisance," it should be forfeited. Laws 1919, c. 217. The court held that the summary abatement of nuisances without judicial process or proceeding was well known to the common law long prior to the adoption of the Kansas Constitution; that, therefore, the statute did not violate the constitutional guaranty of trial by jury. In the Alabama case the action was by the state to condemn an automobile used in transporting contraband liquor. Without discussion of the common law or the authorities, the court merely said that the statute "creates a cause of action and prescribes a remedy for the enforcement of same not existing at the time of the adoption of the Constitution." [205 Ala. 337, 87 So. 593.] The statement is erroneous. The case was not well considered and is not persuasive.

Van Oster v. Kansas, 272 U.S. 465, 47 S.Ct. 133, 71 L.Ed. 354, 358, cited by respondent, is not analogous. The Kansas statute declared that a vehicle used in the transportation of intoxicating liquors was "a common nuisance". Laws 1919, c. 217. The record did not indicate that a jury trial was demanded and the question was not raised by the assignments of error.

[9] The right of trial by jury did not exist at common law in a suit to abate a public nuisance. People v. McCaddon, 48 Cal.App. 790, 792, 192 P. 325. Hence it is not a constitutional right now.

[10, 11] Automobiles, carriages, wagons, horses, and mules, that are ordinarily used for lawful purposes cannot be classified with narcotics, gambling paraphernalia, counterfeit coins, diseased cattle, obscene books and pictures, decayed fruit and fish, unwholesome meat, infected clothing, or other contraband, which are ordinarily used for an unlawful purpose, and are public nuisances per se.[24] While property kept in violation of law which is incapable of lawful use and declared to be a nuisance per se may be forfeited without a trial by jury under the police power, it does not follow that property ordinarily used for lawful purposes—innocent property—may be forfeited without a trial by jury where an issue of fact is joined as to whether the property was being used for an unlawful purpose or is to be taken from an innocent owner. There is no general constitutional right to a jury trial in actions for the seizure and forfeiture of contraband articles.[25] But property is not contraband or or a public nuisance merely because it was instrumental in the commission of a public offense.

[12, 13] It is argued that this proceeding for the forfeiture of property used in violation of law is a special proceeding, equitable in nature. Statements in some of the cases to the effect that the relief sought in this type of proceeding is such as under the old system obtained only in a court of chancery, and, therefore, of equitable cognizance, were either not necessary to the decision or if pertinent they are patently not in harmony with the historical fact. The right to a trial by jury cannot be avoided by merely calling an action a special proceeding or equitable in nature. If that could be done, the legislature, by providing new remedies and new judgments and decrees in form equitable, could in all cases dispense with jury trials, and thus entirely defeat the provision of the Constitution. The legislature cannot convert a legal right into an equitable one so as to infringe upon the right of trial by jury.[26] The provision of the Constitution does not permit the legislature to confer on the courts the power of trying according to the course of chancery any question which has always been triable according to the course of the common law by a jury. If the action has to deal with ordinary common-law rights cognizable in courts of law, it is to that extent an action at law.[27] In determining whether the action was one triable by a jury at common law, the court is not bound by the form of the action but rather by the nature of the rights involved and the facts of the particular case—the gist of the action. A jury trial must be granted where the gist of the action is legal, where the action is in reality cognizable at law.

[14-16] It is suggested that the statute was enacted since the adoption of the Constitution, and for that reason is not within the guaranty of trial by jury. The constitutional right of trial by jury is not to be narrowly construed. It is not limited strictly to those cases in which it existed before the adoption of the Constitution but is extended to cases of like nature as may afterwards arise. It embraces cases of the same class thereafter arising. At common law, prior to the adoption of the Constitution, a party against whom the forfeiture of property used in violation of law (then a carriage, wagon, horse or mule, now usually an automobile), was sought to be enforced was entitled to a trial by jury. Consequently such right exists now.[28] The introduction of a new subject into a class renders it amenable to its general rules, not to its exceptions.[29]

There were petty offenses against statutes or municipal ordinances which were not triable by jury at the time the Constitution was adopted. As to them, the right of trial by jury has never existed; and, since they were triable without a jury when the Constitution was adopted, they are now triable without a jury. Blackstone gives a number of illustrations.[30] In none of the illustrations given by Blackstone was the power sanctioned or upheld to enforce, in a summary proceeding, without a jury, the forfeiture of property which may be, and ordinarily is, used for lawful purposes.

We, like the Supreme Court of Oklahoma, "are cognizant of the fact that a jury trial is not an infallible mode of ascertaining truth, and like all human institutions it has its imperfections; still it remains the best protection for the citizen in his property rights as well as his liberty. It has stood the test of experience better than any other legal institution that ever existed among men, and it has met with universal approbation among those who lived under it, and by the greatest thinkers who have investigated it impartially. It is the imperative duty of the courts to jealously guard any unauthorized encroachment upon the right of trial by jury as guaranteed to the citizens by the Constitution." Keeter v. State, 82 Okl. 89, 198 P. 866, 873, 17 A.L.R. 557.

[17] We conclude that this forfeiture proceeding by the State is the type of action which was cognizable in a common-law court, and triable by a jury in the Court of Exchequer, according to the course of the common law; that trial by jury was recognized as a right in the trial of actions for the forfeiture of property seized because used in violation of law at common law at the time of the adoption of the Constitution of California, and that appellant had a constitutional right to a trial by jury of the issues of fact in this case.

McGUFFIN v. MAURER.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 23, 1950.

Lyman E. McGuffin brought action against William Maurer for damages for libel. A judgment for plaintiff was entered by the Superior Court of San Mateo County, Edmund Scott, J., and the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that defendant could not rely upon acts of a co-candidate with whom plaintiff campaigned jointly as a team for membership on city council to establish defense of truth of the publication, in absence of a foundation showing plaintiff's knowledge of and responsibility for co-candidate's conduct.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Threats ⇐3

Fact that plaintiff and another campaigned jointly as a team for membership on city council would not make plaintiff responsible for his co-candidate's alleged attempt by blackmail to induce another candidate to withdraw from the race.

2. Principal and agent ⇐8

Agency requires precedent authorization or subsequent ratification.

3. Conspiracy ⇐24

Conspiracy requires as one of its elements a knowledge of the unlawful purpose, since conspiracy requires a corrupt agreement or concert of action.

4. Evidence ⇐260

In action for libel based on newspaper article charging that plaintiff and a co-candidate with whom plaintiff campaigned jointly as a team for membership on city council used blackmail to force another candidate to withdraw from the race, trial court properly ruled that acts of plaintiff's co-candidate were not binding on plaintiff and could not be proved against him to establish truth of publication as a defense unless a foundation showing plaintiff's knowledge of and responsibility for co-candidate's conduct was first laid. Civ. Code, § 48a.

5. Appeal and error ⇐1043(6)

Sustaining objection to question asked plaintiff on cross-examination as to whether he had visited either certain person or such person's wife in attempt to get such person to withdraw from race for city councilman, standing alone, might have been error, but was without prejudice, in view of subsequent cross-examination wherein plaintiff testified that he at no time had any knowledge that such person had been asked to withdraw from the race.

J. W. Coleberd and Richard P. Lyons, So. San Francisco, for appellant.

Saul N. Ross, San Bruno, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment awarding plaintiff $500 actual and $250 punitive damages for libel. Plaintiff and one Risso were the two successful candidates at an election for city councilmen of San Bruno. They conducted a joint campaign, had a joint campaign committee, issued point campaign literature and referred to themselves in the conduct of their campaign as a "team."

One Cunningham was a rival candidate for the same office. Shortly before the election at a meeting with Cunningham at which Risso was present, but not the plaintiff, an effort was made to induce Cunningham to withdraw as a candidate. Out of this meeting the libelous publication grew. After the election of plaintiff and Risso defendant published an article in his newspaper headed: "Blackmail Marks Local Election," in which it was stated:

"The recent City election campaign was a far cry from having been the 'clean' campaign the McGuffin-Risso team had declared they would conduct. Instead it degenerated into a disgraceful affair, marked by intimidation, coercion, and blackmail. * * *

"Apparently determined to win at all costs, the victors * * * even resorted to coercion and blackmail on the eve of the election to force one of the leading candidates to withdraw from the race to assure the election of both McGuffin and Risso."

Then followed a more detailed statement with quotations from other newspapers. The article continued:

"Do You Know: That one of the members of the successful McGuffin-Risso team * * * was among the blackmailers who cornered and then browbeat Council candidate 'X' into signing the withdrawal papers? that his teammate was in on the deal?———

"Fellow citizens, in view of the indisputable blackmail facts can you truly feel secure in the sanctity of your home with blackmailers nestling in City Offices?"

The plaintiff, McGuffin, in writing demanded the publication of a retraction, after which defendant, instead of a retraction, published a reaffirmation of the previous publication thus satisfying for plaintiff's action the requirements of section 48a, Civil Code.

[1-3] The libelous character of the publication as to plaintiff is not questioned, the sole defense being the truth of the publication. The fact that plaintiff and Risso campaigned jointly as a team standing alone obviously would not make plaintiff responsible for Risso's attempt by blackmail (assuming its proof) to induce Cunningham to withdraw as a candidate. Plaintiff testified that he had no knowledge of the intended meeting with Cunningham and neither on principles of agency nor conspiracy could plaintiff be held responsible for the attempt of his co-candidate to use blackmail in the effort to eliminate an opposing candidate. Agency requires precedent authorization or subsequent ratification, neither of which was proved; and conspiracy requires as one of its elements a knowledge of the unlawful purpose, People v. Bucchierre, 57 Cal.App.2d 153, 163, 134 P.2d 505, since a conspiracy requires a corrupt agreement or concert of action. 2 Wharton's Criminal Law, 12th ed., § 1608, p. 1865.

[4] There is no substance in the complaint of errors in the exclusion of evidence. The court properly ruled that the acts of Risso were not binding on plaintiff and might not be proved against him unless a foundation showing plaintiff's knowledge of and responsibility for Risso's conduct was first laid.

[5] In an effort to lay such foundation plaintiff was asked on cross-examination: "Do you know whether or not Mr. Risso visited either Mr. John Cunningham or Mr. John Cunningham's wife in an attempt to get him to withdraw from this race for City Councilman?" The sustaining of an objection to this question, standing alone, might have been error, but the subsequent cross-examination shows that it was without prejudice. At a later point in the cross-examination the following question to plaintiff and answer by him appear:

"Q. Is it your statement now that you at no time had any knowledge that Mr. Cunningham was to be asked to withdraw from this race? A. I had absolutely no knowledge there was to be any meeting, that he was to be asked any questions, and his name had never been mentioned to me, other than that of any other candidate in the race."

Instead of pursuing the inquiry further counsel for defendant immediately terminated his cross-examination with the statement: "That is all."

We find no prejudicial error in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

Ex parte BARENTS.

Cr. 2236.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Oct. 2, 1950.

Proceeding in the matter of the application of Jacoba Marie Barents on behalf of Baby Boy Barents for a writ of habeas corpus to obtain custody of minor child from proposed adoptive parents. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, J., held that where consent to adoption of illegitimate minor child was fully and freely given by mother without fraud or duress and accepted by Department of Social Welfare before statutory amendment providing for withdrawal of consent with court approval became effective, such consent was irrevocable and attempted withdrawal thereof did not deprive Superior Court of jurisdiction to proceed in adoption proceeding.

Writ discharged.

1. Habeas corpus ⇐120

Action of trial court in discharging writ of habeas corpus issued on mother's petition to obtain custody of minor child from proposed adoptive parents was not res judicata in habeas corpus proceeding subsequently instituted by mother in appellate court for the same purpose, where prior proceeding in trial court had been disposed of solely upon issues of law without any evidence being taken.

2. Bastards ⇐15

The mother of an illegitimate minor child is entitled to its custody. Civ. Code, § 200.

3. Habeas corpus ⇐99(3)

Mother's right to custody of illegitimate minor child during proceedings for its adoption by others could not be determined in habeas corpus proceeding instituted by mother, in absence of evidence as to best interests of child. Civ.Code, § 200.

4. Adoption ⇐1, 10

The matter of adoption and the procedure under which it must be accomplished are entirely statutory and have never been a part of the constitutional jurisdiction given to courts. Civ.Code, §§ 224, 226.

5. Adoption ⇐7

Consent of parent or parents entitled to custody of minor child and charged with duty of caring for it is essential to give superior court jurisdiction to make an order of adoption. Civ.Code, § 224.

6. Infants ⇐2

The state in its position of parens patriae is charged with a continuing interest in the welfare of minor children within its borders.

7. Statutes ⇐263

Every presumption and intendment is against retroactive application of legislation and statutes are presumed to operate prospectively only and will be so construed unless the legislative intent to make them retroactive clearly appears. Civ. Code, § 3.

8. Adoption ⇐7

Statutory amendment providing for withdrawal with court approval of parents' consent to adoption of minor child did not apply retroactively to attempted withdrawal after effective date of amendment of consent to adoption of illegitimate child given by mother before amendment became effective. Civ. Code, §§ 3, 224, 226, 226a.

9. Adoption ⇐7

Where consent to adoption of illegitimate minor child was fully and freely given by mother without fraud or duress in the manner prescribed by statute and accepted by Department of Social Welfare before 1949 amendment providing for withdrawal of consent with court approval, became effective, such consent was irrevocable and attempted withdrawal thereof by mother did not deprive superior court of jurisdiction to proceed in adoption proceeding. Civ. Code, §§ 3, 224, 226, 226a.

10. Adoption ⇐13

Superior court must determine on the hearing of adoption petition whether adoption is then for the best interest of child, all the facts and circumstances being considered. Civ.Code, § 226.

11. Adoption ⇐7, 13

Mother may contest adoption of minor child, though she has previously given her consent thereto, and changed conditions of either the proposed adoptive parents or consenting parents may weigh heavily for or against the granting of petition. Civ. Code, §§ 224, 226.

12. Evidence ⇐83(1)

It must be assumed that Department of Social Welfare performed the duty expressly imposed upon it by statute of accepting mother's consent to adoption of illegitimate minor child, particularly in absence of any showing to the contrary. Civ. Code, §§ 224, 226.

Gordon McKenzie, Ruth E. Bates, Santa Rosa, for petitioner.

C. W. Anderson, Santa Rosa, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Justice.

[1] On May 11, 1949, there was born to petitioner, Jacoba Marie Barents, a male child. The child was illegitimate. On May 15th following petitioner signed a written instrument, stating that she was giving the infant into the possession of respondents, Jacob Jens Jorgensen and Mildred Jorgensen, for purposes of adoption and that she would sign any further documents necessary to effectuate such adoption. On June 17th respondents herein, having had the infant in their possession since the mother gave it to them, petitioned the Superior Court for Sonoma County for the adoption of the baby. Pursuant to statute the State Department of Social Welfare was notified and on July 28th the mother signed, in the presence of an agent of the Department, the form of consent to adoption required by the statute. Therein she stated that she was the mother of the infant, was entitled to its sole custody and did give her full and free consent to its adoption by respondents herein. On October 20th following she gave to the Department a document entitled "withdrawal of consent", stating therein that she did thereby withdraw her consent to the adoption of the child by respondents and refused to consent thereto. Thereafter she filed in the Sonoma County court a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, wherein she sought to have the child taken from the custody of the proposed adoptive parents and given to her. That court having issued the writ upon motion, discharged the same and it is conceded here that no evidence was taken and that the matter was disposed of purely upon issues of law. The action of the trial court is therefore not res judicata here. In re White, 49 Cal.App.2d 160, 121 P.2d 100. The mother thereupon petitioned this court for a writ of habeas corpus, which was issued, and respondents having appeared in opposition to the petition, and no issue of fact having been raised, the matter has been submitted for decision.

It is the claim of petitioner that although her consent to adoption had been given she had a right to withdraw that consent at any time before the final decree of adoption should have been made by the Superior Court and that she has exercised that right; that therefore the Superior Court is without jurisdiction to proceed further in the adoption proceedings and would be without jurisdiction to make any order of adoption, and that as a consequence she is now entitled to the custody of her child.

[2, 3] The mother of an illegitimate minor is entitled to its custody. Civ.Code, Sec. 200. That right of custody has not in this case been interrupted or terminated by any judicial decree. However, we understand that the parties wish this matter decided upon the narrow issue of jurisdiction first above stated. Prima facie the petitioner here might be entitled to the custody of her infant during the adoption proceedings, but the determination of whether or not an order to that effect should be made would involve findings as to the best interests of the minor and neither by evidence introduced nor by suggestion has that issue been considered. We shall, therefore, confine this decision strictly to the issues which the parties have asked this court to determine.

[4, 5] The necessity of consent to adoption either by the parents of legitimate children or by the mother of an illegitimate child is not and could not be disputed, but the question of whether or not in adoption proceedings, such consent having been given, it can then be withdrawn prior to adoption, and the conditions under which it may be withdrawn, have been the subject of conflicting decisions in the courts of this State and of other states. It is conceded by all, as indeed it must be, that in this State the matter of adoption and of the procedure under which it must be accomplished is completely statutory and has never been a part of the constitutional jurisdiction given to courts. In re Stevens' Estate, 83 Cal. 322, 330, 23 P. 379, 17 Am.St.Rep. 252; In re Williams' Estate, 102 Cal. 70, 81, 36 P. 407, 41 Am.St.Rep. 163; In re Estate of Sharon, 179 Cal. 447, 454, 177 P. 283. Responsive to the need for legislative action our Legislature has from the earliest years of statehood provided a statutory plan whereunder adoptions could be carried out. A fundamental requisite has always been the consent of the parent or parents entitled to the custody of the child and charged with the duties of caring for it. As was said by the Supreme Court in Re Matter of Cozza, 163 Cal. 514, 522, 126 P. 161, 164, Ann.Cas.1914A, 214: "* * * Consent lies at the foundation of statutes of adoption, and under our law this consent is made absolutely essential to confer jurisdiction on the superior court to make an order of adoption, unless the conditions or exceptions exist specially provided by the statute itself and which render such consent of the parents unnecessary. Unless such consent is given, or, for the exceptional causes expressly enumerated is dispensed with, the court has no jurisdiction in the matter."

[6] The state in its position of parens patriae is of course charged with a continuing interest in the welfare of children within its borders and our State has surrounded the matter of their custody and care, including their adoption, with many protective statutory laws. With regard to adoption, the statutory scheme is complete and detailed and the requisite of consent has been carefully preserved and is general, except where statutorily defined exceptions exist. With these exceptions we are not here concerned.

With respect to consent the Civil Code, by Section 224, provides that an illegitimate child cannot be adopted "without the consent of its parents if living". By Section 226 the Code declares that the first step in an adoption proceeding is the filing of a petition for that purpose in the superior court, and the giving of immediate notice of the pendency of such proceeding to the State Department of Social Welfare. It is then provided that in cases where consent is required such consent must be signed in the presence of an agent of the Department and filed with the clerk of the court. The statute then declares that with respect to cases such as this, the consent having been so executed, it shall be the duty of the Department to accept it and to ascertain whether the child is a proper subject for adoption, and whether the proposed home is suitable, filing its report on those matters with the court. It is provided that the consent shall be on a form prescribed by the Department. The provision making it the duty of the Department to accept the consent was added to the existing code requirements in 1945 and was in effect when the consent of petitioner here was given. In 1949 the Legislature added a statutory provision affecting such consents by declaring in Section 226a of the Civil Code that once given such consent to adoption might not be withdrawn except with court approval, and providing a method whereby the issue of the right of the consenting parent or parents to withdraw the consent might be presented to and determined by the court in which the adoption proceedings were pending. This last legislation went into effect after the consent of petitioner here had been given, but before her attempted withdrawal of that consent.

[7, 8] Petitioner has not attempted to avail herself of this method of obtaining court approval to her withdrawal of her consent, contending that the provisions therefor do not apply to her; that the consent she gave was withdrawable at her pleasure at any time before an order of adoption should have been signed, and that the legislation referred to could not take away her absolute right which she claims existed and would exist from the time she gave her consent up to and until such order was made. We may say here that if, under the statutes governing adoption, it could be said that the consenting parent or parents had such right of unilateral action and could so withdraw and revoke consent so given then the Legislature could not take away that absolute right by legislation adopted during the interval between the giving of such qualified and revocable consent and the termination of the adoption proceedings. On this point we think it enough to say that every presumption and intendment is against such retroactive application of legislation. Statutes are presumed to operate prospectively only, Jones v. Union Oil Co., 218 Cal. 775, 25 P.2d 5, statutes will be construed as prospective in operation unless the legislative intent to make them retroactive clearly appears, Krause v. Rarity, 210 Cal. 644, 293 P. 62, 77 A.L.R. 1327; our Civil Code provides that no part thereof is retroactive unless expressly so declared, Civ.Code, Sec. 3, which declaration does not here exist; and no reason has been suggested, and we can think of none, why retroactive effect ought to be given in this instance.

[9] But in our opinion petitioner here, having given her consent under the statute in force at the time and in the form in which she gave it, was not free to withdraw the same or to revoke it merely because she had changed her mind, whether that change originated in whim and caprice or rationally by reason of changed conditions, which latter ground she avers in her petition. When the Legislature, exercising its wellnigh plenary power over the subject of adoptions, required the consent of a parent or parents to the adoption of a child and when it provided that such consent should be given by the execution of a form prescribed by the Department and before an agent thereof; when it provided further that this consent should be accepted by the Department and filed in the adoption proceedings, it could only have meant, although not expressly so declaring, as it later did, that the consent which the statute required was then to be considered as having been given irrevocably. We think that from that moment on the consent continued without the power of revocation until the court should have ruled on the adoption. This assumes, of course, that the consent was, as the form declared it to be, fully and freely given without fraud or duress, but we think that when such real consent had been so given it was intended that the statutory requisite of consent had thereby been irrevocably supplied.

[10, 11] If the consent is irrevocable then its attempted withdrawal has not deprived the superior court of jurisdiction to proceed. This, however, is not to say that the doors of the court are closed to the mother. Under our laws that court is charged with the duty of determining, on the hearing of the adoption petition, whether adoption is then for the best interest of the child, all the facts and circumstances being considered, and if she desires to do so, the mother may contest the adoption, even though she has given consent at an earlier time. The welfare of the child can never be excluded from the issues, no matter what preliminary action its parent or parents may have taken. The changed conditions of either the proposed adopters or of the consenting parents may heavily weigh the scales for or against the granting of the petition.

In Erickson v. Raspperry, 320 Mass. 333, 69 N.E.2d 474, where consent to adoption had been given by the mother of an illegitimate child and where, after such consent, the mother had married and upon proof thereof the court in which the proceedings for adoption were pending found that it was for the best interests of the child that the adoption should be denied and the child restored to its mother, the court said 69 N.E.2d at page 475: "Relying upon the findings of the judge that the respondent had originally assented in writing to the allowance of the petition, that her consent was given voluntarily and with full knowledge of the effect of her consent and the effects of adoption, and that the petitioners are proper persons to bring up the child, the petitioners argue in substance that the respondent's consent to the petition was binding upon her and irrevocable and that the judge was without authority to dismiss the petition. The consent of the respondent to the petition, however, was not binding upon the judge. * * * It was the duty of the judge to be guided by the established principles governing the disposition of petitions for adoptions, the most fundamental of which is that the paramount issue is the welfare of the child. [Citing cases.] That question the judge has resolved in specific terms in favor of the respondent upon findings before set forth which support his decision."

Suppose here, for instance, that after consent and before adoption the natural father should come forward and marry the child's mother, as the mother here alleges is their mutual intent, thus legitimating the infant, such legitimation, considering its effect upon the child's welfare alone, might persuade the court that adoption should not be ordered. In saying this we do not pass upon the question of whether such marriage during adoption proceedings would make it jurisdictional that the consent of the natural father should then be secured, as was held in Re Adoption of Doe, 231 N.C. 1, 56 S.E.2d 8, since that question is not before us. On the other hand, suppose some intervening, or theretofore unknown, occurrence in the life of one of the petitioners in adoption should convince the court their petition should not be granted, surely that court could, in the exercise of a sound discretion and for the welfare of the child, deny adoption. It is quite apparent that proceedings for adoption under our statutes are something much more than mere solemnization of a contractual relationship, and that there are committed to the court by the pertinent legislative enactments grave judicial functions transcending the immediate desire of petitioners for adoption and of consenting parents; and while it is true the statutes do not provide expressly how the matters we have been discussing shall in all instances be put in issue and tried, yet we have no doubt the court could and would adopt a procedure sufficient to permit interested and proper parties to appear and present evidence to the end that the substantial and underlying issue of child welfare will be properly decided.

Of course what we have said about the revocability of consent would have but limited, if any, application when consent had been given under the 1949 amendment re consent, for therein the legislature has provided expressly that the consent cannot be withdrawn without court action and has further provided a means of application for such order. Therefore, the Legislature has impliedly declared that the consent is not now irrevocable absolutely. What we have said is that before these amendments took effect the consent, when fairly given, was irrevocable; that the matter of consent was thenceforth behind the parties and the court; but that the court must still go forward to determine all other issues involved and that it had full jurisdiction to do so.

[12] In arriving at the foregoing holdings we have given attention to recent holdings by our appellate courts, both District and Supreme, but we think those decisions are not decisive here. We refer to In re

Adoption of McDonnell, 77 Cal.App.2d 805, 176 P.2d 778; In re Adoption of Parker, 31 Cal.2d 608, 191 P.2d 420, and other appellate decisions cited to us. But the statutory changes intervening materially distinguish those cases from this. Also the form of consent required has been changed by the Department of Social Welfare, probably influenced by those same decisions. The consent executed by petitioner was couched in terms of finality conditional only on an order of adoption and nothing in the form here used indicates either an optional or conditional consent. The courts deciding the cited cases were much concerned with acceptance of consent, but after the opinions therein were rendered the Legislature made it the express duty of the Department to accept the consent when given, leaving nothing to the discretion of the Department in that matter. We think we must assume the Department did its duty, certainly where, as here, no showing to the contrary is made. That having been done, the consent being full and free when made, it remained for the Department in this case to go forward and file with the court its report touching the final question of adoption or not. But that final determination is for the court and it has jurisdiction to proceed. Therefore, the writ heretofore issued must be discharged.

When this matter was heard in this Court a request was made and granted that the Department of Social Welfare might, through its counsel, file a brief herein for the purpose, as we understood it, of informing the Court as to its interpretation of the statutes in the matter of consent and the reasons therefor. No such brief has been filed. However, we have examined the Manual of Adoption Policies and Procedures and find the following with respect thereto: Prior to the 1945 amendment it was the policy of the Department that where possible a sufficient investigation of the case be made to determine the advisability of the adoption before the consent was signed and then it was the policy and practice of the Department when the consent was taken to make it clear to the natural parents that the consent might be withdrawn at any time prior to the final court action on the petition. Further it was to be explained that the consent would not be accepted by the Department until a determination had been made that the adoption was for the child's best interests. After the 1945 amendment the manual noted that it was then the duty of the Department to accept the consent of the natural parents and the wording of the consent form was changed and the directive that the parents consenting should be informed that the consent was revocable was omitted. However, the manual stated: "While the consent may be withdrawn by the parent prior to the court order granting adoption, the agent should help the parent recognize that in fairness to all parties the execution of the consent should represent as nearly as possible a final decision." It is thus apparent it was still the Department's interpretation, contrary to what we have herein said, that the consent, although accepted by the Department, could, nevertheless, be withdrawn by the consenting parent at any time before court order granting adoption. The petition before us does not contain any allegation upon the subject of whether petitioner here was told by the Department that she would have the right to withdraw her consent; no evidence was presented upon the point; and the briefs do not discuss any contention that the petitioner here was so informed, relied upon such information and believed when she informed the Department that she was withdrawing her consent that she was exercising a right which had been reserved to her. We cannot assume that any such statements were made and what we have said relative to the matter is said because we do not wish our holding herein to be considered as including any determination of what the effect would be upon the revocability of consent if obtained under such circumstances as would justify the mistaken belief on the part of the parent giving such consent that it could be withdrawn at any time before an order of adoption was made.

The writ is discharged.

FIRST NAT. BANK OF FAIR OAKS v. TURNBULL et al.

Civ. 7776.

Sec. 6069.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Oct. 7, 1950.

The First National Bank of Fair Oaks sued Thomas H. Turnbull, M. M. Haslett, B. D. Christensen and L. L. Anderson, individually and as copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Fair Oaks Manufacturing Company, for breach of a contract, an amount due on a note, and foreclosure of a chattel mortgage. From an order of the Superior Court, Sacramento County, Malcolm C. Glenn, J., denying defendant Anderson's motion to vacate and set aside a deficiency judgment against him and defendants Haslett and Christensen for a balance due after payment to plaintiff of the proceeds of a sale of the mortgaged personalty by defendant Turnbull's bankruptcy trustee and an execution levied on certain assets of defendant Anderson, he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Adams, P. J., held that the grounds of the motion having existed before entry of the judgment, so as to be available on appeal therefrom, the order denying the motion was not appealable.

Appeal dismissed.

1. Judgment ⇐138(1), 143(3, 16)

A motion to vacate default judgment for plaintiff, as granting relief contrary to that prayed for in complaint, after lapse of time for appeal therefrom, did not lie under statute authorizing vacation of judgment based on erroneous conclusions of law inconsistent with or unsupported by trial court's fact findings or judgment inconsistent with or unsupported by jury's special verdict on aggrieved party's motion within specified time, nor under statute authorizing relief from judgment taken against party through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect, in absence of prayer for relief on any of such grounds or accompanying copy of moving defendant's answer or other proposed pleading. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 473, 663, 663a.

2. Appeal and error ⇐113(2)

An appeal does not lie from order denying motion to vacate judgment on grounds existing before entry of judgment and available on appeal therefrom.

3. Chattel mortgages ⇐287

Mortgagors, contracting to repay mortgagee bank all monies advanced to them thereby, including any deficiency, if proceeds of sale of mortgaged personalty proved insufficient to repay amount advanced, became liable for deficiency resulting from one mortgagor's bankruptcy trustee's sale of such personalty.

4. Appeal and error ⇐113(2)

An order denying a mortgagor's motion to set aside deficiency judgment for balance due mortgagee bank, after payment to mortgagee of proceeds of another mortgagor's bankruptcy trustee's sale of mortgaged personalty, on grounds that relief granted mortgagee was contrary to that prayed for in its complaint, that court had no jurisdiction to render judgment in absence of foreclosure decree and order of sale, and that sheriff or commissioner made no return showing balance unpaid by movant, was not appealable, as such grounds existed before entry of judgment and were available for review on appeal therefrom.

W. P. Dwyer, Jr., and Elliott, Atkinson & Sitton, Sacramento, for respondent.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff filed this action on May 28, 1947, seeking a judgment for $18,941.04, for interest, attorney's fees and costs, and for the foreclosure of a mortgage securing the payment of the moneys claimed. The action was based upon a contract executed by Thomas H. Turnbull, M. M. Haslett, B. D. Christensen and L. L. Anderson, alleged to be a copartnership carrying on business as Fair Oaks Manufacturing Company, and upon a promissory note executed by them. The contract, attached to the complaint as an exhibit, provided that the bank should make advances to the borrowers to finance their business, from time to time, and that the latter should execute a mortgage upon its personal property, and take other designated steps to secure such advances, the agreement to be a continuing one to apply to future as well as existing transactions. A note for $15,000 was executed by defendants, the latter agreeing that the mortgage should cover equipment added or substituted, and that they would keep same in repair and fully insured. The complaint then alleged failure of defendants to comply with their agreement in several respects, and that defendants were indebted to plaintiff in the sum claimed. It prayed that the mortgage be foreclosed, and for general relief.

All defendants except Turnbull defaulted in said action, the record showing that appellant Anderson was served with summons on June 14, 1947, and that upon failure to appear, his default was entered July 17, 1947. Turnbull filed an answer admitting the allegations of the complaint, but setting forth that he had been adjudicated a bankrupt on June 3, 1947, that the obligation upon which plaintiff sued was included in his schedule of debts, and that by virtue of said adjudication he was released from the obligation set forth in plaintiff's complaint.

On October 8, 1948, after a hearing at which plaintiff produced evidence, the court made and entered a judgment which recited that all of the allegations of plaintiff's complaint were found to be true, that subsequent to the filing of the complaint the personal property covered by the mortgage set forth in the complaint had been taken into the possession of the trustee in bankruptcy in Turnbull's bankruptcy proceeding and sold, and that the proceeds of such sale had been paid to plaintiff in partial satisfaction of its debt proved in that proceeding; and that, after the application of such payment, there remained due and unpaid to plaintiff the sum of $1,600.79 plus attorney's fees and interest, for the amount of which judgment was entered against defendants Haslett, Christensen and Anderson. On January 5, 1949, an execution was issued and levied upon certain of appellant's assets, which resulted in recovery of sufficient funds to satisfy the judgment on January 14, 1949.

On March 28, 1949, appellant Anderson filed a notice of motion for an order "vacating and setting aside" the deficiency judgment entered October 8, 1948, and the execution thereafter issued, upon the asserted ground that the judgment was void for the reasons (1) that the relief granted plaintiff was contrary to that prayed for in its complaint, (2) that no decree of foreclosure was had in said action nor was any order of sale of the mortgaged premises made, (3) that the court was without jurisdiction to render a deficiency judgment in the absence of a foreclosure and sale, and (4) that the sheriff or commissioner did not make return showing the balance that remained unpaid by defendant. It was not asserted by appellant that this motion was based upon either section 473 or section 663 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] An order denying said motion was made June 6, 1949, and Anderson has appealed from such order. No appeal was taken from the court's judgment and the time within which same could have been taken by this defendant—if at all—had elapsed long prior to his motion made on April 4, 1949, which was subsequent to the levy of the execution upon his assets. Obviously such motion was not made pursuant to sections 663 and 663a of the Code of Civil Procedure, since they are inapplicable to this case; and if section 473 is relied upon, appellant failed to comply with same since he did not seek to be relieved of his default or the judgment taken against him "through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect", nor did he accompany his application for relief by a copy of an answer or other proposed pleading.

[2] It appears to be well settled that an appeal does not lie from an order denying a motion to vacate a judgment if the grounds upon which the moving party sought to have the judgment vacated existed before its entry and were available on appeal therefrom. Colbert v. Colbert, 28 Cal.2d 276, 281, 169 P.2d 633; Mather v. Mather, 22 Cal.2d 713, 720, 140 P.2d 808; Lawson v. Guild, 215 Cal. 378, 381, 10 P.

2d 459; Nagelmann v. McIntyre, 27 Cal. App.2d 621, 622–623, 81 P.2d 466; Linne v. Union Central Life Ins. Co., 119 Cal. App. 490, 6 P.2d 521; Barry v. Learner, 113 Cal.App. 651, 653, 299 P. 82; Home Owners' Loan Corp. v. Engelbertson, 54 Cal.App.2d 46, 48, 128 P.2d 424.

[3] Turning to the alleged grounds upon which appellant relied for vacation of the judgment, we think it is apparent that all of them existed before its entry and were available on appeal from it. If the relief granted to plaintiff was contrary to that prayed for—which we think it was not—the variance could have been reached by such an appeal. See Colbert v. Colbert, supra, 28 Cal.2d at page 281, 169 P.2d 633. The complaint was based primarily upon the contract between the defendants and plaintiff wherein defendants obligated themselves to repay all moneys advanced to them, including any deficiency if the property mortgaged proved insufficient. When that property was sold in the bankruptcy proceeding, and a deficiency resulted, defendants became liable for same. Also note the grounds relied upon in Linne v. Union Central Life Insurance Co., supra, where it was contended that the judgment was void because it granted relief in excess of that prayed for in the complaint; and Lawson v. Guild, supra, where it was urged that the judgment was void because the cross-complaint failed to contain a description of the property the title to which was quieted in defendant.

[4] The matters relied upon by appellant having been available for review on appeal from the judgment, the order refusing to set it aside is not an appealable order, and this appeal must therefore be dismissed.

GOLCEFF v. SUGARMAN.
S. F. 18185.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.
Oct. 13, 1950.

Walter P. Golceff sued E. Sugarman and others, for injuries incurred by plaintiff in a fall from a ladder in a retail store owned by named defendant. The Superior Court, San Francisco County, Theresa Meikle, J., entered a judgment of nonsuit at close of plaintiff's case and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court, Schauer, J., held that whether employee of defendant knew ladder to be dangerous and unsound when not held was for jury.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for new trial, and purported appeal from an order denying motion for new trial, a nonappealable order, dismissed.

1. Trial ⇐139(1), 142, 143

A trial court must deny a motion for a nonsuit at close of plaintiff's case if there is any substantial evidence which, with aid of all legitimate inferences favorable to plaintiff, tends to establish averments of complaint, or, where plaintiff's evidence is sufficient to support a judgment on verdict, and trial court should deny a nonsuit even where there is a conflict in evidence and some evidence tends to sustain plaintiff's case, or when evidence of plaintiff is such that different conclusions can reasonably be drawn therefrom, and if there is any doubt it is duty of court to let case go to jury.

2. Appeal and error ⇐927(3)

In disposing of an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit, court must view evidence in light most favorable to appellants and must disregard all inconsistencies and draw only those inferences from evidence which can reasonably be drawn which are favorable to appellant.

3. Master and servant ⇐332(1)

Where store employee climbed ladder to store balcony to find what plaintiff wanted to buy, and requested plaintiff to climb ladder, and ladder slipped when plaintiff had climbed first steps and after store employee released hold on ladder which employee had when plaintiff started to climb ladder, causing plaintiff to fall, whether employee negligently left plaintiff on ladder while it was in a dangerous and unsound condition, was for jury.

4. Master and servant ⇐329

In order to state a cause of action against defendant for a wrong committed by his servants, ultimate fact necessary to be alleged is that wrongful act was in legal effect committed by defendant and this may be alleged either by alleging that defendant by his servant committed act, or, without noticing servant, by alleging that defendant committed act.

5. Master and servant ⇐329

In action against store owner and store employee for injuries resulting when plaintiff fell from ladder in store, where complaint alleged that store owner negligently permitted ladder to become dangerous, defective and unsound, proof that acts which allegedly caused plaintiff's injuries were committed by employee was not a variance amounting to failure of proof as against store owner.

6. Appeal and error ⇐110

An order denying a motion for a new trial is a nonappealable order.

SCHAUER, Justice.

In this action to recover damages for personal injuries the court, at the close of plaintiff's case, granted defendant's motion for a nonsuit, and plaintiff appeals from the subsequently entered judgment. Upon consideration of the entire record, and of the authorities governing courts in passing on such motions, we are of the view that plaintiff's evidence was sufficient to require submission of the case to the jury, and that the judgment should be reversed.

[1, 2] A trial court must deny a motion for a nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's case "if there is * * * any substantial evidence, which, with the aid of all legitimate inferences favorable to the plaintiff, tends to establish the averments of the complaint, or, in other words, where the plaintiff's evidence is sufficient to support a judgment on the verdict. It should deny a nonsuit even where there is a conflict in the evidence and some evidence tends to sustain the plaintiff's case, or when the evidence of the plaintiff is such that different conclusions can reasonably be drawn therefrom. If there is any doubt, it is the duty of the court to let the case go to the jury." (9 Cal.Jur. 558–559.) And as to our duty, "The uniform rule which an appellate court should follow in disposing of an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit is, that the court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to appellant, must disregard all inconsistencies and draw only those inferences from the evidence which can reasonably be drawn which are favorable to appellant. [Citations.]" (Kirk v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp. (1945), 26 Cal.2d 833, 837–838, 161 P.2d 673, 164 A.L.R. 1; see also Milana v. Credit Discount Co. (1945), 27 Cal.2d 335, 342–343, 163 P.2d 869, 165 A.L.R. 621; Mastrangelo v. West Side Union High School Dist. (1935), 2 Cal.2d 540, 544–545, 42 P.2d 634.)

Plaintiff, a general repair man of the age of 42, was the only witness concerning the happening of the accident here involved. He testified as follows: He entered defendant's store and there showed to an employe of defendant a cloth pattern of a tank cover plaintiff wished to purchase. The employe requested plaintiff to hold a ladder while the employe climbed it to a balcony. The balcony was at a height which plaintiff, who is "five feet ten or eleven" inches tall, could reach by putting his "hand in the air," and the ladder was "not a stepladder," but just a "plain ladder * * * two sticks and then sticks cross together," which was leaning against and extending "about two feet above" the balcony. Plaintiff held the ladder, and the employe "Went on the balcony" and then stated to plaintiff, "here are the tank covers * * * come on up here." With the employe holding the ladder at the top plaintiff climbed "two or three steps" up the ladder to a point where his head was "Over the balcony"; at that point plaintiff handed the pattern to the employe, the employe left the ladder, the ladder began to slip, and plaintiff "awakened" in the hospital.

[3] The epitomized evidence is sufficient to require the case to go to the jury. Certainly a business "invitor's responsibility is not absolute but he is 'required to use ordinary care for the safety of the persons he invites to come upon the premises * * *.'" (Hinds v. Wheadon (1942), 19 Cal.2d 458, 460, 121 P.2d 724; see also Blodgett v. B. H. Dyas Co. (1935), 4 Cal.2d 511, 512, 50 P.2d 801; Johnston v. De La Guerra Properties, Inc. (1946), 28 Cal.2d 394, 399–400, 170 P.2d 5.) In his complaint plaintiff alleged that he was invited to use the ladder, that defendant negligently permitted the ladder "to become dangerous, defective and in an unsound condition" so that plaintiff was caused to "fall off" the ladder and "to be thrown to the floor" and injured. In connection with the other circumstances the fact that the employe asked plaintiff to hold the ladder from the bottom would support an inference by the jury that the ladder was, and that the employe knew it to be, dangerous and unsound when not held and that in letting go his own hold of the ladder after plaintiff had begun to climb it in response to the invitation to "come on up here," the employe negligently left plaintiff upon the ladder while it was in a dangerous and unsound condition.

[4, 5] Defendant suggests that such a "theory of proof" contemplates a cause of action different from that stated in the complaint, in that the complaint charges defendant with negligence whereas the proof rested upon negligence of defendant's employe. It is a generally accepted rule, however, that "In order to state a cause of action against defendant for a wrong committed by his servant, the ultimate fact necessary to be alleged is that the wrongful act was in legal effect committed by defendant. This may be alleged either by alleging that defendant by his servant committed the act, or, without noticing the servant, by alleging that defendant committed the act." Leatham (1937), 22 Cal.App.2d 442, 445–446, 71 P.2d 336; 7 Labatt, Master and Servant, 2d ed., sec. 2527, p. 7776; 4 A.L.R.2d 292–313.)

[6] For the reasons above stated the judgment is reversed and the cause is remanded for a new trial; the purported appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, a non-appealable order (Nichols v. Mitchell (1948), 32 Cal.2d 598, 600, 197 P.2d 550), is dismissed.

WOODCOCK v. DICK.

Sac. 6135.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.

Oct. 11, 1950.

Original application by P. F. Woodcock against Nell M. Dick, as Auditor of the County of Humboldt, for a peremptory writ of mandate directing respondent to pay petitioner, Superintendent of Schools of Humboldt County, balance of his compensation under statute providing for an increase in the petitioner's salary. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that under constitutional amendment providing that, notwithstanding any provision of Constitution to contrary, Legislature shall prescribe qualifications required of county superintendents of schools and shall fix their salaries, such provisions gave Legislature the power to increase the salary of a superintendent during his term of office.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

The sole question raised by this proceeding is whether section 400.2 of the Education Code can be constitutionally applied so as to increase the salary of a county superintendent of schools during his term of office. Section 400.2 provides: "The salary and qualifications of each county superintendent of schools of each county shall be as set forth in this article. The salaries set forth in this article are payable to incumbent county superintendents of schools." The article referred to in this section embraces sections 400 to 459.

Petitioner was elected superintendent of schools of Humboldt County for the term beginning January 6, 1947, and ending January 8, 1951. In 1949 the Legislature amended section 425 of the Education Code by providing for an increase in petitioner's salary, and he seeks a writ of mandate to compel payment of his salary at the increased rate.

Respondent auditor has refused to make the requested payments on the theory that petitioner may not be granted an increase in salary during his term of office by reason of section 5 of article XI of the Constitution, as amended in 1933,[1] which provides that "The compensation of any * * * municipal officer shall not be increased * * * during his term of office." This section also provides that "boards of supervisors in the respective counties shall regulate the compensation of all officers" with certain exceptions not relevant here. In 1946, however, a radical change was made by the adoption of section 3.1 of article IX which provides that "Notwithstanding any provision of this Constitution to the contrary, the Legislature shall prescribe the qualifications required of county superintendents of schools and shall fix their salaries * * *." The question thus presented is whether the provisions of section 3.1 gave the Legislature power to increase the salary of a superintendent during his term of office.

Substantially the same situation was presented in Sevier v. Riley, 198 Cal. 170, 244 P. 323, 324. In that case section 17 of article VI, as amended in 1906, provided that the salaries of superior court judges of certain counties should not be increased during their terms of office, and section 11 of that article was subsequently amended to provide that the compensation of "judges of all courts of record shall be fixed and the payment thereof prescribed by the Legislature." It was held that the amendment transferred the entire matter of compensation to the Legislature, investing it with full control over the matter of the amount and manner of payment of judicial salaries, and that an incumbent judge was entitled to the increased compensation prescribed by a statute enacted during his term of office.

It is argued that the Sevier case is distinguishable because the amendment involved in that case provided that the compensation of judges "shall be fixed and the payment thereof prescribed by the Legislature", whereas section 3.1 relating to county superintendents merely states that the Legislature "shall fix their salaries" without adding that it shall prescribe payment thereof. It appears, however, that there was a reason for using the word "prescribe" in that case. Section 17 of article VI, in addition to prohibiting increases in an incumbent's salary, also specified the manner of payment by providing that one-half of the salary of each superior court judge should be paid by the state and the other half by the county for which he was elected.[2] It was therefore appropriate to use the words "prescribe payment" in order to make it manifest that the Legislature was being given the power to change this method of payment of salaries, whereas in the present case there was no need to use such language because there was no similar constitutional provision relating to the compensation of

1. Article XI, section 5, was also amended in 1944, but the quoted portions were not changed.

2. Section 17, article VI, has not been amended since 1906, but following the amendment of section 11 the Legislature made changes in the proportion of superior court judges' salaries to be paid by the state. This proportion has ranged, in different counties, from about 40% to 100% of the total salary. See Pol. Code, § 736b; Stats.1927, p. 578; Stats. 1931, p. 573; Stats.1945, p. 1544; Stats. 1947, p. 1718.

county superintendents. Cf. art. XI, §§ 5, 7½.

[1-4] The word "fix" means to determine, to assign precisely, to make definite and settled. Webster's New Internat. Dict., 2d ed. To fix compensation is to prescribe a rule or rate by which it is to be determined. Flagg v. Columbia County, 51 Or. 172, 94 P. 184, 186; Anderson's Law Dict. It has been held that the power to fix compensation includes the power to adjust or regulate and implies a plenary right to act by lowering or raising salaries. Fidler v. Board of Trustees, 112 Cal.App. 296, 302–303, 296 P. 912; McKann v. Town of Irvington, 133 N.J.L. 63, 42 A.2d 391; Buckbee v. Board of Education, 115 App.Div. 366, 100 N.Y.S. 943, 949, affirmed 187 N.Y. 544, 80 N.E. 1106; Abrams v. La Guardia, 174 Misc. 421, 21 N.Y.S.2d 891. When section 3.1 is read in the light of these definitions, it is clear that the intent was to give the Legislature complete authority over the payment of compensation, including the power to increase the salaries of incumbent officers. See Sevier v. Riley, 198 Cal. 170, 173–175, 244 P. 323; Crawford v. Payne, 12 Cal.App.2d 485, 486–487, 55 P.2d 1240; cf. Busch v. Turner, 26 Cal.2d 817, 819–821, 161 P.2d 456, 171 A.L.R. 1063; Hall v. Williams, 2 Cal.2d 186, 39 P.2d 419. The Legislature therefore has adopted a reasonable construction of section 3.1 by enacting section 400.2 of the Education Code which provides that the salaries set forth in sections 400 to 459 are payable to incumbent county superintendents. Stats. 1947, p. 2833. It is well settled that where the Legislature has by statute adopted a reasonable construction of a constitutional provision its action has strong persuasive force and will ordinarily be followed. SEIDEL v. WARING.
S. F. 18171.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.
Oct. 11, 1950.

Original application by Vaughn D. Seidel against Eugene V. Waring, as Auditor of the County of Alameda, for a writ of mandate directing respondent to pay petitioner, County Superintendent of Schools, balance of his compensation under statute increasing salaries of incumbent county superintendents of schools. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that constitutional provision authorizing Legislature to prescribe qualifications required of county superintendents of schools and to fix their salaries takes precedence over constitutional provisions that county charter may provide for various officers, such as superintendent of schools, and for fixing of their compensation, and that Legislature is authorized to increase incumbent's salary during his term of office although county charter prohibits such an increase.

Writ of mandate granted.

Gardiner Johnson and Thomas E. Stanton, Jr., San Francisco, for petitioner.

J. F. Coakley, District Attorney, R. Robert Hunter, Assistant District Attorney, Richard H. Klippert and John P. Sparrow, Deputy District Attorneys, all of Oakland, for respondent.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

This is a companion case to Woodcock v. Dick, ante, Cal.Sup., 222 P.2d 667, and that decision is determinative of most of the contentions made herein. This proceeding, however, also raises the additional question whether the Legislature has power to increase the salary of an incumbent county superintendent of schools when the county charter, adopted pursuant to section 7½ of article XI of the Constitution, prohibits such an increase during an incumbent's term of office.

Petitioner was elected superintendent of schools for Alameda County, a charter county of the third class, for the term commencing January 6, 1947, and ending January 8, 1951. In 1947 the Legislature adopted sections 400 to 459 of the Education Code, relating to the salaries of county superintendents, and provided by section 400.2 that the specified salaries were payable to incumbents. In 1949, section 403, relating to petitioner's salary, was amended to provide for an increase which was payable to the incumbent under section 400.2. Respondent auditor has refused to pay the salary specified in the 1949 amendment, and petitioner seeks a writ of mandate to compel such payment.

Section 5 of article XI of the Constitution, involved in the Woodcock case, prohibits any increase in the compensation of a county officer during his term of office, but it also states that its provisions shall not be construed to abridge, modify or otherwise affect the provisions of section 7½ of that article. Section 7½, as amended in 1914, states that county charters may provide for various officers, such as superintendents of schools, and for the fixing of their compensation. Pursuant to this section the Alameda County Charter provides that the county school superintendent shall be elected (§ 15) and that the compensation of elective officers shall be fixed at least six months prior to election and shall not be increased or diminished during the term of office (§ 12b). In 1946 there was added to the Constitution section 3.1 of article IX which provides that "Notwithstanding any provision of this Constitution to the contrary, the Legislature shall prescribe the qualifications required of county superintendents of schools and shall fix their salaries * * *."

We held in the Woodcock case that section 3.1 supersedes section 5 of article XI and that, as to counties which do not have conflicting charter provisions, the Legislature is given complete authority to fix the amount and manner of payment of compensation of county superintendents, including the power to increase the salary of an incumbent during his term of office

[1] Respondent concedes that section 3.1 gives the Legislature power to fix the salary of a county superintendent as to any future term of office, but contends that the section does not permit the Legislature to increase an incumbent's salary during his term of office when the county charter prohibits such an increase. It would seem clear, however, that the intent of the voters was to supersede all conflicting constitutional provisions and that section 3.1 therefore takes precedence over section 7½ of article XI and also over any county charter provisions enacted pursuant thereto. See Holland v. Byram, 28 Cal.2d 567, 568, 170 P.2d 937. Section 3.1 expressly provides that the Legislature shall fix the salaries of county superintendents "Notwithstanding any provision of this Constitution to the contrary," and this intent is further shown by the printed argument submitted to the voters in support of the adoption of this section. 1946 Voters Pamphlet, p. 8. After stating that the section will permit improvement in the county superintendencies and "makes it possible for the Legislature to establish salaries for county superintendents," the argument continues: "Until this constitutional amendment is passed qualifications cannot be established nor can salary adjustments be made because charter provisions in some counties nullify legislative action. Salary and qualifications go hand in hand in attracting qualified professional people to that office." (Italics added.)

[2] The construction of section 3.1 advocated by respondent is contrary to the intent shown by the quoted portion of the argument to the voters. Further, such a construction would make the effective date of an increase different in different counties depending on whether or not there was a county charter provision prohibiting increases during an incumbent's term of office, whereas the adoption of the section amounts to a declaration by the voters that the compensation of county superintendents is a matter of statewide concern which should not be treated separately by each county or controlled by charter provisions. See Cunningham v. Hart, 80 Cal.App.2d 902, 907-908, 183 P.2d 75. Moreover, the county charter provisions were adopted as limitations on the power of the board of supervisors, and they cannot be considered as limitations on the power of the Legislature once it has been invested with plenary control over the particular subject matter.

Let a peremptory writ of mandate issue directing respondent to pay petitioner the balance of his compensation, as prayed, pursuant to the provisions of section 403 of the Education Code, as amended in 1949.

Fact that plaintiffs in original complaint in first amendment thereto attempted to allege cause of action relying upon conditional sales contract and suing for damages for breach thereof and in second complaint sought damages predicated upon fraud allegedly perpetrated on them by defendant did not preclude them from thereafter seeking a rescission of the contract under doctrine of election of remedies, in absence of showing that defendant has suffered any detriment or disadvantage due to fact that plaintiffs were seeking a different relief in their third amended complaint.

3. Election of remedies ⇐14

A showing that the defendant has suffered a detriment or disadvantage due to fact that plaintiffs had previously sought a different relief was essential to make applicable the doctrine of election of remedies.

Larwill & Wolfe, Los Angeles, for appellants.

C. Paul Du Bois, Los Angeles, for respondent.

McCOMB, Justice.

From a judgment sustaining a general demurrer to plaintiffs' third amended complaint in an action to rescind a conditional sales contract for a truck, plaintiffs appeal.

Facts: In the first count of the complaint plaintiffs alleged that they entered into a conditional sales contract with defendant to purchase a truck and trailer; that defendant for the purpose of deceiving, defrauding and inducing them to enter into the contract made certain specific representations which were in fact untrue, and which defendant knew to be untrue. They also allege that defendant has received back everything that he gave under the terms of the contract.

Plaintiffs pray that the conditional sales contract be declared void and for a return of the consideration paid by them.

Question: Was the demurrer to the complaint properly sustained?

[1-3] This question must be answered in the negative. The facts alleged as set forth above, if sustained by proof, constituted a cause of action against defendant. (Philpott v. Superior Court, 1 Cal.2d 512, 523 et seq., 36 P.2d 635, 95 A.L.R. 990.) It is true that in plaintiffs' original complaint and the first amendment thereto plaintiffs attempted to allege a cause of action relying upon the contract and suing for damages for breach thereof, while in the second amended complaint they sought damages predicated upon the fraud perpetrated on them by defendant. In the third amended complaint, which is now before this court, they seek a rescission. Hence defendant argues that there was an election of remedies in the original complaint and the first and second amendments thereto which is inconsistent with the relief plaintiffs now seek, and that therefore plaintiffs are now estopped to seek a different relief, to wit, a rescission.

The doctrine of election of remedies is not applicable in the instant case for the reason that defendant has failed to show that he has suffered any detriment or disadvantage due to the fact that plaintiffs have sought a different relief in their third amended complaint. Such a showing is essential to make applicable the doctrine of election of remedies. (Mansfield v. Pickwick Stages, 191 Cal. 129, 131, 215 P. 389.) This was not done in the present case.

The second count in the complaint alleged a cause of action for a violation of sections 2981 and 2982 of the Civil Code. (See also Carter v. Seaboard Finance Co., 33 Cal.2d 564, 572 et seq., 203 P.2d 758.)

The third count was a common count. Each of the counts in the complaint was valid as against a general demurrer and defendant has failed to show wherein any of his grounds for special demurrer were well taken.

The trial court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the third amended complaint and the judgment is reversed with direction to the trial court to overrule the demurrer and permit defendant to file an answer within fifteen days after the remittitur is filed in the office of the clerk of the superior court of Los Angeles county.

WILLIAMS et al. v. GURWITZ et al.
Civ. 17776.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Oct. 11, 1950.

Action by Ray A. Williams and another against Fred Gurwitz and another to recover damages alleged to have been suffered by plaintiff in a collision with defendants' automobile. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Charles E. Haas, J., entered judgment for defendants after jury verdict and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Wilson, J., held that where jury was fully instructed upon the question of right of way and as to the duties in deciding the case upon the evidence, refusal of trial court to grant a mistrial after a police officer was asked whether he had reached a conclusion as to which party violated the right, was not reversible error.

Affirmed.

1. Evidence ⇐472(4), 512

It is within province of jury to determine which party, if either was negligent and which party, if either, violated right of way rule, and matter is not the subject of expert testimony and neither a police officer nor any other witness should be asked whether he had reached a conclusion as to which party violated right of way or to state such a conclusion if he had arrived at one.

2. Appeal and error ⇐1060(2)

In action for damages arising out of an automobile collision, where jury was fully instructed upon question of right of way and as to their duties in deciding the case upon evidence, failure of trial court to grant a mistrial after a police officer was asked which party had violated the right of way rules, was not reversible error.

3. Trial ⇐220

In action for damages arising out of an automobile collision, where police officer was asked whether he had reached a conclusion as to which party violated right of way, refusal of trial court to give an immediate instruction to jury stating that jury was sole judge of who did violate right of way rules, was not error, since all questions of law are customarily covered by instruction given at the close of the evidence.

4. Automobiles ⇐246(9)

In action for damages arising out of an automobile collision, an instruction stating that an obligation rested upon plaintiff to maintain a reasonable lookout for vehicles coming in other directions while plaintiff made a left-hand turn was not error.

5. Trial ⇐260(8)

In action for damages arising out of an automobile collision, where subject matter of requested instruction was completely covered by other instructions, trial court's refusal to give requested instruction was not error.

Parker, Stanbury, Reese & McGee, Los Angeles, for respondents.

WILSON, Justice.

Plaintiffs have appealed from a judgment entered on a verdict in favor of defendants in an action to recover damages alleged to have been suffered by plaintiffs in a collision of two automobiles at the intersection of Washington Boulevard and Redondo Boulevard in Los Angeles.

Plaintiff Ray Williams, accompanied by his wife, was driving in a westerly direction on Washington Boulevard. Obeying a traffic signal he stopped on the easterly side of Redondo. Upon the change of signals in favor of the traffic on Washington plaintiff Ray Williams extended his arm signalling for a left-hand turn, proceeded to the center of Redondo and commenced his turn. At that time he did not see any cars traveling in an easterly direction. Defendant Fred Gurwitz was driving in an easterly direction on Washington. His car collided with plaintiffs' car at about the center of Redondo.

Plaintiffs have not raised any question concerning the sufficiency of the evidence.

Plaintiffs assign as prejudicial error two questions asked on cross-examination of a police officer. The first reads: "In further corroboration of what Mr. Williams said or told you, both as to where the accident happened and as to whether or not he ever saw the other car, you indicated right here on your police report that Mr. Williams violated the right of way of Mr. Gurwitz, did you not?" Plaintiffs objected and were sustained; thereupon counsel asked a second question reading as follows: "Based upon what Mr. Williams told you about the accident, did you come to a conclusion and put it on your police report—as to whether or not Mr. Williams, under his own statement to you, had violated Mr. Gurwitz' right of way?" Plaintiffs' attorney objected to the second question and assigned it as misconduct. The court did not rule upon the objection and the witness did not answer the question. Plaintiffs made a motion for mistrial on the grounds that the questions were improper, called for the statement of a conclusion of law and invaded the province of the jury. The court denied the motion, whereupon counsel asked the court to instruct the jury "that they are the sole judges of who did violate the right of way." The court did not give such an instruction at that time but responded, "You can cover that in your instructions."

[1, 2] It is elementary that it is within the province of the jury to determine which party, if either, was negligent and which party, if either, violated the right of way rules. Such a matter is not the subject of expert testimony and neither a police officer nor any other witness should be asked whether he had reached a conclusion as to which party violated the right of way or to state such conclusion if he had arrived at one. However, the questions did not furnish a ground for mistrial. The court is not required to declare a mistrial whenever an improper question is asked. If such were the custom mistrials would be the rule rather than the exception. Since the jury was fully instructed upon the question of right of way and as to their duties in deciding the case upon the evidence the asking of the questions is not reversible error.

[3] The court properly refused to give an immediate instruction to the jury as requested by plaintiffs' counsel. Such instruction was not necessary or proper at that time since all questions of law are customarily covered, and in this case were covered, by the instructions given at the close of the evidence.

[4] Plaintiffs assign as error the giving of the folowing instruction: "You are instructed that the plaintiff Mr. Williams was required to maintain a reasonable lookout for vehicles approaching from the opposite direction both before starting to make his turn and while making the turn. If you find from the evidence that Mr. Williams either negligently failed to look at all, or that he did look and failed to see an automobile which was approaching in plain sight to be seen by anyone exercising ordinary care, then you must find that Mr. Williams was negligent." Plaintiffs contend that by the first sentence of the instruction the court told the jury that it was obligatory upon plaintiff driver to maintain a lookout for vehicles approaching from the opposite direction "while making the turn." Such is not the effect of the instruction. It does not state that an obligation rested upon plaintiff driver to maintain a continuous lookout for vehicles coming from the west but states that he was required to maintain a "reasonable" lookout in that direction—in other words to use ordinary care. He was under the same obligation to exercise care as is a pedestrian in crossing a street. Young v. Tassop, 47 Cal.App.2d 557, 564, 118 P.2d 371.

Similar language is found in BAJI [1] Instruction No. 142, which was requested by plaintiffs but was not given by the court, reading as follows: "The words just quoted from the Vehicle Code (Section

1. Book of Approved Jury Instructions (California Jury Instructions Civil) 3d revised edition, West Publishing Company, 1943.

544) namely, that 'no person shall turn a vehicle unless and until such movement can be made with reasonable safety', do not mean that the driver of a motor vehicle, before making a turn, must know that there is absolutely no possibility of accident. They mean that before starting to turn a vehicle on a public highway, and while making the turn, the driver of the vehicle must use such precaution as would satisfy a reasonably prudent person acting under similar circumstances, that the turn can be made safely." (Emphasis added.)

[5] Plaintiffs requested the foregoing instruction and assign as error the failure of the court to give it. Since the subject matter of the instruction is completely covered by others, including the first above quoted, the court's refusal to read it to the jury is not error.

WOMEN'S ATHLETIC CLUB OF SAN FRANCISCO v. ANGLO CALIFORNIA NAT. BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO.

Civ. 14402.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Oct. 9, 1950.

Hearing Denied Dec. 7, 1950.

Action by the Women's Athletic Club of San Francisco, a corporation, against the Anglo California National Bank of San Francisco to quiet title to real property. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Frank T. Deasy, J., entered judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Goodell, J., held that athletic club had authority to issue bonds secured by a deed of trust, and such deed of trust was valid.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Corporations ⇐469

Statute which provided for creation or increase in bonded indebtedness of corporation having capital stock, by a vote of stockholders representing at least two-thirds of subscribed or issued capital stock did not apply to athletic club organized as a social corporation. Civ.Code, § 359.

2. Corporations ⇐469

In absence of charter or statutory restrictions, corporation has implied power to execute and issue its bonds for any purpose for which it may borrow money or contract a debt.

3. Corporations ⇐471, 477(1)

Where statutes provided that every corporation had power to enter into any obligation or contract without limitation, and authorized articles of corporation to provide for contracting, securing and limiting amount of their indebtedness without limitation, mortgage bonds issued by social corporation in 1924, as authorized by superior court after proper proceedings, and as contemplated by corporation's articles, were valid, and deed of trust as security therefor was valid. Civ.Code, §§ 354, 359, 403, 598, 599.

Morgan J. Doyle, J. Joseph Sullivan, San Francisco, for appellant.

McKinstry, Haber & Coombes, San Francisco, for respondent.

GOODELL, Justice.

Appellant sued to quiet title to real property. Judgment went in favor of respondent and this appeal was taken.

In 1915 appellant was incorporated under title XII of part IV, division I, of the Civil Code—"Religious, Social and Benevolent Corporations"—for the purpose of maintaining an athletic club for women.

Prior to January 19, 1924 the Club had acquired a piece of land with a frontage of 137 feet 6 inches on the northerly line of Sutter Street west of Mason, in San Francisco, and on that day it initiated a proceeding in the Superior Court under § 598, Civ.Code for authority to borrow money and issue bonds secured by a deed of trust on the property. On January 30 the order was made, and on February 1, 1924 the corporation executed to Anglo California Trust Co., predecessor of respondent as trustee, a deed of trust securing the bonded indebtedness of $250,000 so authorized.

At the time this suit was commenced $95,000 of bonds remained unredeemed, on which no interest had been paid since August 1, 1934.

The underlying purpose of appellant in this litigation is to secure on adjudication that its real property is free and clear of the deed of trust. The contention is that the bonds thereby secured were unauthorized by law.

After the bonded indebtedness was approved the corporation law of this state was extensively amended, but on this appeal we are of course concerned only with the statute law as it read when the deed of trust was executed.

At that time the subject of "Corporations" was dealt with in part IV of division I, of the Civil Code. Part IV was divided into 25 titles, the first thereof containing "General Provisions Applicable to all Corporations", and the other 24 relating specifically to different types of corporate organizations.

Section 354, which appeared under "General Provisions Applicable to all Corporations", provided that "Every corporation, as such, has power: * * * 8. To enter into any obligations or contracts essential to the transaction of its ordinary affairs, or for the purposes of the corporation." This language meant, of course, that every corporation had this inherent power by virtue of its existence as such.

Section 354 placed no limitation or restriction on any type or kind of corporation or on the type or kind of security. Its only restriction was with respect to the application of the borrowed money, and in this case that question is set at rest by a stipulation that the $250,000 was used "in part in discharge of then existing indebtedness of plaintiff, and in part in paying the cost of betterments and improvements of a building * * * on said real property * * *."

Turning to Title XII under which the Club was organized, we find that § 599 read as follows: "Corporations now organized or that may hereafter be organized for purposes other than profit, may, either in their by-laws, ordinances, constitutions, or articles of incorporation, provide for: * * * (7) Contracting, securing and limiting the amount of their indebtedness; * * *."

There is found therein no restriction as to the type or kind of security and no prohibition against issuing bonds. It is interesting to note that in neither of its briefs does appellant mention, or in any way recognize the existence of, that provision. Section 599 is perfectly consonant with § 354, the basic section dealing with all corporations, and both sections are authority for the provisions in the Club's articles with respect to indebtedness and security. In the statement of purposes the articles contain the following: "* * * to maintain a club-house, gymnasium, general athletic equipment, and all accomodations of every description for the use of its members; to purchase, lease, sell, convey, mortgage, encumber by deed of trust, and otherwise generally operate such real estate, buildings, and personal property as may be necessary and convenient to carry on the purposes of the said corporation, and to issue bonds, notes and all other evidences of indebtedness secured by mortgage, deed of trust or other form of security upon either real property or personal property, or both, necessary and convenient to carry on the purposes of said corporation, and to provide for the convenience and comfort of its members, * * *." (Emphasis added.)

Section 598, in Title XII, contained the statutory machinery for authorizing a religious, social or benevolent corporation to encumber its property. It read: "Before selling, mortgaging, aliening, encumbering or granting its real property, or any part thereof, * * * a corporation organized under this title must first make it appear that the same is for its interest to the satisfaction of the superior court of the county wherein said real property is situated." The procedure is then prescribed for such proceeding and the hearing therein. It then provided: "if satisfied that it is for the interest of said corporation, said court shall thereupon grant said leave, and may authorize the said corporation to sell and convey its said property and to incur indebtedness and secure the same by deed of trust or mortgage upon its said real property". (Emphasis added.)

Again, there was no restriction against issuing bonds.

The corporation proceeded under § 598 to obtain the authorization of the Superior Court to place upon its real property a deed of trust to secure a bonded indebtedness of $250,000 and to issue and sell the bonds. It is admitted that all the prescribed procedural steps were taken.

Appellant's contention on this appeal revolves entirely around § 359, Civil Code. That section was found among the "General Provisions Applicable to all Corporations" and plainly dealt with corporations "having a capital stock". A mere glance shows that it was never designed for a non-stock, social corporation. It read: "* * * Every corporation organized under the laws of this state having a capital stock * * * may create or increase its * * * bonded indebtedness subject to the following provisions: * * 3. The bonded indebtedness of a corporation may be created or increased by a vote of the stockholders representing at least two-thirds of the subscribed or issued capital stock at a meeting called by the board of directors or trustees, * * *." (Emphasis added.)

Appellant argues that § 359 was the only section providing for the issuance of corporate bonds; that it gave the power to issue bonds to such corporations only as had a capital stock; that the Club made no attempt to comply with that section (which is admitted), and that, because a social club is not within its purview, it is not only not authorized to issue bonds but definitely prohibited from doing so. Section 359 having spoken on the subject, so it is argued, every other medium and method is excluded ("Expressio unius est exclusio alterius").

These arguments ignore § 598, Civil Code, which, avowedly, was the section under which the Club sought and obtained its authority to issue bonds, and they ignore as well the provisions of § 403, Civil Code (just as appellant ignored the provisions of § 599). Section 403 read as follows: "Title one to apply to all corporations, with certain exceptions. The provisions of this title are applicable to every corporation, unless such corporation is excepted from its operation, or unless a special provision is made in relation thereto inconsistent with some provision in this title, in which case the special provision prevails." (Emphasis added.)

Section 598 was designed to provide religious, social and benevolent corporations with the legal machinery for borrowing money for their own needs, and its provisions are certainly inconsistent with those of § 359.

[1] Appellant's argument that § 359 applies to all corporations in support of which it cites Market Street Railway Co. v. Hellman, 109 Cal. 571, 42 P. 225 and Boyd v. Heron, 125 Cal. 453, 58 P. 64, is entirely destroyed by the provisions of § 403. So, also, is its argument based on the "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius" rule.

It is true that neither § 598 nor § 599 expressly mentions "bonded indebtedness", while § 359 does. This, however, can make no difference. The basic section 354, gives the power to every corporation, as such, "To enter into any obligations or contracts * * *" without limiting the type or kind of obligations. Section 599 authorizes the articles to provide for "Contracting, securing and limiting the amount of their indebtedness" without limitation. The Club's articles, as we have seen, contemplate the issuance of bonds. Section 598 places no limitation on the kind or type of security.

It seems to be settled law that in 1924 a bond mortgage could be entered into without any express provision in the statute for "bonds" or "bonded indebtedness".

In 7 Cal.Jur. p. 89, § 580, which was written before the corporation law was amended, we find: "Authority to borrow money and give evidences of indebtedness created is an implied power of corporations which may be exercised whenever necessary to carry out their purposes. Bonds constitute one form of evidence of indebtedness, and are generally used where large amounts are involved, and a formal authorization required. In their nature as contracts, however, there is no essential difference between bonds and promissory notes. * *" A footnote adds: "At common law, a corporation has power to issue a bond or note to pay a debt, and it has just as much right to do so under the general law as a natural person. McLane v. Placerville, etc., Co., 66 Cal. 606, 6 P. 748."

"It is well settled generally that corporations, under their implied or incidental power to enter into obligations which serve to effectuate the purposes of their creation, have the power, in the absence of an inhibitory statute, to issue bonds or debentures as evidence of their indebtedness. A like power exists as an incident of the power to borrow money." 13 Am.Jur. p. 842, § 847.

[2] In 19 Corpus Juris Secundum, Corporations, § 1147, we find: "In the absence of charter or statutory restrictions, a corporation has the implied power to execute and issue its bonds for any purpose for which it may borrow money or contract a debt * * *. This power is implied from the power to borrow money, or to contract debts, or to hold, purchase, and convey real estate, or to purchase shares of another corporation, or to make contracts, or to mortgage its property."

Jones on Bonds and Bond Securities, Vol. 2 § 631, says: "There is no proposition more definitely determined than the one that private corporations, in the absence of any regulatory or inhibitory statute, have the power to issue bonds as evidence of indebtedness under their incidental power to incur obligations in carrying out the ends of their creation." See, also, Id. § 632.

6a Fletcher, Cyclopedia of Corporations (permanent edition) § 2650 contains substantially the same statement.

[3] We are satisfied that by virtue of the order of January 30, 1924, which was made under the provisions of § 598, Civil Code, the appellant was legally authorized to issue and sell its $250,000 Refunding 6% Sinking Fund Gold Mortgage Bonds dated February 1, 1924, maturing 20 years from that date and secured by deed of trust, and that the latter instrument is, as found in the decree, "in all respects valid."

Other points are discussed in the briefs, but as the arguments thereon are based on the possibility of irregularity a review of such points and the authorities supporting them is wholly unnecessary and would be inconsistent with our conclusion that the bonds and deed of trust are perfectly valid.

The judgment is affirmed.

Proceeding in certiorari-mandamus by Sol M. Stoumen against George R. Reilly, and others, as members of and constituting the State Board of Equalization of the State of California, and others to review and set aside an order of the board suspending liquor licenses of Sol M. Stoumen. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Robert L. McWilliams, J., entered judgment for the respondents and the petitioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, P. 1. Mandamus ⇐157

Proceeding in mandamus can originate either by an order to show cause or by notice of motion. Code Civ.Proc. § 1088.

2. Mandamus ⇐164(2)

The return made to order to show cause in mandamus proceeding is like an answer to motion for writ and may tender both issues of law and of fact. Code Civ. Proc. § 1088.

3. Mandamus ⇐187(9)

Where after a full hearing on the law and facts the trial court enters judgment denying writ of mandate, applicant is not prejudiced by method or language used in arriving at such judgment, and it is sufficient that judgment recites that application is denied, and if demurrer to petition is sustained after full hearing on the merits the judgment on the merits is not subject to attack because the ruling on the demurrer might have been error. Code Civ.Proc. § 1088.

4. Administrative law and procedure ⇐313

The provision in Administrative Procedure Act dealing with evidence in hearings before administrative boards should be read in the light of the topic of evidence in the Tenth Biennial Report of the Judicial Council of California dealing with the administrative procedure act. Liquor licensee could not complain that he was not represented by counsel in proceeding before State Board of Equalization for suspension of liquor licenses, notwithstanding that board member may have made representations, where licensee knew that member was not authorized to bind board, and licensee stated that he was ready to proceed with the hearing, and licensee took an active part in the hearing and showed familiarity with legal procedure. Government Code, §§ 11500–11528.

6. Mandamus ⇐13

Liquor licensee's objection that one member of State Board of Equalization voting for suspension of licenses was prejudiced against licensee and had prejudged the matter must be urged prior to taking of evidence at hearing before board and could not be urged for the first time in mandamus proceeding to review board's order suspending licenses. 7. Administrative law and procedure ⇐314

The purpose of provision in Administrative Procedure Act that any party may request disqualification of hearing officer or agency member by filing affidavit prior to taking of evidence at hearing is to cut to a minimum the delays necessarily involved. Government Code § 11512(c).

8. Intoxicating liquors ⇐106(2)

Count of accusation charging that liquor licensee conducted disorderly house and meeting place for known homosexuals stated valid and sufficient grounds for suspension or revocation of liquor license. Gen.Laws, Act 3796, § 58.

A variance between pleadings and proof, even in the criminal courts, does not operate to accused's prejudice or impair his substantive rights and does not mislead or hinder him in preparing and making his defense and does not constitute a ground for reversal.

10. Intoxicating liquors ⇐108(9)

Slight variance between accusation and decision of hearing officer did not require setting aside suspension of liquor licenses where variance did not prejudice or impair substantive rights of licensee and did not mislead or hinder licensee in preparing or in making his defense to the accusation. Any complaint against statute prohibiting crime against nature and oral copulation, based on theory that sexual mores of present times have changed since enactment of statutes, should be directed to legislature and not to court in mandamus proceeding to set aside suspension of liquor licenses for use of licensed premises as meeting place for homosexuals. Government Code, §§ 11500–11528; Gen.Laws, Act 3796 § 58; Pen.Code §§ 286, 288a.

13. Mandamus ⇐163

State Board of Equalization's demurrer to liquor licensee's mandamus petition to set aside board's order suspending licenses for use of licensed premises as meeting place for homosexuals would be sustained without leave to amend, where evidence taken before hearing officer was sufficient to sustain charge that the premises were so used. In proceeding for suspension of liquor licenses, evidence warranted finding that liquor licensee sold liquor to minor. Government Code, §§ 11500–11528.

Morris Lowenthal, San Francisco, for petitioner and appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Atty. Gen., J. Albert Hutchinson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

Petitioner commenced this proceeding in certiorari-mandamus to review and set aside an order of the State Board of Equalization suspending his liquor licenses after an accusation filed with the board and heard by a hearing officer. The first count of the accusation charged that the licensee conducted a disorderly house and a meeting place for known homosexuals. The second charged the sale of liquor to a minor. Respondents filed a return to the alternative writ in the nature of a demurrer to the petition, a motion to dissolve the writ, and an answer to the merits consisting of a full transcript of the proceedings had before them and before the hearing officer. On the issues thus raised the matter was argued orally and by briefs following which judgment was entered for respondents after an order sustaining the demurrer to the petition without leave to amend.

On this appeal the petitioner lists ten charges of error, the first three all relating to the same claim that the court erred in sustaining respondents' demurrer without leave to amend. It should be noted that, though such an order was made, the judgment appealed from was based on findings of fact and contained the pertinent recital "and evidence having been offered by the parties and received by the Court, and the matter having been argued and submitted, the Court made findings of fact and conclusions of law and directed that the writ of mandate herein sought by petitioner be denied * * *."

[1-3] Since the record of the proceedings before the respondent board was before the trial court and the sufficiency of the evidence was fully argued it is of no consequence whether the judgment was based on the order sustaining the demurrer alone or upon the findings that the evidence taken by the respondent board was sufficient to justify the board's order. The proceeding in mandamus can originate either by an order to show cause or by notice of motion. (Code Civ.Proc. § 1088.) The return made to the order to show cause is like an answer to the motion for a writ and may tender both issues of law and of fact. If the court determines that the petitioner has not made out a proper case for a peremptory writ it is of no consequence that a demurrer to the petition has been sustained. The substantial and controlling part of the judgment is that petitioner has not shown that he is entitled to the writ. Here the trial court had the proceedings before the respondent board showing the grounds upon which the licenses were suspended. It also had the benefit of lengthy briefs and oral argument addressed particularly to the evidence found in the transcript and the propriety of the proceedings before the hearing officer. Its judgment on sustaining the demurrer was in accord with Housman v. Board of Medical Examiners, 84 Cal.App. 2d 308, 313, 190 P.2d 653, 192 P.2d 45; and Dare v. Board of Medical Examiners, 21 Cal.2d 790, 794, 136 P.2d 304. To recapitulate—when, after a full hearing on the law and the facts, the trial court enters judgment denying the writ of mandate, the applicant is not prejudiced by the method or the language used in arriving at such judgment. It is sufficient that the judgment recites that the application is denied. If a demurrer to the petition is sustained after a full hearing on the merits the judgment on the merits is not subject to attack because the ruling on the demurrer might have been error.

The other matters argued in appellant's briefs are merely rearguments of those heard by the trial court. At the conclusion of the hearing the learned trial judge filed a written opinion correctly disposing of all these issues. This opinion we approve and adopt as our reasons for an affirmance of the judgment.

"In the first place let me say that many of the contentions advanced by counsel for Petitioner are answered by the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act (Government Code sec. 11500–11528), The Act Providing for Judicial Review by Mandamus, (C.C.P. Sec. 1094.5) and The Tenth Biennial Report of the Judicial Council of California which deals with the two Acts mentioned. This last mentioned Report has been held to explain fully the purpose, intent, meaning and effect of the proposed statutory changes, and to constitute 'a most valuable aid' in ascertaining the meaning of the two Acts. See Hohreiter v. Garrison, 81 Cal.App.2d 384, 394, 397, 184 P.2d 323.

[4] "With reference to Petitioner's objection that 'hearsay evidence' was improperly received by the Hearing Officer I would call attention to the provisions of section 11513 of the Government Code dealing with the subject of evidence which section should be read in light of the treatment of that topic of evidence in the Report of the Judicial Council referred to above. On the subject of the admissibility of evidence of reputation of a place of business of the general type of Petitioner's also see Anzine v. U. S., 260 F. 827 decided by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals and the comparatively recent case of State v. Tacconi, Utah, 171 P.2d 388, 391. Also see Demartini v. Anderson, 127 Cal. 33, 59 P. 207.

[5] "Petitioner's contentions are based in large part on the theory that due to misrepresentations made to him he was not represented by counsel at the hearing before the Hearing Officer of the Board of Equalization. This contention is invalidated by the fact that, assuming that the representations were made by the member of the Board of Equalization to whom Petitioner refers, he was not justified in relying on those representations since he knew or should have known that that member was not authorized to bind the Board by his representations. It also overlooks the fact that when Petitioner was asked if he was ready to proceed with the hearing, he answered that he was ready. (Tr. p. 1).

"Moreover, as the record discloses, Petitioner took an active part in the hearing, examining the documentary evidence that was produced against him and cross-examining witnesses. Moreover, he showed a surprising familiarity with legal procedure as evidenced for example by his reference to the hearsay rule and by his 'withdrawing' a question after its materiality had been questioned. He apparently considered himself to be entirely competent to present his case until an adverse ruling was rendered against him. This was not surprising since as the Judicial Council's Report points out (p. 17) a large number of Respondents against whom accusations are directed by the Board of Equalization are not represented by counsel at the hearings.

[6] "As to Petitioner's contention that one member of the Board of Equalization who voted with the other members to suspend the license of Petitioner's restaurant had prejudged the matter and that he had a prejudice against Petitioner the answer, as pointed out by counsel for Respondents, is that Petitioner is too late in urging this objection. The Government Code provides that (p. 11):

"'Any party may request the disqualification of any hearing officer or agency member by filing an affidavit, prior to the taking of evidence at a hearing, stating with particularity the grounds upon which it is claimed that a fair and impartial hearing cannot be accorded.' (Section 11512(c).)

[7] "The purpose of this procedure according to the report of the Judicial Council above referred to (p. 20) was 'to cut to a minimum the delays necessarily involved.'

"This provision in the Administrative Procedure Act is entirely new in this state so that it is not necessary to consider the cases cited by counsel which were rendered prior to its enactment.

"Petitioner charges that Count One of the Accusation against him does not state facts sufficient to justify the suspension of his license. I cannot agree with him.

"The California Beverage Control Act provides (Sec. 58) in substance that every licensee who permits his premises to be used as a disorderly house or as a place to which people resort for purposes which are injurious to the public morals is guilty of a violation of that Section.

[8] "In my opinion Count One clearly stated valid and sufficient grounds for the suspension or revocation of Petitioner's license. It would be a gross and inexcusable reflection on the Legislature to find that the law as enacted by it would tolerate on the part of license holders such conduct as is charged in the accusation. Fortunately the law is not open to the construction contended for by Petitioner.

[9, 10] "It is true that there is some slight variance between the accusation and the proposed decision of the Hearing Officer. But it is in my opinion not of sufficient consequence to merit extended consideration. The law is settled that a variance between pleadings and proof, even in our criminal courts in which stricter rules prevail, which does not operate to the accused's prejudice or impair his substantive rights and does not mislead or hinder him in preparing and making his defense does not constitute a ground for reversal. 24 C.J.S., Criminal Law, § 1897, p. 878. Clearly the variance in this case did not prejudice or impair the substantive rights of Petitioner nor did it mislead or hinder him in preparing or in making his defense.

"It is also contended by Petitioner that the decision of the Hearing Officer as adopted by the Board of Equalization is insufficient to justify the action taken against him.

"The decision as adopted by the Board, insofar as it pertains to Count One, is in substance that during the period between September 3rd, 1948 and August 15th, 1949, Petitioner permitted his premises 'to be used as a disorderly house in that during that period of time persons of known homosexual tendencies patronized said premises and used said premises as a meeting place.'

[11] "The comment that I have just made as to the sufficiency of the charge as embodied in Count One of the Accusation is largely applicable to this decision. It would be a sorry commentary on the law as well as on the morals of the community to find that persons holding liquor licenses could permit their premises to be used month after month as meeting places for persons of known homosexual tendencies with all of the implications that may reasonably be drawn from that last phrase and the people's legal representatives find themselves helpless to take action against the holders of such licenses.

"Counsel for Petitioner argue that persons of homosexual tendencies may not lawfully be prohibited from collecting in groups in restaurants for the purpose of securing meals and alcoholic beverages.

"An occasional fortuitous meeting of such persons at restaurants for the innocent purpose mentioned is one thing. But for a proprietor of a restaurant knowingly to permit his premises to be regularly used 'as a meeting place' by persons of the type mentioned with all of the potentialities for evil and immorality drawing out of such meetings is, in my opinion, conduct of an entirely different nature which justifies action on the part of the Board of Equalization.

"Counsel for Petitioner spends many pages of his brief in setting forth what appears to be an argument based on the so-called 'Kinsey Report' and similar publications to the effect that what he terms the 'social taboo' against homosexuals is unjustified.

[12] "It will not be necessary to give that phase of Petitioner's argument any extended consideration. The views of the citizens of California on that subject are to be found in Sections 286 and 288a of the Penal Code. Any complaint against those provisions based on the theory that the mores of our times have changed since the enactment of those sections should be directed to the Legislature and not to the courts.

[13] "I stated at the outset that in my opinion the demurrer of Respondent should be sustained without leave to amend. I so hold because I have read the evidence taken before the Hearing Officer and in my opinion it amply sustains the charge made in Count One against Petitioner.

"While I am on the subject I may add that in my opinion the rights of Petitioner in this case were observed with scrupulous care at the hearing before the Hearing Officer. There would have been far less criticism of administrative hearings in the past had similar care always been exercised by the Officers in charge of such hearings.

[14] "As to Count Two of the Accusation the evidence as embodied in the record which I have read also clearly sustains a finding against Petitioner. I may add, however, that the punishment meted out to him under that finding of guilty was in my judgment excessive. Nevertheless the matter is academic since I find that the action of the Board insofar as the First Count is concerned was entirely proper and justified."

Judgment affirmed. The writ of supersedeas is dissolved.

PODESZWA v. WHITE et al.

Civ. 17731.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Oct. 9, 1950.

Action by Dorothy Podeszwa against John White, Jr., and another for the wrongful death of plaintiff's daughter, who was riding as a guest passenger in an automobile which was struck at intersection by a truck driven by the named defendant. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, A. W. Ashburn, J., rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Wilson, J., held that defendant who made no effort to avoid collision was negligent.

Automobiles ⇐227(3)

Where defendant who was driving his truck on a through highway at speed of 40 to 50 miles per hour saw automobile in which plaintiff's decedent was an occupant approaching intersection and saw automobile pass intersection stop sign at speed of 5 to 10 miles per hour but defendant made no effort to avoid collision and truck struck rear wheel of automobile at about center line of pavement, and by very slight swerve of his truck defendant could have avoided accident, defendant was negligent and fact that driver of automobile did not make boulevard stop did not justify defendant's failure to reduce his speed or change direction of his truck in an effort to avoid accident. Vehicle Code, § 552, 577.

Kenneth J. Murphy, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Parker, Stanbury, Reese & McGee, Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILSON, Justice.

Plaintiff, the mother of decedent Mary Patricia White, brought this action for the wrongful death of her daughter, who was riding as a guest passenger in a car driven by one Maxwell. The case was tried before the court without a jury. Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff and defendants have appealed.

Orangethorpe Avenue is a through highway extending easterly and westerly; it is paved to a width of between 35 and 40 feet. Hansen Road is a 20 foot, two-lane highway extending northerly and southerly, crossing Orangethorpe at right angles. There are no signs limiting speed of vehicular traffic on Orangethorpe. Boulevard stop signs protecting Orangethorpe traffic are located on Hansen Road at the southeast and northwest corners of the intersection, the former being approximately 12 feet south of the south edge of the Orangethorpe pavment. The area was "open country," Orangethorpe being a 55 mile zone. Approximately 80 feet south of Orangethorpe on the west side of Hansen was a house which was set back 20 to 30 feet west of the west edge of Hansen. At the time of the accident there were no obstructions between the two cars involved. The dwelling house did not prevent defendant driver from seeing the other car involved in the accident.

The weather was clear. Defendant White was traveling easterly on Orangethorpe at a speed of approximately 40 to 45 miles an hour. He was on a through highway which he knew was protected at Hansen Road by boulevard stop signs. There was no traffic behind or in front of him, the only vehicles in the vicinity being the two that subsequently collided.

Defendant was driving a two-ton Ford Truck and decedent was a passenger in a Ford Coupe. The only description of the accident was given by defendant White whose evidence was produced by deposition. He testified that he first saw the northbound Ford Coupe as it came past the house on Hansen Road. At that time he was about 300 feet west of Hansen. He looked both ways and saw no other vehicle and turned his attention back to the coupe. When he first saw the latter it appeared to be traveling 15 to 20 miles an hour and slowed down to 5 or 10 miles an hour as it approached the boulevard stop sign. It appeared to White that the coupe would stop and he therefore continued to travel at the same speed and had almost reached the westerly edge of Hansen when the coupe, having failed to stop at the line of Orangethorpe, came into the intersection. White applied his brakes immediately but they did not take hold until just about the instant of the impact, which was east of the center line of Hansen.

Since there is no conflict in the evidence the only question is whether it is sufficient to support the finding of the trial court that defendant White was negligent and that his negligence caused the death of decedent Mary Patricia White. Defendant continued at his speed of 40 to 45 miles an hour until the moment of collision. He did not sound his horn, did not apply his brakes until the instant of the impact and did not turn his car in any direction, the latter fact being confirmed by his statement that the point of impact was ten feet south of the center of Orangethorpe Avenue. The front of defendant's truck struck the left rear wheel of the car in which decedent was riding.

When defendant saw the coupe pass the boulevard sign at a speed of 5 to 10 miles an hour it should have been evident to him that the driver did not intend to make the boulevard stop. Nevertheless, he made no effort to avoid a collision. According to his own statement his truck struck the rear wheel of the coupe at about the center line of the south half of the Orangethorpe pavement. Manifestly by a very slight swerve of his truck he could have passed behind the coupe and avoided the accident. Furthermore, when he observed the coupe passing the boulevard stop sign and approaching the Orangethorpe pavement the application of his brakes would have slowed his truck sufficiently to allow the coupe to pass in front of him. The fact that the driver of the coupe did not make the boulevard stop as required by law, Vehicle Code, §§ 552, 577, did not justify defendant in failing to reduce his speed or change the direction of his car in an effort to avoid the accident.

MAYNARD v. BULLIS.

Civ. 17936.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Oct. 11, 1950.

Action by David S. Maynard against Dr. R. O. Bullis. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Clarence L. Kincaid, J., issued orders denying plaintiff's motion for a continuance of the trial, dismissing the action, and denying plaintiff's motion to reconsider and vacate the order of dismissal, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Wilson, J., held that plaintiff was not entitled to a continuance so that his new attorney could make preparations for trial.

George Goldman, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fulcher & Wynn, Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILSON, Justice.

Plaintiff has appealed from an order dismissing the action and from an order denying his motion to reconsider and vacate the order of dismissal. He has purportedly appealed from an order denying his motion for a continuance of the trial.[1]

The complaint in the action was filed on February 11, 1949, and defendant's answer thereto was filed on March 3. The case was set for trial on February 8, 1950. On October 26, 1949, the motion of plaintiff's counsel for leave to withdraw from the case, for the reason that differences had arisen between plaintiff and his counsel relative to the conduct and prosecution of the action, was granted and thereafter plaintiff appeared in propria persona. On December 2, 1949, notice of trial was served upon plaintiff. Shortly thereafter a representative of defendant's counsel called at plaintiff's residence and personally advised him of the date on which the case had been set for trial and inquired whether he would be ready for trial at that time. Plaintiff's answer was both profane and noncommittal. On February 7, 1950, the day immediately preceding the trial date, plaintiff's present attorney, Mr. Goldman, telephoned to defendant's counsel and requested a continuance of the trial in order that he might have time to make preparations therefor. His request was refused.

When the case was called for trial Mr. Goldman stated to the court that plaintiff was personally present in the courtroom and that he, Goldman, held a document executed by plaintiff appointing Goldman as plaintiff's attorney but he did not intend to file it unless a continuance of the trial could be had. The court stated that no sufficient showing of grounds for continuance had been made and denied the same. Upon motion of defendant's attorney an order was made dismissing the action.

Thereafter a substitution of Mr. Goldman as attorney of record for plaintiff was served and filed together with a notice of motion to reconsider and vacate the order of dismissal, pursuant to section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The affidavits accompanying the notice of motion do not make any showing of mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect. Plaintiff states in his affidavit that after the date on which his former counsel withdrew from the case he consulted numerous attorneys and law firms in regard to the case (in his brief he names eight different attorneys) "but that each of them refused to represent him therein." The other affidavits do not purport to set forth any reason for a continuance of the trial or for the vacation of the order of dismissal.

[1–3] The granting or refusing of a continuance of a trial is a matter within the sound discretion of the court and if not unreasonable or arbitrary it will not be disturbed on appeal. In re Estate of McCarthy, 23 Cal.App.2d 395, 73 P.2d 913. Where a party has had actual knowledge that his case is set for trial for a certain time and appears at that time he is not entitled to a continuance in the absence of a showing that he has not had such knowledge long enough to enable him to properly prepare. In each such case it is a question for the discretion of the trial court. Sheldon v. Landwehr, 159 Cal. 778, 782, 116 P. 44. In the instant case plaintiff had had written and oral notice of trial more than two months prior to the trial date. The fact that eight attorneys had refused to represent him is not a ground for continuance of the trial. No justification was advanced by affidavit or otherwise for the postponement of the trial under section 594a or section 595 of the Code of Civil Procedure or under Rule 11 of the Judicial Council Rules for Superior Courts, 33 Cal.2d 6, nor was any showing made upon which the court would have been justified in granting plaintiff's motion to reconsider and vacate the order of dismissal.

[4] The order denying a continuance of the trial is not appealable. Estate of McCarthy, supra.

The order of dismissal and the order denying plaintiff's motion to reconsider and vacate the order of dismissal are affirmed. The purported appeal from the order denying a continuance of the trial is dismissed.

PEOPLE v. COLLINS.
Cr. 4505.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.
Oct. 9, 1950.

Samuel D. Collins was convicted in Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Clement D. Nye, J., on two counts for separate abortions and one count for second-degree murder, and he was sentenced for terms prescribed by law, the sentences to run consecutively. From an order denying his motion to vacate judgment and sentence and to resentence him so that sentence on all three counts would run concurrently, defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Wilson, J., held that the term of imprisonment of five years to life for second-degree murder was indeterminate and indefinite and not for life, and therefore Superior Court could make sentences run consecutively.

Order affirmed.

Pen.Code, §§ 190, 669.

Samuel D. Collins, in pro. per.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Dan Kaufmann, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

WILSON, Justice.

By an information filed on August 30, 1945, defendant was charged with felonies in three counts—two separate abortions and murder. He was also charged with having been previously convicted on June 25, 1934, of the crime of abortion. See People v. Collins, 4 Cal.App.2d 86, 40 P.2d 542. He pleaded not guilty to each of the three counts and admitted the prior conviction. The jury found him guilty of all the crimes charged and found the crime of murder to be of the second degree. His motion for a new trial was denied and he was sentenced to the state prison for the term prescribed by law as to each count, the sentences to run consecutively. On his appeal the judgments and orders denying motions for a new trial were affirmed. People v. Collins, 80 Cal.App.2d 526, 182 P.2d 585.

On March 30, 1950, defendant filed a motion to vacate the judgment and sentence and to resentence him so that all three counts would run concurrently. His motion was denied and he has appealed from the order.

Defendant's contention is based on the provisions of section 669 of the Penal Code. He maintains that his sentence on the charge of murder in the second degree is for life and therefore the terms of his imprisonment must run concurrently.

Section 190 of the Penal Code provides that "every person guilty of murder in the second degree is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison from five years to life; * * *." Section 669 provides that when a person is convicted of two or more crimes the second or other subsequent judgment shall direct whether the terms of imprisonment or any of them to which he is sentenced shall run concurrently, or whether the imprisonment upon the second or other subsequent conviction shall commence at the termination of the first term of imprisonment; "provided, however, if the punishment for any of said crimes is expressly prescribed to be life imprisonment, whether with or without possibility of parole, then the terms of imprisonment on the other convictions, whether prior or subsequent, shall be merged and run concurrently with such life term."

The question has been decided adversely to defendant's contention. In re Quinn, 25 Cal.2d 799, 154 P.2d 875, and People v. Rivas, 85 Cal.App.2d 540, 193 P.2d 151. In the Rivas case it is pointed out that the punishment for second degree murder is not "expressly provided" by section 190 to be life imprisonment but is for the indefinite period of five years to life. In the Quinn case the court held that the fact that the petitioner had been sentenced for robbery of the first degree, an indefinite term without specified maximum. Penal Code, sec. 213, did not require the court to order his sentences on that and other counts to run concurrently since the judgment on the robbery charge was an indeterminate sentence.

[1, 2] The jurisdiction of the court to direct whether sentences shall run concurrently or consecutively is determined by section 669 of the Penal Code. When the sentences were pronounced against defendant the term of imprisonment on his conviction of second degree murder was indeterminate and indefinite, five years to life, Penal Code, sec. 190, and so remained until fixed by the board which by law has the power to determine the duration of sentences. Hence the court had jurisdiction to make the sentences run consecutively. The judgments and sentences are not subject to change by reason of any order made by the board which fixes the actual term.

Defendant's contention has been previously determined adversely to him by the First Division of this court when, on the authority of the Quinn and Rivas cases, his petition (Crim. No. 4061) to have the judgments vacated and the trial court instructed to impose new sentences to run concurrently was denied by a minute order on July 24, 1950.

Upon the filing of defendant's brief in propria persona he requested that counsel be designated to aid him in the case. We have been favored with a letter from G. William Shea, of the law firm of McCutchen, Thomas, Matthew, Griffiths & Greene, who is a member of the Los Angeles Bar Association's committee on criminal appeals, but he has not presented any authority contrary to the cases above cited.

Order affirmed.

SAN DIEGO COUNTY v. McCLURKEN et al.

Civ. 4207.

District Court of Appeal
Fourth District, California.

Oct. 10, 1950.

Hearing Granted Dec. 7, 1950.*

San Diego County brought an action against J. A. McClurken and others to enjoin the defendants from using or maintaining certain tanks for the storage of gasoline and other liquid fuels in violation of county zoning ordinance. The Superior Court, San Diego County, C. M. Monroe, J., entered judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that the evidence sustained the trial court's finding that the use of storage tanks placed on a concrete base was not such an extension of the prior use of large tanks placed on heavy skid timbers as would justify injunction for violation of the ordinance.

Affirmed.

1. Injunction ⇐128

In action to enjoin violation of county zoning ordinance by use of certain gasoline storage tanks, evidence sustained trial court's findings of prior nonconforming use of that specific portion of defendant's property in question.

2. Injunction ⇐89

In determining question as to whether extension of pre-existing nonconforming use must be enjoined as violative of county zoning ordinance, each case must be decided upon its own facts and by taking into consideration various circumstances respecting particular property and surrounding area.

3. Injunction ⇐89

In determining whether extension of pre-existing nonconforming use must be enjoined as violative of county zoning ordinances, facts that lot consisting of 20 acres was part of area of about 60 acres without cross streets and that zoning ordinance made no provision for pre-existing nonconforming uses were material considerations.

4. Counties ⇐21½

Zoning ordinance which attempts to exclude and prohibit existing and established uses or businesses that are not nuisances may be held invalid and unreasonable as applied to particular property.

5. Counties ⇐21½

Where zoning ordinance is in fact unreasonable as applied to particular land, it cannot be enforced.

6. Counties ⇐21½

County zoning ordinances will be scanned with more critical eye than those affecting cities.

* Subsequent opinion 234 P.2d 972.

7. Injunction ⇐128

In action to enjoin violation of county zoning ordinance by use of certain fuel storage tanks, evidence sustained trial court's finding that use of storage tanks placed on concrete base was not such an extension of prior use of large tanks placed on heavy skid timbers as would justify injunction.

8. Counties ⇐21½

County zoning ordinance was unreasonable when applied so as to prohibit or restrict uses of land which were not more detrimental to neighborhood than uses made of land prior to adoption of ordinance.

9. Injunction ⇐128

In action to enjoin violation of county zoning ordinance by use of fuel storage tanks, where it appeared that ordinance had made no provision for heavy industrial purposes within area it covered, fact that county had granted other variances to permit heavy industrial uses of land in immediate neighborhood at same time as it denied defendant's request for variance, while not conclusive in itself, would have material bearing on problem before court.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an action to enjoin the defendants from using or maintaining certain tanks, for the storage of gasoline and/or other liquid fuels, which are claimed to constitute a violation of a county zoning ordinance.

The particular property here involved is a part of lot 17 of a subdivision in unincorporated territory, and is about a mile from the main center of a community known as Lemon Grove. In 1937 the defendants bought lot 17, which consists of 20 acres, and about half of lot 16, which consists of 10 acres. These two lots and two similar lots constitute a body of land containing about 60 acres with roads on three sides, but with no cross roads. The defendants immediately commenced the development and use of their entire parcel for heavy industrial purposes, which has been carried on continuously ever since. When this use was begun the area in this vicinity was nearly all undeveloped property and there were few, if any, residences in the neighborhood.

From the beginning, the defendants have used their property, as a unit, for the following purposes: above-ground storage of gasoline and other fuels; storage of paint for industrial painting; wholesale storage and sale of lumber; storage of steel beams and parts of machinery for heavy manufacturing; storage of rock, sand and gravel; storage of junk and old iron; manufacture of acetylene gas and metal bearings; automobile and truck wrecking; building and rebuilding of heavy machinery; boiler repair shop; heavy machine shop; commercial planing mill; sand blasting; welding; heavy manufacturing processes using up to 2000 h. p. to operate the various machines used; and general heavy construction contracting business. In connection with this use, extensive leveling of higher land and filling in of swampy areas was done. A number of buildings were built, some being 50 to 100 feet wide and 200 to 250 feet long. While some operations were carried on in the buildings, a large part of the work, in addition to storage, was done out of doors and over all, or practically all, of the property. Among other things, gasoline and other fuels have been stored above ground in various tanks with capacities as great as 6000 gallons. By the use of heavy moving equipment these tanks have been moved from place to place, practically all over the premises, as demanded by the activities of the time.

In 1942 the county adopted the zoning ordinance in question, covering an area of 12 square miles. By this ordinance defendants' land was divided into three zones; partly "C-1", which permitted retail business only; partly "C-2", which permitted retail and wholesale merchandising and light manufacturing not to exceed 10 h. p.; and the remainder in "R-2a", which permitted residential use, farming, country clubs and cemeteries. The zone lines were so drawn as to split several of defendants' buildings devoted to manufacturing purposes, as well as their storage and work yards, so that part could be used for general merchandising and light manufacturing while the remainder could be used only for farming, residences, country clubs or cemeteries. No heavy industrial use such as that carried on by the defendants was provided for within the 12 square mile area. This ordinance further provided that any existing lawful use of land, although it did not conform to its provisions, might be continued.

In 1948, the defendants installed a retail service station on a part of their land, zoned as "C-1" and permitting that use. They also installed four storage tanks, each having a capacity of 12,000 gallons, near the permitted service station but about 50 feet within the area zoned for residences and cemeteries. They were installed above ground on a concrete base 10 feet wide and 54 feet long.

The plaintiff then brought this section to enjoin the use of these four tanks and to require their removal. The defendants answered and sought declaratory relief. It was conceded by the plaintiff at the trial that no claim was made that these tanks are a hazard to the neighborhood or constitute a public nuisance, and that "the presence of these tanks in a residence zone is the only issue, as far as we are concerned." The court found that beginning in the year 1938 and continuously thereafter the defendants have used all of said real property, except for a small described parcel which is not material here, for heavy industrial purposes including those above named; that they have made use of all of that land as a unit to be used in its entirety for the convenient operation thereon of the said heavy industrial purposes and uses; and that the portion of this land upon which said tanks are situated is within the portion of said lands which the defendants have continuously, since 1938, used for such heavy industrial purposes. As a conclusion of law, the court found that the provisions of this zoning ordinance, insofar as they purport to prohibit or restrict the use of said lands for heavy industrial purposes, including the use and purposes above mentioned and other heavy industrial uses and purposes which are not more detrimental to the neighborhood than the uses heretofore made of said lands, are unreasonable and are not effective to prohibit or restrict any of said uses or purposes, including the use of said four tanks for the storage of fuels; and that as to said lands, with the exception above noted, the defendants have a vested right to continue to use the same for all heavy industrial uses and purposes which are not more detrimental to the neighborhood than the uses heretofore made of said lands. Judgment was entered accordingly and the plaintiff has appealed.

[1] While the appellant recognizes that the evidence amply discloses such a prior use of most of the respondents' land, it is contended that it is not sufficient to support a finding of such use with respect to a small area at the easterly side of respondents' land, upon which these tanks are located. It is further contended that, in any event, no permanent structures had been erected on this part of the property prior to 1948; that any use of this part of the property prior to 1942 had been merely for the storage of heavy materials and possibly for storage of gasoline and fuels in portable tanks; that the erection of permanent tanks was an extention of the former use which is not permitted by law; and that the court's conclusions of law are, therefore, erroneous and contrary to law. The first of these contentions is based upon a conflict in the evidence and is without merit. The respondents' evidence, which the court accepted, was sufficient not only to show that this entire property was being used as a unit for these purposes, but to show that the specific portion of the property here in question had been so used for the storage of both heavy materials and of fuels in large tanks, these tanks having been moved about from time to time by the use of heavy moving equipment.

[2, 3] The important question here is as to whether an extension of the nonconforming use here appears, as a matter of law, which is sufficient to require a reversal of the judgment. The appellant relies on such cases as Sunny Slope Water Co. v. City of Pasadena, 1 Cal.2d 87, 33 P.2d 672, and O'Rourke v. Teeters, 63 Cal.App. 2d 349, 146 P.2d 983, as having modified the holding in Jones v. City of Los Angeles, 211 Cal. 304, 295 P. 14, to the effect that a landowner may continue with an existing business after the adoption of a zoning ordinance. It is argued that under the later decisions a preexisting nonconforming use cannot be extended and must be confined to the existing building, and that it cannot be extended to an adjoining lot. It clearly appears from the decisions, as a whole, that each case must be decided upon its own facts and that various circumstances affecting the particular property and the surrounding area must be taken into consideration. From its inherent nature the business here in question could not be, and was not, confined to a building or buildings. The business was developed as a unit in accordance with the original purpose to use the entire lot, and the particular area here in controversy was a part of that lot and was not an adjoining lot. The fact that this lot consisting of 20 acres is a part of an area of about 60 acres without cross streets, is a material consideration. The fact that a business of this nature was established some years before the zoning ordinance was adopted, and that this ordinance which covers 12 square miles of unincorporated territory made no provision for such a business, except by permitting it to continue where it was, should also be considered.

[4-6] In the case of In re White, 195 Cal. 516, 234 P. 396, a zoning ordinance was held to be unreasonable and void since no adequate provision for a business district was made. In Dobbins v. City of Los Angeles, 195 U.S. 223, 25 S.Ct. 18, 49 L.Ed. 169, it was held that a zoning ordinance was ineffective as against a gas works in the course of construction although no actual use had yet been made. In Wilkins v. City of San Bernardino, 29 Cal.2d 332, 175 P.2d 542, 548, it was pointed out that zoning ordinances have been held invalid and unreasonable as applied to particular property "Where the zoning ordinance attempts to exclude and prohibit existing and established uses or businesses that are not nuisances." In Bernstein v. Smutz, 83 Cal. App.2d 108, 188 P.2d 48, it was held that where a zoning ordinance is in fact unreasonable as applied to particular land it cannot be enforced. In Re Smith, 143 Cal. 368, 77 P. 180, it was held that, because different conditions exist, county zoning ordinances will be scanned with a more critical eye than those affecting cities.

[7, 8] Applying these rules to the facts of the instant case it cannot be held, as a matter of law, that the use of storage tanks placed on a concrete base was such an extension of the prior use of large tanks placed on heavy skid timbers as compels a reversal of the judgment, or that the court erred in holding that the zoning ordinance in question was unreasonable if interpreted and applied as contended for by the appellant. This particular land had previously been used for the above-ground storage of fuels, in connection with the use of the tract for various industrial purposes, and there is nothing about the present storage in well-constructed tanks which necessarily affects the neighborhood more adversely than the previous storage in tanks placed on timbers instead of concrete. The question as to any extension of the use was one of fact, and the court's conclusion and holding is sufficiently sustained by the evidence. Moreover, under the circumstances here appearing no error appears in connection with the court's conclusion with respect to the reasonableness of the ordinance, as applied to this land.

[9] A further question with respect to an unreasonable administration of the zoning ordinance here appears. While the ordinance made no provision for heavy industrial purposes within the area it covered, the appellant has subsequently recognized the necessity therefor, and has administered the ordinance accordingly with respect to other lands in the immediate neighborhood. The evidence here discloses that more than 50% of the property in an area having a radius of about two blocks in every direction from this particular spot is now being used for heavy industrial uses, under variances permitted and granted by the appellant. Among such other surrounding businesses are: a blacksmith shop which was permitted to expand into extensive manufacturing and the building of truck trailers and semi-trailers; a cement-block manufacturing plant; a wholesale and retail lumber yard; an automobile wrecking yard; a planing mill; a butane filling station; a rug cleaning establishment; and a large electrical substation. All of these were prohibited by the ordinance, but were permitted by variances granted. At the same time the respondents' request for a variance was denied. While this matter may not be conclusive in itself, it has a material bearing on the problem before the court.

The facts having been decided adversely to the appellant, and the court's conclusion as to the applicability of the ordinance to the respondents' property being reasonable under the circumstances shown, it cannot be held in this equitable action that the appellant was entitled, as a matter of law, to the drastic relief here sought.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re SMILIE'S ESTATE.

RAMELOW v. SMILIE et al
Civ. 4214.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Oct. 9, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 2, 1950.

Hearing Denied Dec. 7, 1950.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Leslie B. Smilie, also known as L. B. Smilie, deceased, on partition of Max Ramelow for probate of a letter as decedent's last will and testament, wherein Joe T. Smilie and others appeared as proponents of such will and Jewel Smilie contested the probate of such will and petitioned for probate of an earlier will. The Superior Court of San Diego County, Joe L. Shell, J., entered an order admitting the letter to probate as decedent's last will, denying probate of earlier will and appointing an executor and Jewel Smilie appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that letter was properly construed as testamentary in character and admitted to probate as a valid will devising testator's entire estate to a friend and thereby in effect revoking earlier will naming decedent's wife as sole beneficiary.

Order affirmed.

1. Wills ⇐386

Trial court's finding from conflicting evidence that testator was mentally competent was conclusive on appeal.

2. Wills ⇐87

Letter to friend written in testator's handwriting shortly before he committed suicide, referring to difficulties with wife and her daughter by a former marriage and stating "I want you to have all of my after my bill", was properly construed as testamentary in character and admitted to probate as valid will devising testator's entire estate to friend and thereby in effect revoking earlier will naming wife as sole beneficiary. Probate Code, § 72.

3. Wills ⇐462, 463

The court cannot ordinarily supply omissions or insert words in a will, but words of surplusage may be stricken.

4. Wills ⇐470

A will should always be read from its four corners and all parts of the will construed in relation to each other to form one consistent whole.

5. Wills ⇐439, 440

The cardinal principle in construing a will is to ascertain the intention of testator as expressed therein.

6. Wills ⇐439

Testamentary intention may be determined by no definite, fixed rule, but each case must stand upon its own peculiar facts.

7. Wills ⇐69

A "will" is a disposition of property to take effect at death of testator.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Will".

8. Wills ⇐87

In determining whether an instrument was intended to be testamentary, reference will be had to the surrounding circumstances and the language will be construed in the light of such circumstances, and, if it then appears that instrument was intended to be testamentary, court will give effect to the intention if it can be done consistently with the language of the instrument, and the particular form of the instrument is immaterial.

9. Wills ⇐87

To establish testamentary character of instrument, it must appear only that maker intended by it to dispose of property after his death and no particular words are necessary to show testamentary intent.

10. Wills ⇐462

Where a testamentary document clearly discloses on its face that the maker's meaning is not completely expressed by the words used and that words are omitted, such words may be supplied in order to carry out the intention as manifested by the context.

Hillyer & Hillyer and William Hillyer, San Diego and Raymond P. Coady, La Mesa, for contestant and appellant Jewel Smilie.

Donald A. Stewart, San Diego, for petitioner and respondent Max Ramelow.

Harrison G. Sloane, San Diego, for proponents and respondents Joe T. Smilie, William V. Smilie and Margaret Smith (Raycraft).

GRIFFIN, Justice.

In 1940, Jewel Smilie, formerly Jewel Sparks, became the wife of the deceased, Leslie B. Smilie. Mr. Smilie had been previously married and of that issue there were three children, namely, Joe T. Smilie, William V. Smilie and Margaret Smith (Raycraft). At the time of his death Mr. Smilie was paying alimony to this previous wife. His second wife became ill and was being nursed by Mrs. Jewel Sparks, who had also been divorced from her husband. Within one month after the death of the second Mrs. Smilie, Leslie B. Smilie married Jewel Sparks, who had a daughter by her previous marriage named Dot or Dorothy. Dorothy married one Phillip Heaser. About three months after Jewel Sparks married Leslie B. Smilie they went to an attorney and had prepared a last will and testament in which Mr. Smilie nominated his wife executrix of his will, bequeathed to her all of his property of every description, and therein stated that he intentionally made no gift to his three named children. Therein he also authorized his wife, upon his decease, to conduct and operate any business that he might have been operating. Considerable property in the form of ranches, duplexes, and vacant property were acquired during their marriage and title was taken in the name of Mrs. Smilie. Mr. Smilie continued conducting his electrical business and, as evidenced by cancelled checks, considerable sums of money were paid over to Mrs. Smilie by him. Apparently Mrs. Smilie attended to the rentals and the reinvestment of the funds derived from such rentals, as well as the management of the property in general. Mrs. Smilie's daughter and son-in-law operated one of the ranches with Mrs. Smilie, on a share-cropping basis. Some time prior to July 2, 1949, some marital difficulties arose between the Smilies and particularly in relation to the Heasers. Mr. Smilie complained about this over a period of time to his friend Max Ramelow, a half-brother of Jewel Smilie, who resided in El Cajon, California. About July 2, 1949, Mr. Smilie went to the ranch being operated by the Heasers and some dispute arose between them in reference to the operation of the berry-picking activities being conducted thereon. Apparently Phillip Heaser struck Mr. Smilie with his fist and inflicted some injury upon him. The evidence is conflicting as to how the dispute arose and Heaser and others present testified that Mr. Smilie was in the act of grabbing some instrument just previous to that time in an effort to strike Heaser. After his return home to San Diego that evening Mr. Smilie wrote a letter, all in his own handwriting, as follows:

"July 2—49.

"Dear Max—

"Well Jewel & Dot had me beat up today. I did not ~~think~~ Phip would do that.

"Jewel & Dot have been raising hell for two weeks. So today they had Phip beat me up. I did not think Phip would do thing like that. This was done at the farm today about 2:30 P. M.

"I have asked Jewel a number of times to let us divind up. but she will not do any.

"I want you to see that all my bills are paid and that Dot does not get thing. I want you to have all of my after my bill are.

"I am told Dot is going to move back to Knemore so she can look after thing.

"Love to all

"L. B. Smilie.

"This is all over money Dot wants it all."

[1] This letter was mailed to Mr. Ramelow, and soon thereafter, Mr. Smilie committed suicide. Ramelow presented this letter with a petition to probate it as Mr. Smilie's last will and testament and asked that he be appointed executor thereunder. A few days later, Mrs. Smilie presented the last will and testament of Mr. Smilie dated May 22, 1940, and petitioned for the probate of that will. After a hearing was had the trial court admitted the letter dated July 2, 1949, as the last will and testament of the deceased, appointed Ramelow executor and denied probate of the former will. From this order Jewel Smilie has appealed. At the trial she questioned the mental competency of the deceased to make the will admitted to probate. The court found that he was mentally competent for this purpose. The evidence on the subject was conflicting and in view of the time-honored rule this court is not at liberty to disturb that finding. Chichester v. Seymour, 28 Cal.App.2d 696, 83 P.2d 301; In re Estate of Wall, 183 Cal. 431, 191 P. 687; In re Estate of Snowball, 157 Cal. 301, 107 P. 598.

The only remaining questions raised by contestant on this appeal are (1) Whether the letter of July 2, 1949, was, as found by the court, intended by deceased to be a will, i. e., was testamentary intent reasonably reflected by the document and by the surrounding circumstances; (2) if so intended, whether it sufficiently refers to any corpus so as to be a devise of any property; and (3) whether it entirely revoked the former will of 1940.

As to these questions contestant argues that since deceased went to an attorney's office to make the first will, it is clear that he knew the nature and requirements of a valid will; that decedent made no statement in the document that he wished it to operate as a will or that he was about to die; that he made no mention of his property therein; that he did not discuss therein the disinheritance of his wife or what provision he wished to make for his children by his previous marriage; that the letter, thus written, from the language used, did not clearly show that it was the purpose of the deceased to thereby make a disposition of his property contrary to the previously executed former will, and that the testamentary character of the instrument was not shown "with legal certainty", citing such cases as In re Estate of Wunderle, 30 Cal.2d 274, 280, 181 P.2d 874; In re Estate of Golder, 31 Cal.2d 848, 850, 193 P.2d 465; In re Estate of Spitzer, 196 Cal. 301, 237 P. 739; In re Estate of Branick, 172 Cal. 482, 157 P. 238; In re Estate of Major, 89 Cal.App. 238, 241, 264 P. 542; In re Estate of Meade, 118 Cal. 428, 50 P. 541, 62 Am.St.Rep. 244; In re Estate of Kelleher, 202 Cal. 124, 259 P. 437, 54 A.L.R. 913; In re Estate of Lynch, 142 Cal. 373, 75 P. 1086; and White v. Deering, 38 Cal.App. 433, 437, 177 P. 516.

In appropriate findings the trial court held that the letter was testamentary in character; that by it deceased intended to revoke the former will and intended to devise nothing to his wife or her daughter and did intend thereby to devise his entire estate to Max Ramelow after payment of his bills. The findings then set forth the interpretation given the instrument by the trial court as follows:

"I have asked Jewel a number of times to let us divide up but she will not do anything.

"I want you to see that all of my bills are paid and that Dot does not get a thing. I want you to have all. * * *

"This is all over money. Dot wants it all."

The main complaint in reference to this construction is that the court has erroneously stricken from the sentence the words italicized as follows: "I want you to have all of my after my bill are". Apparently the trial court arrived at this construction on the theory that the words were stricken were mere surplusage. The argument is that the court has, by striking these words, so modified the will as to substitute its own interpretation in the place and stead of the vague meaning therein reflected; that since the deceased did not make it clear whether he wanted Max Ramelow to have all of his personal belongings or all of his money or all of his business property, the court was not authorized to modify this expression to make it include all of his property.

[2] The evidence surrounding the making of the will shows that shortly after the marriage of Leslie B. Smilie and contestant, she had the deceased make a will in which she was the sole beneficiary to the exclusion of his natural heirs. She endeavored to account for the subsequent acquisition of the properties, title to which was vested in her, by attempting to show that she furnished the money for the purchase thereof, and accordingly, the entire property was her separate property. On cross-examination she had considerable difficulty in remembering where she had obtained her divorce from her previous husband, and what property she secured by virtue of a property settlement agreement with him. (This agreement, subsequently produced, recites that Mr. Sparks agreed to pay her $960, @ $50 per month.) She endeavored to show that she kept approximately $16,000 in a safe deposit box in her own home and that she spent this money in buying the property which now stands in her name. Checks were received in evidence showing that the deceased had given to her considerable sums of money during their married life. The parties made individual income tax returns during those years. Mr. Smilie's return listed all income from rentals on property standing in his wife's name, as well as all income from his business. He claimed ½ of that income as community property. Mrs. Smilie's return listed ½ of the same income as community property without further itemization. The testimony likewise shows that the deceased was endeavoring to have the contestant divide the property between them, apparently in contemplation of some marital separation and that the contestant failed to accede to his request. The evidence further discloses that the beneficiary under the last purported will was a friend and confident of the deceased and that the deceased disclosed his matrimonial differences to him; that he took a great dislike to the daughter of the contestant and that it was his determination that she receive no part of the estate owned by him and his wife. The deceased apparently recognized that the contestant had a community interest in and to a certain portion of the property owned by them and that in case of his death he had no authority to dispose of her portion of the community property. The previous will indicates that the deceased did not intend to remember his own children in his will. It therefore would not be an unreasonable construction of the document under consideration to hold that the deceased intended that the contestant receive no part of his estate, for the reasons expressed, and that his friend, Max Ramelow, receive the portion which she was entitled to receive under the former will. This interpretation, therefore, would in effect completely modify and change the terms of the former will and in effect revoke it. In re Estate of Martin, 31 Cal.App.2d 501, 88 P.2d 234; In re Estate of Mallon, 28 Cal.App.2d 106, 81 P.2d 992; Sec. 72, Probate Code; Neibling v. Methodist Orphans' Home Ass'n, 315 Mo. 578, 286 S.W. 58, 51 A.L.R. 652; In re Estate of Fuller, 135 Cal.App. 781, 28 P.2d 399; In re Estate of Siemers, 202 Cal. 424, 261 P. 298; In re Estate of Dargie, 216 Cal. 667, 15 P.2d 849.

Just what property is or may be shown to be community property and subject to distribution under the will is not a question before us at this time. Whether Max Ramelow will be able to receive any portion of the proceeds of the decedent's estate, in view of the fact that the pretermitted heirs may claim it under the law of succession, is likewise not before us for review. These heirs are appearing as proponents of the will that was admitted to probate and are respondents in the present proceedings.

[3-9] In re Estate of Soulie, 72 Cal. App.2d 332, 164 P.2d 565, was relied upon heavily in support of the trial court's ruling that the words "of my" could be stricken out of the sentence in the will. Although there is a slight factual difference, the general principle applicable to the construction of a will is there stated, i. e., that the court cannot ordinarily supply omissions nor insert words in a will, but words of surplusage may be stricken; that the instrument should always be read "from its four corners" and all parts of the will construed in relation to each other to form one consistent whole, and that the cardinal principle applicable to the construction of a will is to ascertain the intention of the testator as expressed therein, citing cases. There is no definite, fixed rule by which testamentary intention may be gauged, but each case must stand upon its own peculiar facts. A will is a disposition of property to take effect at the death of the testator and in determining whether the instrument propounded was intended to be testamentary, reference will be had to the surrounding circumstances, and the language will be construed in the light of these circumstances. If it shall then appear that the instrument was intended to be testamentary, the court will give effect to the intention, if it can be done consistently with the language of the instrument and the particular form of the instrument is immaterial. No particular words are necessary to show a testamentary intent. It must appear only that the maker intended by it to dispose of property after his death. In re Estate of Spitzer, 196 Cal. 301, 237 P. 739. Many of the cases cited by contestant were decisions upholding findings of the trial court denying admission to probate of a proffered document.

[10] In Re Estate of Blalock, 95 Cal. App.2d 463, 213 P.2d 100, the will in controversy, written upon two sheets of lined paper, apparently torn from a small memorandum book, was before the court for construction, and after reciting many of the rules and cases above cited, the court stated that when it clearly appears on the face of a testamentary document that the maker's meaning is not completely expressed by the words used, and it is also clear what words are omitted, those words may be supplied in order to carry out the intention as manifested by the context. And that in order to learn the intention of the testator the whole will may be scrutinized and words may be interpolated or transposed.

In answer to the argument that it was apparent from the instrument admitted to probate that the decedent did not have his own children in mind, the trial court stated: "We don't know whether he knew that by failing to mention his children he would leave his property in such a condition that they would take under the law of succession. He might have known it. Who knows that he didn't know it, so we leave his will as we found it and simply clarify it in those respects in that it might not clearly express what we believe his intention to have been."

The trial court's construction of the will is not unreasonable and is in accord with the recognized rules of construction and apparently carries out the obvious intent of the testator to dispose of his entire estate.

Order appealed from is affirmed.

DODGE v. HARBOR BOAT BLDG. CO. et al.

Civ. 17507.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Oct. 9, 1950.

Action by William Wallace Dodge against Harbor Boat Building Company to recover for work, labor and services performed and materials furnished by plaintiff's assignor. The defendant filed a cross-complaint against the plaintiff's assignor, the National Ship Service Company, Inc. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Harry H. Archbald, J., entered a judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that, where Navy authorized extra work to be done by subcontractor in preservation of vessels for inactivation, and contractor agreed to present subcontractor's extra work claims to Navy and to pay claims when received from Navy, and Navy in settling with contractor considered contractor's inclusion of subcontractor's extra work claims in contractor's own such claims, and segregation of subcontractor's original work from its extra work was impossible, subcontractor's assignee could sue for value of total work performed by contractor instead of suing on contract and also for extra work, and contractor was estopped by manner of handling subcontractor's account in settlement with Navy from questioning value of subcontractor's extra work.

Judgment affirmed.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Defendant, Harbor Boat Building Co., a corporation, appeals from a judgment for $97,459.03 together with costs in favor of the plaintiff, William Wallace Dodge.

Plaintiff, who is the assignee of National Ship Service Co., Inc., a corporation (hereinafter referred to as National Ship), sued to recover for work, labor and services performed, and materials furnished by his assignor.

Plaintiff's amended complaint contained two causes of action: the first sought recovery of $147,782.21 as the reasonable value of work, labor and materials furnished at the request of defendant; the second was a common count based upon an account stated for the same amount; a third count, added by amendment, was predicated upon the ground that defendant had received $147,782.21 from the Navy for work and materials furnished by National Ship. Defendant Harbor Boat Building Co. (hereinafter referred to as Harbor Boat), denied the material allegations of the first, second and third causes of action, claimed by way of offset and by cross complaint that plaintiff's assignor was indebted to it in the sum of $12,540.97, and sought damages in the sum of $38,250 by reason of the careless and negligent manner in which some of the work had been done. The trial court found that the reasonable value of the services and material furnished by National Ship was $110,000, that Harbor Boat was entitled to an offset of $12,540.97 for services which it had furnished National Ship in connection with the work done by National Ship, and that, as a result, plaintiff, as assignee of National Ship, was entitled to judgment for $97,459.03, together with costs. The sum of money sued for constituted compensation for work done and material furnished in painting, cleaning, refurnishing, repairing and renovating two vessels, the U.S.S. Jaccard [Jacquard] (also known as DE-355) and the U.S.S. Acree (also known as DE-356) which belonged to the U. S. Government. The type of work done and materials furnished by plaintiff's assignor and the defendant is a process of preservation for inactivation, or what is known as "putting the vessels in moth balls." Harbor Boat and National Ship are both engaged in ship building and ship repair work in the Los Angeles Harbor area.

In May, 1946, representatives of National Ship met with representatives of Harbor Boat concerning the proposed preservation work to be done on Navy ships in Los Angeles Harbor. As an outgrowth of this meeting, Harbor Boat, after representatives of both concerns had inspected the work being done by the Navy in San Diego and the two vessels (the subject of this litigation) in Los Angeles Harbor on which such work was to be done, entered its bid on the work to be performed. After the inspection of the ships and prior to the entering of the bid, representatives of Harbor Boat and National Ship went over the specifications for the proposed work, National Ship agreed to do specified portions of the work involved and prepared an estimate of the cost of the work proposed to be done by it. The work to be done by National Ship consisted, in the main, of removing paint and rust, cleaning and painting equipment and the vessels themselves. The estimates prepared by National Ship with reference to the work to be done by it for Harbor Boat in the mothballing process totaled $24,195 for each ship, and were accepted by Harbor Boat in its Purchase Orders of June 12, 1946. Harbor Boat's bid was accepted by the Navy and it was to do the preservation work on the Jaccard for the sum of $73,855 (this was later revised to read $74,284.64) and the work on the Acree for $74,745 (which was later revised to read $75,174.64).

In the Purchase Orders, signed by Harbor Boat and transmitted to National Ship, it was provided that National Ship was to "Accomplish work in accordance with the following U. S. N. Instruction Sheets. All work to be done to the satisfaction of the AIM (Assistant Industrial Manager) Resident Inspector and to be completed by the stipulated availability date: * * *" and that "It is understood that there may be changes in specifications but that no increase in price will be made unless the change is considered of a major nature and a Change Order issued by A.I.M."

The record shows that it became necessary for National Ship to perform a great deal of work in addition to that specified in its estimate to Harbor Boat and in addition to that provided for in the purchase orders signed by Harbor Boat. This additional work was necessitated by several factors: modifications and corrections in the Navy's instruction manual; express request by Harbor Boat and demands of inspectors for work not originally specified; the continuous rusting of surfaces because the ships were not maintained by the Navy and Harbor Boat in the proper state of dehumidification during the progress of the work; lack of facilities and equipment which were to have been furnished by the Navy and Harbor Boat; the necessary, but unprovided for, dismantling of many parts in order that such parts might be cleaned and painted, and misinterpretation of instruction sheets by a subsequent Naval Inspector who required certain work to be redone after its approval by a prior inspector. The record substantiates plaintiff's argument that the preservation of ships for inactivation was something new for the Navy and a process which was, as yet, in the trial and error stage. In other words, it was, at the outset, impossible to ascertain just how much work would have to be done or the method by which it was to be accomplished. It appears that the Navy specifications and instructions were changed from time to time during the course of the work, and that on September 4, 1946, the Navy sent a communication to all companies engaged in the inactivation program in the Los Angeles Harbor which read (with the deletion of the names and addresses of the companies to which it was sent) as follows: "Subj; Change orders for Vessels Undergoing Preservation. 1. Notwithstanding any policy agreements or any phrases in article 5 of the basic job orders, change orders will be issued for those vessels upon which changes in the work have resulted by virtue of modifications and corrections to the preservation instruction manual issued for bid purposes. Contractors are advised to prepare their estimates, as official change orders will be issued at an early date. /s/ D. L. Carroll, Jr. Asst. Industrial Mgr." (Emphasis added.)

On September 6, 1946, the Navy issued change orders covering the work being done on the two ships here involved. The orders, which were identical, read in part as follows: "1. This Change Order No. 332-A is hereby issued to cover all corrections and modifications to the Preservation Instruction Manual prepared for bid purposes. This includes all corrections and modifications made prior to this date. (Emphasis added.)

"2. In submitting your estimates of any increase or decrease in cost, it is requested that you enumerate each modification, or correction, with its cost, referencing the page number of the Preservation Instruction Manual * * *. These estimates, broken down by labor, material, overhead, and profit should be submitted in the form of an enclosure to a forwarding letter."

On September 9, 1946, National Ship wrote to Harbor Boat in substantial and pertinent part as follows: "You hold prime contract from United States Navy covering certain work in progress on the above vessels. You entered into sub-contracts with National Ship Service Company, Inc. covering a portion of this work which calls for total compensation to National Ship Service Company, Inc. of $46,270.00.

"From time to time as the work progressed you instructed National Ship Service Company, Inc. to alter the work called for in the specifications and in some instances instructed us to perform certain work which was not mentioned in the specifications. As a consequence a very substantial additional cost has been incurred by National Ship Service Company, Inc. in connection with these jobs, and because of changes and additional work which we have completed and are performing at your instance very substantial further cost will be incurred by us before our work on the vessels is completed.

"We understand that you have given us the foregoing instructions and that the additional work undertaken by us upon instructions from you was occasioned through additional requirements of the United States Navy not contemplated in your original prime contract. Regardless of the reason, however, it is estimated that National Ship Service Company, Inc. has and will incur a total cost of approximately twice as great as that contemplated when we entered into the two sub-contracts with you. National Ship Service Company, Inc. of course looks to you for payment of the extras and additional work which you ordered. We believe, however, that you are entitled to consideration from the United States Navy and that you should for your own protection immediately call these matters to the attention of the proper Naval authorities.

"We have prepared an analysis, as requested by you on September 5, 1946, which discloses the additional work accomplished by us and now in the course of completion, which is different from the original specifications or not specified at all, and which we have been called upon to complete upon your instructions." (Emphasis added.) Following an explanatory paragraph of the breakdown of figures is an analysis of the estimated cost of the additional work performed by National Ship. The letter then reads: "We are aware of the fact that proper methods, materials and workmanship in connection with the preservation of vessels is new to everyone and largely experimental prior to present activities in connection therewith. This handicapped both you and our company in estimating your costs and also made it difficult for the United States Navy to prescribe accurate specifications therefor both as to materials and methods.

"The great additional and unforeseen cost which we have entailed has imposed a serious if not disastrous financial burden upon our company. We believe that this is true of many if not all organizations who have engaged and are now performing the same work. Our cost to date in connection with work performed on these vessels is $66,370. We estimate that our total cost to completion will be approximately $83,370.00. * * *

"Our books of account and records, payroll, insurance, taxes and material costs which will bear out the foregoing are available for inspection by you and the United States Navy at all times." (Emphasis added.)

On September 10, 1946, Harbor Boat replied to National Ship's letter of the 9th, as follows: "We have your letter of September 9, in reference to work as a sub-contractor on vessels DE 355 and 356. We do not agree with the intent of your letter in connection with the extra work you have performed or are performing as you had a definite contract for work to perform on these vessels, our order numbers R–600 and R–601, in which the amount was fixed and the following a provision of the work orders:

" 'It is understood that there may be changes in specifications but that no increase in price will be made unless the change is considered of a major nature and a Change Order issued by A. I. M.' (Assistant Industrial Manager's Office.)

"We are negotiating with the Navy to obtain change orders for any extra work and would like your assistance in obtaining change orders for that portion of the work you consider extra."

National Ship replied on the 12th of September, reaffirming its position that the extra work had been done under instructions from Harbor Boat and that it was entitled to be compensated therefor. On September 18, Harbor Boat wrote National Ship in part as follows: "* * * we will use every effort possible to obtain proper additional compensation from the Navy for our extra work as well as yours. Payment for your extra work so obtained will be paid to you as soon as received." (Emphasis added.)

On September 24, 1946, National Ship wrote to Harbor Boat supplementing the letter of the 9th, and itemizing the extra work and material and cost therefor for work done on the two ships. The cost of the extra work and material on the Jaccard amounted to $35,962.19 and for the Acree, $43,630.46.

On September 26 and 27, Harbor Boat wrote to the Navy listing the changes made and estimating the increased cost thereof. Harbor Boat's estimate of the cost for additional work done on the Acree was $89,625.36, and on the Jaccard, $83,093.34. On January 29, 1947, Harbor Boat wrote to the Navy in part as follows: "3. The specifications on which we bid were superceded [sic] by changed specifications which were issued from time to time and resulted in a considerable increase in cost. We also enclose detailed specification changes and application to the various items, enclosure (b)." (Emphasis added.) Payment was requested for additional work done on the Jaccard in the sum of $84,568.84 and on the Acree in the sum of $91,051.71. The detailed estimates which were supposed to have accompanied the two letters were apparently lost in the Navy's files and no copies thereof were produced at the trial. It should be noted here that the figures pre- pared on the cost of the additional work done by National Ship were included in Harbor Boat's estimate to the Navy, although there was no segregation of the entire work as between Harbor Boat and National Ship.

The record shows that Harbor Boat was paid in full the amount of its original bid on the two ships and that it received in addition the sum of $141,622 in full payment for the cost of additional work and materials furnished. National Ship, plaintiff's assignor, has been paid nothing by Harbor Boat.

The contentions of the defendant may be summarized as follows: Plaintiff should have sued on the contract based upon its bids which amounted to $48,390 and for the value of extra work done; there was no evidence that National Ship was authorized to perform the extra work for which it claimed compensation; there was no evidence of the value of the extra work; there was no competent evidence of the value of the total work performed by National Ship; evidence was erroneously admitted as to the value of National Ship's work and, finally, that plaintiff's evidence as to the value of its extra work should have been excluded for the reason that the bills of particulars furnished by National Ship were insufficient and were not timely filed. We are of the opinion that none of these grounds of appeal is sustainable.

[1] There is implicit in the findings, conclusions, and judgment, a determination by the trial court that the value of the work done by National Ship provided a proper basis for a judgment in its favor and that it was unnecessary to sue on the original contract. This determination was one of fact and has ample support in the record. It is true that National Ship agreed with Harbor Boat to do specific work for an agreed price of $48,390 and that Harbor Boat agreed with the Navy to do the complete job for $149,459.28, but when the work had been completed National Ship had done extra work of the claimed value of $79,592.65 and Harbor Boat had done extra work (including that done by National Ship) of the claimed value of $172,718.70. As we have mentioned, Harbor Boat was paid $141,622 for work over and above its original bid. When it is understood that the entire purpose of the work was to prepare the ships for an inactive status and that the completed job accomplished no more than this, the figures we have quoted are sufficient to demonstrate that the original specifications were incomplete and wholly inadequate to call for the work that was done. Harbor Boat was finally paid almost twice the amount of its bid to the Navy, while National Ship's extra work was largely in excess of the work upon which its bid was predicated. Harbor Boat, as we shall point out, has never claimed, and cannot be heard to claim now, that the Navy did not authorize this extra work. We have examined the record, including numerous exhibits, and are satisfied that the original specifications and directions with respect to the work were altered and supplemented so extensively and in so many material particulars as to render it impossible for the trial court to segregate the work originally agreed to be done by National Ship from the total work that was required to complete the jobs to the satisfaction of the Navy. Harbor Boat's statement of the items which constituted its own and National Ship's increased and decreased costs due to changes in specifications were more than one hundred in number. Changes from the original specifications were given in great detail in the statements of Harbor Boat and National Ship and many witnesses testified with relation to the departures from the original specifications. An analysis of their testimony, found in some 2500 pages of the reporter's transcript, would be an interminable task, and it will suffice to say that we are bound by the implied finding that there was a sufficient departure from the original specifications to render it appropriate to use the value of National Ship's entire work as a proper basis for fixing its compensation.

As far as we can determine from the record a different result would not have been reached if plaintiff had sued upon the contract, and also for the extra work. It is clear that defendant suffered no prejudice in being confronted with the claim for the value of National Ship's total work. A fact which we think is decisive of all the contentions made by defendant is that Harbor Boat accepted National Ship's figures as to the extent and value of National Ship's extra work and incorporated them in its own demands upon the Navy. This was after Harbor Boat had been offered the opportunity to verify the claims of National Ship by an inspection of its records, and not only failed to do so, but accepted them as correct. Having received National Ship's figures Harbor Boat did not present them separately to the Navy but included them in its own claims for extra work. It undertook and agreed with National Ship to present the latter's claims to the Navy with its own and was alone responsible for the failure to segregate the claims of the two companies. It agreed to pay National Ship the amount of the latter's claims when received from the Navy. The record discloses that the responsible officers of the Navy took into consideration, in reaching an agreement with Harbor Boat, the claims of National Ship which were included in Harbor Boat's statement of the total extra work done. Also, that after the settlement was made, it was impossible to determine the amount that had been paid for National Ship's work as distinguished from that of Harbor Boat. Defendant is in no position to claim that the Navy did not make an allowance on account of the work done by National Ship in an amount sufficient to justify the judgment that was given in National Ship's favor. Moreover, if the award of the judgment be examined by deducting National Ship's bid of $48,390 from the total value of its work as found by the court it will be seen that the judgment represents only an allowance for extra work in the sum of $61,610 as against National Ship's claim for extra work of something over $79,000. Harbor Boat, under the judgment, will retain from the amount collected from the Navy $80,012, as compensation for its own extra work of the claimed value of $93,126.05. Under the judgment, National will receive 77 per cent of the amount of its claim for extra work, while Harbor will retain 85.9 per cent of its claim for extra work. The solution of the controversy reached by the learned trial judge is eminently fair and just and gives Harbor Boat no just cause for complaint.

For the reasons we have stated defendants' other claims of error must fail. There was testimony given by Daniel Ogden, president and manager of National Ship, that the reasonable value of all work and materials furnished by National Ship was between $165,000 and $170,000. His testimony is criticized by defendant as being an unsupported conclusion but we think he was shown to be a witness well qualified and informed to testify on the subject. We find in his testimony sufficient support for the court's finding that the value of the labor and materials was $110,000. But, as previously mentioned, even under defendant's theory, National Ship earned the contract price, and upon the facts we have related defendant cannot be heard to assert that the authorized extra work was worth less than the difference between the contract price and the total value of $110,000 as found by the court. From the entire evidence it is impossible to determine whether defendant received from the Navy on account of work performed by National Ship more or less than the value of National's extra work for which plaintiff has been compensated by the judgment. The manner in which the account was handled in the settlement with the Navy clearly estops defendant from questioning the value of National Ship's extra work. It would be difficult to imagine stronger circumstances for the application of the doctrine of estoppel to bar a contractor from questioning the account of his subcontractor.

[2] At the outset of the trial defendant objected to the introduction of any evidence upon the ground that the bills of particulars furnished by plaintiff were insufficient, and that they were not furnished within the ten day period after demand was made as specified in section 454, Code of Civil Procedure. Defendant demanded a bill of particulars May 19, 1948, and one was furnished July 3, 1948. A demand for a further bill was made July 9, 1948, and it was furnished July 27, 1948. On August 4, 1948, defendant filed an objection to the second bill. The trial was had January 27, 1949

Defendant's objection to the introduction of evidence was overruled and this ruling is assigned as error. We have examined the bills of particulars, which comprise 31 pages of the clerk's transcript, and are in agreement with the trial court that they were as complete as could reasonably be expected. Although they were not furnished within ten days after the demand, it was within the discretion of the trial court to overrule defendant's objection and to receive evidence of the account. The ruling is one which should not be disturbed in the absence of a showing of clear abuse of discretion and there was, in our opinion, no abuse of discretion. Cromer v. Strieby, 54 Cal.App.2d 405, 409, 410, 128 P.2d 916; McCarthy v. Mt. Tecarte Land & Water Co., 110 Cal. 687, 43 P. 391.

[3] Even if we had found ourselves in agreement with defendant as to claimed irregularities of pleading or procedure reversal of the judgment would not have been justified. The issues were fully tried and the judgment is not for an excessive amount. National Ship completed its contract. Defendant, while acting as National Ship's agent, collected from the Navy a single amount for the extra work of the two companies. It would say now that because it buried National Ship's claim in its own it may keep all the money collected, since it is impossible to tell how much it collected for itself and how much for its principal. The reverse is true. It became liable for money had and received, Wagner v. Wedell, 3 Cal.App. 274, 85 P. 126, and could reasonably have been required to prove that it did not collect the entire amount of National Ship's charges.

Defendant filed a cross complaint seeking money and damages in the amount of $50,790.97. The findings on the cross complaint were adverse to defendant except as to a credit of $12,540.97, which was allowed. The findings on the cross complaint are not claimed to be unsupported by the evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur.

TURNER v. STATE BAR.
L. A. 21404.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.
Oct. 17, 1950.

Proceeding by Maurice Turner to review the recommendation of Board of Governors of the State Bar of California that petitioner be suspended from the practice of law for three months. The Supreme Court, Per Curiam, held that communication by former attorney for judgment debtors with judgment creditors in consummating oral compromise agreement between the parties in absence and without consent of counsel of record for judgment creditors constituted improper communication upon a subject of controversy in violation of Rules of Professional Conduct and that suspension for three months was not too harsh.

Order in accordance with opinion.

1. Attorney and client ⇐32

Negotiations between former attorney of record for judgment debtors and judgment creditors in consummating oral compromise agreement between the parties, in absence and without consent of attorneys representing judgment creditors under contingent fee contract, involved questions as to form and terms of documents, particularly indemnity agreement to be executed by judgment creditors, and questions of what was necessary to protect rights of respective parties and hence constituted improper "communication upon a subject of controversy" in violation of Rules of Professional Conduct. Rules of Professional Conduct for State Bar, rule 12.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Communication Upon a Subject of Controversy".

2. Attorney and client ⇐32

Improper conduct of former attorney of record for judgment debtors acting at request of their counsel of record in communicating with judgment creditors in consummating oral compromise agreement between the parties in absence and without consent of counsel of record for judgment creditors was not excusable on ground that attorney was not then the attorney of record for judgment debtors and was acting in ministerial capacity. Rules of Professional Conduct for State Bar, rule 12.

3. Attorney and client ⇐32

Any right of judgment creditors to make a compromise settlement with judgment debtors in absence and without consent of creditors' counsel and regardless of contingent fee contract could not justify or excuse conduct of former attorney for judgment debtors in communicating with judgment creditors concerning a subject of controversy in consummating such agreement, knowing that judgment creditors had counsel of record who had not consented to settlement. Rules of Professional Conduct for State Bar, rule 12.

4. Attorney and client ⇐58

Suspension of attorney from practice of law for three months because he improperly communicated with a party represented by counsel upon a subject of controversy in absence and without consent of such counsel in violation of Rules of Professional Conduct was not too harsh under all the circumstances. Rules of Professional Conduct for State Bar, rule 12.

Jerold E. Weil, San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

Petitioner seeks a review of the recommendation of the Board of Governors of the State Bar that he be suspended from the practice of law for a period of three months.

In 1947, after practicing in Illinois, petitioner was admitted to the bar in California. In 1948 he was charged with and found guilty of violating Rule 12 of the Rules of the California State Bar, 26 Cal.2d 35. This rule provides that a member of the State Bar "shall not communicate with a party represented by counsel upon a subject of controversy, in the absence and without the consent of such counsel. * * *"

The charge grew out of the following situation: In an action brought in Los Angeles County by George W. Davis, his wife, and their copartner, Lebus, of Chicago, petitioner was one of the counsel of record for defendants, whom he had known in Chicago. Attorneys Dasteel and Dottenheim represented plaintiffs under a contingent fee contract whereby they were to receive 50% of "any amount recovered by suit, settlement, or otherwise," payment of which was secured by an assignment of "an undivided fifty percent (50%) interest in the proceeds of said claim and in any judgment recovered thereon."

In November, 1947, judgment was rendered in plaintiffs' favor in the sum of $95,000. Thereafter an appeal was taken by new counsel who were substituted in place of defendant and his associates. In January, 1948, execution was returned unsatisfied, and suit on the judgment was then started in Chicago to secure a levy on defendants' assets in Illinois. Both parties secured Chicago counsel to represent them in those proceedings. Petitioner and all attorneys representing the parties, both in Chicago and Los Angeles, knew of Dasteel and Dottenheim's contract for one-half the recovery.

While the appeal in Los Angeles and the Chicago action were pending the Davises requested Dasteel and Dottenheim to effect a settlement of the case. Although some discussions were had, no agreement resulted, and the Davises then began to negotiate directly with defendants in Chicago by long distance telephone. A few days prior to May 14 defendants made an offer to settle for $25,000, which the Davises accepted. Defendants then told the Davises to contact petitioner in Los Angeles, who would make out the closing papers. One of defendants' Chicago attorneys also telephoned petitioner and requested him to draw up a satisfaction of judgment, general release and indemnity agreement, giving him a general outline of the contents of these papers. Petitioner agreed to consummate the settlement as requested and in addition agreed to advance the $25,000 pending arrival of defendants' check in that amount. When Dasteel and Dottenheim were told by the Davises about defendants' offer, they objected to the settlement, declaring that their interest in the case was worth $25,000. Defendants' Los Angeles attorneys also learned of the proposed settlement and promptly informed petitioner they intended to withdraw from the case because the arrangements were being made in the absence and without the consent of Dasteel and Dottenheim.

On May 14, pursuant to a telephone call from petitioner, the Davises went to his office to effect the settlement. They told petitioner it was their understanding with defendants that they were to receive $20,000 and that $5,000 was to be set aside for Dasteel and Dottenheim who, they stated, had refused to agree to the settlement. The record shows that prior to the Davises' arrival petitioner had two checks made out—one for $20,000 and another for $5,000. They also told petitioner that later on they intended to make a settlement with Dasteel and Dottenheim and that they would credit the $5,000 toward that settlement. While the Davises remained at his office, petitioner had three telephone conversations with Dasteel, during which he told Dasteel that the Davises were in his office and were going to settle for $25,000, and that if Dasteel and Dottenheim would come over they would receive half that sum, but that if they did not do so he would retain $5,000 to protect defendants against their claim for attorneys' fees. Dasteel testified that he told petitioner that he could not take any steps in the matter without consulting Dottenheim, who was not then available, that petitioner's conduct was unethical and that he and Dottenheim would not agree to the settlement.

Various papers, including satisfaction of judgment, release and indemnity agreement, were then prepared by petitioner and executed by the Davises, who held a power of attorney from plaintiff Lebus. Whereupon petitioner gave the Davises a check for $20,000 and a memorandum stating that he was holding the other $5,000 on behalf of Dasteel and Dottenheim. During that afternoon petitioner tried unsuccessfully to place the $5,000 in escrow in a bank on behalf of Dasteel and Dottenheim. The $25,000 was advanced by petitioner, who did not receive reimbursement thereof until two or three days after the settlement had been consummated.

The satisfaction of judgment was filed on May 27, 1948, but was subsequently set aside on motion of Dasteel and Dottenheim, who refused to accept the $5,000 held by petitioner. Thereafter they negotiated a settlement of their fees in the sum of $16,250, which included the money held by petitioner and additional funds contributed by both plaintiffs and defendants.

Petitioner urges the following points: (1) That there was no "subject of controversy" within the meaning of Rule 12 at the time petitioner dealt with the Davises because the action had already proceeded to judgment and the parties had orally agreed upon the terms of the settlement; (2) that petitioner acted only in a ministerial capacity in arranging consummation of the settlement; and (3) that plaintiffs were entitled to make a settlement with defendants in the absence and without the consent of their counsel and regardless of the contingent fee contract.

[1] The only real question is whether petitioner has violated Rule 12 as charged, and there seems little room for argument on that point. It is to be noted that the rule prohibits communication "upon a subject of controversy" with a party represented by counsel "in the absence and without the consent of such counsel." Petitioner not only "communicated" with the Davises, after inviting them to his office, but he drew up papers and had the Davises sign them, knowing that their counsel of record had specifically disapproved of the proposed settlement and had refused to participate therein. Although there had been an oral agreement to compromise for part of the amount of the judgment, this agreement did not include all the terms of the settlement, and there were several matters which were undecided such as the form and terms of the documents, particularly the indemnity agreement to be executed by the Davises, and questions as to what was necessary to protect the respective interests of the parties. These were all matters on which differences of opinion might have arisen. Until determination of these questions and consummation of the compromise, the interests of the parties were adverse. It is apparent, therefore, that petitioner's communication with the Davises regarding these matters pending consummation of the compromise was an improper communication "upon a subject of controversy" within the scope and meaning of Rule 12. See Carpenter v. The State Bar, 210 Cal. 520, 523, 292 P. 450; American Bar Association, Canons of Professional and Judicial Ethics [1947], pp. 8, 179–180, 229–230, 260–262; In re Atwell, 232 Mo.App. 186, 115 S.W.2d 527, 528; In re Maltby, 68 Ariz. 153, 202 P.2d 902, 903; Pirsig, Cases on Legal Ethics, p. 105.

[2] It cannot be said that petitioner's conduct was excusable on the ground that he was not then attorney of record for defendants or that he was acting in a ministerial capacity. He had previously been defendants' attorney of record, he was acting at the request of their counsel of record, and to all intents and purposes he was still acting for them and looking after their interests in the pending litigation. Although there is evidence that defendants' Chicago attorneys instructed petitioner as to the contents of the papers to be drawn by him, it is obvious that his activities were not limited to those of a mere scrivener and that, particularly in connection with the matters of indemnity and protection against the claims of Dasteel and Dottenheim, he was communicating with the Davises upon a subject of controversy.

[3] Petitioner relies strongly on his claim that plaintiffs were entitled to make a settlement with defendants in the absence and without the consent of their counsel and regardless of the contingent fee contract. The existence of such a right on the part of plaintiffs, however, could not justify or excuse petitioner's conduct in communicating with the opposing parties concerning a subject of controversy, contrary to Rule 12, when he knew that they had counsel of record who had not consented thereto.

[4] In view of all the circumstances, it cannot be said that a suspension of three months is too harsh. It is therefore ordered that petitioner be suspended from the practice of the law in this state for a period of three months, effective thirty days after the filing of this order.

CITY & COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO v. SAN MATEO COUNTY.

S. F. 17777.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.

Oct. 20, 1950.

The City and County of San Francisco, a municipal corporation, brought an action against the County of San Mateo to recover real property taxes paid under protest. The Superior Court, Marin County, Edward I. Butler, J., rendered a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court, Shenk, J., held that under constitutional provision that assessments upon property of another county of property lying without its jurisdiction shall be subject to review, equalization and adjustment by the State Board of Equalization, the City and County of San Francisco was required to exhaust its administrative remedy before the State Board of Equalization before instituting an action against the County of San Mateo to recover alleged illegal taxes levied against San Francisco's airport located in San Mateo County.

Affirmed.

Prior opinion 213 P.2d 505.

1. Taxation ⇐204(2)

The taxing power may not be extended to cover property under an exception to an exemption clause beyond that expressly included.

2. Taxation ⇐217

Under provision of Constitution that lands and improvements which are located outside of municipality and which are taxable at time of acquisition by a municipality should not be exempt except that no "improvements" of any character constructed by a purchasing municipality shall be taxed, quoted word included dirt fill placed on marsh land by City and County of San Francisco at its airport located in San Mateo County. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 105(a); Const. art. 13, § 1.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Improvements".

3. Administrative law and procedure ⇐229 Taxation ⇐251, 451

Generally, a taxpayer seeking judicial relief from an erroneous assessment must have exhausted his remedies before administrative body empowered initially to correct, except where attempted assessment is a nullity because property is either tax exempt or outside jurisdiction, but resort to Board of Equalization is not rendered unnecessary by that fact alone.

4. Administrative law and procedure ⇐229 Taxation ⇐251

Under constitutional provision that all assessments of property belonging to a municipality without its jurisdiction shall be subject to review, equalization and adjustment by State Board of Equalization, where City and County of San Francisco paid taxes under protest to County of San Mateo for San Francisco's airport in San Mateo County, City and County of San Francisco should have pursued their administrative remedy before State Board of Equalization before instituting an action to recover alleged illegal tax. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 105(a); Const. art. 13, § 1.

SHENK, Justice.

The plaintiff brought this action against the county of San Mateo to recover an alleged illegal proportion of the 1946–1947 taxes levied against the city's airport in San Mateo county claimed as exempt under Article XIII, section 1, of the state constitution. The county's demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend. Judgment for the defendant followed. The city has appealed.

The complaint alleges in substance that beginning in 1930 the city acquired large tracts of marsh, tide and submerged lands in San Mateo county for the purpose of utilizing the site as an airport; that the city expended $6,753,529 in raising the level of the land by dredging and filling operations, and making provision for drainage and drainage control; that these operations were completed before the first Monday of March 1946; that prior thereto the county had assessed the land on the basis of its condition when acquired and at the sum of $100,785.00; that in 1946 the land was assessed at $684,625.00 on the basis of its value prepared for use as an airport; and that the city paid the full tax under protest claiming an exemption as to the portion representing the increase in the assessment. The complaint alleges illegality as to that portion because, it is claimed, the fill constitutes an "improvement" and is therefore exempt under the constitutional provision. No proceeding was taken before the state board of equalization. The appeal presents two questions: (1) whether the raising of the level of the land by the filling operations was an improvement within the meaning of the constitution, and (2) whether the city should first have pursued the administrative remedy.

The first question presents a problem of public importance in the field of taxation under the constitutional amendment of 1914, and a decision thereon will serve as a guide generally to the taxing authorities of the state. Prior to 1914 section 1 of Article XIII of the constitution provided that property belonging to "the United States, this state, or to any county or municipal corporation within this state shall be exempt from taxation." In November 1914 the following was added to the exemption clause: "* * * except such lands and the improvements thereon located outside of the county, city and county, or municipal corporation owning the same as were subject to taxation at the time of the acquisition of the same * * * provided, that no improvements of any character whatever constructed by any county, city and county or municipal corporation shall be subject to taxation. All lands or improvements thereon, belonging to any county, city and county, or municipal corporation, not exempt from taxation, shall be assessed by the assessor of the county, city and county, or municipal corporation in which said lands or improvements are located, and said assessment shall be subject to review, equalization and adjustment by the state board of equalization." (Emphasis added.)

The question of the taxability of the portion of the land designated as the fill is resolved by the language of the 1914 amendment. Thereunder the county has power to assess only those municipally owned lands or improvements that are not exempt from taxation. If the fill constitutes an improvement as contemplated by the constitutional amendment, it is to that extent exempt, and the county had no power to take it into consideration in making the assessment. In arguing the taxability of all portions of the land including the fill, the county refers to section 105(a) of the Revenue and Taxation Code. That section states that the term "improvements" includes "All buildings, structures, fixtures, and fences erected on or affixed to the land, except telephone and telegraph lines." The county seeks to rest on the proposition that since land is land an addition thereto in the nature of a fill cannot be deemed to be an improvement in any sense. Reliance is placed on San Pedro etc., R. R. Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 180 Cal. 18, 179 P. 393. That case involved the taxability of a private leasehold of tidelands. Filled land between the shore line and the breakwater was on tideland. It was non-taxable as against the United States; and this court said it would be absurd to consider it as an improvement under a lease providing for the removal of improvements at the expiration of the lease. The court was there concerned with the meaning of the term "improvements" under the code definition dealing with the taxation of private property interests. Such declarations are not controlling in the present case where the taxability of the city-owned property is dependent upon a special provision in the constitution. The sense in which words are used in that provision creating an exception to the general exemption from taxation of municipally owned property depends on the objective sought to be achieved. Rock Creek etc. Dist. v. County of Calaveras, 29 Cal.2d 7, 9, 172 P.2d 863.

[1] The history and purpose of the amendment have heretofore been considered by this court. Pasadena v. County of Los Angeles, 182 Cal. 171, 187 P. 418; Turlock Irr. Dist. v. White, 186 Cal. 183, 198 P. 1060; City and County of San Francisco v. County of Alameda, 5 Cal.2d 243, 54 P.2d 462; City and County of San Francisco v. San Mateo County, 17 Cal.2d 814, 112 P.2d 595; Rock Creek etc. Dist. v. County of Calaveras, supra, 29 Cal.2d 7, 172 P.2d 863. Prior to the amendment property acquired by outside municipalities had no place on the tax rolls of the county in which it was situated. It was readily appreciated that a continuation of the policy of complete exemption might impoverish counties extensively invaded by outside municipalities seeking acquisition of property for public use. A partial retention of the taxing power of the county as to such acquired property was therefore devised. The county was empowered to assess "such lands and the improvements thereon" "as were subject to taxation at the time of the acquisition" of the same by the city. Retained within the exemption provision were "improvements of any character whatever constructed" by the city. "Construction" or "constructed" means the creation of something that did not exist before as distinguished from replacement or repair. City and County of San Francisco v. San Mateo, supra, 17 Cal.2d at 819, 112 P.2d at page 596, citing cases. The obvious purpose was to permit the assessment of the property which was in existence at the time it was acquired by the city. The assessment in successive years of that much of the municipally owned property was made subject to review, equalization and adjustment. The phrase "improvements of any character whatever" must be held to include any addition (i. e. excluding matters of repair and replacement) to the property as it was when acquired. The amendment does not define "improvements" beyond the descriptive language "improvements of any character whatever". It is difficult to perceive what more inclusive language could have been employed to express the intent to preserve to the county a continuation of the property on the tax rolls as a source of revenue restricted, however, in each successive year to an equalized valuation of the property before the addition of any construction. The manifest intention in adopting the amendment was that if any such addition or improvement was not there at the time of acquisition, it was not taxable thereafter. To restrict the meaning of "improvements" to that defined elsewhere than in the constitution would be to defeat that purpose. If the invoked restricted meaning was intended the broader language of inclusion need not have been employed. The taxing power may not be extended to cover property under the exception to the exemption clause beyond that expressly included. City of Pasadena v. County of Los Angeles, supra, 182 Cal. at 174, 187 P. 418. It is clear that the fill was a constructed addition to land and not merely repair or replacement. A contrary holding would permit a county to tax an outside municipality for substantial construction confined to raising the land level by fill and other means at a cost of millions of dollars, a result which, if language means anything, was intended to be avoided by the 1914 amendment.

[2] It therefore appears from the facts alleged in the complaint that the fill which raised the level of the land for use as an airport was not "such lands" and "improvements" as were "subject to taxation at the time of the acquisition", but was an improvement "constructed" by the city and therefore exempt from taxation under the constitutional amendment.

The fact that the first question is decided in accordance with the plaintiff's contentions does not, however, justify a reversal of the judgment in this particular case, for the reason that the second question must be resolved in favor of the defendant.

[3, 4] Section 1 of Article XIII of the Constitution provides that the assessment of city owned lands "shall be subject to review, equalization and adjustment by the state board of equalization." An administrative remedy is thus provided. One ground of the demurrer is that the complaint is insufficient because it fails to allege that the administrative remedy has been pursued. In the recent case of Security-First National Bank v. County of Los Angeles, 1950, 35 Cal.2d 319, 320, 217 P.2d 946, 947, this court stated: "It is the general rule that a taxpayer seeking judicial relief from an erroneous assessment must have exhausted his remedies before the administrative body empowered initially to correct the error. * * * An exception is made when the attempted assessment is a nullity because the property is either tax exempt or outside the jurisdiction. * * * But resort to the board of equalization is not rendered unnecessary by the fact that, as in the present case, the error is one in the classification of property" and the tax is assailed on the ground that it is in violation of constitutional mandates. The omissions in the above quotation are the citations of numerous authorities in support of each statement made. The state board of equalization has the power "initially" to make a correction of the error alleged in this case, and the facts do not bring it within any exception noted in the authorities cited. It is not claimed that the assessment is a nullity in toto. An adjustment is sought by virtue of an erroneous inclusion of exempt improvements with taxable lands. If the city was dissatisfied with the assessment as an accumulated increase in the value of the taxable property, it was necessary to apply to the state board for review and adjustment prior to pursuing the remedy for refund of taxes paid under protest. Luce v. City of San Diego, 198 Cal. 405, 245 P. 196; Los Angeles etc., Corp. v. Los Angeles, 22 Cal.App.2d 418, 71 P.2d 282. We therefore have a problem of "equalization and adjustment" confided by the constitution to the state board of equalization. It is the province of the board to "adjust" the assessment so that the exempt and the non-exempt portions of the property be properly segregated.

THORSBY et al. v. BABCOCK.
S. F. 18192.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.
Oct. 20, 1950.

As Modified Oct. 23, 1950.

Alice Jean Thorsby and Carl E. Thorsby brought action against Williston A. Babcock, wherein the plaintiffs obtained a judgment against the defendant. The defendant claimed that proceeds from sale of defendant's homestead were exempt from execution because of homestead statutes, and the plaintiffs moved for a determination of the validity of the claim for exemption. The Superior Court of Contra Costa County, Harold Jacoby, J., denied the exemption, and the defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Edmonds, J., held that defendant's exemption was not lost by lapse of time because the proceeds of the sale had been tied up in litigation for more than the statutory period of six months because of no fault of the defendant.

Order reversed with directions.

EDMONDS, Justice.

Williston A. Babcock is the judgment debtor in an action brought by Carl E. Thorsby and his wife. After the entry of judgment, Babcock sold real property upon which he had placed a homestead. The Thorsbys are endeavoring to obtain the proceeds of the sale in satisfaction of the judgment, and the appeal is from an order determining that the money is not exempt from execution.

The facts are in dispute. It appears that at the time of the sale, in addition to the Thorsby judgment a writ of attachment had been levied by the Bank of America against the property. The sale was consummated through an escrow and, because of the judgment and attachment, the title company which was acting as escrow holder refused to pay over the proceeds to Babcock.

Babcock then filed suit to quiet title to the fund, claiming the exemption provided by section 1265 of the Civil Code. The Thorsbys, Bank of America and the title company were named as defendants.

Approximately eight months after the property was sold, judgment was entered in favor of Babcock. It was determined that the liens of the Thorsbys and the Bank of America were subject to the homestead filed by Babcock.

Before the decision in the suit to quiet title, but more than six months after the sale of the realty, the Thorsbys levied execution on the money held by the title company. On the day after judgment was rendered in that suit, Babcock demanded from the sheriff the proceeds from the sale upon the ground that they are exempt from execution. The Thorsbys promptly moved for a determination of the validity of the claim for exemption. The court denied the exemption and the appeal is from that order.

Babcock contends that the ruling was erroneous because the money represents the amount received from the sale of a valid homestead, Civ. Code, sec. 1265. He argues that "A creditor should not be permitted, by delaying payment of proceeds to a homestead claimant through litigation for more than six months, to destroy the exemption of such proceeds." Relying upon section 1265 of the Civil Code which exempts the proceeds from sale of a homestead for the period of six months, he reasons that "the time during which he cannot obtain the proceeds because they are under the control of a court looking into the validity of the exemption should be no part of such period." The respondent asserts that "The clear meaning of the homestead statute should not be circumvented by any transaction between the judgment debtor and third parties."

[1, 2] Section 1265 of the Civil Code provides, in part, that "* * * should the homestead be sold by the owner, the proceeds arising from such sale to the extent of the value allowed for a homestead exemption as provided in this title shall be exempt to the owner of the homestead for a period of six months next following such sale." The facts shown by the present record do not bring Babcock within the express terms of this section. However, the purpose of a law must be considered in determining the legislative intention, and a homestead statute, being of a remedial and humane character, should be given a liberal construction in favor of the exemptions created. Greenlee v. Greenlee, 7 Cal. 2d 579, 61 P.2d 1157; Yager v. Yager, 7 Cal.2d 213, 60 P.2d 422; Warner v. Warner, 144 Cal. 615, 78 P. 24.

[3] By the Constitution, the legislature is directed to "protect, by law, from forced sale a certain portion of the homestead and other property of all heads of families." Cal. Const., Art. XVII, section 1. "The object of all homestead legislation is to provide a place for the family and its surviving members, where they may reside and enjoy the comforts of a home, freed from any anxiety that it may be taken from them against their will, either by reason of their own necessity or improvidence, or from the importunity of their creditors." In re Estate of Fath, 132 Cal. 609, 613, 64 P. 995, 997.

[4] To effectuate the protection of the family unit through a homestead exemption the owner's freedom of disposition is limited, Civ. Code, sections 1242, 1243; Prob. Code, sections 1435.1–1435.3, 1435.9, and the use of the property after his death is regulated for the benefit of his family. Civ. Code, section 1265. "The benign object of the statute was to protect the home of the owner from forced sale, and not to withdraw from the reach of creditors property of the debtor as a source of revenue for the support of himself or family." Maloney v. Hefer, 75 Cal. 422, 424-425, 17 P. 539, 540.

[5] However, in addition to exempting "the home", the legislature has included protection of the proceeds arising from the sale of the homestead by the owner "* * to the extent of the value allowed for a homestead exemption * * * for a period of six months next following such sale." Civ.Code, section 1265. The obvious purpose of that exemption is stated in section 1265a which provides: "If the proceeds arising from the sale of property selected as a homestead are used for the purchase of real property within the period of six months following such sale, the property purchased may be selected as a homestead in the manner provided in this title within the period of six months following such sale, and such selection, when the declaration has been filed for record, shall have the same effect as if it had been created at the time the prior declaration of homestead was filed for record." Read together, the two sections allow the owner of the homestead to substitute one family home for another without losing his exemption.

Although most of the states have legislative provisions commonly referred to as homestead laws, only a few of them extend the exemption to the proceeds from a voluntary sale. E. g., Ill.Stat.Ann. c. 52, § 6; Miss. Code Ann. § 329; Va. Code Ann. § 6546. In some states the proceeds retain the exemption only if reinvested in other real property to be used as a home. Similarly, statutes relating to proceeds from the forced sale of property subject to a homestead, usually exempt the proceeds to an amount equal to the maximum value permitted to be claimed for homestead purposes. But in many jurisdictions such exemption is allowed only if the proceeds are reinvested in other property within a reasonable or specified period of time. Mo. Rev.Stat.Ann. § 619; N.J.Rev.Stat. 2.26–121, N.J.S.A.; and see cases collected in Notes, 1 A.L.R. 483; 46 A.L.R. 814; 83 A.L.R. 54. Statutes not requiring a reinvestment of proceeds from the sale as a condition to their exemption have been severely criticized because, in the absence of such restriction, the debtor may use the the proceeds to the detriment of his creditor and without the benefit to his family which the statute was designed to protect. Haskins, Homestead Exemptions (1950) 63 Harv.L.Rev. 1289.

Although, in granting an exemption to the proceeds of a voluntary sale of the homestead for a period of six months, Civ. Code, section 1265, the legislature has imposed no requirement of reinvestment, obviously the true purpose of giving the owner that time is to permit him to move his family to another home with the retention of protection from forced sale. Statutes not granting such exemption tend to immobilize the debtor to the detriment of his entire family, for whom the homestead provisions were intended to be a benefit. See Gray v. Deal, 50 Okl. 89, 95, 151 P. 205. In clarification and furtherance of this policy, section 1265a of the Civil Code permits the filing of a declaration of homestead on the newly selected property. If done within six months of the sale of the old home, and with the proceeds from the sale of it, the declaration "* * * shall have the same effect as if it had been created at the time the prior declaration of homestead was filed for record."

Clearly, the Legislature has not required a purchase of other property immediately. Rather it has given the seller the reasonable time of six months within which to complete the transaction. However, the legislative purpose is thwarted if the proceeds from the sale of the homestead cannot be obtained by the owner, through no fault of his own, during the six months period.

In the present case, Babcock had no control over or use of the money derived from the sale of his homestead until approximately eight months after the sale. During that time it was impossible for him to reinvest in a new home for his family and obtain exemption of it. In effect, he did not have the statutory right to hold the proceeds of the voluntary sale of his homestead for six months, free from levy by his creditors, and the opportunity to have the exemption continue by investing the money in a new home. He was not responsible for the circumstances which prevented him from obtaining the proceeds from the sale of his homestead. Within three weeks after the sale he filed suit to quiet title to the money and there is no suggestion that he, in any way, hindered or delayed the progress of the litigation. However final determination of the matter required the not unusual time of eight months.

[6] Giving full effect to the purposes of sections 1265 and 1265a of the Civil Code, it would be unreasonable to hold that Babcock should be penalized because litigation required by the escrow holder's refusal to recognize his rights has consumed more than six months. Under the circumstances shown by this record, his homestead rights have not been concluded by this lapse of time.

The order is reversed with directions to the trial court to make an order directing the Sheriff of Contra Costa County to pay to Williston A. Babcock the proceeds from the sale of his homestead property.

KEY SYSTEM TRANSIT LINES v. SUPERIOR COURT OF STATE, IN AND FOR ALAMEDA COUNTY.

S. F. 17922.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.

Oct. 18, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 16, 1950.

The Key System Transit Lines, a corporation, filed a petition to secure a writ of prohibition to prevent the exercise of jurisdiction by the Superior Court of the State in and for the County of Alameda in the trial of an action to recover damages for personal injury brought by Grace M. and Collis P. Joseph against petitioner. The Supreme Court, Shenk, J., held that where trial court, in entering its order of dismissal on ground that action was not brought to trial within two years from filing time, overlooked fact that parties had entered into a stipulation setting case for trial, and that there was a congested trial calendar at that time, same trial court had jurisdiction to entertain a motion to vacate order of dismissal.

Peremptory writ denied.

The petitioner seeks the writ of prohibition to prevent the exercise of jurisdiction by the respondent court in the trial of an action to recover damages for personal injuries brought by Grace M. and Collis P. Joseph.

The action against the petitioner was commenced on November 15, 1945. Summons was served on November 29, 1946, concurrently with a substitution of attorneys. The defendant's answer was filed on January 7, 1947. On January 8, 1948, the petitioner noticed a motion to dismiss the action for failure to bring it to trial within two years from the time of filing, section 583, Code Civ.Proc. On January 15th the motion was granted. On January 31st the plaintiffs filed a notice of motion to vacate the order of dismissal. The motion was granted by the same judge who made the former order and subsequently the plaintiffs sought to set the cause for trial. The defendant, petitioner herein, thereupon filed the present petition alleging that the respondent court had no jurisdiction to vacate the prior order of dismissal.

No appeal was taken from either order. It is the theory of the petitioner that the court exceeded its jurisdiction in vacating the order of dismissal; that the order was appealable, Southern Pacific R. R. Co. v. Willett, 216 Cal. 387, 14 P.2d 526, and was subject to be set aside only on appeal or by a motion pursuant to section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure; that neither the motion to vacate nor the order granting the motion was expressly or otherwise based on any ground permitted by section 473, and that both the motion and the order were merely reagitation and involved a determination of the same issues presented on the hearing of the motion to dismiss. The respondent contends that although section 473 was not expressly mentioned on the motion to vacate, the facts as shown by the record indicate that the court's jurisdiction could properly be deemed to have been exercised under that section or pursuant to its inherent power, and that this court should conclude that it was so exercised.

The order granting the motion to dismiss was based on the court's findings that more than two years had expired since the commencement of the action; that the delay in bringing the action to trial had been inexcusable; that the defendant's rights had been greatly prejudiced, and that during the period since the filing of the complaint the defendant had an attorney maintaining offices in the city of Oakland.

The record shows that the following additional matters were considered on the motion to vacate the order: On January 9, 1947, and after the filing of the defendant's answer, a memorandum to set the case for trial was filed. On December 22, 1947, a stipulation was signed by the attorneys for both parties selecting January 12, 1948, as the trial date, and the case was set for trial accordingly. The defendant's motion to dismiss was made four days before the trial date agreed upon and the case was put off calendar because of the pendency of the motion. Because of the congested state of the trial calendar an earlier date for the trial court could not be procured.

In the vacating order the court recited the additional matters and "upon a more complete presentation of the facts" concluded that there was no unnecessary delay in bringing the action to trial, nor any fault on the part of the plaintiffs, nor any prejudice to the rights of the defendant, and that to dismiss the action without a hearing on the merits would work an injustice upon the plaintiffs.

Section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure vests in the court the discretionary power to dismiss an action for want of prosecution on motion of the defendant, after due notice to the plaintiff, whenever the latter has failed to bring the action to trial for two years after the complaint was filed.

A consideration of the jurisdictional issue will determine the outcome without the necessity of considering other questions. A stipulation of the parties setting the case for trial, entered into after the expiration of two years from the filing of the complaint, was a matter of record in the respondent court. It must be assumed that the congested state of the trial calendar was within the court's judicial knowledge. It is also shown by the record that both matters of fact had been inadvertently overlooked by the court in making the first order. The petitioner contends that such inadvertence and mistake were not available to set aside that order under section 473 as action taken against a party through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect nor to support the subsequent order as an exercise of the court's inherent power to correct action taken through its own inadvertence or mistake of fact. The petitioner urges that any inadvertence or mistake here appearing is a matter solely of judicial error reviewable on appeal from the first order.

[1] The arguments of the petitioner invoke application of the policy requiring finality of judgments and orders. That policy generally controls where a judgment or order is entered after a trial on the merits of the litigation. Drinkhouse v. Van Ness, 202 Cal. 359, 369, 260 P. 869; Stevens v. Superior Court, 7 Cal.2d 110, 59 P.2d 988. But the policy has not been deemed controlling where the judgment or order set aside was in the exercise of a discretionary power not based on the merits of the action. The recognized policy in such cases is that which requires a trial on the merits wherever possible. The latter policy has been said to be the basis for the enactment of the provisions of section 473. Bowman v. Bowman, 29 Cal.2d 808, 813, 178 P.2d 751, 170 A.L.R. 246; Riskin v. Towers, 24 Cal.2d 274, 279, 148 P.2d 611, 153 A.L.R. 442. In giving effect to that policy appellate courts have generally refrained from interfering on jurisdictional grounds with the trial court's reconsideration of a discretionary order not based on the merits of the litigation. See Kenney v. Kelleher, 63 Cal. 442; De la Beckwith v. Superior Court, 146 Cal. 496, 80 P. 717; Glougie v. Superior Court, 169 Cal. 675, 147 P. 972; Harth v. Ten Eyck, 16 Cal.2d 829, 108 P.2d 675; McDonald v. Severy, 6 Cal.2d 629, 631, 59 P.2d 98; Watkins v. McCartney, 70 Cal.App. 137, 232 P. 982.

[2, 3] This court has also recognized the power of the trial court independently of statute to set aside a default judgment entered through the court's inadvertence. Phillips v. Trusheim, 25 Cal.2d 913, 916, 156 P.2d 25. In 1 Freeman on Judgments (5th Ed.) p. 432, it is said that where the court is deceived or is laboring under a mistake or misapprehension as to the state of the record or as to the existence of extrinsic facts upon which its action is predicated, it has inherent power to vacate a judgment which would not otherwise have been rendered. That principle was applied by this court in setting aside one of its own judgments almost three years after it was rendered because the first order was made on the theory that the defendant had not moved for a new trial when in fact he had done so. In re Rothrock, 14 Cal.2d 34, 92 P.2d 634.

[4] Here the later order was in effect based on the inadvertence and mistake of the court in overlooking matters of record and facts within the court's judicial knowledge. On its face the record does not disclose invalidity for lack of jurisdiction. The order was within the court's general jurisdiction. It was made in the exercise of its inherent power under that jurisdiction. Factual sufficiency to support the exercise of the power is not controverted by the record. The intendments which govern are controlling to support the propriety of the exercise of jurisdiction. Phelan v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 363, 217 P.2d 951.

The peremptory writ is denied.

GIBSON, Chief Justice (concurring).

Ordinarily, if there is a right to an immediate review by appeal that remedy is considered adequate, and prohibition will not lie unless the petitioner can show some special reason why the remedy of appeal is rendered inadequate by the particular circumstances of his case. See Phelan v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 363, 217 P.2d 951. The order under attack, from which no appeal was taken, is a special order after final judgment which petitioner claims was in excess of jurisdiction and void. It was held in the Phelan case, which was decided after petitioner applied for the writ herein, that such an order is appealable, but prior thereto its appealability was uncertain. Although it has now been established that petitioner had an adequate remedy by appeal, the availability of that remedy was not clear at the time the order of vacation was made and, accordingly, we should permit the writ to be used to test the question of jurisdiction. Phelan v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 363, 217 P.2d 951.

The court's jurisdiction to proceed with the trial depends on whether it had power to vacate the prior judgment of dismissal. In addition to the authority given by Code of Civil Procedure section 473 to set aside judgments or orders which are void, or are the result of clerical mistake or of a party's mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect, a trial court has inherent power under some circumstances to set aside judgments and orders which it has made inadvertently and which are not actually the result of the exercise of judgment. Bastajian v. Brown, 19 Cal.2d 209, 214–216, 120 P.2d 9; Carpenter v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 14 Cal.2d 704, 708–710, 96 P.2d 796; In re Estate of Goldberg, 10 Cal.2d 709, 713–716, 76 P.2d 508; Carter v. J. W. Silver Trucking Co., 4 Cal.2d 198, 203–205, 47 P.2d 733; Lauchere v. Lambert, 210 Cal. 274, 276–278, 291 P. 412; Robson v. Superior Court, 171 Cal. 588, 590–593, 154 P. 8; Wiggin v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 398, 400–403, 9 P. 646. Error which is essentially judicial, however, rather than clerical or inadvertent, may not be corrected under the court's inherent power but only under appropriate statutory procedure, and a court may not vacate a judgment or order merely because it failed to consider or give the proper weight or effect to some evidence before it. Phillips v. Trusheim, 25 Cal.2d 913, 916, 156 P.2d 25; Bastajian v. Brown, 19 Cal.2d 209, 214–216, 120 P.2d 9; In re Estate of Burnett, 11 Cal. 2d 259, 262, 79 P.2d 89; Stevens v. Superior Court, 7 Cal.2d 110, 112–114, 59 P.2d 988; Dyerville Mfg. Co. v. Heller, 102 Cal. 615, 617, 36 P. 928; Egan v. Egan, 90 Cal. 15, 20–22, 27 P. 22; see Drinkhouse v. Van Ness, 202 Cal. 359, 369, 260 P. 869.

Here the order of vacation does not affirmatively show that it was made on grounds recognized by section 473 or on the ground that there had been some judicial inadvertence. However, since petitioner is making a collateral attack upon the order, we must indulge in every presumption in support of the order, and any condition of facts consistent with its validity and not affirmatively contradicted by the judgment roll will be presumed to have existed. Phelan v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 363, 217 P. 2d 951; Wells Fargo & Co. v. City etc., of S. F., 25 Cal.2d 37, 40, 152 P.2d 625; Borenstein v. Borenstein, 20 Cal.2d 379, 381, 125 P.2d 465. It is, of course, true that where the trial court's order shows without question the basis for the action, it will be deemed to speak the truth on that point. See Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, 405 et seq., 94 Am.Dec. 742; Kaufmann v. California Mining etc. Syn., 16 Cal.2d 90, 93–94, 104 P. 2d 1038; Grinbaum v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 528, 546–550, 221 P. 635; Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Costa, 171 Cal. 138, 140, 152 P. 296; Johnston v. Southern Pacific Co., 150 Cal. 535, 537, 89 P. 348, 11 Ann.Cas. 841.

Under the general rule on collateral attack, there can be no question that, if the trial judge had merely ordered vacation of the judgment, without making any recitals or statements that might be construed as reasons for his action, the presumption in favor of validity would prevail, and the order of vacation would stand. There is language, however, in Treat v. Superior Court, 7 Cal.2d 636, 641, 62 P.2d 147, to the effect that an order made on the ground of judicial inadvertence should so specify, "and that in the absence of any such statement, the action of the trial court cannot be upheld on such a hypothesis." No authority was cited and no reason was given for this holding, and it is clearly in conflict with the long recognized general principle relating to collateral attack, that in the absence of contrary statements in the record we must presume any condition of facts consistent with the validity of a judgment or order of a court of general jurisdiction. The requirement of an express recital of the ground of judicial inadvertence constitutes an unwarranted refinement of the general rule, cf. Phelan v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 363, 217 P.2d 951, and this portion of the Treat case should not be followed.

The principal question in this case, therefore, is whether the recitals in the order of vacation preclude application of the presumption in favor of validity.

The order recites that it appeared to the court "upon further consideration and a more complete presentation of the facts" that there was no unnecessary or inexcusable delay on the part of plaintiffs, and that it further appeared "after full consideration of the facts and personal knowledge of the Court of the time required to bring such an action to trial" that the rights of defendant had not been prejudiced through any fault of the plaintiffs. We cannot tell what facts were presented or considered on the second hearing, and for all that appears in the record a showing may have been made which justified vacation of the order under section 473 or on the ground of judicial inadvertence. We are not required to speculate as to what showing was made or as to what grounds were relied upon by the court in support of its action. There is nothing in the recitals of the order of vacation or elsewhere in the record which would foreclose the presumption of any state of facts necessary to support the order as a proper exercise of the court's statutory or inherent powers, and we must assume that such facts were before the trial court as would justify it in vacating the judgment of dismissal.

For these reasons I concur in the denial of the peremptory writ.

I dissent.

On January 8, 1948, petitioner, defendant in an action for damages, noticed a motion to dismiss the action under section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure for failure to bring it to trial within two years from the time of filing. On January 15th, after a hearing at which both parties were represented by counsel, it was ordered that the action be dismissed. The judgment of dismissal was appealable. Southern Pacific R. R. Co. v. Willett, 216 Cal. 387, 14 P.2d 526; Neustadt v. Skernswell, 99 Cal. App.2d 293, 221 P.2d 694; Code Civ.Proc. § 581d. Instead of appealing, however, plaintiffs filed a notice of motion to vacate the judgment. On March 8, 1948 the trial court granted the motion to vacate. No appeal was taken from the order vacating the judgment of dismissal. Petitioner contends that the order was in excess of jurisdiction and seeks a writ of prohibition to prevent the trial of the action. It is now settled that the order was appealable whether or not it was void, Phelan v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 363, 217 P.2d 951, but it was uncertain at the time the order was entered whether petitioner had a remedy by appeal. Petitioner is therefore permitted to challenge the jurisdiction of the court in this proceeding. Phelan v. Superior Court, supra.

Section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure specifies the grounds upon which the trial court may relieve a party from a previously entered judgment or order. "The court may, upon such terms as may be just, relieve a party or his legal representative from a judgment, order, or other proceeding taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect. Application for such relief must be accompanied by a copy of the answer or other pleading proposed to be filed therein, otherwise the application shall not be granted, and must be made within a reasonable time, in no case exceeding six months, after such judgment, order or proceeding was taken.

"The court may, upon motion of the injured party, or its own motion, correct clerical mistakes in its judgment or orders as entered, so as to conform to the judgment or order directed, and may, on motion of either party after notice to the other party, set aside any void judgment or order."

In addition to its powers under Section 473, the trial court may correct an inadvertent mistake within a reasonable time after entry of the judgment or order. "If the judgment was entered * * * through the inadvertence or improvidence of the trial court, it had the power independently of statute to correct the mistake by amending or setting aside the judgment [citations], as this presents no question of judicial review upon the merits. However, judicial error which occurs in the rendition of orders or judgments which are the fault of an exercise of judicial discretion may not be corrected except by statutory procedure. Stevens v. Superior Court, 7 Cal.2d 110, 59 P.2d 988, 990." Phillips v. Trusheim, 25 Cal.2d 913, 916, 156 P.2d 25, 26.

The basic question in this case, therefore, is whether the order vacating the judgment of dismissal was authorized under Section 473 or on the ground of judicial inadvertence. Neither the motion nor the order of vacation was based on any ground mentioned in Section 473. This case is not one in which a judgment was taken against a party "through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect", or in which there were "clerical mistakes," or in which there was a void order that could be set aside under the last paragraph of the section.

Nor does it appear that the court was deceived or that it acted under any mistake as to the state of the record. The judgment of dismissal was entered after a contested hearing at which counsel for both parties were present. If plaintiffs were not at fault in failing to bring the action to trial, it was their duty to present evidence to show the facts. If they failed to do so, or if the court failed to give due weight to their evidence, they cannot claim that the court acted inadvertently. Plaintiffs' sole contention in their motion to vacate and supporting affidavit was that the court failed to take into account the crowded trial calendar and the consequent impossibility of bringing the action to trial sooner. The crowded calendar, however, was clearly within the knowledge of both the court and counsel. There is no claim that the first order was not the one intended by the court or that it was made irregularly. The court changed its earlier ruling because it had failed to give due weight to the crowded trial calendar, a matter clearly before it when it made its first ruling. That failure was judicial error not subject to correction on a motion to vacate.

It is suggested that the failure of a trial court to specify the grounds upon which it vacated an earlier order prevents this court from affirming the later order. Treat v. Superior Court, 7 Cal.2d 636, 641, 62 P.2d 147. We have recently reiterated, however, that an order attacked collaterally, as here by prohibition, may be supported by a presumption of facts consistent with its validity. Phelan v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 363, 217 P.2d 951; Wells Fargo v. San Francisco, 25 Cal.2d 37, 40, 152 P.2d 625. It cannot reasonably be contended, however, that this presumption will prevail over contrary statements in the record. Phelan v. Superior Court, supra, 35 Cal.2d at page 373, 217 P.2d 951. The record in this case shows beyond the protective reach of any presumption of validity that the order of March 8, 1948 was an attempt to re-examine the issues decided on January 15, 1948. The order of dismissal of that date was made because it appeared to the trial court after a proper hearing that "the delay in bringing said action to trial has been inexcusable and has not been caused by the defendant Key System, Inc., * * * that the rights of the defendant * * * have been greatly prejudiced * * *" Plaintiffs' sole ground for the motion to vacate was that the original order was an abuse of discretion resulting in injustice. The motion was supported by an affidavit explaining plaintiffs' failure to prosecute the action. The affidavit relied upon the crowded trial calendar and emphasized that the trial court had discretion to deny the motion to dismiss. Nothing was brought before the trial court in the notice of motion to vacate or the supporting affidavit that would justify an order under Section 473, so that it can only be inferred that the trial court was asked to reverse its earlier order because of judicial error in that ruling, namely, failure to give due weight to the congested trial calendar.

The order itself sets forth the grounds therefor and negatives the presumption that it was based on grounds specified by Section 473 or other proper grounds. It recites: "It Now Appearing to the Court upon further consideration and a more complete presentation of the facts that there was no unnecessary delay on the part of plaintiffs in bringing this action to trial or any delay on the part of plaintiffs that was inexcusable, and the Court being further of the opinion that to dismiss said action without any hearing on the merits would work an injustice upon plaintiffs through no fault of their own; and It Further Appearing to the Court after full consideration of the facts and personal knowledge of the Court of the time required to bring such an action to trial in this County that the rights of the defendant have not been prejudiced through any fault of the plaintiffs in this action." Thus, the trial court did not rely upon "[a party's] mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect", or mention that the order was a "clerical mistake" or that it was void or that it was entered by inadvertence. The court speaks of "further consideration" and "a more complete presentation of the facts," "full consideration of the facts" and "personal knowledge of the Court of the time required to bring such an action to trial." Yet the crowded condition of the trial calendar must have been within the "personal knowledge of the Court" on January 15th, when the order of dismissal was granted. In the light of the grounds urged in the notice of motion to vacate and the supporting affidavit, the quoted language of the order compels the conclusion that the court granted the motion to rectify an earlier decision, made after a full hearing and argument, but later deemed erroneous because of the court's failure to give due weight to the crowded trial calendar. It cannot be presumed, therefore, that the court was acting under section 473 or on the ground of judicial inadvertence. If the presumption is controlling in this case, where the grounds on which the order was based are so clear, it will preclude collateral attack on virtually any order vacating a judgment.

It is nevertheless suggested that the "policy requiring finality of judgments and orders," which generally controls when a judgment or order is entered after a trial on the merits, "has not been deemed controlling where the judgment or order set aside was in the exercise of a discretionary power not based on the merits of the action. The required policy in such cases is that which requires a trial on the merits wherever possible." It is true that there is a policy favoring disposition of cases on their merits. That policy finds expression in the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure section 473, which grants relief within a prescribed time limit to parties defeated by their "mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect." Bowman v. Bowman, 29 Cal.2d 808, 813, 178 P.2d 751, 754, 170 A.L.R. 246.

It does not follow, however, that "in giving effect to that policy appellate courts have generally refrained from interfering on jurisdictional grounds with the trial courts' reconsideration of a discretionary order not based on the merits of the litigation." In Phillips v. Trusheim, 25 Cal.2d 913, 156 P.2d 25; Wells Fargo v. City and County of San Francisco, 25 Cal.2d 37, 152 P.2d 625; and Bowman v. Bowman, 29 Cal.2d 808, 178 P.2d 751, 170 A.L.R. 246, this court did not hesitate to interfere with the trial court's reconsideration of discretionary orders not based on the merits of the litigation. See also, Barlow v. City Council of Inglewood, 32 Cal.2d 688, 197 P.2d 721 (error for trial court to vacate judgment on demurrer based on statute of limitations). Heretofore, there has been no attempt to distinguish the correction of judicial error in orders not based on the merits of the litigation from the correction of judicial error in other types of judgments or orders. Such a distinction would have the undesirable effect of creating classes of appealable judgments—some of indeterminate finality, which the trial court has power to vacate at its whim outside the statutory procedure, and some that it cannot vacate after entry of judgment, except as provided by statute.

The trial court has no power to correct judicial error in a final judgment or an appealable special order after final judgment except as provided by statute. Coombs v. Hibberd, 43 Cal. 452; Lang v. Superior Court, 71 Cal. 491, 12 P. 306, 416; Carpenter v. Superior Court, 75 Cal. 596, 19 P. 174; Holtum v. Greif, 144 Cal. 521, 78 P. 11; Drinkhouse v. Van Ness, 202 Cal. 359, 260 P. 869; Lankton v. Superior Court, 5 Cal.2d 694, 55 P.2d 1170. Disapproved on another issue in Phelan v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 363, 217 P.2d 951; Stevens v. Superior Court, 7 Cal.2d 110, 59 P.2d 988; Phillips v. Trusheim, 25 Cal.2d 913, 156 P.2d 25; Wells Fargo v. San Francisco, 25 Cal.2d 37, 152 P.2d 625; Bowman v. Bowman, 29 Cal.2d 808, 178 P.2d 751, 170 A.L.R. 246; Barlow v. City Council of Inglewood, 32 Cal.2d 688, 197 P.2d 721; cf. Belser v. Hoffschneider, 104 Cal. 455, 38 P. 312; see In re Estate of Burnett, 11 Cal.2d 259, 262, 79 P.2d 89; Bastajian v. Brown, 19 Cal.2d 209, 214, 120 P.2d 9; 30 Cal.L.Rev. 75. Even if the trial court acted hastily and ill-advisedly in making its first order, it is not for this court to disregard settled rules of procedure and practice. Such disregard can result only in confusion. As this court said in one of its earliest cases on this subject, "There must be some point where litigation in the lower Court terminates, and the losing party is turned over to the appellate Court for redress." Coombs v. Hibberd, 43 Cal. 452, 454.

KRAMER et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF STATE, IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.

Oct. 17, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 13, 1950.

Original proceeding in certiorari by Ernst Kramer and others against the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Los Angeles, to annul an order denying a motion to set aside decree of probate court ordering that portion of residuary estate devised to nationals and residents of Germany be distributed to heirs of testator's deceased wife and the state. The Supreme Court, Shenk, J., held that certiorari would not lie since probate court, on the evidence before it, had jurisdiction to make the order denying motion to set aside decree of distribution.

Order affirmed.

Carter and Schauer, JJ., dissented.

1. Courts ⇐202(5)

Order of probate court denying a motion to set aside a decree of distribution was not appealable and hence certiorari would lie to review such order. Probate Code §§ 1233, 1240; Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

2. Courts ⇐202(5)

Order of probate court denying a motion to set aside a decree of distribution could be annulled by Supreme Court on certiorari only upon a showing that probate court in denying motion exceeded its jurisdiction. Probate Code, §§ 1233, 1240; Code Civ.Proc. §§ 473, 1068.

3. Executors and administrators ⇐315(4)

Probate court had jurisdiction to entertain motion to set aside a decree of distribution and to grant or deny such application in the exercise of its discretionary power. Probate Code, § 1233; Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

4. Appeal and error ⇐957(1)

Appellate courts are favorably disposed toward such action of trial courts as will relieve from default and permit, rather than prevent, adjudication of controversies on their merits. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

5. Appeal and error ⇐957(1)

An order setting aside a default judgment will be reversed only for an abuse of discretion. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

6. Certiorari ⇐28(2)

Certiorari will not lie to annul an order refusing to set aside a default where the only excess of jurisdiction alleged relates to insufficiency of the evidence. Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

7. Courts ⇐202(5)

Where nationals and residents of Germany moved to set aside decree of probate court ordering that portion of residuary estate devised to them be distributed to heirs of testator's deceased wife and to the state on ground that decree was taken against them through their mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect, without showing that notices required by law were not given, or were not received in time to participate in probate proceeding or appeal from decree of distribution, certiorari would not lie to annul order denying the motion, since probate court had jurisdiction to make the order based on the evidence before it. Probate Code, §§ 259–259.2, 1233, 1240; Code Civ.Proc. §§ 473, 1068.

SHENK, Justice.

This is a proceeding in certiorari to annul an order denying a motion to set aside the decree of distribution in the matter of the estate of Bruno M. Kramer, deceased. The petitioners are nationals and residents of Germany.

The decedent died in Los Angeles County on March 12, 1948. The estate consisted entirely of community real and personal property. It was converted to liquid assets, and the residue after specific bequests and charges of administration amounted to approximately $60,000. By his will admitted to probate on April 20, 1948, the decedent left one-half of the residue to his deceased wife and the other half to his own named relatives residing in Eastern Germany.

The rights of the petitioners to take under the will are governed by the following provisions of section 259 of the Probate Code:

"The right of aliens not residing within the United States * * * to take real property in this State, by succession or testamentary disposition, upon the same terms and conditions as residents and citizens of the United States is dependent in each case upon the existence of a reciprocal right upon the part of citizens of the United States to take real property upon the same terms and conditions as residents and citizens of the respective countries of which such aliens are residents and the right of aliens not residing in the United States * * * to take personal property in this State by succession or testamentary disposition, upon the same terms and conditions as residents and citizens of the United States is dependent in each case upon the existence of a reciprocal right upon the part of citizens of the United States to take personal property upon the same terms and conditions as residents and citizens of the respective countries of which such aliens are residents."

Section 259.1 provides that the burden is upon the non-resident aliens to establish the fact of existence of the reciprocal rights. Section 259.2 states that if such reciprocal rights are not found to exist and if no heirs other than such aliens are found eligible to take the property, it shall be disposed of as escheated property.

The constitutional validity of the foregoing provisions, applicable as of the date of the decedent's death, has been upheld. Clark v. Allen, 331 U.S. 503 67 S.Ct. 1431, 91 L.Ed. 1633; Estate of Knutzen, 31 Cal. 2d 573, 191 P.2d 747; Estate of Bevilacqua, 31 Cal.2d 580, 191 P.2d 752. These cases also establish that it is proper in a probate proceeding to determine the rights of non-resident aliens to take under the testamentary disposition.

None of the German legatees appeared in the probate proceeding. In the petition for distribution filed on January 18, 1949, the executor alleged that no "reciprocal agreement" existed between the United States and Germany, and distribution was requested pursuant to section 259.2 of the Probate Code. On March 10, 1949, the court found in accordance with the executor's allegations and ordered distribution to the wife's heirs of one-half of the portion of the residue left to the German legatees and the other one-half to the State of California.

There was no appeal from the decree. Within six months after entry, on September 2, 1949, the petitioners moved pursuant to section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure to set aside the decree as having been taken against them through their mistake, inadvertance, surprise or excusable neglect. The factors bearing on these elements were averred to be lack of knowledge by the petitioners other than that they were residuary legatees, and of surprise that the executor would take a position contrary to their interests; also lack of knowledge that they would be required to prove the reciprocal rights of German citizens residing abroad which the state's representative admits, at least as to realty, were incorporated in an existing treaty between the United States and Germany. See Clark v. Allen, supra, 331 U.S. 503, 67 S.Ct. 1431, 91 L.Ed. 1633. There was no averment that the notices required by law were not given, or were not received in sufficient time to make an appearance, or to participate in the probate proceeding, or to take an appeal from the decree of distribution. The statement of fact in that respect is that the notices required by law were not sent to the addresses specified in the will, nor to the actual addresses of the residuary legatees, but to addresses supplied from some unknown and unauthorized source. In regard to the time element, distance was also relied on.

[1-3] Since the order denying the motion was non-appealable, the petitioners were in position to invoke the remedy afforded by the present proceeding. Prob. Code, § 1240; Howard v. Superior Court, 25 Cal.2d 784, 787, 154 P.2d 849; Linstead v. Superior Court, 17 Cal.App.2d 9, 11, 61 P.2d 355. But the relief sought could be granted only if it be shown that the probate court in denying the motion to set aside the decree exceeded its jurisdiction. Section 1068, Code of Civ.Proc.; and cases hereinafter cited. Under the authorities herein cited the probate court has jurisdiction to entertain the motion and to grant or deny the application in the exercise of its discretionary power. Sec. 1233, Prob.Code; Sec. 473, Code Civ.Proc.

[4-7] It has been pointed out that on appeals from orders under section 473 the courts have been favorably disposed toward action on the part of the trial courts which would relieve from default and permit, rather than prevent, the adjudication of controversies on their merits; and that orders granting relief have rarely been reversed and then only for an abuse of discretion. Benjamin v. Dalmo Mfg. Co., 31 Cal.2d 523, 525, and 190 P.2d 593 and cases cited; see also Reidy v. Scott, 53 Cal. 69; Mitchell v. California & O.C.S.S. Co., 156 Cal. 576, 105 P. 590 and Brasher v. White, 53 Cal.App. 545, 200 P. 657, where on appeal orders denying relief were reversed. In addition it is well-settled that certiorari will not lie where the only excess of jurisdiction alleged relates to insufficiency of the evidence. Estate of Kay, 30 Cal.2d 215, 218, 181 P.2d 1; Howard v. Superior Court, supra, 25 Cal.2d at 789, 154 P.2d at 852. Here the probate court acted on the motion in the light of the facts stated in the affidavits claimed to constitute mistake, inadvertance, surprise or excusable neglect. Those statements comprised the evidence upon which the court based its order denying the motion. What the result might be on an appeal from such an order, or whether the decree of distribution might have been reversed on appeal if one had been taken, or what might be the equitable considerations in a proper action attacking the decree on available grounds, or what might be the result in an escheat proceeding, are not questions properly presented in this proceeding. The determinative factor here is that no reviewable basis is presented in the attack upon the probate court's exercise of its judicial power. It cannot be said that the court lacked jurisdiction to make the order based on the evidence before it and there is no contention that the court's action was on a ground not authorized by statute.

The order is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

I concur in the conclusion that certiorari does not lie to review the propriety of the order denying the motion to set aside the decree of distribution. A motion to set aside a judgment under section 473 is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court and "it need hardly be added that on certiorari we do not review matters within the discretion of the lower court." Estate of Kay, 30 Cal.2d 215, 226, 181 P.2d 1, 7; Howard v. Superior Court, 25 Cal.2d 784, 789, 154 P.2d 849; Spanach v. Superior Court, 4 Cal.2d 447, 450, 50 P.2d 444.

It is contended, however, that the decree of distribution must be set aside regardless of the adequacy of petitioners' showing of mistake, inadvertence, or surprise, for the reason that the probate court had no jurisdiction to enter such a decree. Thus, petitioners do not attack merely the order denying their motion under section 473; they invoke the writ of certiorari to support a collateral attack upon the decree of distribution. Certiorari will not lie for that purpose, for the probate court had jurisdiction to enter the decree and petitioners had a remedy by appeal.

The decree of distribution erroneously excluded petitioners from obtaining the real property under the will of decedent. The decree was appealable, however, and petitioners could have secured its reversal had they taken a timely appeal. Estate of Knutzen, 31 Cal.2d 573, 577, 191 P.2d 747; Estate of Bevilacqua, 31 Cal.2d 580, 582, 191 P.2d 752. Certiorari will not lie when a remedy by appeal has been lost by the failure of the aggrieved party to avail himself of the remedy within the time permitted. Phelan v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 363, 217 P.2d 951.

Moreover, certiorari will not lie to annul a decree of a court of competent jurisdiction for errors of fact or law in the entry of that decree. If the trial court has jurisdiction to determine a particular issue, it is not deprived of jurisdiction by an erroneous determination. The error must be asserted on appeal and not by petition for certiorari. Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal, 17 Cal.2d 280, 287, 109 P.2d 942; Brock v. Superior Court, 29 Cal.2d 629, 637, 177 P.2d 273; Estate of Kay, 30 Cal.2d 215, 219, 220, 181 P.2d 1. In the present case, the probate court had jurisdiction with respect to its decree of distribution to determine the persons entitled to decedent's property under the will and the laws of this state. Its decree was erroneous because of its failure to take judicial notice of the 1923 Treaty between Germany and the United States, 44 Stat. 2135, which created the reciprocal rights of inheritance required by Probate Code, section 259. Failure to take judicial notice is error that may be asserted on appeal, but it is not jurisdictional. Certiorari is not a substitute for appeal. Howard v. Superior Court, 25 Cal.2d 784, 787, 154 P.2d 849. It will not lie "where the only excess of power complained of is the entering of an order unsupported by evidence" or based on an error of law. Estate of Kay, 30 Cal.2d 215, 219, 181 P.2d 1, 3; Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal, supra; Howard v. Superior Court, supra, 25 Cal.2d 784, 789, 154 P.2d 849; Brock v. Superior Court, supra.

The result of the decree of distribution is that petitioners are deprived of a share in the estate of decedent to which they were clearly entitled. The decree has become final, however, and is res judicata. Petitioners in effect contend that the doctrine of res judicata must be disregarded because of what they consider to be inequities arising out of the erroneous decree of distribution. Such a departure from res judicata throws into question the finality of any judgment and thus is bound to cause infinitely more injustice in the long run than it can conceivably avert in this case. I therefore concur in the affirmance of the order.

CARTER, Justice.

I dissent.

In this case a resident and citizen of this country died testate leaving property situated in this state to German nationals. The estate consisted in part of real property. The decree of distribution did not distribute any of the property to the alien devisees. They sought relief from that decree by motion under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Such relief was denied. As no appeal lies from the order of denial it can be reviewed as to "jurisdictional" questions by certiorari, and that is the present proceeding.

The majority hold that the denial order cannot be annulled because the court had jurisdiction under section 473 to consider and determine factual matters such as surprise, inadvertence, and excusable neglect. At least as to the real property there were no factual matters to be determined. The status of the aliens as such, and as devisees, is not disputed; nor is it disputed that a portion of the estate consisted of real property. If there existed an applicable treaty between Germany and this country it is controlling, regardless of section 259 of the Probate Code. There did exist such a treaty covering real property, and, as said in Estate of Knutzen, 31 Cal.2d 573, 577, 191 P.2d 747, 750, when declaring the law as announced by the United States Supreme Court in Clark v. Allen, 331 U.S. 503, 67 S.Ct. 1431, 91 L.Ed. 1633; "The nonresident alien heirs were entitled under the treaty to sell the realty and withdraw the proceeds, and it is immaterial that the property was sold by the administrator, apparently to get funds to pay debts and expenses, instead of by those heirs. In either event, they were entitled to share in the proceeds of the realty, and the Alien Property Custodian was entitled to claim their shares by reason of the vesting order." (Emphasis added.)

bound to take judicial notice thereof. Our statute provides: "Courts take judicial notice of the following facts: * * * 3. Public and private official acts of the legislative, executive and judicial departments of this state and of the United States, and the laws of the several states of the United States and the interpretation thereof by the highest courts of appellate jurisdiction of such states", (Emphasis added) Code of Civil Procedure, sec. 1875 (3), and the authorities hold that courts take judicial notice of treaties. See cases collected, Wigmore on Evidence, (3rd Ed.) Vol. IX, sec. 2573, p. 556. It is clear, therefore, that the court had no discretion but to grant relief, for it had rendered a decree of distribution contrary to the treaty—the supreme law of the land. A treaty is on a par with the constitution as being the supreme law of the land.

The question is, therefore, whether an order may be annulled on certiorari which, on undisputed facts, is squarely contrary to constitutional mandate. In my opinion there can be no doubt about it. It is said in Rescue Army v. Municipal Court, 28 Cal. 2d 460, 462, 171 P.2d 8, 10: "The constitutionality of a statute or ordinance may be tested by prohibition on the ground that invalidity of the legislation goes to the jurisdiction of the court to proceed to try the case. See Whitney v. Superior Court, 182 Cal. 114, 187 P. 12; Levy v. Superior Court, 105 Cal. 600, 38 P. 965, 29 L.R.A. 811; Arfsten v. Superior Court, 20 Cal.App. 269, 275, 128 P. 949; cf. Broady v. Jennings, 70 Cal.App. 647, 234 P. 120. This rule is supported by the great weight of authority in other states. See cases collected in 113 A. L.R. 796, 800; 42 Am.Jur. 168. The same principle has been applied in cases where habeas corpus has been used to test the constitutionality of an ordinance. * * * The fact that a trial court has no jurisdiction within the meaning of the term as used in certiorari and prohibition proceedings does not mean that a judgment based upon an unconstitutional statute is open to collateral attack. * * * In certiorari and prohibition proceedings the term jurisdiction has a very broad meaning, and a writ may be granted where the court has no jurisdiction to act except in a particular manner, even though it has jurisdiction, in the fundamental sense, over the subject matter and the parties. Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal, 17 Cal.2d 280, 287 et seq., 109 P.2d 942, 132 A.L.R. 715; Hill v. Superior Court, 16 Cal.2d 527, 106 P.2d 876; Fortenbury v. Superior Court, 16 Cal.2d 405, 106 P.2d 411." Here the decree of distribution clearly ignored and failed to follow the treaty and the constitution makes such treaty the supreme law of the land. Therefore, the decree is in violation of such supreme law. On the motion under section 473 the only permissible action by the trial court was to vacate the decree and order distribution in accordance with the treaty.

I would, therefore, grant the writ prayed for.

SCHAUER, Justice (dissenting).

I concur in the conclusion reached by Justice Carter. Under the circumstances shown here I think that the court had "defined power" to decide the crucial question in only one way. For a clear example and adequate discussion of the circumstances under which a probate court should properly be held to have exceeded its jurisdiction ("defined power") see dissenting opinion in Estate of Kay (1947), 30 Cal.2d 215, 230, et seq., 181 P.2d 1.

Rehearing denied; CARTER and SCHAUER, JJ., dissenting.

L. A. 21399.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.

Oct. 6, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 2, 1950.

The Fox Bakersfield Theatre Corporation, a corporation, and the Fox Paradise Theatre Corporation, a corporation, brought action against the City of Bakersfield, a municipal corporation, for declaratory relief, injunction and recovery of taxes paid under protest by plaintiffs, under ordinance imposing license tax on places of amusement. The Superior Court of Kern County, Frederick E. Stone, J., rendered a judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held that the ordinance was not invalid.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Theaters and shows ⇐3

The fact that operators of moving picture theatres bore and paid a large portion of the business license taxes levied and collected by the city and a major share of the amusement business taxes, standing alone was not a ground for invalidating the tax, at least unless it reached a confiscatory or prohibitory point or completely refuted any basis for classification.

2. Taxation ⇐47(1)

Taxation, other than taxation of property, on the same activity or incident for the same purpose by the same taxing agency, more than once in the same period, standing alone, is not forbidden by the constitutions, state or federal.

3. Theaters and shows ⇐3

City ordinance imposing a tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction of 10 cents over and above the first 15 cents of amount charged and paid for admission to places of amusement or entertainment and 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction of 10 cents over and above the first 15 cents of all sums received from fees and charges after payment of admission fee, for use of facilities within a place of amusement or entertainment, is not invalid because of the fact that city also imposed a license fee in a flat sum on certain businesses including theaters based on number of seats.

4. Constitutional law ⇐208(1), 230(1) Theaters and shows ⇐3

City ordinance imposing a tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction of 10 cents over and above the first 15 cents of amount charged and paid for admission to places of amusement or entertainment and 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction of 10 cents over and above the first 15 cents of all sums received from fees and charges after payment of admission fee, for use of facilities within a place of amusement or entertainment, is not invalid on ground that there is an improper classification of businesses taxed or a violation of the uniformity and equal protection requirements of federal and state Constitutions because exemptions are made of pool halls and arcades where admissions are not charged and certain religious, charitable, and educational affairs where music alone is furnished without admission charge. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14; Const. art. 1, §§ 11, 21; art. 4, § 25, subds. 19, 20, 33.

5. Taxation ⇐42(1)

The power of the states to make classifications of persons or property for purpose of taxation is very broad.

6. Constitutional law ⇐48

A statute is presumed to be constitutional until the contrary appears.

7. Constitutional law ⇐38

An act may not be held to be unconstitutional merely because it may contain provisions which seem to be unjust or oppressive, or because it may be deemed to violate the natural, social, or political rights of the citizens, unless it appears that those features of the act contravene rights which are guaranteed by the constitution.

8. Taxation ⇐42(1)

If a classification of persons or occupations made for purpose of imposing taxes if founded on natural, intrinsic or fundamental distinctions which are reasonable in their relation to the object of the legislation and otherwise, they will be deemed to be valid and binding, and though the classification should be reasonable, natural and just, in absence of a showing to the contrary, it will be assumed that there are good grounds for the classification, and the act will be upheld.

9. Constitutional law ⇐48

Where an enactment imposing taxes is attacked on ground of unauthorized classification, all presumptions and intendments are in favor of the reasonableness and fairness of the legislative action, and the decision to warrant the classification will not be overthrown unless palpably arbitrary.

10. Constitutional law ⇐230(1)
Licenses ⇐7(2)

Occupations and businesses may be classified and sub-divided for purposes of taxation, and it is within the discretion of legislature to exact different license taxes from different classes or sub-classes of businesses, subject only to the limitations of the state and federal Constitutions in regard to equal protection of the laws, and no constitutional rights are violated if the burden of the license tax falls equally upon all members of a class, though other classes have lighter burdens or are wholly exempt, provided that the classification is reasonable, based on substantial differences between pursuits separately grouped, and is not arbitrary.

11. Theaters and shows ⇐3

Legislation separately classifying places of amusement for purpose of imposing license taxes on owners or operators of them as a group, is valid.

12. Municipal corporations ⇐108.3

In testing the sufficiency of the summary in petitions for an initiative measure where city charter requires a title and summary of the chief purpose and points of the measure, substantial compliance is sufficient. Const. art. 4, § 1.

13. Municipal corporations ⇐108.3

City ordinance imposing a license tax on admission to places of amusement or entertainment and also on all sums received from fees and charges for use of facilities within such places in addition to admission charges, was not invalid on ground that ballot used in election was misleading because only the admission tax was referred to in the ballot, since there was substantial compliance. Const. art. 4, § 1.

Borton, Petrini & Conron, James Petrini, Bakersfield, O'Melveny & Myers, Jackson W. Chance and William W. Alsup, Los Angeles, for appellants.

CARTER, Justice.

In an action for declaratory relief, injunction and recovery of taxes paid under protest by plaintiffs, operators of motion picture theatres, the trial court determined that a business license tax levied by defendant city and affecting them was valid. The attack on defendant's tax ordinance includes the charges of discrimination, double taxation, and defective enactment.

The city has had for many years a basic business license tax ordinance, No. 681, which levies a tax for the purpose of revenue rather than regulation. It reaches practically every kind of business conducted in the city. Detailed classifications are made of various kinds of business. In some the license fee is a flat sum and in others is graduated according to the income from the business, or on some other basis. Among those businesses are theatres taxed by section 56 (the same section also includes other things, such as amusement games). The tax on theatres is $104 per annum for 300 seats or less, and $8 for each 100 seats or fraction thereof over 300. Plaintiffs do not question the validity of that tax.

In 1946, an ordinance was adopted which imposed one cent per admission tax on theatres. That ordinance was repealed, and in 1947, an initiative ordinance was adopted, as No. 754, the one here questioned. It is a license tax ordinance for revenue requiring that a license shall be obtained "by all persons maintaining places of or furnishing amusement or entertainment in the City. Places of amusement or entertainment shall include theatres, shows, games, carnivals, spectacles, exhibitions, dances, and other performances furnished or provided at any place or by any person as to which a charge, admission fee, or other sum is required to be paid, whether wholly or partially, for the privilege of seeing, witnessing, being present at, engaging or participating in singly or with another person, or for otherwise being diverted, amused, or entertained." The tax imposed is one cent "for each 10 cents or fraction of 10 cents over and above the first 15 cents of the amounts charged and paid for admission to any place, including admission by season ticket or subscription; and 1 cent for each ten cents or fraction of 10 cents over and above the first 15 cents of all sums received from fees and charges after the payment of an admission fee, for the use of property, equipment or facilities within, upon or about any place of amusement or entertainment which is charged and collected by the operator of such place over or above, or as a part of the amount charged for admission to such place;

"(b) 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction of 10 cents over and above the first 15 cents of amounts charged and received by the operator of any place of amusement, where no admission fee is charged, for the use or operation of property, equipment and/or facilities, and/or the privilege of being in or upon such place of amusement * * *." The tax is on the privilege of conducting such places of business but shall be collected from the customer. The tax imposed is expressly made in addition to, rather than in lieu of, any other taxes. Hence it is in addition to the general business tax license ordinance No. 681 above mentioned. Where refreshments, food or services are dispensed at any roof garden, cabaret, cafe, restaurant or hotel, or the like, and there is furnished public performance, floor show, dance floor, or other amusement, then it is deemed that 20% of the amount paid by the customer is for entertainment and a tax of 1 cent on each 15 cents of such 20% is levied (sec. 8(c)). Billiard tables, pool tables and arcades where no admission fees are charged, are exempted from the tax. (Sec. 8(b)). Also exempted are admission fees for entertainment charged by charitable, religious and educational organizations, and those producing nonprofit symphony concert programs (sec. 9(a)); the furnishing of music alone by musicians or mechanically without an admission charge (sec. 9(c)); and, in the sale of alcoholic beverages and such beverages as are not included in the refreshments covered by section 8(c) unless the charge therefor is included without segregation in the customer's bill.

Invoking the United States Constitution equal protection mandate, U. S. Constitution, Fourteenth Amendment, and similar guarantees under the State Constitution, such as uniformity and equality of operation of laws, see Cal.Const., art. I, sec. 11, 21; art IV, sec. 25(19, 20, 33), plaintiffs assert that the tax levied by ordinance No. 754 is discriminatory and not based upon any proper classification.

[1] Preliminarily, it should be observed, in connection with plaintiffs' assertion that as a result of ordinance No. 754, they bear and pay a large proportion of the business license taxes levied and collected by the city and major share of the amusement business taxes, that the amount of taxes paid by them standing alone is not a ground for invalidating the tax, at least unless it reaches the confiscatory or prohibitory point or completely refutes any basis for a classification. Plainly there is discrimination in the taxes imposed by ordinance No. 754 for it does not apply to all businesses operated in the city. That premise also embraces the fact that plaintiffs bear a greater burden of the taxes than other businesses. The issue is one of whether the classification made by ordinance No. 754 is proper. The law is not, as plaintiffs suggest, that there is a requirement of reasonableness of amount of excise taxes levied for revenue by a municipal corporation in addition to the restrictions imposed by the uniformity and equal protection provisions of the Constitution. Assuming there is power to impose the tax (such power is not questioned here) under the charter, if it is a charter city, or under the statutes, if it is not, the only restrictions on the exercise of that power are the constitution, charter, or statutes, as the case may be, or as expressed in Rancho Santa Anita v. City of Arcadia, 20 Cal.2d 319, 322, 125 P.2d 475, 477, dealing with a non-charter city: "The taxing power of the city and all limitations thereon are derived from the Constitution and statutes." It follows, therefore, that short of being confiscatory or prohibitory, there is no rule of law that requires that a tax be reasonable in amount, for the power of taxation is a vital legislative function, Watchtower B & T Soc. v. County of Los Angeles, 30 Cal.2d 426, 182 P.2d 178 and there can be no basis for a court to invalidate an exercise of that power other than the constitutions, state or federal. It has been so held. See Fox v. Standard Oil, 294 U.S. 87, 55 S.Ct. 333, 79 L.Ed. 780; Patton v. Brady, 184 U.S. 608, 22 S.Ct. 493, 46 L.Ed. 713; F. Couthoui, Inc., v. U. S., 54 F.2d 158, 73 Ct.Cl. 363, certiorari denied 285 U.S. 548, 52 S.Ct. 396, 76 L.Ed. 939; Alexander Theater Ticket Office v. U. S., 2 Cir., 23 F.2d 44; Cooley on Taxation (4th Ed.) sec. 72, p. 181; Sunset Nut Shelling Co. v. Johnson, 49 Cal.App.2d 354, 357, 121 P.2d 849; City of Cresent City v. Moran, 25 Cal.App.2d 133, 136, 77 P.2d 281; Roth Drug, Inc., v. Johnson, 13 Cal. App.2d 720, 57 P.2d 1022.

Correctly interpreted, cases such as Hansen v. Town of Antioch, 18 Cal.2d 110, 114 P.2d 329, and the cases there cited, involving a different license tax for itinerant peddlers than that for persons with a fixed place of business, are not to the contrary. In the Hansen case, the court stated that a distinction may be drawn between such merchants, and that the rate of the tax must be reasonable, but what is meant is, that such tax must not be unconstitutionally prohibitory, confiscatory, or discriminatory, and it cannot be upheld under the taxing power, when it is, in reality, merely an exercise of the police power to exclude such peddlers. That is to say, if the constitution forbids the prohibition of such merchants, then that result cannot be achieved indirectly by imposing a destructive tax upon them.

[2, 3] Plaintiff's contention that a double tax has been laid upon them should be first disposed of. As seen from the ordinance, they pay the tax that is levied on all businesses and, in addition, that levied by ordinance No. 754. It is conceded that both taxes are excise rather than property taxes. Taxation, other than of property, upon the same activity or incident for the same purpose by the same taxing agency, more than once in the same period, sometimes called double taxation, standing alone, is not forbidden by the constitutions, state or federal. Ingels v. Riley, 5 Cal.2d 154, 53 P.2d 939, 103 A.L.R. 1; see, Douglas Aircraft Co. v. Johnson, 13 Cal.2d 545, 90 P.2d 572; Flynn v. City and County of S. F., 18 Cal. 2d 210, 115 P.2d 3; Illinois C. R. Co. v. State of Minnesota, 309 U.S. 157, 60 S.Ct. 419, 84 L.Ed. 670; Baker v. Druesedow, 263 U.S. 137, 44 S.Ct. 40, 68 L.Ed. 212. It is a factor in determining whether the tax is invalidly discriminatory when it is levied upon some activities but not others, or it may pose a question of substantive due process if its imposition assumes confiscatory or prohibitory characteristics.

Section 102 of the Revenue & Taxation Code, formerly Pol. Code, sec. 3607, states that nothing in that "division" shall be construed to permit double taxation but that "division" deals solely with property taxes. Our constitution provides that "all property" in the state except as otherwise provided "shall be taxed in proportion to its value". Cal.Const., art. XIII, sec. 1. And under that provision it has been held that there could be no double taxation of property. See Germania Trust Co. v. City & County of San Francisco, 128 Cal. 589, 61 P. 178; People ex rel. Burke v. Badlam, 57 Cal. 594; San Francisco v. Anderson, 103 Cal. 69, 36 P. 1034, 42 Am.St.Rep. 98; In re Estate of Fair, 128 Cal. 607, 61 P. 184; Morgan Adams, Inc., v. Los Angeles, 209 Cal. 696, 289 P. 811; Flynn v. San Francisco, 18 Cal.2d 210, 115 P.2d 3; Redwood Theatres

v. City of Modesto, 86 Cal.App.2d 907, 196 P.2d 119; Bank of California, Nat. Ass'n v. Roberts, 173 Cal. 398, 160 P. 225; Spring Valley Water Co. v. County of Alameda, 24 Cal.App. 278, 141 P. 38; Napa Sav. Bank v. Napa County, 17 Cal. App. 545, 120 P. 449; cf. Weber v. County of Santa Barbara, 15 Cal.2d 82, 98 P.2d 492; 8 S.Cal.L.Rev. 79. The distinction between property and other taxes with relation to double taxation is clearly stated in Ingels v. Riley, supra, 5 Cal.2d 154, 164, 53 P.2d 939, 944: "It is also urged that the tax is unconstitutional, for the reason that, when read with the provisions of the Vehicle Code, supra, double taxation is imposed by the same taxing agency on the same privilege. It is contended that this violates the Constitution, although no provision of either the Federal or State Constitution is specifically referred to. This argument is based on the fact that the Vehicle Code, supra, section 370, imposes upon all motor vehicle operators, as defined in the act, an annual fee of $3. There is no merit in this contention. The mere fact that the state has imposed one excise under one act does not prevent the state from imposing another excise upon the same privilege for the same period. Article XIII, section 1, of the State Constitution, has no application, because that section applies only to property taxes." See also, Redwood Theatres v. City of Modesto, supra; City of Los Angeles v. Riley, 6 Cal.2d 621, 59 P.2d 137, 106 A.L.R. 903; Douglas Aircraft Co. v. Johnson, 13 Cal.2d 545, 90 P.2d 572.

This brings us, therefore, to the question that, inasmuch as the tax imposed is not on all businesses in the city, has there been made a proper constitutional classification of the businesses taxed, or is there a violation of the uniformity and equal protection requirements of the Constitutions.

Plaintiffs assert that the classification is improper because it does not include all amusement businesses in the city and that they bear a major share of the taxes assessed against amusements. It will be remembered that exemptions are made of pool halls and arcades where admissions are not charged, certain religious, charitable, and educational affairs, where music alone is furnished without admission charge.

[4-9] We do not think the city overstepped constitutional limitations in its classification. It must be remembered that, as aptly expressed in speaking of the state sales tax, by the court in Roth Drug, Inc., v. Johnson, 13 Cal.App.2d 720, 733, 57 P.2d 1022, 1027: "the power of the states to make classifications of persons or property for the purpose of taxation is very broad. * * * A statute is presumed to be constitutional until the contrary appears. It has been said that an act may not be held to be unconstitutional merely because it may contain provisions which seem to be unjust or oppressive, or because it may be deemed to violate the natural, social, or political rights of citizens, unless it appears that those features of the act contravene rights which are guaranteed by the Constitution. 1 Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (8th Ed.) p. 341. If a classification of persons or occupations made for the purpose of imposing taxes is founded on natural, intrinsic, or fundamental distinctions which are reasonable in their relation to the object of the legislation and otherwise, they will be deemed to be valid and binding. 5 Cal.Jur., p. 824, § 188. * * * While the classification should be reasonable, natural and just, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, it will be assumed there is good grounds for the classification and the act will be upheld. 6 R.C.L., p. 378, §§ 369-376. In the case of People v. Monterey Fish Products Co., 195 Cal. 548, 556, 234 P. 398, 401, 38 A.L.R. 1186, it is said in that regard: 'When a legislative enactment is attacked upon this ground [of an unauthorized classification], all presumptions and intendments are in favor of the reasonableness and fairness of the legislative action (5 Cal.Jur., § 628 et seq., and cases cited), and the decision * * * to warrant the classification will not be overthrown by the courts unless it is palpably arbitrary.'"

[10] It is well settled that occupations and businesses may be classified and subdivided for purposes of taxation, and it is within the discretion of the legislature to exact different license taxes from different classes or sub-classes of businesses, subject only to the limitations of the State and Federal Constitutions in regard to equal protection of the laws. No constitutional rights are violated if the burden of the license tax falls equally upon all members of a class, though other classes have lighter burdens or are wholly exempt, provided that the classification is reasonable, based on substantial differences between the pursuits separately grouped, and is not arbitrary. 1 Cooley, Taxation 4th Ed., pp. 746-751; 53 C.J.S. The general rule has been recognized in cases where the particular ordinance or statute was held invalid. See Matter of Application of Richardson, 170 Cal. 68, 148 P. 213; Town of St. Helena v. Butterworth, 198 Cal. 230, 244 P. 357; Bueneman v. City of Santa Barbara, 8 Cal.2d 405, 411, 65 P.2d 884, 109 A.L.R. 895; Barker Bros., Inc., v. City of Los Angeles, 10 Cal.2d 603, 607, 76 P.2d 97.

[11] Following these principles, it has been generally held or stated that legislation separately classifying places of amusement for the purpose of imposing license taxes on the owners or operators of them as a group, is valid. See Hale v. State, 217 Ala. 403, 116 So. 369, 58 A.L.R. 1333; Nachman v. State Tax Commission, 233 Ala. 628, 173 So. 25; City of Bessemer v. Bessemer Theatres, 252 Ala. 117, 39 So.2d 658; Pellicer v. South Carolina Tax Commission, 131 S.C. 362, 127 S.E. 438, affirmed in memo. opinion, 273 U.S. 669, 47 S.Ct. 471, 71 L.Ed. 831; Knoxtenn Theatres v. Dance, 186 Tenn. 114, 208 S.W.2d 536; Ringling Bros.-Barnum & Bailey C. Shows v. Sheppard, 5 Cir., 1941, 123 F.2d 773.

Similarly, it has usually been held that the amusement industry might be further subdivided, so that moving picture theatres could be taxed as a separate sub-class. Metropolis Theatre Co. v. City of Chicago, 228 U.S. 61, 33 S.Ct. 441, 57 L.Ed. 730; Brandenburg v. City of Covington, 153 Ga. 92, 111 S.E. 574; City of Metropolis v. Gibbons, 334 Ill. 431, 166 N.E. 115; State v. Greene, 104 Mont. 460, 67 P.2d 995, 111 A.L.R. 770; City of Drumright v. Strand Amusement Co., 139 Okl. 162, 282 P. 128; Bijou Amusement Co. v. Toupin, 63 R.I. 503, 9 A.2d 852; Wingfield v. South Carolina Tax Commission, 147 S.C. 116, 144 S.E. 846; Davis v. White, Tex.Civ.App., 1924, 260 S.W. 138; North Fort Worth Amusement Co. v. Card, Tex.Civ.App., 1930, 23 S.W. 2d 778. While the question does not appear to have been authoritatively decided in this state, it was said by way of dictum in Redwood Theatres v. City of Modesto, 86 Cal. App.2d 907, 918, 196 P.2d 119, that there was no doubt of the propriety of separately classifying places of amusement for the purpose of taxation. The case was actually disposed of on a point of pleading, but the statement appears to be sound and in accord with the weight of authority elsewhere.

Whether the tax statute may make a valid exemption presents the same problem as that of classification; if the exempted persons or businesses may be included in a distinct class then the equal protection of the laws is not denied to those taxed. (33

Am.Jur. 363). Provisions excluding entertainments given for charitable purposes from theatre license taxes have generally been upheld. Pellicer v. Sweat, supra; Curdts v. South Carolina Tax Commission, supra; Ringling Bros.-Barnum & Bailey C. Shows v. Sheppard, supra.

Those principles compel the conclusion that the instant classification is proper. We cannot substitute our judgment for that of the city's legislative power and conclude that there was no conceivable basis for the classification such as the nature and character of the amusement business and of those in that business taxed as distinguished from those exempted. Among other things, one of the main features of the tax is that it is imposed on those amusement businesses charging admission, and those taxed are the ones where larger groups of people are likely to gather, with the accompanying effects on the functioning and activities of the government.

[12, 13] Finally it is urged that the proposition stated on the ballot used in the election at which initiative ordinance No. 754 was adopted was "so misleading, as to invalidate" the ordinance; that the ordinance levied two taxes, one of one cent for each ten cents admission over the first fifteen cents admission charge and the other of one cent on each fifteen cents of 20% of amounts charged for food refreshment, etc., with entertainment, but only the first was mentioned in the ballot. The proposition on the ballot reads: "Proposition No. 1: Shall an ordinance entitled An Ordinance Licensing the Carrying On Of Certain Businesses, Occupations, and Callings and Conduction, Operating, Providing And Maintaining Places of Amusement and Entertainment in The City of Bakersfield for The Purpose of Raising Municipal Revenue and Providing Penalties For the Violation Of The Provisions Hereof which imposes a license tax of one cent for each 10 cents or fraction of 10 cents over and above the first 15 cents of amounts paid by the patrons of places of amusement or entertainment, for the privilege of conducting such places of amusement or entertainment, and which provides that such tax shall be collected by the operators of such places from the persons patronizing such places, be adopted?" The city charter provides: "The ballots used when voting upon such [initiative petition] ordinances shall give the title in full and * * *" (Charter of Bakersfield, sec. 28) but it also provides: "No informalities in conducting elections shall invalidate the same, if they have been conducted fairly and in substantial conformity to the requirements of this charter and the ordinances relating thereto," (Charter, sec. 85) which means that substantial compliance is all that is required. It has been repeatedly and recently held that in testing the sufficiency of the summary in petitions for an initiative measure where the law requires "a title, and summary of the chief purpose and points" of the measure (Cal.Const. art. IV, sec. 1), substantial compliance is sufficient. Perry v. Jordan, 34 Cal.2d 87, 207 P.2d 47; Brown v. Jordan, 12 Cal.2d 75, 82 P.2d 450; Epperson v. Jordan, 12 Cal.2d 61, 82 P.2d 445; California Teachers Ass'n v. Collins, 1 Cal.2d 202, 34 P.2d 134; Boyd v. Jordan, 1 Cal.2d 468, 35 P.2d 533. We consider the rule announced in the last cited cases controlling here.

Here the main and general purpose of the initiative was the imposition of a tax on amusement businesses. That is adequately covered in the title of the ordinance stated on the ballot. The mention of the method of computing the tax as to some businesses but not others was merely incidental or auxiliary and may be disregarded. As said in Brown v. Jordan, supra, 12 Cal.2d 84, 82 P.2d 455: "If it be conceded that after disclosing the chief purpose and points of the proposal, the title contains references to some provisions of the proposal no more important than some to which reference was omitted, this does not render the title fatally defective. The title need not contain a summary or index of all of the measure's provisions. Within certain limits what is and what is not an important provision is a question of opinion. Within those limits the opinion of the attorney-general should be accepted by this court." There was substantial compliance here. People v. City of Los Angeles, 187 Cal. 56, 200 P. 947, is readily distinguishable. There the very important feature of whether by annexation the annexed property would assume the annexing city's debts was omitted.

CITY OF STOCKTON et al. v. WEST COAST THEATRES, Inc., OF NORTHERN CALIFORNIA et al.

Sac. 6102.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

Oct. 6, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 2, 1950.

Action by the City of Stockton, a municipal corporation, and others against West Coast Theatres, Inc., of Northern California for a judgment declaring valid a city ordinance levying for revenue only a tax of two cents for each ticket sold for admission to specified athletic contests and places of amusement and entertainment, including theatres. The Superior Court, San Joaquin County, J. A. Smith, J., assigned by Chairman of Judicial Council, entered a judgment declaring the ordinance valid and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held that the ordinance is not invalid merely because city also imposes a license tax on theatre business measured by seating capacity or on ground of improper classification of businesses taxed or violation of uniformity and equal protection requirements of federal and state constitutions.

Judgment affirmed.

A city ordinance imposing for revenue only a tax of two cents for each ticket sold for admission to specified athletic contests and places of amusement and entertainment, including theatres, is not invalid merely because city also imposes a license tax for revenue purposes on theatres business measured by seating capacity or on ground of improper classification of businesses taxed or violation of uniformity and equal protection requirements of federal and state Constitutions.

CARTER, Justice.

Here we have a city ordinance levying a tax for revenue similar to that involved in Fox Bakersfield Theatre Corp. v. City of Bakersfield, Cal., 222 P.2d 879.

Like in the Bakersfield case, the City of Stockton, plaintiff has a basic business license ordinance No. 985 which classifies the businesses conducted in Stockton and levies a license tax for revenue purposes on them based on various standards. Section 97, imposes a tax on the theatre business of $32 per 100 seats per annum where there are less than 300 seats and a graduated scale on seating capacity over that number. That section of the ordinance was amended in 1947, by ordinance 1972 increasing the tax on theatre but still measuring the tax by seating capacity. Between those two ordinances, ordinance No. 1743 was enacted and approved by referendum. It is that ordinance whose validity is questioned.

It provides that it is enacted "solely to raise revenue" and is "in addition" to the taxes levied under ordinance No. 985; that persons carrying on basketball, football, softball, or baseball games where an admission is charged shall pay a tax of two cents for each ticket sold (Sec. 20). Also included are boxing and wrestling exhibitions (Sec. 21), circus or similar exhibitions (Sec. 22), public dance halls (Sec. 23), ice or rollerskating rinks (Sec. 24), museum, store show, theatrical or vaudeville performances (Sec. 25), concert halls (Sec. 26) and theatres (Sec. 27). Exceptions are made for admission paid by persons in military service (Sec. 29) and children under 12 (Sec. 29½).

The same constitutional objections are made to this ordinance as were made in the Bakersfield case and on the authority of the latter case, the judgment declaring such ordinance valid is affirmed.

ADAMS v. ALLEN et al.

Civ. 17854.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Oct. 17, 1950.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing Nov. 1, 1950.

Action by Beulah Clark Adams against R. E. Allen and others to compel a declaration of respective rights and duties of parties and for an accounting of the partnership of which plaintiff was a member and for judgment for plaintiff's share of undistributed royalties. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Vernon W. Hunt, J., entered an interlocutory decree dissolving partnership and denying plaintiff relief as prayed for and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that where receiver had determined the amount of royalty payable to plaintiff, and plaintiff had been paid the royalty in accordance with the receivership of estate with no objection from plaintiff, and the division was in accordance with plaintiff's contention on appeal and provisions of interlocutory judgment, judgment of trial court dissolving partnership would be affirmed.

Affirmed.

Appeal and error ⇐1135

In action for an accounting of a partnership, where it appeared on appeal that receiver had determined the amount of royalty payable to appellant, that appellant had been paid, in accordance with receivership of estate, and appellant had made no objection and the division of property was in accordance with appellant's contention on appeal and with provisions of the interlocutory judgment, judgment of trial court dissolving partnership would be affirmed.

Manuel Ruiz, Jr., Los Angeles, for appellant.

Meserve, Mumper & Hughes and Hewlings Mumper, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Appellant as one of several lessors brought this action to compel a declaration of the respective rights and duties of the parties for an accounting of the partnership of which she is a member and for judgment for her share of undistributed royalties. Allen subsequently dissolved the partnership and filed his cross-complaint for a decree of dissolution on the ground of appellant's baseless charge of fraud on the part of Allen. An interlocutory decree was entered dissolving the partnership, denying appellant relief as prayed and adjudging that she is not entitled to compel distribution of the partnership assets except such as may be available for distribution to her after payment of debts and costs of administration and liquidation.

A receiver was appointed to take over the assets, to make an inventory and a complete report with respect thereto, to sell such assets and after payment of all costs and liabilities including the debt due appellant he was to distribute the cash remaining in his possession to the partners in the percentages of their several interests.

From such judgment the matter came here on appeal.

When the court's calendar was called, appellant did not appear, but counsel for respondent stated: "The superior court has had a hearing on the matter; the receiver has determined the amount of royalty payable to the appellant, and the appellant has been paid, all in accordance with the receivership estate, and appellant making no objection, and, indeed, the division being in accordance with his contention here and the provisions of the interlocutory judgment."

In view of such statement, further discussion of the controversy would be fruitless.

Judgment affirmed.

EBNER et ux. v. SHEEHAN et al.

Civ. 17662.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Oct. 17, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 6, 1950.

Hearing Denied Dec. 14, 1950.

Action by Frederick A. Ebner and Ada L. Ebner against Milton S. Sheehan and Mary L. Sheehan and others, to cancel a note and a trust deed. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Thurmond Clarke, J., entered judgment for the plaintiffs and named defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that plaintiffs were estopped to demand a cancellation of the note and trust deed given as security for advancement of certain money by defendants on a building contract.

Judgment reversed.

1. Mortgages ⇐25(5)

Where defendant agreed to lend $5,500 to plaintiffs on note accepting deed of trust upon their home under construction as security, and plaintiffs specified no limitation as to manner of disbursing money, and money was deposited to bank account of building contractor who drew thereon for labor and materials, even though house was never completely constructed nor made ready for occupancy, consideration for note and trust deed did not fail.

2. Principal and agent ⇐136(2)

Where employee of building contractor loaned prospective purchasers of house under construction, $5,500 secured by deed of trust, and building contractor left without completing house, whatever agency relationship existed between employee and contractor would not oblige employee to make good contractor's non-performance of contract.

3. Contracts ⇐175(3)

In action to cancel a note and trust deed, finding that loan to prospective purchasers of house under construction was part of building contract, was without support in evidence.

4. Mortgages ⇐25(6)

In action to cancel note and trust deed, finding that plaintiffs did not pay prospective purchasers of house under construction any part of $5,500 loan was without support.

5. Cancellation of instruments ⇐24(2)

Where employee of building contractor loaned $5,500 to purchasers of house under construction on note secured by trust deed, and contractor left without completing house, purchasers were under a duty to restore money advanced for their account for building materials and labor, and on failure to do so were estopped to demand a cancellation of note and trust deed. Civ.Code, § 1691.

W. C. Schaper and Glenn Simpson, Los Angeles, for appellants, W. C. Schaper, Los Angeles.

John K. Blanche and Charles M. Fueller, Pasadena, for respondents.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

The judgment herein cancels (1) respondents' promissory note in favor of appellants in the sum of $5,500 and (2) the lien of their deed of trust upon their home as security for such note, and it quiets their title against the lien. Appellants have brought the matter to this court demanding a reversal of the judgment on the grounds of the insufficiency of the evidence and errors of law occurring at the trial.

The controversy originated in the abrupt conduct of one Frank C. Lewis who having set up as a builder in the community of Pasadena had agreed to build for respondent a home to cost $8,300 including the cost of the lot. About March 15, 1948, Mr. Sheehan, herein referred to as "Sheehan," read an advertisement of Lewis for a man to work in the building industry. As a result the two men met. Two weeks later Lewis employed Sheehan to serve as timekeeper on construction work. At the same time he induced Mr. and Mrs. Sheehan to make a building loan to respondents. To effect such transaction, on April 3 Lewis accompanied Sheehan to their home where he met Mrs. Ebner. Lewis explained to the lady that appellants had agreed to put up the $5,500 for their home. On April 5 appellants met Lewis and one Rutledge, the lot owner, at the bank and opened an escrow for the loan. Appellants agreed to loan $5,500 on the note of respondents secured by a trust deed on the home—such loan to be discharged with the funds of a new loan "as soon as the house was finished." On April 6 appellants withdrew $1,500 from a savings and loan association and deposited the check in the escrow. On April 15 they withdrew $1,500 and deposited $1,300 in the bank to the account of "Frank C. Lewis, building contract account," and paid $200 thereof directly to Lewis. On May 4 they withdrew another $1,500 and deposited it in the same account. On June 4 they withdrew $2,000 from the same savings account and deposited it in the same building account. Fifty five hundred dollars of such money were deposited for the note and trust deed.

From the same Frank C. Lewis building account checks were drawn in payment for materials and labor used on the Ebner house in the total sum of $5,912.92. Such checks were drawn by Sheehan as an employee of Lewis. Before the house had been completed, Lewis took his departure; was never served with process in this action and made no appearance. The house was so far from completion as to render its occupancy perilous.

In their brief respondents say that they "under the terms of the building contract were to pay $2800 in cash to Mr. Lewis and $5500 by promisory note secured by deed of trust and were to receive in return a completed house, the house and lot to be delivered for the total price of $8300."

[1] The findings are that (1) appellants agreed to lend and deliver to respondents the $5,500; (2) such sum was never paid; (3) the consideration for the note and trust deed failed; (4) Sheehan was at all times mentioned the agent of Lewis; (5) appellants' loan and the building contract were parts of the same transaction; (6) appellants did not pay respondents $5,500 or any part thereof. Basing their contentions upon such findings respondents assert that affirmance of the judgment is a simple matter. Their confidence has not wholly permeated the conscience of the court. The basis for the finding that the money was never paid to respondents lies in the fact that the money was deposited in the bank account of Lewis instead of in the account of respondents. The building contract obligated Lewis to finish the construction for $8,300. Respondents paid him $2,400. When the parties conferred concerning the loan no limitations were specified by the Ebners as to the manner of disbursing the money. Respondents made their payments to Lewis or to his bank account, suggested no other person to receive appellants' money, and made no objection to their paying the loaned amount to Lewis directly or to its being deposited in his bank account. For over 90 days all bills for materials and labor were paid from that account. Surely respondents knew that they had not paid any of them and when they contracted for the loan they did not require appellants to pay the $5,500 to themselves or that they place it in escrow for disbursement in progressive payments. Indeed, Mr. Ebner testified that at the time he signed the note and trust deed he did not expect to receive the $5,500 in cash to be disbursed by himself, but did expect it to be used in the erection of the building, and that as long as this was done it was immaterial as to how it was disbursed. Appellants, being unschooled in the art of money lending for building purposes acted in the light of the congenial behavior of Lewis and respondents and placed the money where it could be used for paying bills as necessity required. Their act in depositing the funds in the Lewis account against which Sheehan would draw checks to pay bills was in effect identical with the method of direct payment by respondents of the money on the cost of construction. Sheehan was under contract to loan the money; he advanced it. Therefore there was no failure of consideration.

[2] There is no evidence that Sheehan was an agent of Lewis. If he had been, such agency would not oblige him to make good Lewis' nonperformance of his contract. He was a lowly employee to do menial tasks for Lewis, to keep time on the workmen and to apply the moneys he had deposited to the payment of labor and materials. The relationship of principal and agent works the other way—the principal is bound by the acts of the agent, if the agency covers the act in question.

[3, 4] The finding that the loan was a part of the building contract is utterly without support other than that they were contemporaneous. Lewis told Mrs. Ebner that appellants "had put up the $5500 for their home." Relying upon their agreement with respondents to give them a note and trust deed for his money, Sheehan placed it in a bank from which it was used for the account of respondents. Sheehan's employment to perform the tasks of timekeeper was not related to his agreement to make the loan of his savings to respondents. He was to get no part of the profits to be earned by Lewis' construction of the house; no compensation save only his wages as an employee. The finding that appellants did not pay respondents any part of the $5,500 it utterly without support. On the contrary, the evidence already recited proves that they paid more to respondents than the amount of the loan, and Lewis was not forbidden to disburse the money with his own hand or by an employee.

From the foregoing it follows that the conclusion that the note and trust deed are void is without evidential foundation. Neither is there any basis in fact for the judgment that appellants surrender the note and trust deed or that they have no interest in the property described in the latter instrument. They parted in good faith with their substance on respondents' agreement to return it according to the terms of the note. The sudden departure of Lewis without completing the structure he had undertaken for respondents is not a reason for attaching his obligation to an unfortunate couple who had supplied the sinews wherewith to provide shelter for respondents at 6 per cent per annum with the privilege of obtaining another loan on better terms.

[5] Having contracted with appellants it was respondents' duty to offer to do equity as a basis for rescinding the agreement. Civ.Code, sec. 1691. Having failed to offer to restore the moneys advanced for their account, they are estopped to demand a cancellation of the note and trust deed. Lanktree v. Spring Mountain Acres, 213 Cal. 362, 366, 2 P.2d 338. No such act seems to have been entertained by respondents. They would keep the house and lot for which nearly $8,000 had been expended, of which they had advanced only $2,400. They would cancel their debt to appellants without even an offer to repay a portion of the fund advanced. They would condemn the conduct of Lewis yet use it as a sword to enrich themselves at the expense of appellants. Where appellants have loaned their money to respondents to enable them to build their home, the latter cannot defeat their obligation by asserting that the loan to them was "a part of Lewis' contract to build the house." The facts that after Lewis' failure to perform his agreement to complete the house respondents paid out $600 to make the house tenantable and discharged a mechanic's lien for $228.83 are in no sense related to their duty to discharge their obligations to appellants.

In view of the foregoing it is unnecessary to discuss the rulings of the court at the trial.

The judgment is reversed with instructions to make findings and enter judgment for appellants in accordance with this opinion.

CHRISTIANA v. ROSE.

Civ. 14313.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Oct. 20, 1950.

Antone T. Christiana brought an action against Julia Rose, formerly Julia Christiana, to recover half of the amount of the judgment which the defendant had obtained in a wrongful death action against third person for the death of a child of the parties after defendant had obtained a divorce decree. The Superior Court in and for Contra Costa County, C. C. McDonald, J., rendered a judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that plaintiff was estopped from claiming any interest in the judgment obtained by the defendant in the wrongful death action, that District Court of Appeal could take judicial notice of prior appeal in wrongful death action, that plaintiff had no interest in the judgment obtained in the wrongful death action, and that the judgment was the separate property of the defendant and not community property.

Affirmed.

1. Divorce ⇐160

Where defendant is personally served in a divorce action and defaults, the default admits all of the allegations of the complaint, and he is estopped from thereafter challenging them.

2. Divorce ⇐255

Where complaint and decree for divorce are silent as to property issues, and the judgment is based on a default, the judgment cannot be res judicata on any property issue.

3. Divorce ⇐255

Where wife filed suit for divorce, alleging that there was no community property, and husband was personally served, but he defaulted, and divorce decree giving wife custody of children, was silent as to disposition of community property, and thereafter wife recovered a judgment for the wrongful death of one of the children, husband was estopped from claiming any portion of the judgment on ground that it was community property.

4. Evidence ⇐43(3)

Where divorced husband brought action against divorced wife to recover half of judgment which wife had procured from third person in action for death of a child of the parties, on ground that the judgment was community property, and divorced husband in his complaint referred to the wrongful death action and specifically alleged the date of the case, its file number in clerk's office and date that appellate court affirmed, District Court of Appeal on appeal by divorced husband from adverse judgment would take judicial notice of the prior appeal in the wrongful death action.

5. Divorce ⇐313

Where divorced wife sued for and recovered only for damage suffered her in action for wrongful death of son, and she did not ask for or receive one cent for the damage, if any, suffered by divorced husband, and complaint alleged and prayed for her damages, and jury was instructed that jury might award her amount that reasonably and fairly compensate her for loss which she had sustained, divorced husband was not entitled to recover any portion of the judgment from divorced wife.

6. Courts ⇐91(1)

The District Court of Appeal is bound by decisions of the Supreme Court.

7. Husband and wife ⇐260

The rule that damages for injuries sustained by a wife living with her husband are community property should not be blindly extended in view of statute providing that earnings and accumulations of wife and of her minor children living with her in her custody, while she is living separate from her husband, are her separate property. Civ. Code, § 169.

8. Husband and wife ⇐249

A judgment obtained by divorced wife in action for wrongful death of son while she was divorced and was separated from divorced husband and had custody of their children, was an "accumulation" within meaning of statute providing that earnings and "accumulations" of wife and of her minor children living with her in her custody, while she is living separate from her husband, are the separate property of the wife, and such judgment was not "community property" so as to entitle husband to a half of the amount of the judgment. Civ. Code, § 169.

Taft, Wright & Hopkins and Millard Smith, all of Vallejo, for appellants.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

May a husband, living separate from his wife, the latter having custody of their children, where one of the children is killed by the negligence of a third person, and where the wife sues for and recovers her damages caused by such death, successfully maintain an action against the wife for one-half of her judgment on the theory that such recovery is community property? That is the main question involved on this appeal. The trial court, while holding that the recovery by the wife was community property, held that, under the facts of the case, the husband was estopped from claiming any portion of the judgment. The husband appeals. It is our view that the judgment should be affirmed not only on the theory that if the recovery was community property the husband was estopped from claiming any portion of the judgment, but also because, in our opinion, under the facts, the judgment recovered by the wife was her separate property.

The following time chart presents the key facts:

March 17, 1940—appellant and respondent were married, and subsequently had three children, one of whom was named Robert.

March, 1944—the parties separated, the respondent wife taking custody of the three children. From the separation until December of 1945, the appellant contributed to the support of the children. Thereafter, he contributed nothing.

August 9, 1945—Robert Christiana, the son of the parties, was killed in an automobile accident.

January 18, 1946—the respondent filed an action in Alameda County for divorce, alleging, among other things, that there was no community property. There was no prayer for a declaration of the property rights of the parties.

March 11, 1946—interlocutory decree of divorce granted to respondent on default of appellant, the decree being silent as to the disposition of the community property of the parties.

April 20, 1946—the respondent, after an ineffectual attempt to notify appellant of the action, instituted, in her own name, an action in the Superior Court of Contra Costa County to recover her damages for the wrongful death of Robert. There can be no doubt, and appellant concedes, that a wife, living separate from her husband, and having custody of their child, may maintain such an action in her own name. §§ 376, 377, Code Civ. Proc.

September 18, 1946—respondent recovered a judgment. This judgment was affirmed by the appellate court on September 26, 1947, Christiana v. Rattaro, 81 Cal.App.2d 597, 184 P.2d 682, and the remittitur issued November 26, 1947. The respondent collected $11,642.12 gross on this judgment, and $6,755.84 net.

June 5, 1947—final decree of divorce granted to respondent, the decree containing no express reference to the property rights of the parties. Thereafter, respondent remarried, her last name now being Rose.

July 26, 1948—the present action was instituted by appellant to recover one-half of the judgment secured by respondent.

The complaint is framed on the theory that the judgment recovered by respondent is community property, and, on that theory, seeks to impose a trust on one-half of the proceeds. The answer alleges two major defenses, first, that the complaint in the divorce action averred that there was no community property of the parties; that the husband was served and defaulted, and thereby admitted the allegations of the complaint; that under such circumstances the husband is estopped to claim there is now community property; and secondly, that the recovery was not community property.

The evidence shows that the husband, after the separation, contributed something to the support of his three children, and after the death of Robert, to the support of the other two, until December of 1945, when all contributions ceased; that although the respondent wife was awarded support for the children and attorney fees in the divorce action, not a cent has been paid thereon; that after the separation, except for a period of about a year and a half during which the children lived with respondent's mother, the children have lived with respondent; that from the date of the separation until Robert's death, Robert lived with respondent and was in her exclusive control and custody, and appellant exercised no control over him; that respondent paid the funeral expenses of Robert.

The trial court found that when the cause of action arose for the wrongful death of Robert, such cause of action was community property, but that from the time appellant defaulted in the divorce action, all of appellant's rights in the community property, including his rights in the wrongful death action, ceased and terminated. Thus, the theory of the trial court was that the cause of action for the wrongful death of Robert was community property, but that because the respondent in her divorce complaint alleged that there was no community property, and the appellant defaulted, he thereby admitted that there was no community property, and is forever estopped from so claiming, and in particular is estopped from claiming that the proceeds of the wrongful death action are community property.

If it be assumed that the cause of action for the wrongful death of Robert and the proceeds of the judgment were community property, this theory of the trial court would be in accord with the law, and the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed. The divorce complaint, filed in Alameda County on January 18, 1946, alleged "That there is no community property of the parties." The prayer asked for dissolution of the marriage, for the care, custody and support of the children, for attorney's fees, and "for such other and further judgment in the premises as is meet and proper." The interlocutory decree has no specific reference to the property rights of the parties, but it does recite that: "The above entitled action coming on regularly to be heard this day on the complaint of the above named plaintiff, taken as confessed by the above named defendant * * * and it appearing to the Court that the said defendant was duly served with process herein, and that the default of said defendant for failure to appear or answer herein within the time allowed by law has been duly and regularly entered * * *." There is no direct evidence in the present record as to whether appellant was personally served or served by publication in the divorce action, but the interlocutory not only awards respondent the care and custody of the children, but also a fixed sum for their support and maintenance. In addition, on the same day the interlocutory was entered (March 11, 1946), the trial court made an order for attorney's fees against appellant. These orders could not lawfully have been made without personal service on appellant, and he does not attack them in this proceeding. Therefore, under the circumstances here existing, it may reasonably be inferred that appellant was personally served in the divorce action.

[1] Under the decided cases, it is the law of this state, at least where a defendant is personally served in a divorce action and defaults, that, by such default, he admits all of the allegations of the complaint, and is estopped from thereafter challenging them. This is the direct holding of Brown v. Brown, 170 Cal. 1, 147 P. 1168. In that case the wife claimed an interest in property acquired by her husband after she had secured an interlocutory, but before the final decree was entered. In the divorce action the wife, as here, alleged that there was no community property. Neither the interlocutory nor the final decrees mentioned property rights of the parties. The Supreme Court held that this amounted to a final adjudication that, as of the date the complaint was filed, there was no community property of the parties and both parties were bound thereby, but that such adjudication did not affect property acquired by either after the date of the interlocutory. In so holding the court stated, 170 Cal. at page 5, 147 P. at page 1170: "Where a defendant is served with a summons and complaint stating the facts upon which he is required to act, and he makes default, he is presumed to admit all the facts which are well pleaded in the complaint. The judgment which follows upon this sort of admission is, in contemplation of law, a complete adjudication of all the rights of the parties embraced in the prayer for relief and arising from the facts stated in the complaint, including the facts in his favor as well as those against him. The defendant here is presumed to have acceded to the proposition embraced in the complaint and to have consented that plaintiff should obtain the relief therein prayed for, upon the conditions and facts set forth in the complaint. The proceeding is equivalent to a statement by Brown to plaintiff that he did not object to a divorce for the cause alleged, based upon the theory that there was no community property existing at the time the action was begun. When judgment is rendered upon such a complaint and default, it becomes, in effect, a contract between the parties that the judgment shall be final with respect to everything properly embraced within the allegations of the complaint and in the prayer for relief. [Citations omitted.] Although the final decree is silent as to property, it nevertheless operates as an adjudication that at the time the action was begun there was no community property."

The above case involved property acquired by the husband after the interlocutory and before the final decree, and the specific holding was that the estoppel did not apply to such property, but in the companion case of Brown v. Brown, 170 Cal. 8, 9, 147 P. 1171, 1172, the court considered an insurance policy acquired by the husband before the divorce action had been commenced. As to it, the court held that the estoppel applied. In so holding, the court referred to the first case and the principles contained in the above quotation, and held that, under that rule of law, "the judgment of divorce, based upon the complaint declaring that there was no community property, is a conclusive determination against the plaintiff that this property is not community property, and by such judgment she is estopped from claiming any interest whatever in this part of the estate of Brown." See, also, Maxwell v. Maxwell, 66 Cal. App.2d 549, 152 P.2d 530; Fitzgerald v. Herzer, 78 Cal.App.2d 127, 177 P.2d 364; Horton v. Horton, 18 Cal.2d 579, 116 P.2d 605.

It should be mentioned that we have examined the record in the Brown cases. It appears that the divorce complaint there, as in the instant case, alleged that there was no community property. The prayer of the divorce complaint in the Brown case, as in the instant case, asked for no relief as to property rights. The interlocutory and final decrees in the Brown case, as in the instant case, made no reference to property rights. Therefore, the Brown cases are on all fours with the instant one.

[2] Appellant correctly points out that the interlocutory and final decrees do not mention the property rights of the parties, and contends that, in spite of the rules of law announced in the Brown cases, before there can be an estoppel there must be an express finding on the subject of community property. The cases cited by appellant in support of this contention are all cases where both the complaint and the decrees were silent as to community property. De Godey v. Godey, 39 Cal. 157; Kirschner v. Dietrich, 110 Cal. 502, 42 P. 1064; Minium v. Minium, 53 Cal.App. 55, 199 P. 1104. These cases deal with an entirely different problem. Of course, where the complaint and decree are silent as to property issues, and the judgment is based upon a default, such judgment cannot be res judicata on any property issue.

Appellant places considerable reliance on Burtnett v. King, 33 Cal.2d 805, 205 P.2d 657. There the complaint in a divorce action had alleged that there was certain specified community property, but the prayer of the complaint asked for no relief in reference to such property. Defendant defaulted. The decree awarded the property to plaintiff. The Supreme Court properly reversed, holding that the trial court, in a default case, cannot award a plaintiff greater relief than that demanded in the complaint. See § 580, Code of Civ. Proc.

That case involved a different problem than that here involved. In the instant case, the court did not, as in the Burtnett case, give the plaintiff in the divorce action relief not prayed for. Here, the divorce decree gave the plaintiff relief that was in exact accord with the prayer of the complaint. The Burtnett case did not discuss or cite the Brown cases, and certainly did not purport to overrule them.

[3] Thus, it must be held, if the cause of action for the wrongful death was community property, that the appellant is estopped from claiming any interest therein. This is in accord with the theory of the trial court.

There are other, alternative, and independent reasons why the result reached by the trial court—denying the appellant any portion of the judgment—is correct.

[4] Under the facts here involved, we are permitted to take judicial notice of the prior appeal in the wrongful death action, that is, of the case of Christiana v. Rattaro, 81 Cal.App.2d 597, 184 P.2d 682. While it has been stated, on occasion, that the courts will not take judicial notice of other actions, Johnston v. Ota, 43 Cal. App.2d 94, 96, 110 P.2d 507; Wolfsen v. Hathaway, 32 Cal.2d 632, 638, 198 P.2d 1, that rule has many exceptions. It has been held that, in the interests of justice, the court may take judicial notice of proceedings in other cases in the same court. Willson v. Security-First Nat. Bk., 21 Cal. 2d 705, 711, 134 P.2d 800; Calhoun v. Calhoun, 81 Cal.App.2d 297, 302, 183 P.2d 922. In the instant case the appellant in his complaint referred to the wrongful death action and specifically alleged the date of the case, its file number in the clerk's office, and the date the appellate court affirmed. Under such circumstances, there can be no doubt but that this court may look at and consider the records in the wrongful death action See Popcorn Equipment Co. v. Page, 92 Cal. App.2d 448, 453, 207 P.2d 647.

An examination of those records discloses that the then plaintiff sued for and recovered only for the damage suffered by her, and that she did not ask for or receive one cent for the damage, if any, suffered by her husband. The complaint alleged and prayed for her damages, and the jury was instructed that they might award her the amount that would "reasonably and fairly compensate her" for the loss which she had sustained. Thus in that action the present respondent recovered her damages and recovered nothing for the community.

Actions for wrongful death are purely statutory. The governing statutes are sections 376 and 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Those sections create a cause of action in the heirs of the deceased, Earley v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 176 Cal. 79, 81, 167 P. 513, and such cause of action is "a joint one, a single one and an indivisible one." Gilmore v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 211 Cal. 192, 199, 295 P. 41, 45; see, also, Robinson v. Western States Gas, etc. Co., 184 Cal. 401, 410, 194 P. 39; Watkins v. Nutting, 17 Cal.2d 490, 498, 110 P.2d 384; Daubert v. Western Meat Co., 139 Cal. 480, 482, 69 P. 297, 73 P. 244.

[5] The record here shows that before the respondent commenced the wrongful death action she tried to inform appellant, but was unsuccessful in locating him. She recovered in that action, as already pointed out, only the loss which she had suffered. She did not sue for or recover any damages that may have been suffered by appellant. Under such circumstances, under settled principles, another heir is not entitled to any portion of the award given to compensate one heir on the theory that he was also an heir. He could, and perhaps should, have been joined as a plaintiff or defendant in the wrongful death action. The omitted heir, however, cannot recover any portion of the judgment awarded the suing heir. The omitted heir's cause of action, if any, is against the suing heir for fraud, if such exists, in knowingly excluding him from the wrongful death action. These principles are well settled.

In Roach v. Drew, 72 Cal.App. 45, 48, 236 P. 568, 569, an illegitimate child of a deceased mother brought an action to have the surviving husband declared a trustee as to a portion of the damages recovered by him for the wrongful death of the wife and mother. In the wrongful death action the husband had recovered only for the damages suffered by him. The appellate court affirmed a judgment for the husband based on an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint. The court stated: "Since the damages recovered were those only which the defendant herein suffered, and did not include those sustained by plaintiff herein, it is not perceived upon what principle of law the defendant can be deprived of any part of the amount recovered, in the absence of a showing of wrongful conduct on his part. If the defendant knew of the existence of plaintiff during the prosecution of his action for damages, he might be subject to an action for fraud in omitting her as an heir in his suit."

The same conclusion was reached in Watkins v. Nutting, 17 Cal.2d 490, 499, 110 P.2d 384. There the wrongful death action was brought by some of the children of a deceased father. His children by a former marriage were named as defendants upon their refusal to join as plaintiffs. These defendant heirs defaulted. The plaintiffs recovered a judgment, and, a month later, the defaulting children petitioned to reopen the case for the purpose of taking testimony to establish their pecuniary loss occasioned by the death of their father in order to secure a portion of the judgment entered in favor of the suing children. A motion to strike this motion was granted, and the defaulting children appealed. The court affirmed, holding that the defaulting heirs were entitled to no portion of the award of the suing heirs.

In the instant case respondent's recovery in the wrongful death action was for her damages as the heir of the child Robert. She made no recovery on behalf of the possible other heir—her husband—and made no recovery on behalf of the community. Appellant's remedy, if any, is an action for fraud, if fraud existed, not an action to impose a trust on any portion of the judgment.

There is a third independent, alternative, and conclusive answer to this case, and that is that the recovery by respondent in the wrongful death action, as a matter of law, in our opinion, was not community property, but was the separate property of the wife.

Appellant's argument that the cause of action for wrongful death and the proceeds of the judgment in such action are community property, is based primarily on the rule announced in Keena v. United Railroads of S. F., 57 Cal.App. 124, 130, 207 P. 35, 38. In that case a father brought an action for the wrongful death of a minor child. It was held that the mother's contributory negligence barred any recovery by the father because "The proceeds of a favorable judgment in such an action become community property." That rule is based upon, and is a refinement of, the rule that damages suffered by a wife, even though recovered in an action brought by her alone, are, in this state, community property. Zaragosa v. Craven, 33 Cal.2d 315, 320, 202 P.2d 73; Duncan v. Duncan, 6 Cal.App. 404, 406, 92 P. 310. But in the Keena case, and in the many cases in which it was held that damages for personal injuries to the wife are community property, the wife was living with the husband. We have found no case in this state where it has been held that damages to a wife living separate and apart from her husband are community property, or holding that damages in a wrongful death action recovered by a wife living separate from her husband and having custody of their child, is community property. Cogent reasons exist why the recovery in such cases should be considered the separate property of the wife.

[6, 7] The rule that damages to a wife living with her husband for her injuries are community property has been criticized, 33 Cal.L.Rev. p. 627, particularly fn. 29, on p. 632, but it is the law, and this court as an intermediate appellate court, is bound by the Supreme Court decisions. But that rule should not be blindly extended, particularly in view of section 169 of the Civil Code. That section provides: "The earnings and accumulations of the wife, and of her minor children living with her or in her custody, while she is living separate from her husband, are the separate property of the wife." Although there seems to be no case in this state dealing with the question as to whether damages for personal injuries suffered by a wife living separate from her husband are "earnings" or "accumulations" of the wife within the meaning of this section, other community property states having a statute copied from section 169 have held such damages to be the separate property of the wife. Thus in City of Phoenix v. Dickson, 40 Ariz. 403, 12 P.2d 618, a separated wife brought an action for her personal injuries. The record did not indicate which party was responsible for the separation. If the recovery was community property, the wife could not, in Arizona, maintain the action. She could maintain the action only if the recovery would be her separate property. The court held that the recovery in such an action was the separate property of the wife, basing its conclusion on its statute similar to section 169 which it stated was copied from California. The court held that damages to a wife separated from her husband were not "earnings" of the wife, but held that they were "accumulations." In defining that term the court relied upon a definition of it found in Union Oil Company v. Stewart, 158 Cal. 149, 110 P. 313, specifically holding that property acquired by a wife by adverse possession when living separate from her husband was an "accumulation" and therefore her separate property, as follows, 12 P.2d at page 620: "When one speaks generally of accumulation of property, he is understood to refer to any property which a person acquires and retains, without regard to the means by which it is obtained."

The same result was reached by the Supreme Court of Idaho in Lorang v. Hays, 69 Idaho 440, 209 P.2d 733, 735. There, in reference to a similar problem, the court stated: "that a cause of action for damages to the person or character of a married woman, which accrue while she is living separate and apart from her husband, is 'an accumulation', [and] is her separate property * * * [and] the husband is not a necessary party plaintiff and is not entitled to any of the recovery."

[8] The rule of these cases certainly should apply where, as here, a wife separated from her husband and having custody of their children sues for and recovers damages for her loss caused by the wrongful death of their child. In such event the recovery is certainly an "accumulation" within the meaning of section 169, and therefore is the separate property of the wife.

For any and all of these reasons the judgment must be and is affirmed.

MARANVILLE v. STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION.

Civ. 17511.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Oct. 17, 1950.

As Modified Oct. 19, 1950.

Hearing Denied Dec. 14, 1950.

S. C. Maranville brought action against the State Board of Equalization to recover sales and use taxes paid under protest. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles, Charles S. Burnell, J., in favor of plaintiff and from an order denying new trial, defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J., held that where a sales tax was imposed only on gross receipts of X-ray film sold to X-ray laboratories and hospitals furnishing diagnoses, sales tax imposed on the charges for X-rays furnished by lay laboratories, was discriminatory as to lay laboratories since neither hospitals nor any X-ray laboratory may make diagnoses.

Judgment affirmed.

Parker, Milliken & Kohlmeier, and Harrison Harkins, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

Plaintiff made x-ray pictures of parts of anatomies of patients, for the use of doctors and dentists. These pictures are called radiographs. Plaintiff took and developed radiographs, and made reports analyzing their meaning. He was what is termed a lay technician. He made no diagnoses from the radiographs. But he did advise the professional men of his conclusions of conditions of anatomies as they appeared to him in the pictures. He "interpreted light shadows." His reports were oral over the telephone, or in writing. He testified that he did not base his charges at the rate of so much per radiograph; that his charges were for his services in securing information necessary for the doctor or dentist in each case.

The patients paid for plaintiff's services. After being used, the radiographs were returned to and stored by plaintiff. He testified that it was generally understood that he owned the radiographs at all times.

In competition with plaintiff were x-ray laboratories operated by hospitals and doctors. In his memorandum of opinion denying appellant's motion for a new trial, the late Judge Charles S. Burnell well compared lay laboratories and medical laboratories:

"* * * the operation of lay laboratories such as that maintained by plaintiff is practically identical with that of medical laboratories; their charges are about the same; each type of laboratory retains possession of the radiograph, and it is common knowledge that these films are the property of the laboratory producing them. * * *

"In answer to a question by the court: 'I don't care whether it is a medical laboratory that is owned or operated by a physician or one that is operated by one who is not a doctor, does the laboratory as a rule and custom make any diagnosis other than the diagnosis of the film, the reading of the film?' The witness replied, 'That is all, whether it is a medical laboratory or not.'"

Former Rule No. 44, Sales Tax Rules and Regulations of the State Board of Equalization in effect during the taxable period involved read as follows:

"Hospitals, physicians, surgeons, dentists, and x-ray laboratories which furnish a diagnosis along with x-ray pictures making a single charge for both, are regarded as consumers of x-ray film used by them, and the tax applies to the gross receipts from the sales of x-ray film to them. 'Lay laboratories,' which do not furnish diagnoses are regarded as selling x-ray pictures and the tax applies to the charges for such pictures."

In conformity to this ruling, a tax of $857.26 was assessed against plaintiff. He paid the tax under protest, and brought this action for recovery.

The trial court found that plaintiff's business did not come within the purview of the tax act; and that the tax exemption given medical laboratories and not to lay laboratories was discriminatory.

From the judgment directing re-payment to the plaintiff of the tax money paid by him the State Board of Equalization appeals; also from the court's order denying a new trial.

Appellant contends that the record demonstrates that plaintiff developed x-ray pictures to the order of his customers for a consideration, and that, therefore, the transactions were sales within the meaning of the law; that the statute, Revenue and Taxation Code, § 1 et seq., reveals that the word "sale" as therein used means any transfer of title or possession of tangible personal property for a consideration; and that this includes producing, fabricating, or processing of tangible personal property for consumers who furnish, directly or indirectly, the materials used; also that the term "sale" includes any transfer, for a consideration, of the title or possession of tangible personal property which has been produced, fabricated, or printed to the special order of the customer.

Plaintiff contends that there was no sale of the radiographs themselves, that the title thereto remained at all times in him—that there was no transfer of title to tangible personal property which would bring the transactions within the statute.

Plaintiff also contends that the tax as to him is discriminatory. He points out that x-ray laboratories and hospitals "which furnish a diagnosis along with x-ray pictures, making a single charge for both" are exempt from taxation. See Rule 44 above quoted.

These two contentions will be discussed in order.

1. In Michigan it has been held that title to exposed X-ray film is not in the patient, but in the doctor who took and developed it. McGarry v. J. A. Mercier Co., 272 Mich. 501, 262 N.W. 296. No case has been found respecting property rights in radiographs made by lay technicians.

[1] In any event the testimony will not support a finding in this case that the radiographs at all times belonged to plaintiff Looking from the form to the substance of the transactions here involved, it is apparent that plaintiff was selling radiographs. His contention that the charges were made solely for services may not be upheld.

One who dyes fabrics furnished to him for processing is subject to the sales tax in California. Banken v. State Board of Equalization, 79 Cal.App.2d 572, 180 P.2d 400. Prior to change in the statute making specific exemption optometrists were required to pay a sales tax upon glasses furnished to their patients. Kamp v. Johnson, 15 Cal.2d 187, 99 P.2d 274. In other jurisdictions photographers furnishing pictures are subject to sales taxes. Voss v. Gray, 70 N.D. 727, 298 N.W. 1; Cusick v. Commonwealth, 260 Ky. 204, 84 S.W.2d 14.

2. Plaintiff's contention of discrimination is more persuasive.

In Coca-Cola Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 25 Cal.2d 918, 921, 156 P.2d 1, 2, it is said: "Although not necessarily controlling, as where made without the authority of or repugnant to the provisions of a statute, the contemporaneous administrative construction of the enactment by those charged with its enforcement and interpretation is entitled to great weight, and courts generally will not depart from such construction unless it is clearly erroneous or unauthorized. (Citing cases.)"

[2] The word "diagnosis" has an established legal meaning. It is the recognition of a disease from its symptoms; it is a part of the practise of the healing art. Diagnoses may only be made by proficient persons, authorized by the State. People v. Jordan, 172 Cal. 391, 156 P. 451.

[3] Neither hospitals nor X-ray laboratories may make diagnoses. Therefore it is clear that to exempt hospitals and X-ray laboratories, and at the same time to tax lay laboratories, is discriminatory.

[4, 5] Section 1 of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States applies to state and local tax statutes. "While the state may classify broadly the subjects of taxation, it must do so on a rational basis so that all persons similarly circumstanced shall be treated alike." Barker Bros., Inc., v. City of Los Angeles, 10 Cal.2d 603, 607, 76 P.2d 97, 99. Rules of the agency empowered to enforce a tax which result in illegal discrimination are invalid. People v. Puritan Ice Co., 24 Cal.2d 645, 652, 151 P.2d 1.

The appeal from the order denying motion for a new trial is dismissed; the judgment is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.
Oct. 17, 1950.

Gail Vincent Whisner was convicted in the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, W. Turney Fox, J., of first degree burglary, and from judgment of conviction and from an order denying a motion for a new trial he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J., held that evidence was sufficiently substantial to connect defendant with the crime charged and to support judgment of conviction.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal law ⇐1160

Where there is evidence tending to support a verdict, District Court of Appeal cannot disturb verdict upon ground that it is not sustained by evidence and especially where trial court has refused a new trial.

2. Burglary ⇐42(3)

Evidence that camera found in defendant's possession was same type of camera that was missing from home of prosecuting witness that defendant had been seen by prosecuting witness in vicinity of home, and defendant's evidence in explaining his possession of camera, was sufficiently substantial to connect him with crime charged and to support judgment of conviction for first degree burglary.

Fred G. Kennedy, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Dan Kaufmann, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

Defendant was charged by information with the crime of burglary. The court sitting without a jury found him guilty as charged, and fixed the degree of the crime as first degree. Defendant's motion for a new trial was denied; judgment was pronounced, and he was sentenced to the county jail for a term of one year. Execution of such sentence was suspended and defendant was granted probation for two years upon condition that he serve the first five months thereof in the county jail. He here appeals from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying him a new trial.

It is here urged that the judgment is contrary to the law and the evidence; that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the judgment and the court erred in the admission of evidence.

The main contention appears to be that the evidence is insufficient to identify the articles found in appellant's possession as those stolen from the burglarized house.

The record discloses that on August 13, 1949, Mr. R. H. Galle left his home in Los Angeles around 7:40 p.m. At that time the house was locked, including the front door. When he returned about 11:30 that night, he found the screen had been removed from a back window and left on the ground, and that the front door, although closed, was unlocked. Mr. Galle's daughter returned home a few minutes before he did, and upon examination they found that two cameras, a light meter and a radio were missing from the house. They both testified that they had not given permission to appellant or to anyone else to enter their home and remove the stated articles.

On August 20, 1949, appellant was arrested in a barber shop having in his possession a camera and a light meter. He had offered the camera for sale at $35 with the statement that it was worth $110. This camera was introduced in evidence. Mr. Galle was asked if he recognized it as the one stolen from his house. He stated: "Well, it is one just like it. I couldn't swear until I see the serial number. * * * I have taken pictures with it. It is my daughter's camera." He then explained that he did not know where the serial number appeared on the camera, but he had asked the May Company to look it up (apparently from the record of the purchase) and he had the serial number on paper.

His daughter, Rosalie, testified that the camera "is an Argus C-3 just like mine." That its distinguishing mark was a serial number. As to the light meter, she stated it looked like hers but she could not prove it "because there are thousands of those."

Appellant took the stand in his own defense and stated that while he and one Vivian Moran were drinking a bottle of beer at the Spring Arcade cocktail bar on August 19, 1949, Miss Moran gave him the camera, stating that if he could sell it for her he could have all over $30 he might get for it; that it was understood that they would meet at the same place the next night.

Appellant further stated that the next day he came downtown about 3:00 in the afternoon, and went to a barber shop near First and Los Angeles Streets. Just as he was about to make a sale of the camera to Richard Nakano for $35 police officers came into the shop, questioned him about the camera and later placed him under arrest. He stated he had known Vivian Moran for two and a half or three years; that they had gone to a couple of shows together and to several bars; that he never made any specific dates with her, "it was just a matter of running into each other"; that he left her where he found her and did not know what occupation she pursued, nor where she lived. He also stated that he had been in the Spring Arcade cocktail bar "maybe a hundred times" before his arrest; that he knew the bartenders there by sight but not by name, and that he had tried to locate Miss Moran but without success.

The record shows that at the time of his arrest, appellant gave to police officers Sherrill and Barry the same explanation regarding his possession of the camera.

The instant trial took place on November 4, 1949. In answer to the trial court's questioning, appellant testified he had been out on bail since September 14, 1949; and admitted that he had made rounds of the various cocktail bars, including the Spring Arcade, only twice since his arrest; that he then made inquiries as to the whereabouts of Vivian Moran but to no avail; that the bartender at the Spring Arcade told him her name sounded familiar but that he would have to see her to remember her.

[1] People v. Williams, 27 Cal.2d 220, 223, 163 P.2d 692, 694, was a prosecution for stolen turkeys. There, as here, appellant attacked the sufficiency of the evidence because of failure to prove that the three turkeys found in his possession were the turkeys stolen from the butcher shop. One of the prosecuting witnesses testified that "after having handled a turkey, he would know it later by just looking at it." In addition he identified a tag of ownership introduced in evidence and found on one turkey in appellant's possession. The court there stated 27 Cal.2d at page 227, 163 P.2d at page 695: "While it must be conceded that there is some confusion in the evidence on this issue and the record is not so clear as might be desired, still the sufficiency of the identification of the stolen property and the reconciliation of any discrepancies in the respective witnesses' statements at the trial were for the jury. * * * it was for the jury to determine whether or not to accredit defendant's entirely uncorroborated account of his previous purchase of the turkeys in his possession at the time of his arrest. 'If it were the rule that trial judges or juries must decide cases in conformity with the defendant's testimony, few criminals would ever be convicted.' People v. Rose, 26 Cal.App. 2d 513, 517, 79 P.2d 737, 739. As was said in People v. Tedesco, 1 Cal.2d 211, 219, 34 P.2d 467, 470, with regard to the function of an appellate court in reviewing the correctness of factual determinations made in the course of a criminal trial: 'This court has uniformly held that where there is evidence tending to support a verdict we cannot disturb the verdict upon the ground that it is not sustained by the evidence; and the application of this rule is strengthened in a case where, as here, the trial court has refused a new trial. It is settled beyond controversy that the weight to be accorded the evidence is a question for the jury.'"

[2] In the instant cause, Mr. Galle testified that the camera found in appellant's possession was the same type of camera that was missing from his home, and he positively stated: "I have taken pictures with it. It is my daughter's camera." He further stated that he had seen appellant in the vicinity of his (witness') home "off and on for the last six months, perhaps once a month. * * * I walked back and forth to the store there, and I would see different ones with him. * * * That is about 100 feet from my house." That he first saw appellant at a fire in the neighborhood; and the last time he saw him was about two months before the burglary.

While the evidence of identification is comparatively slight, appellant's presence in the neighborhood is an important circumstance, not to be treated merely as a coincidence. This evidence together with the testimony and statements of appellant in his attempt to account for his possession of the camera, was sufficiently substantial to connect him with the crime charged and to support the judgment of conviction.

In announcing his decision at the end of the trial, the trial court made some very pertinent comments: That appellant's explanation showed a complete lack of substantiality in that when he got out of jail on September 14th, he made no effort to even look for Vivian Moran until October 24th, a month and ten days later. And this in the face of the fact that he was charged with stealing the camera and would find her a very material witness to substantiate his claim of innocence.

The judgment and order appealed from are, and each of them is, affirmed.

SINDELL et al. v. SMUTZ.
Civ. 17424.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Oct. 17, 1950.

Hearing Denied Dec. 14, 1950.

Proceeding by Harry K. Sindell and James T. Satchell to secure a writ of mandate commanding Huber H. Smutz, Zoning Administrator of the City of Los Angeles, to consider and pass upon petitioners' application to drill an oil well on their leasehold. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Joseph W. Vickers, J., entered a judgment granting writ of mandate and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that where for many years one oil well was permitted to an acre in the entire oil field, and hundreds of wells were drilled upon that basis, an ordinance restricting a small outlying part of field to two wells in a block was unduly oppressive and not reasonably necessary to promote general welfare of community, since it deprived owners of their right, coequal with right of other owners and lessees in oil field, to recover their fair share of oil from the common source of supply.

Affirmed.

1. Trial ⇐375

In action to compel zoning administrator to consider and pass upon petitioners' application to drill an oil well on their leasehold, where trial judge viewed area in question and all surrounding areas, conditions he observed and knowledge he gained constituted independent evidence which he had a right to consider in determining issues involved.

2. Municipal corporations ⇐121

Where at time petitioners acquired their oil and gas lease in area, area was restricted to one oil well in a block, but ordinance restricting oil wells was held invalid as applied to area, petitioners were not prevented from asserting their constitutional rights against a subsequent ordinance restricting oil wells to two in a block.

3. Municipal corporations ⇐600

Where for years one oil well was permitted to an acre in entire oil field, and hundreds of wells were drilled upon that basis, an ordinance restricting a small outlying part of field to two wells in a block, which was more than one per acre, was unduly oppressive and not reasonably necessary to promote general welfare of community, since it deprived owners of property of their right, coequal with rights of other persons in oil field, to recover their fair share of oil from common source of supply.

D. A. Boone, Long Beach, for respondents.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal by defendant from a judgment rendered in a proceeding seeking a writ of mandate commanding defendant, as zoning administrator of Los Angeles, to consider and pass upon petitioners' application to drill an oil well on their leasehold.

Petitioners, as lessees, are the owners of an oil lease covering several contiguous parcels comprising more than an acre in a city block of an area of 4.74 acres in what is referred to in the record as the "restricted area" of the Wilmington Oil Field.

The block, referred to as District 19, is located north of and adjacent to Highway 101 and near the west boundary of the field. Petitioners have the exclusive right to drill, and are obligated to drill, one well. District 19 is only partially improved. The west half is zoned for commercial uses. There are several business establishments, including a filling station, a restaurant and a garage. The remainder is largely unimproved. The southerly part along Highway 101 is zoned for commercial uses. The easterly half is improved with small residences. The block has fewer residences than most of the blocks to the south. Two oil wells have been drilled in District 19 and are now producing.

Under the initial general comprehensive zoning ordinance covering Wilmington Oil Field, adopted November 12, 1936, one well to an acre was permitted. In April, 1944, the city block here involved was designated as an oil drilling district. (Ord. 88,392) The block was later designated as District 19. In September, 1945, drilling in District 19 and certain other districts north of Highway 101 was restricted to one well in a city block. (Ord. 89,616) A block had previously been defined, so far as pertinent, as "that property entirely surrounded by public streets." At that time one well had been drilled in District 19. Bernstein v. Smutz, 83 Cal.App.2d 108, 188 P.2d 48, was an attack on the validity of Ordinance 89,616. We held that, under the facts there alleged, Bernstein was entitled to a trial on the question of its validity as applied to District 19. After the trial a writ of mandate issued and the administrator authorized a second well in District 19, which was drilled but not on petitioners' leasehold. On November 19, 1948, Ordinance 94,136 was adopted, providing "that not more than two (2) wells may be drilled in each city block" in District 19 and some other districts north of Highway 101.

The Wilmington Oil Field is in the city of Los Angeles. It is sometimes referred to as the city of Wilmington. It comprises an area about 4⅕ miles from east to west and 3⅖ miles from north to south. The field extends throughout the city of Wilmington from the southeasterly boundary in a northwesterly direction to the extreme northwest section. The entire field overlies one oil pool. There is no obstruction to the free flow of oil from north to south throughout the field. Highway 101—Pacific Coast Highway—running in a general easterly-westerly direction, intersects the field about three miles from its south boundary. The discovery well was drilled in 1936 near the southeast boundary. The field is a low pressure one and there have been no serious fires or explosions occasioned by oil wells. Torrance Oil Field is immediately to the west of the Wilmington field.

Following discovery of oil, the Council of Los Angeles, by numerous ordinances pursuant to a general scheme and program of zoning, created oil districts through the industrial area, business section and residential section of Wilmington up to Highway 101. In all of these districts drilling for and production of oil was permitted on the basis of one well to an acre. Variances were liberally granted. The business section of Wilmington is a substantial one, and wells have been permitted on the basis of one well to an acre throughout that section in close proximity to various types of buildings, including hotels, banks and mercantile establishments. The residential area to the northwest, between the business section and Highway 101, is densely populated with many well-kept homes, schools and churches. Wells have been permitted, drilled, and are now producing throughout that area on the basis of one well to an acre. In a great majority of the city blocks there are three or more wells to a block, many of them in close proximity to residences, schools and churches.

The part of the field north of Highway 101 is referred to in the record as the "restricted area." This area comprises an extremely small section of the city of Wilmington. It is partially zoned for oil drilling, commercial and residential uses. The residences in this area are more modest and in many instances evidence less care than those to the south in which drilling has been permitted on the basis of one well to an acre.

A few blocks north of District 19, in county territory adjacent to the restricted area, there are producing wells, a tank farm and an oil refinery which are in operation. Immediately to the north of District 19 there are producing wells. Immediately to the west and adjacent to District 19 wells are producing on the basis of one well to an acre. Immediately to the south across highway 101 wells are producing on the basis of several wells to one block, one of said blocks being within 400 feet of District 19. Immediately to the east, in District 36, wells are permitted on the basis of one well to an acre, and in two other blocks on the basis of more than two wells to the block. There is no difference in the character of District 36 and the two other blocks and that of District 19. Within six months prior to the judgment, additional wells were drilled and producing immediately adjacent to District 19. The property surrounding District 19 is largely industrial in character. There are no noticeable odors or noises from wells drilled north of Highway 101. The areas of the blocks in the small restricted area vary from 1.52 to 16.16 acres. In many of the blocks south of Highway 101 in which wells have been drilled on the basis of one well to an acre the business and residential areas are of far greater value, more densely populated, and contain far more improvements than District 19.

The oil in the Wilmington field flows readily. There is drainage of oil from under petitioners' property by reason of wells in close proximity to District 19. There is drainage from north to south between the area north of Highway 101 and immediately east of Wilmington Boulevard and the area south of Highway 101 and east of Wilmington Boulevard. This movement has been occurring since the wells immediately south of Highway 101 were drilled. The fact that there are three or four wells in a block south of Highway 101 causes a reduction of the pressure in that area and a movement of the oil several blocks to the north to that area. There have not been sufficient wells drilled north of Highway 101 to prevent drainage. Drainage will continue to the south from north of Highway 101 until the number of wells both north and south of that highway has been equalized. Drainage from under petitioners' property will continue until all recoverable oil has been drained therefrom or until such time as petitioners are permitted to drill a well upon their property and recover their share of the oil. Each day the drainage continues and petitioners are prohibited from recovering oil under their lease, they are suffering a loss of several hundred dollars. Over a period of time the commercial part of the oil under petitioners' lease will migrate to the various wells and the low pressure area to the south. There was evidence that the ultimate recovery that might be had from a well drilled at the present time on petitioners' lease is about 90,000 barrels of 19 gravity oil in ten years.

The Municipal Code of Los Angeles makes provision for masking any unsightly condition that might exist by reason of producing wells and tanks. Pumping units and storage tanks must be submerged.

On December 1, 1948, petitioners applied to the zoning administrator for determination of the conditions and methods of operation for drilling of and production from an oil well on their leasehold in District 19. On December 14, 1948, the administrator notified petitioners that their petition was rejected because of Ordinance 94,136 and because more than two wells in the block was contrary to the policy of the zoning administrator. Petitioners appealed to the Board of Zoning Appeals. The appeal was dismissed.

The court found that:

No reasonable ground exists for limiting the small area north of Highway 101 "to two wells per block and permitting unlimited drilling in all other portions of the city, as long as there is one acre to each well drilled."

The "drilling of a third well on petitioners' property * * * would create less interference and less hazard to public health, safety and welfare than wells to the south and east through the heart of the city of Wilmington, permitted on the basis of one well to an acre."

Ordinance 94,136 permits the creation of conditions contrary to its alleged purpose of safety and aesthetic considerations in that it allows the erection of four derricks and the drilling of four wells from the surface of each of two blocks which are adjacent to a high school in the area north of Highway 101.

The ordinance "does not afford equal rights to all, but restricts or enlarges rights according to the area of each particular block which in turn affects drainage and income, according to the area of each particular block."

Ordinance 94,136 deprives petitioners of rights coequal with the rights of adjacent owners and lessees to recover their fair share of oil from the common source of supply and deprives them "of valuable property rights without any corresponding benefit to the public health, safety, morals and welfare, and infringes upon constitutional guaranties." The ordinance, applied to District 19, is discriminatory, arbitrary and confiscatory as against petitioners' rights "and that of their lessors," without any gain to the public generally; does not apply uniformly to all property and property owners in the restricted area; creates a monopoly; and does not give petitioners equal protection of the law.

The ordinance is not required or necessary under the police power of Los Angeles and has no reasonable relation to the ends for which the police power exists to protect the public health, safety, morals and welfare.

The court adjudged that the Municipal Code of Los Angeles, as amended by Ordinance 94,136, and any rule, regulation or policy of the zoning administrator, insofar as they prevent petitioners from drilling a well on their leasehold, are unconstitutional. The judgment directed that a writ of mandate issue, commanding the zoning administrator to consider and pass upon petitioners' application to drill a well, and directing him to permit them to drill a well, without considering or applying such unconstitutional provisions, and to forthwith determine and prescribe conditions under which they may drill for and produce oil on their property.

[1] The trial judge, on stipulation of the parties, viewed District 19 and all of the surrounding areas. The conditions he observed and the knowledge he gained constitute independent evidence which he had a right to consider in determining the issues involved. Wheeler v. Gregg, 90 Cal.App.2d 348, 366, 203 P.2d 37; Rowland v. City of Pomona, 82 Cal.App.2d 622, 624, 625, 186 P.2d 447; Mitchell v. City of Santa Barbara, 48 Cal.App.2d 568, 573, 120 P.2d 131. Some of the knowledge gained and the conditions observed by the trial judge and other pertinent comments were stated by him at the close of the case. He said in part:

"The block immediately across the street to the south from our block is not restricted. The other blocks along Pacific Coast Highway and to the south thereof are not restricted. There are three wells operating within the block located about four hundred feet to the west of our block. There are three wells operating in each of the next four blocks immediately to the west [east] thereof. * * * Three or four wells in most of the blocks immediately south of the first tier of blocks south of Pacific Coast Highway. * * *

"The two-well per block restriction area is probably less than one per cent of the total area of Wilmington City which is devoted to the production of oil. * * *

"* * * the acreage, net acreage, of our block, District 19, is larger than twenty-eight of the others and smaller than only six of the others. So, it is true, * * * that insofar as acreage is concerned the ordinance does not attempt to give equal rights to all, but restricts such rights or enlarges them according to the area of each particular block. * * *

"It is hard for the Court to understand where there is any reasonable ground for limiting a small portion of a city to two-wells per block and permitting unlimited drilling in all other parts of the city, as long as there is one acre to each well drilled. The character of the neighborhood and surrounding houses gives less reason therefor than exists in many of the blocks to the south of Pacific Coast Highway.

"The number of houses in the block, that is, our block, gives no reason therefor, since they are fewer than in many of the blocks, if not in most of the blocks, to the southeast thereof. * * *"

The parties stipulated to the following persuasive facts: leases throughout the field call for not less than one well per acre; property owners and lessees in the area have received, and are now receiving, a share of the oil produced from three or more wells in some blocks and in many cases four wells; the field is a low pressure field and there have never been any serious fires or explosions occasioned by oil wells.

Bernstein v. Bush, 29 Cal.2d 773, 177 P. 2d 913, had to do with spacing regulations in the Wilmington Oil Field. Public Resources Code, secs. 3600-3607. The petitioners, owners of noncontiguous lots of less than an acre each, entered into a community lease with the petitioner Bernstein. The petitioners contended the spacing regulations were discriminatory and therefore unconstitutional. The court, in part, said, 29 Cal.2d at page 778, 177 P.2d at page 916:

"They assert that such discrimination results from the fact that the enforcement of the regulations permits some owners of lands overlying the oil basin to exercise and enjoy their property right to take oil from the field, while the petitioners, who are property owners overlying the same oil supply, are deprived of the use and enjoyment of their coequal right. The mere assertion of the problem suggests the answer.

"Under the law of this state the landowner has a property right in oil and gas beneath the surface, not in the nature of an absolute title to the oil and gas in place, but as an exclusive right to drill upon his property for these substances. His unqualified and absolute title attaches after the substances have been reduced to possession. Tanner v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 20 Cal.2d 814, 819, 129 P.2d 383; Bandini Petroleum Co. v. Superior Court, supra, 110 Cal.App. 123, 127, 293 P. 899. This is a right which is 'as much entitled to protection as the property itself, and an undue restriction on the use thereof is as much a taking "for constitutional purposes as appropriating or destroying it."' People v. Associated Oil Co., supra, 211 Cal. [93] at pages 99-100, 294 P. [717] at page 721, and cases cited.

"In Ohio Oil Co. v. State of Indiana, 177 U.S. 190, at page 209, 20 S.Ct. 576, 44 L.Ed. 729, involving an oil and gas conservation measure, the Supreme Court said that all (not some) of the surface proprietors within an oil and gas field have the right to reduce to possession the oil and gas beneath the surface, and that they could not be absolutely deprived of that right without a taking of private property. The court went on to consider the owners' coequal right to take from the common source of supply, observing that one owner should not be permitted to convert an undue proportion of the supply to the detriment of others; hence that from the peculiar nature of the property right, the legislative power might be exerted in the protection of all the collective owners by securing a just distribution among them. Thus the Supreme Court held that a statute designed to protect life and property or prevent waste, or both, must apply without discriminating against the coequal rights of the property owners; also that a police regulation otherwise reasonable which was designed to secure to each a just distribution from the common source of the supply of oil and gas, took proper cognizance of the property owners' rights. See, also, Gulf Land Co. v. Atlantic Refining Co., 134 Tex. 59, 131 S.W.2d 73. In the latter case it was said that the denial to one surface owner of his fair chance to recover in kind the oil and gas beneath the surface, or its equivalent, would be a confiscation of his property.

"In Railroad Commission v. Magnolia Petroleum Co., (Court of Civil Appeals of Texas) 169 S.W.2d 253, the test of confiscation was said to be the denial to one of the property owners of the equal opportunity with adjoining leaseholders to develop and realize the benefits from his leasehold; and it was concluded that confiscation resulted from the commission's ruling which had not accorded to the Magnolia company an equal opportunity with the surrounding lessees to recover its fair share of the recoverable oil lying beneath the surface. To the same effect and with a similar result is Marrs v. Railroad Commission, 142 Tex. 293, 177 S.W.2d 941. * * *

"In the absence of statutory prohibition, the right to drill an offset well was commonly resorted to as a means of protection by an owner whose property was being drained by a well drilled on adjoining land. The wasteful use of offset wells was recognized as one of the evils sought to be minimized by the enactment of well spacing regulations. Croxton v. State, 186 Okl. 249, 97 P.2d 11, 19; Brown v. Humble Oil & Refining Co., 126 Tex. 296, 83 S.W.2d 935, 87 S.W.2d 1069, 99 A.L.R. 1107, 101 A.L.R. 1393. But since the mere opportunity for voluntary pooling of interests does not afford equal protection within the meaning of the federal and state Constitutions, regulatory provisions which in effect prohibit the drilling of offset wells may amount to a denial of the equal protection of the law and a taking of private property without due process of law. Equal protection is so denied where, as here, the law, in its application at least, does not afford adequate means of protection as a substitute for the right to drill an offset well."

In Wilkins v. City of San Bernardino, 29 Cal.2d 332, 175 P.2d 542, it was said that among the cases in which zoning ordinances have been held invalid were 1) cases where the ordinance attempts to exclude and prohibit existing and established uses or businesses that are not nuisances, and 2) cases where the restrictions create a monopoly. The ordinance in the present case does both. For many years one well to an acre was permitted in the entire field. Hundreds of wells were drilled on that basis. A small outlying part of the field from which oil migrates to these many wells was then restricted to one well in a block. After we held in Bernstein v. Smutz, supra, 83 Cal.App.2d 108, 188 P.2d 48 (Dec. 1947) that, under the facts alleged, this restriction infringed upon constitutional guaranties, and after the facts alleged were proven on trial, Ordinance 94,136 was adopted to permit the drilling of two wells in a block in the small—less than 1%—part of the field which for a short period had been restricted to one well in a block. This ordinance did not eliminate the unconstitutional features of the classification. Hundreds of wells still exist, one to an acre, in most blocks in the field. These and other wells are draining oil from below petitioners' property. The ordinance attempts to exclude and prohibit an existing use which is not a nuisance and grants a monopoly to owners and lessees in which there are, or in the future may be, more than two wells in a block.

Appellant says that a city block is a proper unit of land measure for zoning the small restricted area north of Highway 101 and that therefore the ordinance is not unreasonable. If, under the comprehensive zoning scheme originally adopted, the restriction had been one well in each block instead of one well in each acre, and if the blocks were all the same or nearly the same size, and if each owner were afforded the right coequal with the rights of other owners and lessees to recover his fair share of the oil from the common source of supply, the argument might have some force. Upon this record it has none.

Appellant argues that "the issues presented in the case at bar are far different from those involved in Bernstein v. Smutz, supra, 83 Cal.App.2d 108, 188 P.2d 48." The facts alleged in the Bernstein case differ from those in the case at bar only in this: In Bernstein, the ordinance limited drilling to one well in a block in a small part of the field; in the present case, the ordinance limits drilling to two wells in a block in the same small part of the field. All that we said in Bernstein, upon the assumption that the facts pleaded were true, applies with equal force here.

[2] It is argued that because petitioners acquired their lease after District 19 had been restricted to one well in a block, their contentions cannot be sustained. Petitioners acquired their lease about March 5, 1947. At that time District 19 was restricted to one well by Ordinance 89,616, which was subsequently held invalid as applied to that district. Appellant relies on Gulf Land Co. v. Atlantic Refining Co., 134 Tex. 59, 131 S.W.2d 73, in which it was held that under a rule of the Railroad Commission, subdivisions of land as such which came into existence after an oil well spacing rule became effective, are not protected against confiscation. The case relied on is not analogous. In that case after a spacing rule had been adopted, a 6.88-acre tract was subdivided into six smaller tracts, one of which was the 2.35-acre tract involved in the lawsuit. A well was drilled on each of the six tracts. The owners of the 2.35-acre tract sought to drill a second well thereon. The spacing rule prohibited the drilling of the second well. Notwithstanding, the Commission granted a permit to drill a second well to prevent confiscation of property. The court held that the Commission was not warranted in granting the permit as, under the spacing rule, any right the 2.35-acre tract had must be relegated to the rights of the 6.88-acre tract because, under the evidence, when the 6.88-acre tract was considered as a unit no well was needed to prevent confiscation. In the course of the opinion it was said that the Commission could not indulge in unreasonable discrimination between different tracts of land in the same field. See also Marrs v. Railroad Commission, 142 Tex. 293, 177 S.W.2d 941, 949. We have an entirely different situation here. When the block in question—District 19—is considered as a whole, at least another well is needed thereon to prevent discrimination and confiscation. The rule noted in the Gulf Land Company case does not obtain where, as here, the well is warranted as a protection to vested rights when applied to the entire tract as it existed before the subdivision. Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. Lasseter, Tex.Civ.App., 120 S.W.2d 541, 542 (error dismissed). Further, the ordinance is discriminatory as to petitioners' lessors. Since Ordinance 89,616 was invalid as applied to District 19, it cannot serve as an obstacle to the assertion by petitioners of their constitutional right.

Cases cited by appellant upholding, as constitutional, statutory regulations having to do with the location and spacing of wells, are not in point and need not be reviewed. In those cases the regulations provided equal treatment of the rights of the surface owners in the common source of supply, or contained provisions looking to the prevention of hardship upon owners in particular cases. The ordinance in the present case does not do either.

[3] Under the facts, the ordinance in question does not "afford adequate means of protection as a substitute for the right to drill an offset well." It deprives petitioners of their right, coequal with the right of other owners and lessees in the Wilmington Oil Field, to recover their fair share of the oil from the common source of supply and, consequently, infringes upon the constitutional guaranties invoked. There is no equality of production. Considering the physical facts appearing in the record, the reasonableness of the ordinance is not fairly debatable nor do the facts show a case where there may be a difference of opinion on the subject. It is clear that the exercise of legislative power has exceeded constitutional limitations. The facts are such as to require this court to conclude, as a matter of law, that the ordinance is unduly oppressive and not reasonably necessary to promote the general welfare of the community.

The case is one "related to regulations prohibiting the recovery of natural resources from the earth. Such a business must operate, if at all, where the resources are found. Considerations which justify an exercise of the police power that necessarily results in putting a business out of existence are different from those which justify regulations that do not prevent the operation of the business but merely restrict its location. Moreover, the Smith [In re Smith, 143 Cal. 368, 77 P. 180] and Palisades [Pacific Palisades Ass'n v. Huntington Beach, 196 Cal. 211, 237 P. 538, 40 A.L.R. 782] cases are based in part upon the fact that the ordinances in question were enacted under the guise of regulation and segregation but were in fact to insure monopolies to similar enterprise in unrestricted districts. See In re Ellis, 11 Cal. 2d 571, 575, 81 P.2d 911." Lockard v. City of Los Angeles, 33 Cal.2d 453, 467, 202 P.2d 38, 46, 7 A.L.R.2d 990.

MAXWELL v. BROUGHER et al.
Civ. 17635.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Oct. 16, 1950.

Hearing Denied Dec. 14, 1950.

Action by Edgar Maxwell, for himself, and others against J. Whitcomb Brougher, Jr., and others, for judgment directing the manner in which the officers, boards and congregation of church should proceed in matter of hearing and disposing of charges made against the pastor of the church. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Arnold Praeger, J., sustained defendant's demurrer to the amended complaint without leave to amend and judgment was entered for defendants, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Wilson, J., held that civil courts would not interfere with congregation's decision absolving pastor.

Affirmed.

1. Religious societies ⇐12(2)

2. Religious societies ⇐12(5), 14

3. Religious societies ⇐12(5)

4. Religious societies ⇐27(3)

Civil courts would not interfere with congregation's decision absolving pastor against whom charges had been made.

5. Religious societies ⇐25

In action against congregation of church, member of church was not entitled to accounting of church property and fellowship fund for the prospective allocation thereof between expected two factions.

6. Religious societies ⇐23(3)

Where members of a church of congregational character separate from organization, the members who remain constitute the church and retain its rights and property.

7. Religious societies ⇐27(3)

In action by member of church against congregation involving removal of pastor for alleged misconduct, where member alleged that he acted on behalf of entire congregation, but throughout amended complaint he referred to division of sentiment, one faction sustaining pastor, other seeking his removal, member averred such a conflict of interest that there could be no virtual representation by himself for entire congregation.

8. Parties ⇐11

Interests of party, who represents members of class in suit, and the represented parties must be so identical that the motive and inducement to protect and preserve may be assumed to be the same in each.

9. Declaratory judgment ⇐61

To enable Superior Court or District Court of Appeal to award a declaratory judgment there must be an actual controversy relating to legal right and duties of respective parties. Code Civ.Proc. § 1060.

In action by church member against congregation for declaratory judgment, allegation that position of congregation were unknown was not allegation of a controversy, since it did not appear that congregation's position was in opposition to that of member. Code Civ.Proc. § 1060.

WILSON, Justice.

The question presented by this appeal is whether a court of law has jurisdiction to interfere with the internal disciplinary matters of a religious corporation and to enter and enforce a judgment directing the manner in which the officers, boards and congregation of such a corporation shall proceed in the matter of hearing and disposing of charges made against the pastor of the church.

Fortunately such controversies as the one involved in this action are few and it is to be regretted that the matter now before the court, as well as all schisms in religious organizations, could not have been terminated by the order of the ecclesiastical tribunals that are provided for that purpose without resort to the civil courts.

The amended complaint alleges that charges were presented to the pastor of the church in March, 1945, accusing him of having engaged in a course of conduct which, if the charges had been true, would be sufficient grounds for his removal as pastor; upon his refusal to resign the same charges were, in June, 1945, presented to the officers of the church with the request that the same be laid before the congregation; the pastor and the deacon board, in violation of the constitution, customs, regulations and discipline of the Baptist Church, failed to disclose the nature of the charges to the congregation but instead, on June 20, 1945, presented to the congregation a vote of confidence with the statement that the rumored charges against the pastor were untrue; the majority of the members present rejected the motion and voted in favor of hearing the evidence but a vote of confidence was declared to have been carried in favor of quashing the presentation of such accusations. The pleading contains allegations of other irregularities in the proceedings, various efforts of plaintiff to have the charges heard, and his failure to accomplish his desire.

Sprinkled through the complaint are allegations with reference to a "Fellowship Fund" in which plaintiff and all members of the church are alleged to have a financial and beneficial interest, together with statements concerning the alleged misuse of the funds. Such charges are not separately stated from those of alleged misconduct of the minister.

The second cause of action purports to be for declaratory relief. It is alleged that an actual controversy has arisen with respect to plaintiff's rights and those of the members of the congregation of the church but it is further alleged that "the attitude and position of the defendants named in this action are not known," followed by other averments with reference to the acts and conduct of the pastor and to the Fellowship Fund and buildings and property belonging to the church corporation.

Defendants' demurrer to the amended complaint having been sustained without leave to amend judgment was entered that plaintiff take nothing by his action, from which he has appealed.

[1, 2] Ecclesiastical decisions are not reviewable by the secular courts. The church here in question is an independent, democratic, strictly congregational organization governed solely within itself, owing no allegiance to a higher power or jurisdiction. Such an organization may create tribunals for the decision of controversies with reference to its internal affairs and for the ecclesiastical government within the association of its individual members and officers. Where the subject matter of a dispute is purely ecclesiastical in its character, a matter which concerns church discipline or the conformity of its members to the standard of morals required of them, the decision of the church tribunal will not be interfered with by the secular courts either by reviewing their acts or by directing them to proceed in a certain manner or, in fact, to proceed at all. If the civil courts undertook so to do they would deprive such bodies of their right of construing their own church laws including doctrinal theology and the uses and customs of every religious denomination. Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 679, 724, 80 U.S. 679, 724 ff., 20 L.Ed. 666.

[3] The rule adopted by the Supreme Court of this state is that the decrees of an ecclesiastical body are binding not only upon the church as such body but are binding and conclusive upon the civil courts whenever pertinent and material to pending litigation. Wheelock v. First Presbyterian Church, 119 Cal. 477, 482, 51 P. 841; Permanent Committee, etc. v. Pacific Synod, 157 Cal. 105, 128, 106 P. 395. In Blount v. Sixteenth St. Baptist Church, 206 Ala. 423, 90 So. 602, cited by plaintiff, the court declares the democratic character of the Baptist Church and quotes from Nance v. Busby, 91 Tenn. 303, 18 S.W. 874, 15 L.R.A. 801, that discipline is administered by the body of the congregation; a majority of members voting when the church sits in conference determines the result of any motion or resolution disciplining a member; it is a pure democracy with the power of excommunication reposing in the majority of the members voting at any conference. Persons who are voluntary members of the organization submit themselves to the absolute power of a majority and tacitly agree to abide by and submit to such judgments.

[4] From the foregoing it is manifest that the civil courts will not interfere with the decision of the congregation insofar as the charges against the pastor of the church or any other theological or disciplinary matter is concerned.

[5, 6] The allegations with reference to the Fellowship Fund are so interspersed with those relating to the accusations against the pastor that it is difficult to separate them from one another. It is gleaned from the pleading and from the prayer that plaintiff seeks an accounting of the fund and in the event the pastor is permitted to retain his pulpit plaintiff and those having a common interest with him may have allocated to them a fair and equitable division of the property of the church. The authorities do not sustain plaintiff's position. Where members of a church of congregational character, such as the church here involved, separate from the organization the members who remain constitute the church and retain its rights and property. Dyer v. Superior Court, 94 Cal.App. 260, 270, 271 P. 113; Bomar v. Mount Olive, etc. Church, 92 Cal.App. 618, 623 ff., 268 P. 665; Watson v. Jones, supra, 13 Wall. at page 725.

[7, 8] Plaintiff alleges in his pleading that he is acting in behalf of the entire religious association by reason of the fact that he and the whole membership have a common and personal interest in the matters and things which are the subject of the action. Notwithstanding his assertion that he is acting on behalf of the entire congregation, throughout the amended complaint he refers to a division of sentiment, one faction sustaining the pastor, the other seeking his removal. He avers such a conflict of interest that there can be no virtual representation by himself for the entire congregation since the interests of the representative and the represented must "be so identical that the motive and inducement to protect and preserve may be assumed to be the same in each." County of Los Angeles v. Winans, 13 Cal.App. 234, 249, 109 P. 640, 647.

[9, 10] Disposition may be readily made of the second cause of action. To enable the court to award a declaratory relief judgment there must be an "actual controversy relating to the legal rights and duties of the respective parties, * * *." Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1060. Obviously there cannot be a controversy unless one party actually opposes the position taken by the other. If there be no controversy there is nothing to be determined by the court. Plaintiff's allegation that the position of defendants is unknown is not an allegation of a controversy since it does not appear that defendants' position is in opposition to that of plaintiff.

Cr. 4496.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Oct. 17, 1950.

Juanita Rumley was convicted in the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, William M. Byrne, J., of the unlawful possession of marijuana and from the judgment of conviction and order denying her motion for new trial, she appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that the evidence was sufficient to establish that defendant had possession of marijuana found in her coat pocket and hence sustained conviction.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Poisons ⇐4

Marijuana is a "narcotic" within meaning of statute prohibiting possession of any narcotic except upon written prescription. Health and Safety Code, §§ 11001(h), 11500.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Narcotic".

2. Poisons ⇐4

Knowledge of the presence of a narcotic as being under one's physical control is the essence of offense of unlawful possession of a narcotic. Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

3. Criminal law ⇐1159(5)

Whether one accused of unlawful possession of narcotics had knowledge of the presence of the narcotic in his clothing, sleeping apartment or automobile is a question for trial court and its finding, when supported by substantial evidence, will not be reversed. Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

4. Poisons ⇐4

"Possession" is established within meaning of statute forbidding the possession of narcotics, when it is shown that accused had physical control of narcotics with intent to exercise such control, or having had such physical control, had not abandoned it, and that no other person had such possession. Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Possession"

5. Poisons ⇐9

Evidence that defendant attempted to deceive arresting officer as to location of her abode was sufficient to establish that she had possession of marijuana found in pocket of her coat hanging in closet of apartment which she and her intended husband had rented under assumed names less than a week before and which they were occupying. Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

6. Criminal law ⇐351(10)

False statements made for the purpose of misleading an officer or warding off suspicion are indicative of a consciousness of guilt.

7. Criminal law ⇐351(7)

Where defendant's possession of marijuana had been established in prosecution for unlawful possession thereof, her refusal to identify it constituted substantial proof that she knew of the narcotic qualities of the cigarettes found in her possession and that their possession was forbidden by law. Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

8. Poisons ⇐4

The mere possession of marijuana subjects the possessor to the penalties prescribed by statute, and neither intent nor knowledge that it was marijuana is an element of the offense. Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

9. Poisons ⇐9

In prosecution for unlawful possession of marijuana, jury was justified in believing testimony of officers that defendant had admitted ownership of coat in the pocket of which marijuana was found and rejecting defendant's testimony at trial that coat was the property of another. Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

10. Criminal law ⇐406(1)

The admissions of a defendant against interest are competent proof upon his trial for a crime.

11. Criminal law ⇐1159(2, 4)

The credibility of witnesses or the truth or falsity of facts put in evidence are matters for the jury and, when fairly determined, such determination will not be disturbed on appeal.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Donald D. Stoker, Deputy Attorney General, for respondents.

Joseph T. Forno, Los Angeles, for appellant.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Appellant was convicted of the crime of having in her possession cannabis sativa, the flowering tops and leaves of Indian Hemp, commonly known as marijuana. She was convicted by a jury and the court denied her motion for a new trial. She appeals from the judgment and from the order denying her motion for a new trial on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict.

On November 25, 1949, appellant rented a "bachelor" apartment in a building on Rampart boulevard. She was accompanied by a man who represented himself to be her husband. They introduced themselves as Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Moore. This event occurred on the day of their marriage at Tijuana and they occupied the apartment on the following day. They were arrested at 11:30 o'clock in the evening of December 1 by police officer Eggenweiler in downtown Los Angeles. She informed the officer that she resided at a hotel on south Union avenue. Having failed to find appellant to be an occupant at that address, the officer took a key and a rent receipt from her purse which indicated she was a tenant of the Rampart building. Though she discussed the rent receipt, she withheld information as to whether she resided at the latter address. Accompanied by agent Sweeney of the United States Secret Service and officer Hooper of the Los Angeles police department, Eggenweiler proceeded to the Rampart building about one o'clock on the morning of December 2 and with the aid of the manager of the building gained entrance into the apartment. There they found in addition to the normal furniture for such a place divers garments, each of which was searched by the officer. In the left outside pocket of a red coat hanging in the closet he found a sack containing a green leafy substance, six cigarettes, cigarette papers and a partially burned cigarette. He thereupon exhibited the contents of the sack to agent Sweeney, and later in the day produced both coat and sack in a conference with appellant. In answer to his inquiry she promptly answered that the coat was hers, but when asked about the brown sack taken from its pocket she declined to answer "until I see my attorney." Eggenweiler sealed the sack and contents in a manila envelope and preserved them as evidence. The forensic chemist subjected them to an analysis and found them to contain five grams of marijuana. There was lipstick on the partially burned cigarette.

Appellant's only defense was that she and her husband held "open house" in their apartment after they returned from Tijuana and that the red coat had been left by a departed guest.

[1] Section 11500[1] of the Health and Safety Code forbids the possession of any narcotic except upon the written prescription of a person licensed to prescribe it. Marijuana is included among narcotics. Health and Safety Code, section 11001(h).

[2] Appellant contends that there is no evidence that she knowingly possessed the narcotic, citing People v. Gory, 28 Cal.2d 450, 170 P.2d 433; People v. Martin, 76 Cal.App.2d 317, 172 P.2d 910; People v. Bledsoe, 75 Cal.App.2d 862, 171 P.2d 950. However, in the Gory case it was pointed out that there is a distinction between knowledge of the character of the object and the illegality of possession thereof on the one hand, and knowledge of the presence of the forbidden object as embraced within the concept of physical control with the attempt to exercise such control on the other. The latter is the possession denounced by the statute. Knowledge of the presence of a narcotic as being under one's physical control is the essence of the offense.

1. "Except as otherwise provided in this division, no person shall possess, transport, sell, furnish, administer or give away, or offer to transport, sell, furnish, administer, or give away, or attempt to transport a narcotic except upon the written prescription of a physician, dentist, chiropodist, or veterinarian licensed to practice in this State."

[3, 4] In order to justify a conviction the jury must be convinced that the party accused of having a narcotic in his possession on his premises or within reach of his habitation must have no more than knowledge of the presence of such narcotic and that such knowledge is the essence of the crime of possession. People v. Gory, supra, 28 Cal.2d page 455, 170 P.2d 436. The issue as to whether an accused had knowledge of the presence of the narcotic in his clothing, sleeping apartment or automobile, is one for the determination of the trial court and its findings when supported by substantial evidence will not be reversed. People v. Casas, 77 Cal.App.2d 255, 257, 175 P.2d 19. Possession of a narcotic as in the case of any other personal property is established when it is shown that the person accused had physical control thereof with intent to exercise such control, or having had such physical control, has not abandoned it and no other person has that possession. People v. Bassett, 68 Cal.App.2d 241, 247, 156 P.2d 457; Rest. Torts, sec. 216.

[5, 6] That appellant had possession of the narcotic is established by the foregoing principles and by the evidence received against her. Within one week after appellant and her intended husband rented the apartment under assumed names and while they were occupying it as their home she attempted to deceive the arresting officer as to the location of her abode. Although she discussed with him the rent receipt which he found in her purse she offered no excuse for her previous statements about her address except to explain that she had lived at the Union avenue address before her marriage and her family had not been informed of such marriage. It was an inference fairly drawn by the jury that her false statements were made in order to hinder the officers from finding her narcotics. False statements made for the purpose of misleading an officer or warding off suspicion are indicative of a consciousness of guilt. People v. Anderson, 90 Cal. App.2d 326, 333, 202 P.2d 1044.

[7, 8] When the officer presented her with the red coat she admitted that it was hers but declined to answer anything concerning the brown sack and its contents. She did not deny knowledge of such items. From her refusal to answer concerning them it was a fair inference that she knew of their incriminating nature. Possession of the marijuana by appellant having been established, her refusal to identify it constitutes substantial proof that she knew of the narcotic qualities of the cigarettes and that their possession is forbidden by law. People v. Physioc, 86 Cal.App.2d 650, 652, 195 P.2d 23; People v. Carlton, 83 Cal.App.2d 475, 477, 189 P.2d 299. Presence of marijuana in appellant's coat pocket found in the closet of her home was sufficient evidence of its possession and control and justifies the inference that she had knowledge that it was there. People v. Hoff, 84 Cal.App.2d 398, 400, 190 P.2d 616. Neither intent nor knowledge that it was marijuana is an element of the offense. The statute provides that the mere possession of marijuana shall subject the possessor to the penalties prescribed. People v. Sweeney, 66 Cal.App. 2d 855, 859, 153 P.2d 371.

[9, 10] Appellant after admitting ownership of the red coat to the officer attempted to repudiate such admission and to establish that the red coat was the property of another. The jury justifiably did not believe her testimony but chose to believe her admission as given in evidence by officers Eggenweiler and Sweeney. The admissions of a defendant against interest are competent proof upon his trial for a crime. People v. Lindsey, 90 Cal.App.2d 558, 565, 203 P.2d 572; People v. Mason, 65 Cal.App.2d 5, 10, 149 P.2d 742.

[11] Appellant attempts to make capital of discrepancies in the testimony of the witness Eggenweiler and of the fact that the evidence against her is the uncorroborated testimony of police officers. Such arguments are classic and conventional. Courts have too repeatedly explained that the determination of the credibility of witnesses and the truth or falsity of facts put in evidence are matters for the jury to resolve and when fairly determined will not be upset on appeal. People v. Campbell, 80 Cal.App.2d 798, 800, 182 P.2d 626; People v. Yankee, 79 Cal.App.2d 431, 435, 179 P.2d 582.

Judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

NIELSEN v. MILLIGAN.

Civ. 17585.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Oct. 19, 1950.

Action by Laura R. Nielsen against F. L. Milligan, M. D. for damages arising because of defendant's alleged malpractice in the treating of plaintiff. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, James H. Pope, J., entered judgment in favor of plaintiff and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J., held that evidence sustained finding of trial court that physician was negligent in failing to take adequate steps to check infection when it first developed upon plaintiff.

Affirmed.

1. Negligence ⇐119(4)

Where general allegations of negligence are followed by an enumeration of specific acts, plaintiff will not be limited to proof of specific acts unless complaint clearly indicates intention of pleader to limit negligence to such acts.

2. Physicians and surgeons ⇐18(5)

In malpractice action, where plaintiff alleged negligence of physician in general terms and followed with an enumeration of specific acts of negligence, plaintiff was not limited to proof of specific acts alone, but was entitled to prove physician's lack of skill and his failure to accord proper care while he was administering to plaintiff.

3. Appeal and error ⇐1011(1)

Where evidence with respect to specific acts of negligence are conflicting, trial court's findings thereon are conclusive upon District Court of Appeal.

4. Physicians and surgeons ⇐18(8)

In malpractice action, evidence sustained finding of trial court that physician was negligent in failing to take adequate steps to check infection when it first developed.

5. Appeal and error ⇐1004(1), 1013

On appeal, decision of trial court and jury on subject of damages cannot be set aside unless verdict is so plainly and outrageously excessive as to suggest at first blush, passion or prejudice or corruption on part of jury.

6. Physicians and surgeons ⇐18(11)

$2,500 general damages to a woman injured by a physician's malpractice for loss of work for 4½ months, discomfort, anxiety, pain and suffering, and for a scarred and misshapen leg was not excessive.

Delvy T. Walton, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Keslar, Woodward & Weissman, James T. Woodward, Los Angeles, for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

Because plaintiff was overweight, she consulted defendant, a physician and surgeon, specializing in the treatment of obesity. He explained his treatment: special capsules to be taken three times a day, and injections in either the arm or buttock of aqua solution of the pituitary gland. Defendant gave plaintiff her first injection on

July 18, 1947, to wit: "I took the syringe with the needle attached from the sterilizer and then I sterilized the top of the 10 centimeter vial containing the solution of pituitary, pushed the needle through the rubber diaphragm, withdrew half a centimeter, sterilized the area on the buttock where the injection was to be given, gave the injection and then sterilized the area of the buttock again after the needle was withdrawn."

On Friday, July 25th, defendant gave plaintiff a week's supply of capsules and a second injection of the pituitary solution, proceeding "precisely the same as the first time she came."

As to this second treatment, plaintiff testified, however, that defendant picked up the needle from the table on which it was lying right beside the sterilizer and that he did not sterilize the punctured area on her hip after the injection. She further stated that after a few hours she had a burning sensation in her leg and discovered a red area as large as a cup surrounding the needle point of the injection. This was about four inches below the buttock. She tried without success to reach defendant by telephone that night and also the next day, Saturday, when a large water blister formed over an enlarged area. On Monday, she talked to defendant on the telephone regarding the condition of her leg, and was instructed by him to apply a solution of boric acid and to bathe the affected area in epsom salts. Defendant repeated this instruction on the following Wednesday and asked plaintiff to come to his office on Friday, August 1st.

By that time, plaintiff was walking with difficulty and took a taxi to defendant's office. He then examined her and found "an area of redness, approximately 3 centimeters across", in the general area of the injection of July 25th; that he "used the sterile needle with the syringe attached to test to see if there was any exacerbation there. There was none. That syringe came out dry." He then put on a borated gauze bandage and told plaintiff "if that bothered her any to put on an epsom salt compress and to keep in touch with me so I could give her adequate care." At this time he stated to plaintiff that he had experienced difficulty with three other patients who had suffered reaction as result of injections "from this vial" which contained the pituitary serum.

Thereafter, plaintiff's condition became progressively worse, and on August 4th, she consulted Dr. Milan S. Moore, who examined her and found that "she had an infection in the right hip"; that it showed redness, swelling and inflammation; that a cut more than half an inch deep and an inch and a half across was required to evacuate the pus; that it was a subsurface infection about one and one-half inches deep. Dr. Moore testified that he saw and treated plaintiff on August 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 13, 15, 19, 21 and 22; and that thereafter under his directions she took care of herself at home.

Dr. George J. Chais, a licensed physician and surgeon, duly qualified as an expert witness. In answer to a hypothetical question based upon the facts in evidence, he gave as his opinion that the defendant did not use the skill and care used by the average physician practicing in the community.

To the question: "Doctor, assuming that Dr. X, on the 25th day of July, 1947, made an injection of one-half cubic centimeter of the aqueous extract of the whole pituitary gland, in the right upper thigh of the patient, do you have an opinion as to whether Dr. X used the skill and care that the average surgeon and physician practicing in the vicinity of Los Angeles would have used? * * * The position being approximately 3½ to 4 inches below the buttock on the outer right thigh, which would place it approximately in this locality, Doctor, as testified to by the patient"—the witness answered: "That is not the accepted place to give an injection in the thigh. * * * That is considered too low for an injection into a gluteus."

The amended complaint alleged in substance that on July 25, 1947, defendant negligently and unskillfully treated and cared for plaintiff, "in that, among other things", he injected a defective serum into her right leg, using a needle that was not sterile, and thereby failed to use the skill and care that an average physician practicing in the community would have used; all of which resulted in serious injury and damage to the plaintiff.

The trial court found that defendant equipped his office "with nothing other than" a sterilizer, hypodermic needles, a bottle of pituitary extract, a bottle of alcohol, and gauze sponges; that he employed in the role of a nurse, an unskilled "office girl" whose services he used to assist in the treatment of plaintiff. Further, that subsequent to the treatment administered on July 25, 1947, "a deep and serious infection set in and spread rapidly and extensively over the thigh of the said plaintiff until it reached the condition where the plaintiff became incapacitated * * * that the patient, the plaintiff in this action, returned to defendant physician and exposed her condition to him, and that he took no adequate or competent steps, nor did he use the knowledge, skill and care used by physicians practicing the same profession in this community, but that he instructed her to apply simple remedies herself, which remedies were not competent to cure a serious infection; and * * * that defendant * * * had no means in his office, and took no steps to obtain means to stop the infection."

The court also found that the pituitary solution was regularly used and supplied by a reputable pharmaceutical house; that defendant physician properly sterilized his needle and did not expose the same to contamination by placing it on the metal table. But that defendant "did not use the ordinary knowledge, skill and care, nor did he provide himself with the reasonable means, to attend to and treat any unusual or extraordinary result that might follow the ordinary course of practice in the medical profession, nor did he, in the treatment of the plaintiff, use the knowledge, skill, and care established by physicians in this community. The Court finds that the injuries, both special and general, sustained by the plaintiff were proximately caused by the failure on the part of defendant to use the knowledge, skill, and care of physicians practicing in this community."

Based on such findings, the court gave judgment in favor of plaintiff and denied defendant's motion for a new trial. Defendant appeals from such judgment.

It is here urged that the judgment is wholly unsupported by the evidence when considering (1) the charges of negligence as alleged in the amended complaint, and (2) the specific findings of the trial court thereon in favor of appellant. In other words, appellant states that the question for consideration is therefore "whether there is any substantial evidence in the record to support the finding of lack of skill on the part of defendant physician and surgeon, in view of the specific finding that the serum was regularly used and supplied by a pharmaceutical house, not a party to the action, and was skillfully administered to the plaintiff by the use of a sterile needle."

Quoting from the amended complaint, to which no demurrer was interposed, negligence of appellant was alleged as follows: "That on or about the 25th day of July, 1947, * * * the defendants proceeded to treat plaintiff, but defendants and each of them negligently, carelessly, recklessly and unskillfully treated and cared for plaintiff, in that, among other things, * * * defendants * * * injected a defective serum into the right leg of plaintiff and also used a needle which was not sterile in the making of said injection and * * * did thereby fail to use and exercise that degree of knowledge, skill, care and diligence in treating and caring for plaintiff that an average physician and surgeon practicing in the vicinity of the City of Los Angeles would have used; and that as a direct and proximate result thereof the plaintiff suffered serious injuries and damages as hereinafter alleged."

It is clear that this allegation points not only to negligence in the treatment administered by appellant using defective serum and a needle that was not sterile, but also to the negligent care accorded respondent during the course of treatments.

[1] As stated in Jackson v. Hardy, 70 Cal.App.2d 6, 13, 160 P.2d 161, 165, quoting from Olcese v. Hardy, 40 Cal.App. 323, 331,

180 P. 666: " 'Where general allegations of negligence are followed by an enumeration of specific acts, the plaintiff will not be limited to proof of specific acts unless the complaint clearly indicates the intention of the pleader to limit the negligence to such acts.' "

In Rannard v. Lockheed Aircraft Corp., 26 Cal.2d 149, 155, 157 P.2d 1, 4, action for malpractice, the court stated: "The absence of care in doing an act which produces injury to another, is actionable. The term 'negligence' signifies and stands for the absence of care. * * * The same rule permitting the pleading of negligence in general terms has been applied in malpractice cases. Dunn v. Dufficy, 194 Cal. 383, 228 P. 1029; Ragin v. Zimmerman, 206 Cal. 723, 276 P. 107; McGehee v. Schiffman, 4 Cal.App. 50, 87 P. 290. That in such instances, in addition to general allegations of negligence, the complaint may include a recital of certain related particulars does not deflect from the force of the general rule that 'it is sufficient in cases of this class to plead that the thing done was negligently done.' "

[2] The pleading here alleges negligence in general terms and the fact that there follows an enumeration of specific acts, i. e., the use of defective serum and a needle that was not sterile, does not alter the character of such allegation. Both of these specific acts may properly be classed as evidentiary facts, provable under the allegation of general negligence. See Jackson v. Hardy, supra. On the other hand, respondent is not limited to proof of the specific acts alone, but under her allegation of negligence generally, she is entitled to prove appellant's lack of skill and his failure to accord proper care while he was administering the treatments.

[3, 4] The evidence with respect to the specific acts of negligence was conflicting. The trial court's findings thereon are conclusive upon this court. Nevertheless, the record discloses substantial evidence in support of the findings of appellant's negligence in failing to take adequate steps to check the infection when it first developed. Such findings amply support the judgment in respondent's favor.

Appellant claims that certain questions asked of him by the trial judge constituted prejudicial misconduct. Appellant was questioned with respect to the size and arrangement of the rooms of his office suite, articles of furniture and medical equipment contained therein. There appears to be no merit in this point. An examination of that part of the record objected to bears out opposing counsel's comment in the reply brief: "anyone at all acquainted with the trial Judge's methods knows that he is patient, kindly, deliberate, never hasty or intemperate, and cases tried before him proceed in the highest type of judicial atmosphere. Nowhere in his questioning can there be found any evidence of an inquisitorial attitude."

It is further urged that the award of $2,500 general damage is excessive. The record discloses that respondent was unable to work following the injection of July 25, 1947, for a period of at least four and one-half months. During this period she was subjected to discomfort, anxiety, pain and suffering. Her leg is scarred and misshapen.

[5, 6] As has been many times stated, "Upon appeal, the decision of the trial court and jury on the subject (of damages) cannot be set aside unless the verdict is 'so plainly and outrageously excessive as to suggest, at the first blush, passion or prejudice or corruption on the part of the jury.' (citation of cases.)" McNulty v. Southern Pacific Co., 96 Cal.App.2d 841, 846, 216 P.2d 534, 538. There is nothing in the record before us which suggests either prejudice or corruption on the part of the trial court in making the award here complained of.

For the reasons stated, the judgment is affirmed.

WHITE v. TOWERS.
Civ. 17767.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Oct. 16, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 30, 1950.

Hearing Granted Dec. 14, 1950.*

Action by Claude White against Charles Towers, for malicious prosecution. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Arnold Praeger, J., entered an order sustaining defendant's demurrer to complaint without leave to amend, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Wilson, J., held that investigator who brought two charges against plaintiff for violation of state fish and game law was immune from civil liability for alleged malicious prosecution.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and error ⇐717

While opinion of trial judge is part of record on appeal, it is not a decision of case, but merely states reasons for decision, and only question to be determined by reviewing court is whether trial court reached proper legal conclusion. Rules on Appeal, rule 5(a, b).

2. Appeal and error ⇐717

On appeal, where plaintiff assigned as error several holdings made by trial judge in his written opinion stating reasons for sustaining of demurrer, the Supreme Court would consider whether court was correct in sustaining demurrer and would not consider statements contained in opinion. Rules on Appeal, rule 5(a, b).

3. Officers ⇐114

It is policy of law that where officer is acting within scope of his duties he should not be subjected to harassment of civil litigation or be liable for civil damages because of a mistake of fact occurring in exercise of his judgment or discretion, or because of an erroneous construction and application of law.

4. Malicious prosecution ⇐42

Where investigator of Fish and Game Commission charged plaintiff with pollution of waters in violation of law in municipal court, and subsequently charged plaintiff in federal court with similar offense, and both charges were dismissed, investigator was acting in course of performance of his delegated duty, and investigator was immune from civil liability for alleged malicious prosecution. Fish and Game Code, §§ 10, 13, 20, 21, 481; 33 U.S.C.A. § 407; Const. art. 4, § 25½.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Bayard Rhone, Norman Sokolow, Deputy Attorneys General, for respondent.

WILSON, Justice.

This is an action for malicious prosecution. Plaintiff has appealed from the judgment following an order sustaining defendant's demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend.

[1, 2] Plaintiff assigns as error several "holdings" made by the trial judge in his written opinion ordering the sustaining of the demurrer. While the opinion is a part of the record on appeal, Rules 5(a) and 5 (b), Rules on Appeal, 22 Cal.2d 4, it is not a decision of the case but merely states the reasons for the decision. The only question to be determined by the reviewing court is whether the trial court reached the proper legal conclusion. We therefore shall consider whether the court was correct in sustaining the demurrer and not the statements contained in the opinion to which plaintiff has taken exception.

It is alleged in the complaint that on October 5, 1948, defendant filed in the Municipal Court of Long Beach a complaint charging plaintiff with a violation of section 481 of the Fish and Game Code of California in that he deposited into the waters of the state of California certain petroleum, deleterious to fish and plant life; plaintiff was tried on October 28, 1948, and the charge was dismissed; about April 29, 1949, defendant swore to an affiadavit which was filed in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California alleging that plaintiff discharged into the navigable waters of the United States approximately 4,000 barrels of petroleum oil in violation of section 407 of Title 33 U.S.C.A.; on July 19, 1949, plaintiff was tried and discharged and the information was dismissed.

The complaint contains the usual allegations in such a case—the institution of criminal proceedings against plaintiff, final determination in his favor, malice and want of probable cause. In addition there is attached to the complaint as an exhibit a copy of defendant's affidavit filed in the United States District Court which resulted in plaintiff's prosecution in that court. In such affidavit it is set forth that defendant was an investigator employed by the California Division of Fish and Game when he filed the affidavit and put in motion plaintiff's arrest and prosecution.

Defendant maintains that by reason of his official position he is immune from civil liability for damages while plaintiff contends that defendant's position as investigator did not place him sufficiently high in the official scale to entitle him to immunity. The pollution of waters along the shores of the state is a matter of concern to the Fish and Game Commission. It is one of the duties of the commission to see that such waters are not defiled by the introduction therein of any substance deleterious to fish and plant life. It is the duty of the commission to prosecute under state or federal statute, or both, whenever a violation comes to its notice or is observed by any of its employees. One of the obligations of an investigator employed by the commission is to make observation and inquiry as to whether the littoral waters have been polluted by the discharge therein of any forbidden materials. Upon the ascertainment of facts warranting a prosecution for such pollution it is his legal duty to apprehend the person responsible for the offense, to assemble evidence upon which prosecution of the perpetrator of the unlawful act may be brought to justice, and to initiate proceedings in the proper court therefor.

The division of Fish and Game in the Department of Natural Resources is administered through the Fish and Game Commission provided for by section 25½ of article IV of the Constitution. Fish and Game Code, secs. 10 and 13. Without merit is plaintiff's contention that section 21 of that code, which provides that "all deputies" are public officers and have the power and authority of peace officers, excludes defendant from immunity for civil damages, because he was not a deputy. Section 20 authorizes the commission to employ such deputies, clerks, assistants "and other employees" as they may need to discharge the duties imposed by law upon the commission. Defendant as one of the "other employees" was acting on behalf of the commission when he filed the criminal complaints against plaintiff for the enforcement of the provisions of the law.

Even though defendant was not a deputy immunity was extended to him since as an investigator he was a public servant acting in his official capacity and within the scope of his jurisdiction and exercising judgment and discretion in the discharge of his duties. White v. Brinkman, 23 Cal. App.2d 307, 317, 73 P.2d 254; Norton v. Hoffmann, 34 Cal.App.2d 189, 199-200, 93 P.2d 250. Plaintiff relies on Prentice v. Bertken, 50 Cal.App.2d 344, 123 P.2d 96, in which the court referred to the immunity granted to certain public officers and stated, 50 Cal.App.2d at page 350, 123 P.2d at page 99, that public policy did not require the doctrine of immunity to be extended to a peace officer. That declaration is dictum since on the following page the court held that in any event the complaint did not state sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action for the reason that it did not clearly appear that the prosecution had been terminated. Since the termination of the prosecution is a necessary element in an action for malicious prosecution the failure so to allege would be fatal to the complaint without regard to the official position occupied by the defendant.

[3, 4] It is the policy of the law that where an officer is acting within the scope of his duties as defined by law he should not be subjected to the harassment of civil litigation or be liable for civil damages because of a mistake of fact occurring in the exercise of his judgment or discretion, or because of an erroneous construction and application of the law. Cooper v. O'Connor, 99 F.2d 135, 138, 69 App.D.C., 100, 118 A.L.R. 1440, and cases cited. As stated in the Cooper case, 99 F.2d at page 142, to hold that only the members of the Fish and Game Commission should be immune would defeat the purpose of the law. The administrative duties of the commission necessarily require that some of such duties shall be delegated to its employees, hence when the act of the employee occurs in the course of the performance of his delegated duty it is the official action of the commission and the same immunity extends to the employee as would be enjoyed by the members of the commission.

PEOPLE v. COLLETTA.
Cr. 4487.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.
Oct. 17, 1950.

Sam Colletta was convicted in Superior Court, Los Angeles County, W. Turney Fox, J., for burglary in the second degree and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McComb, J., held that the evidence was sufficient, although it was entirely circumstantial, to justify the trial court's conclusion, that defendant broke into the hardware store, and to sustain conviction.

Affirmed.

1. Burglary ⇐41(1)

Evidence was sufficient, although entirely circumstantial, to justify trial court's conclusion that defendant broke into hardware store, and to sustain conviction for burglary in second degree.

2. Criminal law ⇐938(1)

Where defendant in burglary prosecution alleged that he had made diligent but unsuccessful attempt to locate two witnesses prior to his trial, but there was no showing that he made any effort to produce them at trial nor that he made attempt to obtain their depositions and testimony of three other witnesses would have been merely cumulative, trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for new trial.

3. Criminal law ⇐945(1), 1156(3)

Determination of question whether newly discovered evidence which is cumulative evidence is of such a nature as to have produced different result if it had been presented on trial, rests largely in sound discretion of trial court, whose determination will not be disturbed on appeal in absence of showing of abuse of discretion.

From a judgment of guilty of burglary in the second degree after trial before the court without a jury, defendant appeals.[1] There is also an appeal from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Questions

First: Was the evidence sufficient to sustain the judgment of guilty?

This question must be answered in the affirmative. The evidence disclosed that Felix B. Seay was the owner of a hardware store located at 7522 Sunset Boulevard, Los Angeles. On July 30, 1949 (Saturday) at approximately 5:30 p.m. he left his store which was locked. Mr. Seay did not go to his store on Sunday. Mr. Fraser, who operated a bakery next to Mr. Seay's store, on Monday, August 1, 1949, at about 3:45 a.m. heard hammering sounds emanating from the hardware store, whereupon he summoned the police. When Officer Donovan arrived at the store at approximately 4:00 a.m. on the morning of August 1st, he found that other police officers had arrived before him; that the back door to the store was open and the glass in the back window broken. The combination had been knocked off the safe and a hydraulic automobile jack was lying near the safe.

At about 4:45 a.m., Officer Donovan was driving on Hobart near its intersection with Sunset Boulevard when defendant was seen leaving a taxicab. The officer asked defendant where he had taken the taxicab, to which defendant replied "on Sunset Boulevard" near a big drive-in. Defendant was then asked why his hands were all dirty. He replied that he had been out with a friend of his named "Johnny" and Johnny's girl friend, that his hands had become dirty when he had changed a flat tire.

He was then taken back to Sunset Boulevard and asked to point out where he had entered the taxicab. Defendant indicated a place described as Simon's Drive-in on Sunset Boulevard near Ivar.

Defendant was then taken to the Hollywood Cab Company where a cab driver named Ocha stated that he had picked defendant up on the southwest corner of Fountain and LaBrea streets and had received a dollar from him. Defendant agreed that he had given the cab driver a dollar.

Fountain and LaBrea is about two blocks south and two or three blocks west of the hardware store, and there is no drive-in restaurant at that corner.

The officer also asked defendant where his car was, to which defendant stated that he had loaned his Buick to a friend named Ralph Fire at about 11:00 p.m. the previous evening so that Fire could go to the races at Del Mar, and that he expected his car would be gone for a day or two. In defendant's pocket were found three keys, one of which appeared to be an automobile key. Defendant was asked if he had a hydraulic jack in his car, to which he replied "No". Defendant stated that he had a bumper jack.

The police then accompanied defendant to his motel room at the Hollywood Star Motel on Sunset Boulevard where they met defendant's wife. In their room was a double bed and a single bed. In the single bed a man was asleep. The officer asked defendant who the man was and was told he was Johnny Tisano. Upon being awakened the man was asked his name and he stated he was Ralph Fire. Defendant and Mr. Fire were taken to the City Hall and en route Mr. Fire was asked if he had been driving defendant's car, to which he replied in the negative. He said he had been with defendant until about 12:30 a.m. that night at which time they had separated.

After leaving defendant at the City Hall, Officer Donovan and his partner returned to the hardware store and about 75 yards west thereof located defendant's Buick. The back end of the car had a trunk compartment, the handle of which was turned to the side, and in this compartment the officers found a tubular metal hydraulic jack handle. There was no other jack in the car and the only tool pertaining to a jack was this handle. The key which Officer Donovan had taken from defendant's pocket was used to unlock the ignition of the Buick.

Defendant was asked how he had received two or three fresh cuts on the high part of his left hand between the thumb and index finger. He replied that he had been cut while helping his friend change a tire about a half hour prior to the time he had been taken into custody.

At the hardware store the officer had seen a hatchet which appeared to have blood on it lying on the floor in front of the safe. At the City Hall defendant had been asked to stand on a newspaper. The cuffs of his trousers had been turned down and pieces of grey or greyish blue putty had fallen out. When asked if he knew what it was, defendant said "Yes. It is a piece of putty." He said he had done some work in New Mexico and that the putty had been in his pants cuffs ever since. Later defendant was taken to the rear window of the hardware store where there were found about a dozen pieces of putty. Such putty was placed in an envelope and delivered together with the putty taken from defendant's trousers cuff to a police chemist who testified that the putty found in defendant's cuff and at the hardware store were the same or of similar coloring. He did not state that the putty itself was the same in both cases.

The chemist also testified that the jack found in the store had an original or basic color of blue or bluish green, while the handle found in defendant's car was of a basic color of black, and that he had found black paint on the jack itself, particularly on the area which would receive or retain the handle, and that he had found blue paint on the jack handle. He testified that the blue paint which was on the jack handle could have come from the jack, though he could not definitely state that the blue was from the jack. Likewise the chemist stated that he could see the stain on the hatchet handle which had been found, though there was not a sufficient sample to ascertain whether it was human blood.

Defendant denied having entered the hardware store, stated that he had been at a restaurant known as Leon and Freddie's located on the Sunset Strip until about midnight when he had taken his wife to the Hollywood Star Motel and then had rejoined his friends at Leon and Freddie's. He said that he had loaned his car to Fire who was going to Del Mar. He also said that there were two Fires, one of whom was a jockey, and that he had met both Fires in Leon and Freddie's that night.

[1] From the foregoing evidence which was entirely circumstantial, the trial court was justified in reaching the conclusion that defendant was the culprit who broke into the hardware store. In a prosecution for burglary the evidence on which a defendant is convicted may be purely circumstantial and if substantial, as in the present case, is sufficient to support the judgment of guilty. (People v. Flynn, 73 Cal. 511, 512 et seq., 15 p. 102; People v. Warner, 25 Cal.App. 751, 754, 145 p. 545; People v. Roeder, 41 Cal.App.2d 495, 499, 107 P.2d 92; People v. Fitch, 73 Cal.App.2d 825, 826 et seq., 167 P.2d 211; People v. Anderson, 37 Cal.App.2d 615, 619, 100 P. 2d 348.)

People v. Draper, 69 Cal.App.2d 781, 160 P.2d 80, relied on by defendant, is clearly distinguishable on its facts from the present case. In the cited case the only evidence against the defendant was the fact that several minutes after the door to the service station was observed to be open, he was seen standing beside a building 50 to 75 feet away. Very properly the court held that such evidence was insufficient to sustain a judgment of guilty.

Second: Did the trial court abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for a new trial?

[2, 3] This question must be answered in the negative. On a motion for a new trial defendant filed an affidavit alleging that he had made a diligent but unsuccessful attempt to locate Jack Nash and Ralph Fire prior to the time of his trial. However at the time of trial he testified that Jack Nash was in Chicago, and that Ralph Fire was in Illinois. Thus it appears he knew where they were located, but there is no showing that he had made any effort to produce either or both of them at the trial nor that he made an attempt to obtain their depositions. He also claimed in his affidavit that upon a retrial he could produce a Mr. Polino, a James Pizzo as well as a Mr. Harding who had observed his being searched by the police officers. The testimony of these last three witnesses would have been merely cumulative of testimony given at the time of trial. The rule is established that the determination of the question whether newly discovered evidence which is cumulative evidence is of such a nature as to have produced a different result if it had been presented on the trial, rests largely in the sound discretion of the trial court, whose determination will not be disturbed on appeal in the absence of a showing of an abuse of discretion. (People v. Blain, 46 Cal.App.2d 844, 847 et seq., 117 P.2d 27.)

In the present case there is not alone a failure to show that the trial court abused its discretion, but it appears from the record that its discretion was wisely exercised in the promotion of substantial justice.

The judgment and order are and each is affirmed.

KELLEY v. STATE BOARD OF SOCIAL WELFARE.

Civ. 17712.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Oct. 17, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 2, 1950.

Hearing Denied Dec. 14, 1950.

Charles G. Kelley brought proceedings against the State Board of Social Welfare, in the Superior Court, to review proceedings before the Board and to obtain an order directing the Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors to reimburse him in certain sums deducted from payments of old age assistance to him. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Clarence M. Hanson, J., gave judgment for defendant and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that a written agreement between husband and wife that wife's earnings are to be her property alone is not binding upon the Board of Public Welfare in determining amount of aid to be granted the husband.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Paupers ⇐43(2)

Facts that husband and wife made written agreement that wife's earnings were her separate estate, and that husband and wife lived separate and apart were not binding upon welfare board in determining amount of aid to be granted to husband, and aid to husband could be reduced during periods when wife worked.

2. Paupers ⇐43(2)

Spouses may by agreement convert community earnings into separate property as between themselves, but such agreements are not binding upon welfare board in proceedings for determining amount of aid to be awarded.

Charles G. Kelley, in pro. per.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Dan Kaufmann, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Appellant petitioned the superior court to review the proceedings which he had instituted before respondent board for the purpose of obtaining its order directing the Los Angeles county board of supervisors to reimburse him in certain sums deducted from their "short" payments of old age aid to appellant. While his petition contains a number of demands and although the court below "reviewed the entire proceedings" as required by sections 2182 and 2182.1 of the Welfare and Institutions Code yet at the time of oral argument appellant waived all his contentions for reversal except his claims that his relief should not be diminished on the hypothesis that he owns a community interest in his wife's earnings.

During the period for which his aid was reduced his wife was employed. He appealed to respondent on a number of occasions from the orders of the board of supervisors relative to his asserted rights to increased allowances. On each review the board considered his contention that his wife's earnings were her separate property. In each instance it was held that Mrs. Kelley's earnings belonged to the community. On a former occasion the superior court approved respondent's order and on appeal that judgment was affirmed by this court in Division Three. 82 Cal.App.2d 627, 186 P.2d 429, 431. In that decision the court considered the board's "finding that the spouse's income is community income" and held that a release signed by appellant relinquishing all rights to his wife's earnings was ineffective in view of the facts that the wife had applied her earnings to the needs of the community, and also she considered her earnings to be community property. After that decision, upon ap-pellant's petition to have reviewed the status of the wife's earnings, the matter was again in June, 1948, brought before respondent board. At that time the board considered a second agreement of appellant and his wife dated in January, 1948, which was after the decision by Division Three. By such agreement it was provided that her earnings would be her separate property. Respondent board decided that such agreement was impotent to effectuate appellant's wishes. In July, 1948, by amended petition, the identical point was presented by appellant's assertion that his wife's earnings had been her separate property for 25 years.

On this appeal, as in the court below, appellant bases his claim to additional aid upon the same grounds that they were urged on prior reviews and upon the same alleged contracts as heretofore presented. The complete file of the superior court in this proceeding is before the court on this appeal. After the "Return of Record" had been filed, appellant presented his brief in which he sets forth his contention as to why the action of respondent was erroneous. Again he has urged that the judgment should be reversed because of the uncontradicted proof that his wife's earnings are her separate property. Having waived all his points except his contention that his wife's earnings should not be considered in fixing the amount of aid to be paid him, an observation upon that subject will close this discussion.

The decision of Division Three of this court, supra, determined not only the constitutional validity of sections 2181[1] and 2184[2] of the Welfare and Institutions Code, but also determined the correctness of respondent's application of those statutes. Moreover, it properly held that under the showing made, Mrs. Kelley's earnings are community property. The proof supporting such finding was (1) her application of her earnings to community needs; (2) payment of her federal income tax on a community property basis; (3) her statement that she considered her earnings to be community property. Appellant's attempt to release by a writing his interest in the wife's earnings was wholly ineffectual.

[1, 2] Coming to the judgment now under review, the only additional fact presented to the board was that appellant had procured his wife to join him in a written agreement that her earnings are her separate estate. At the oral argument he attempted to reinforce the evidential value of such agreement by declaring that he "lives separate and away from" his wife. The board was not impressed by such attempts to circumvent the former decision nor is this court moved by appellant's arguments. There is no denying that spouses may by agreement convert community earnings into separate property so far as they are personally concerned but such agreements are not binding upon respondent in proceedings for determining the amount of aid to be awarded an applicant. It is a truism familiar to all literate men that a spouse takes

The act providing aid for the aged would be a mockery if a wife could live in her mansion in abundance, while scorning her husband in his chill penury or watching the state's beneficence mollify his wretchedness.

Appellant's motion for augmenting the record is granted. His motion "for one basic finding" is denied.

SKETCHLEY v. LIPKIN et al. (two cases).
Civ.17226.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Oct. 17, 1950.

As Modified Oct. 18, 1950.

Action by Harry J. Sketchley and Harry J. Sketchley, doing business under the fictitious firm name and style of Beverley & Hollywood Plumbing Company, against Sam P. Lipkin, the Underground Power Equipment Corporation of America, a corporation, and others to enjoin defendants from exercising any right over a certain machine invented by plaintiff or from keeping, using or alienating the novel features or parts thereof. Defendants filed a cross-complaint to recover an expenditure by them of money for labor and materials in fabricating a machine. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Vernon W. Hunt, J., entered a decree joining the defendants upon condition that plaintiff paid defendant Lipkin money invested by Lipkin in the construction of a machine, and both parties appealed. The District Court of Appeals, Moore, P. J., held that where plaintiff conceived and developed a device for cleaning sewers, and communicated his scientific knowledge to his son-in-law concerning machine solely by reason of his reliance upon son-in-law's promise to formulate in writing all of the terms of an oral contract to manufacture and promote machine, but son-in-law and other defendants refused to execute written agreement even though they had received from plaintiff the secret and scientific knowledge for the construction and manufacture of invention, plaintiff was entitled to a decree enjoining defendants from exercising any right over machine invented by plaintiff, free and clear of any condition that plaintiff pay son-in-law money invested by son-in-law in construction of machine.

Judgment affirmed as amended.

1. Appeal and error ⇐882(3)

In action to enjoin defendants from manufacture and sale of plaintiff's invention, where a joint venture between the plaintiff and defendants was not pleaded nor advanced at trial, defendants could not advance theory of joint venture for first time on appeal.

2. Injunction ⇐56

Where plaintiff conceived and developed a device for cleaning sewers, and in the confidence of his family circle communicated his scientific knowledge to his son-in-law concerning the inventions solely by reason of his reliance upon son-in-law's promise to formulate in writing all the terms of an oral contract for manufacture and promotion of invention, plaintiff was entitled to be protected in enjoyment of his invention by an injunction restraining son-in-law from divulging nature of invention.

3. Injunction ⇐56

The recipient of a secret process of manufacture imparted to him in confidence or to one who accepts it in consideration of an agreement to perform valuable covenants which the latter violates will be enjoined from using such secret process.

4. Injunction ⇐56

When a contractee has gained an intimate knowledge of an invention by virtue of an agreement to use it according to specified terms and thereafter repudiates agreement, contractor will be awarded injunctive relief to prevent use of such knowledge of his secret process or invention so gained from him by his contractee.

5. Appeal and error ⇐1009(1)

In action to enjoin defendants from exercising any rights over a certain machine invented by plaintiff, where trial court from substantial evidence found that plaintiff communicated his scientific knowledge to his son-in-law concerning invention solely by reason of his reliance upon son-in-law's promise to formulate in writing all the terms of an oral agreement to manufacture and promote invention, and that plaintiff was not guilty of any in equitable conduct, District Court of Appeals was without authority to modify finding.

6. Appeal and error ⇐994(3), 1011(1), 1012(1)

It is function of trial court not only to determine weight and credibility of evidence, but where there is a conflict in evidence trial court's finding is final.

7. Appeal and error ⇐717

Neither trial court's written opinion nor responsive remarks in course of trial are competent to impeach finding by showing that trial judge believed certain witnesses whose testimony was contrary to his decision.

8. Injunction ⇐34

Injunctive relief is available as matter of right to prevent invasion of one's property rights where he has complied with all procedural requirements.

9. Equity ⇐66
Injunction ⇐56

When inventor's right has been violated, injunctive relief will not be denied unless defendant brings forth some cause finding equity growing out of subject matter which would entitle him to a remedy against other party and where defendant has acted with full knowledge of an adverse claim, defendant has no equity to be protected therefrom and maxim that one who seeks equity must do equity is inapplicable.

10. Trusts ⇐30½(1)

Where plaintiff conceived and developed a device for cleaning sanitary sewers and communicated his scientific knowledge to his son-in-law concerning machine solely by reason of his reliance upon son-in-law's promise to formulate in writing all the terms of an oral agreement to manufacture and promote device, son-in-law became a trustee and as such was obligated to preserve for plaintiff all trades he could and scientific knowledge entrusted to him.

11. Equity ⇐62

Equity follows the law.

12. Equity ⇐62

Where the rights of plaintiff were determined by law, chancellor was without authority to grant what law denied.

13. Injunction ⇐56, 108

Where plaintiff conceived and developed a device for cleaning sewers, and communicated his scientific knowledge to his son-in-law concerning the machine solely by reason of his reliance upon son-in-law's promise to formulate in writing all the terms of their oral agreement to manufacture and promote machine, but son-in-law willfully ignored oral agreement and refused to execute a written agreement even though plaintiff had turned over trade secrets and scientific knowledge, plaintiff was entitled to an injunction restraining son-in-law from exercising any right over machine, free and clear of any condition that he reimburse son-in-law money invested by son-in-law in construction of machine.

14. Equity ⇐65(2)

Equity does not aid him who has breached his agreement.

15. Constitutional law ⇐278(1)

No court has the power to divest a person of property right in an invention or to choose a contractee to whom inventor must make an assignment of invention.

16. Injunction ⇐194

In action to enjoin defendants from exercising any right over a certain machine invented by plaintiff, where plaintiff did not ask for nor demand possession of machine or parts assembled by defendant, court had no authority to require plaintiff to accept them as condition of injunctive relief.

17. Injunction ⇐204

Where defendant in open court expressly waived any defense based upon claim that plaintiff's invention was in the public domain, an order enjoining defendants from making, selling or using a machine which had been fabricated by defendants by use of ideas and mechanical construction of machine invented by plaintiff was not too broad, especially where information concerning machine was disclosed originally in confidence.

Reynolds, Painter & Cherniss, by Louis Miller, Los Angeles, for plaintiff.

Harry G. Sadicoff, Los Angeles, for defendants.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Both parties have appealed from a decree enjoining defendants from exercising any right over a certain machine invented by plaintiff or from keeping, using or alienating the novel features or parts thereof on condition that plaintiff pay defendant Lipkin moneys assertedly invested by him in the construction of such machine.

For about 12 years preceding 1947, in connection with his plumbing business, plaintiff was engaged in inventing, constructing, and perfecting a machine for cleaning sewers and other subterranean conduits. While he had through the years discussed his device with his son-in-law, defendant Lipkin, it was not until 1947 that the latter became so interested in the device that he negotiated to acquire an interest. In July, 1947, they orally agreed that a corporation should be organized to own and exploit the invention; its stock to be divided on the basis of 51 per cent to Lipkin and 49 per cent to plaintiff; no dividends to be paid until plaintiff should be reimbursed in the sum of $25,000 for his expenses in developing the machine; both to receive salaries in the same amount; Lipkin to invest $25,000 and further to finance the corporation by the sale of its nonvoting shares to the extent of $250,000; Lipkin to handle sale and promotions, plaintiff to supervise construction and direct the use and operation of the machines fabricated by the corporation; exclusive rights to the exploitation of the machines in Washington, Oregon and California to be reserved by plaintiff—all such covenants and stipulations to be embodied in a writing by Lipkin's attorney.

A second meeting of the parties assembled in mid-August for the purpose of executing the contract. The attorney presented a writing he had prepared for the signatures of plaintiff and Lipkin. Plaintiff and his son promptly pointed out that the document contained no provisions for equality of salaries of Lipkin and plaintiff, for Lipkin's investment of $25,000 or for his financing the company in the sum of $250,000, for plaintiff's reservation of exclusive territorial rights, for the division of the stock between plaintiff and Lipkin on the basis of 49 and 51 per cent respectively. When plaintiff refused to sign the writing, Lipkin promised plaintiff that a new draft of the agreement would contain the omitted provisions. Thereupon the attorney caused plaintiff and his son "Bud" to execute a power of attorney as a necessary instrument to be used in effecting the proposed corporation. Pursuant thereto, the attorney caused to be organized in Nevada the Underground Power Equipment Corporation of America. While the "dummy" organizers authorized the issuance of the corporate shares to plaintiff and his son and to Lipkin and his two associates, Roberts and Mendes, no application was made to the corporation commissioner of California for a permit to issue securities. Without closing the negotiations for the written contract required, Lipkin occupied plaintiff's shop and offices and put Mendes to work in a machine shop supervising a new construction herein referred to as the "underground machine." As such work proceeded, plaintiff believed that Lipkin would cause to be produced a written contract with the terms and covenants already agreed upon. While so believing, he and his son imparted to Lipkin and Mendes their experiences in building models number 1 and 2, fully advised them concerning the mechanical problems to be encountered, gave them full information concerning the materials and equipment necessary to be assembled, and furnished them with plans, drawings and specifications used in building machine number 2. The underground machine was fabricated by use of the confidential and secret information supplied Lipkin by plaintiff while the latter was relying upon Lipkin to prepare and execute the contract embodying the covenants and terms orally agreed upon. Such machine is in no material respect different from plaintiff's number 2. Lipkin's promises to prepare the written contract were continuously made for the purpose of obtaining the blue prints, plans, descriptive matter and all available confidential information from plaintiff. While Lipkin had not in the first instance made such promise with no intention of performance, he subsequently developed such intent and at all times he knew that plaintiff supplied all such confidential information solely by reason of his belief in and reliance upon Lipkin's promises.

When plaintiff refused further to deal with Lipkin without the written contract, defendants appropriated to their own use all the information supplied them by plaintiff and manufactured one or more underground machines by the use of plaintiff's machines and drawings and the information imparted to Lipkin by plaintiff, and were about to build and sell other machines in competition with plaintiff.

Thereupon plaintiff instituted this action. Upon issue joined by a general denial and a special answer alleging (1) laches of plaintiff and (2) the expenditure by defendants of large sums of money for labor and materials in fabricating a machine, the controversy was submitted to arbitrament of the superior court. Following a trial the chancellor made findings of the facts above recited and further that (1) plaintiff cannot enjoin defendants' wrongful acts under the patent laws of the United States; (2) if they are not enjoined plaintiff will suffer irreparable injury, involving a multiplicity of actions; (3) "in good faith" the corporate defendant expended moneys and incurred indebtedness prior to November 1, 1947, in the aggregate sum of $29,532.24 "in connection with the fabrication of one or more of said machines through money supplied by defendant Sam P. Lipkin."

Upon such findings the court concluded and adjudged on December 17, 1948, that defendants are enjoined from making or transferring any machine embodying any of the ideas, principles and construction contained in or relating to the machine developed, constructed and perfected by plaintiff for cleaning sanitary sewers, drains and conduits, or from divulging to others any information obtained from plaintiff which might be necessary or useful in constructing or using such machine and ordered that immediately at the expiration of ten days after this judgment shall have become final, defendants shall surrender to plaintiffs any and all machines and equipment under control of defendants purchased or manufactured by them in connection with the fabrication of the machine which is the subject of this action.

"Upon the Condition that plaintiff shall on or prior to January 17, 1949, deposit with the clerk of the above entitled court for the use and benefit of the defendant Sam P. Lipkin and to be paid by the clerk of the above entitled court to said Sam P. Lipkin immediately at the expiration of ten days after this judgment shall have become final, the sum of $29,532.24.

"Otherwise judgment shall be and is that the plaintiff take nothing by his action * * *."

Both parties appealed: defendants from the entire judgment; plaintiffs from that portion which requires as a condition to the permanent injunction that plaintiff deposit with the clerk of the court for Lipkin's benefit at the expiration of ten days after the judgment has become final the sum of $29,532.24 and providing otherwise that plaintiff take nothing and defendants recover their costs.

Defendants' Contentions

Defendants now contend:

(1) The relation of Lipkin and plaintiff was a joint venture; it should be dissolved; each partner should be paid the amount of his contributions from the joint assets; if they are insufficient to pay such indebtedness, they should be prorated.

(2) The use of a corporation to carry out the joint venture does not rob the enterprise of its partnership character.

(3) The failure of the parties to agree upon the disposition of losses does not defeat the claim of joint venture; sharing of losses follows the sharing of profits.

(4) The very difficulty of determining the nature of the contract is an additional reason for finding it was a joint venture.

(5) Dissension is a sufficient cause for dissolution. Either party may require an accounting.

Defendants' Claims Without Merit

[1] Each and all of the contentions of defendants proceed upon the theory that they pleaded and proved a joint venture of plaintiff and Lipkin. Not only was no such theory pleaded but it was not advanced at the trial. Except for their allegation that Lipkin invested approximately $4,000 in the business and that plaintiff allowed defendants to continue to spend money to the extent of $16,000 in developing the machine there is nothing contained in the answers of defendants that was not substantially covered by their general denial. In as much as a litigant may not advance a theory for the first time on appeal, Martin v. Auerbach, 94 Cal.App.2d 222, 226, 210 P.2d 321; Engleman v. Malchow, 91 Cal.App.2d 341, 345, 205 P.2d 413; Adams v. Petroleum Midway Co., 205 Cal. 221, 225, 270 P. 668, the points advanced by defendants are of no avail. We therefore forego a discussion of the merits of their arguments in support of a joint venture relationship otherwise than to say that the findings are completely devoid of mention of a joint venture. Defendants' pleadings were prepared, and the action was tried, by counsel other than Mr. Sadicoff. Other observations with respect thereto will occur as incidental to the treatment of plaintiff's appeal.

Plaintiff Is Entitled To Complete Injunctive Relief

[2-4] Under the findings plaintiff is entitled to be protected in the enjoyment of his own invention. He conceived and developed the device for cleaning sanitary sewers. As a trade secret it was his property. In the confidence of the family circle he communicated his scientific knowledge to his son-in-law concerning the machine solely by reason of his reliance upon Lipkin's promise to formulate in writing all the terms of their oral agreement. The recipient of a secret process of manufacture imparted to him in confidence or to one who accepts it in consideration of an agreement to perform valuable covenants which the latter violates will be enjoined from using such secret process. Hollywood M. P. Equipment Co. v. Furer, 16 Cal.2d 184, 188, 105 P.2d 299; Holley v. Hunt, 13 Cal.App.2d 335, 336, 56 P.2d 1240; 43 C.J. S., Injunctions, § 148, p. 752. Thus by the cited authorities it is established that the owner of an unpatented device is by legal principles protected against the piracy of his invention because it is his own by virtue of being the original product of his mind. But the strong arm of equity reaches further. When a contractee has gained an intimate knowledge of such an invention by virtue of an agreement to use it according to specified terms and thereafter repudiates the agreement, the contractor will be awarded injunctive relief to prevent the use of such knowledge of his secret process or invention so gained from him by his contractee. Hollywood M. P. Equipment Co. v. Furer, supra.

In addition to plaintiff's ownership of the invention and his consequent right to an undisturbed enjoyment thereof, plaintiff's device and secret knowledge imparted in confidence to Lipkin were misappropriated. Despite this fact the judgment requires plaintiff to pay Lipkin over $29,000 as a condition to complete relief and defendants now demand that at least such condition be perpetuated if no additional advantage may be gained. Adding such condition is without authority. The agreement was definite that the terms agreed upon would be reduced to writing. Not only did defendants refuse to abide by such agreement but they attempted to defeat plaintiff of his rights. They pleaded and attempted to prove that plaintiff arbitrarily refused to perform the obligations of the oral contract; that it was he who made false statements and promises to induce Lipkin into the oral contract; that Lipkin was by such statements and promises persuaded to employ an attorney and to organize the corporation and that plaintiff permitted Lipkin to expend large sums of money in improving and constructing the machine; that although plaintiff stated that the contract was agreeable and that he was willing to sign it, he conceived a plan to secure for himself the expenditure by Lipkin of huge sums and to acquire for his own use and benefit the machine as improved and developed by defendants. While such allegations were found to be false and untrue they indicate defendants' purpose to deprive plaintiff of his valuable invention. Lipkin never reduced the oral contract to writing; neither did he ever confess his error or otherwise attempt to conciliate plaintiff.

[5-7] Defendants' arguments on the facts in their endeavor to induce this court to make different findings are without basis in law. On substantial evidence the court found the terms of the oral agreement and that plaintiff was guilty of no inequitable conduct. We are consequently powerless even to modify such findings. It is the function of the trial court not only to determine the weight and credibility of evidence, Taylor v. Humbird, 85 Cal.App.2d 40, 42, 191 P.2d 788, but where there is a conflict in the evidence the trial court's finding is final. Seidenberg v. George, 76 Cal.App.2d 306, 308, 172 P.2d 891. Also, they seek to impeach the findings by showing that the trial judge believed certain witnesses whose testimony was contrary to the decision. In this they follow a vain pursuit. Neither his written opinion nor his responsive remarks in the course of the trial are competent for such purpose. Buckhantz v. R. G. Hamilton & Co., 71 Cal.App.2d 777, 781, 163 P.2d 756; Stone v. Los Angeles County Flood Control District, 81 Cal.App.2d 902, 907, 185 P.2d 396.

The Conditional Basis For The Injunction

[8, 9] Turning now to the question of the condition attached to the decree for injunction against defendants' use of plaintiff's invention—defendants assume that the maxim "who seeks equity must do equity" applies to plaintiff. Upon such assumption they contend, and evidently the trial court misconceived, that as a condition to his being awarded injunctive relief against defendants, he should restore to them the moneys they had expended in constructing the underground machine. Such reasoning involves the erroneous notion that if a wrongdoer were apprehended in the act of stealing his neighbors herds after he had driven them 500 miles toward the market he would be liable for their restoration only on condition that the neighbor reimburse him for the amounts expended on the long journey. The answers to such contention instantly appear. It is definitely established that injunctive relief is available as a matter of right to prevent the invasion of one's property rights where he has complied with all procedural requirements. Meridian Ltd. v. City and County of San Francisco, 13 Cal.2d 424, 427, 90 P.2d 537, 91 P.2d 105; Felsenthal v. Warring, 40 Cal.App. 119, 129, 131, 180 P. 67; Richards v. Dower, 64 Cal. 62, 64, 28 P. 113; 43 C.J.S., Injunctions, § 14, p. 425. In making such contention defendants misconceive the status of an infringer. In seeking relief against one who repudiates his agreement and appropriates a novel invention the inventer is not required to sacrifice his own rights. A noble principle does not alter or remake a contract. It must be enforced according to its terms. Where the inventor's rights have been violated, relief will not be denied him "unless defendant brings forward some corresponding equity growing out of the subject matter then in suit, which would * * * entitle him to a remedy against the other party * * *. Where defendant acted with full knowledge of an adverse claim, he has no equity to be protected therefrom, and the maxim [who seeks equity must do equity] is inapplicable." 30 C.J.S., Equity, § 91, pages 466, 467; Nu-Grape Bottling Co. v. Comati, 6 Cir., 40 F. 2d 187, 189. Peculiarly applicable to defendants' contention are the holdings in Pacific Western Oil Co. v. Bern Oil Co., 13 Cal.2d 60, 72, 87 P.2d 1045, and City of Los Angeles v. Watterson, 8 Cal.App.2d 331, 48 P.2d 87. In the first, the plaintiff had acquired parcel A which over-lay an oil structure. Knowing that the petroleum pool did not extend to parcel B, the defendant fraudulently contracted for the right to occupy the surface thereof in order to accomplish a secret slant penetration of the pool beneath parcel A and the removal of the plaintiff's oil. It was held that such defendants were chargeable with the value of all the oil removed without any deduction for expense of recovery. In the Watterson case it was held that equity will not permit its rules to be made instruments of injustice. The city was not required to restore the sum of money paid upon the purchase of the bonds as a condition of cancelling defendant's fraudulent acquisition thereof. More appropriate to the facts here involved is the maxim "he that hath committed iniquity shall not have equity". See Goble v. O'Connor, 43 Neb. 49, 61 N.W. 131, 134.

[10] Not only should plaintiff's property rights be protected by injunction because they are his own but under the findings Lipkin became a trustee and as such was obligated to preserve for plaintiff all that had been entrusted to him. If he had expended moneys to defend the invention they would be recoverable but for sums disbursed by the trustee in his efforts to cheat plaintiff and gain ownership of the invention to the exclusion of plaintiff, he has no right to a judgment. The right to be reimbursed for expenses incurred in preserving trust property is intended for honest trustees. Recovery is limited to expenses of a trustee "properly incurred by him in the performance of his trust." Civ.Code, sec. 2273. No part of the $29,000 claimed was productive of actual benefit to plaintiff. The machine built by defendants was in all essential respects a replica of plaintiff's number 2. One who becomes an involuntary trustee through his own fault has no right to reimbursement as provided by the cited code section. The principle is illustrated in adjudicated cases. A disloyal attorney had in the course of his employment acquired certain tax titles on the plaintiff's property. He had not done so on her orders or for her benefit, but to gain for himself. He was a volunteer and acted secretly against his client and therefore became an involuntary trustee through his own fault. He was not entitled to reimbursement for his outlay as a condition to the decree quieting title against him. McArthur v. Goodwin, 173 Cal. 499, 504, 160 P. 679. The maxim is applicable to a trustee only when he has conducted the affairs of his trust honestly, dealt fairly and made no attempt to make a secret profit for himself. Kinert v. Wright, 81 Cal.App.2d 919, 927, 185 P.2d 364; East Tennessee & Western North Carolina Ry. Co. v. Robinson, 19 Tenn.App. 265, 86 S.W.2d 433, 439.

[11-13] Furthermore, defendants ignored the oral agreement Lipkin had made with plaintiff. By reason of their wilful breach of the contract upon which plaintiff relied in disclosing his secret processes and methods defendants are in no position to recover disbursements. Equity follows the law. The rights of plaintiff being determined by law, the chancellor was without authority to grant what the law denies. DeMattos v. McGovern, 25 Cal.App.2d 429, 432, 77 P.2d 522. Having wrongfully breached their contract they have no right to demand of equity that it grant their claims. Gavina v. Smith, 25 Cal.2d 501, 506, 154 P.2d 681; 10 Cal.Jur., p. 516.

[14] It was found not only that Lipkin represented that he would prepare a written agreement to include the terms specified but that his representations "were originally and continuously made for the purpose of obtaining from plaintiff the confidential information relating to said machine * * * that such confidential information * * * was obtained by said defendants with the knowledge of the fact that plaintiff would not have supplied such information to said defendants except under the belief and understanding by plaintiff that the oral understandings of the parties would be reduced to writing and executed by the parties." In the light of such finding there is no basis for an arbitrary requirement that plaintiff pay a huge sum of money as a condition for being protected by injunction in the enjoyment of his property. Dawson County Irrigation Co. v. Stuart, 142 Neb. 428, 6 N.W.2d 602. Having accepted the confidence reposed in him by plaintiff, Lipkin became a constructive trustee and was under obligation to refrain from abusing such confidence by obtaining an advantage to himself at the expense of plaintiff. Barron Estate Co. v. Woodruff Co., 163 Cal. 561, 576, 126 P. 351; Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 528, 17 P. 689. His violation of the oral promise to reduce the agreement to writing was a fraud against the plaintiff and from it a trust arose in favor of the latter. Therefore, his hands are unclean and he can take no advantage of his own wrong. Equity does not aid him who has breached his agreement.

Having convicted Lipkin of his fraud the trial judge substituted compassion for equity and made a decree that would exempt such defendant from any penalty whatsoever, and in addition thereto apparently allowed him liberal compensation for his time and for that of his associates. The amount of moneys awarded defendants is $16,632.24 in excess of the cost to plaintiff in constructing his number 2. Such a penalty as a prerequisite to the granting of an injunction against one who has voluntarily undertaken to do what he is not bound to do is wholly unauthorized. Voluntary payments cannot be recovered. McMillan v. O'Brien, 219 Cal. 775, 780, 29 P.2d 183; Leahy v. Warden, 163 Cal. 178, 181, 124 P. 825; Schwarz v. Hatch, 45 Cal.App.2d 510, 518, 519, 114 P.2d 677; Fatjo v. O'Connell, 41 Cal.App.2d 64, 69, 105 P.2d 1036. Especially is this true of one who is guilty of tortious acts. There is no intimation in the findings that plaintiff ever requested Lipkin to spend any money. On the contrary, when plaintiff rejected the writing presented to him as the written contract, Lipkin had then expended no more than $487.72. While he had placed orders for parts that required the payment of $962, such orders could have been cancelled. Despite his refusal to prepare the written contract, he proceeded to incur indebtedness. He knew then and at all subsequent dates that plaintiff would not sign the document as presented on August 15. He pursued his persistent course in building the new machine with the evident intention of appropriating the invention to his own use. Under no known principle is he entitled to recover the amount of his disbursements. Rotea v. Izuel, 14 Cal.2d 605, 610, 95 P.2d 927.

[15] The invention here involved is the property of plaintiff. He had the right to contract for the assignment thereof on terms of his own choosing and to persons of his own choice. No court has the power to divest him of that right or to choose a contractee for him. Rosenberg v. Lawrence, 10 Cal.2d 590, 594, 75 P.2d 1082; Sacramento Box and Lumber Co. v. Rosenberg Bros. & Co., 109 Cal.App. 56, 58, 292 P. 146; Bennett v. Northwestern National Insurance Co., 84 Cal.App. 130, 134, 257 P. 586.

[16] Inasmuch as plaintiff did not demand possession of machine or parts assembled by defendants, the court had no authority to require plaintiff to accept them as a condition of injunctive relief. Where a plaintiff does not ask for an award of specific personal property it is a gratuitous and meaningless act for the court to extend to him a real or supposed benefit that the litigant manifested no desire to obtain. Morrison v. Bowman, 29 Cal. 337, 354.

[17] Finally, the contention that the injunction is too broad is without support. No right of defendants is violated in enjoining them from making, selling or using a machine which has been fabricated by defendants by the use of the ideas and mechanical construction of a machine invented by plaintiff. Holley v. Hunt, 13 Cal.App.2d 335, 56 P.2d 1240. Especially is this true where the information concerning the machine was disclosed in confidence. Hollywood M. P. Co. v. Furer, 16 Cal.2d 184, 188, 105 P.2d 299. Moreover, defendants are in no position now to make such contention after having in open court expressly waived any defense based upon the claim that plaintiff's invention is in the public domain.

It is ordered that (1) the last two paragraphs of the conclusions of law be and are stricken; (2) the judgment be and is amended by striking therefrom the last two paragraphs and by inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"And it is ordered and adjudged that plaintiff recover his costs of suit which are hereby taxed in the sum of $———."

As so amended the judgment is affirmed.

It is further ordered that plaintiff recover from defendants his costs of appeal.

PEOPLE v. WHELPTON et al.

Cr. 4457.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Oct. 16, 1950.

Marsden Whelpton and Mrs. Dallas Steele Wilkins were convicted in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, W. Turney Fox, J., of violating the Corporate Securities Law, and from the judgments and orders denying their motions for a new trial, they appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McComb, J., held that obtaining loans for corporation upon representation that the money thus advanced could be used to purchase stock in the corporation constituted a sale of securities within meaning of Corporate Securities Law and that the evidence sustained convictions.

Judgments and orders affirmed.

Transactions by which defendants obtained loans to a corporation upon representation that the money thus advanced could be used to purchase stock in the corporation constituted sales of securities to the "public" within meaning of Corporate Securities Law, though the group solicited by defendants was comparatively small. McCOMB, Justice.

[1] After trial before the court without a jury, defendants Whelpton and Wilkins were found guilty on six counts of violating the Corporate Securities Act. From the judgments and orders denying their motions for a new trial, they appeal.*

Defendants contend the evidence is insufficient to sustain their conviction.

[2] This proposition is untenable. The evidence discloses that the Chino Hills Oil Company, a California corporation, was organized April 23, 1943. Defendant Whelpton, one of the organizers, was issued a permit on September 16, 1943, to sell and issue 1,765 shares of stock to certain named persons. The stock was placed in escrow and never removed therefrom. The final expiration date of such permit was February 15, 1944. After such date and about September 20, 1947, Mrs. Hostettler loaned to the corporation two separate sums, one of $200, the other of $500; received a receipt therefor signed by defendant Whelpton as vice president-treasurer. At the time she made the loan she was told by defendant Whelpton that if they got oil production they would refund the money to her or she could turn the receipt in and get shares of stock for it. Defendant Wilkins made similar statements to her. Such evidence is sufficient to sustain the conviction on count 8 of the information.

On August 7, 1948, and again on August 18, 1948, defendant Wilkins told Mr. Kirscherman that the Chino Hills Oil Company was drilling for oil and that if he would loan the company money, when the well got into production the corporation commissioner would be asked for a permit to issue more stock and he would immediately be given his money back with which he could buy stock. Relying on this statement he gave her a check for $1,500 dated August 7, 1948, another for $1,500 dated August 18, 1948, and received a receipt signed by defendant Whelpton as vice president-treasurer. Such evidence sustains the convictions under counts 10 and 11 of the information.

Defendant Wilkins on or about August 7, 1948, told Mr. Mettler that the Chino Hills Oil Company needed some money to buy casing; that the well was finished, and that after production had been obtained, he could get shares of stock in the corporation for $10 per share. On August 20, 1948, and September 7, 1948, defendant Wilkins repeated the same statements to Mr. Mettler; on August 7, 1948, he gave her his check for $2,500, on August 20, 1948, gave her another check for $2,000, and on September 7, 1948, a similar check for $2,500. In connection with each of these transactions he received a receipt from the corporation signed by defendant Whelpton, vice president-treasurer. Such evidence sustains the convictions under counts 12, 13 and 14 of the information.

[3, 4] The circumstances pertaining to these transactions, to wit, the written statements in each receipt that the money was a "loan to Chino Hills Oil Co."; the representations by the defendants as part of the transactions that the investors' money could be used for the purpose of buying stock in the company, was a "sale" of a "security" as these words are defined in the Corporate Securities Law. A share of stock is a "security" and a "sale" includes an offer to sell, an attempt to sell, a solicitation of sale, an option to sell or a contract to sell. (Sections 26104, 25500, 25008 of the Corporate Securities Law, Deerings Corporations Code, 1949 Supp.) Under the law defendants' statements to the investors that their receipts or loans might be used to buy stock in the corporation was a sale under the circumstances of this case.

[5] There is no merit in defendants' contention that since the receipts which were issued indicated on their face that the transaction in each instance was a loan the transactions were exempt from the Corporate Securities Law under Section 25102 (c) (formerly Corporate Securities Act, Sec. 2, para. (b) subd. 11 [Stats.1937, p. 1431]).

Such receipts, it is apparent when considered in connection with the other evidence received, were mere subterfuges for the purpose of avoiding the other provisions of the act. In effect the investors were told that by loaning money at that time they would be given stock when the oil well was placed upon production. (People v. Sidwell, 27 Cal.2d 121, 128, 162 P.2d 913; People v. Aresen, 91 Cal.App.2d 26, 36, 204 P.2d 389, 957.)

[6-8] Neither is there any merit in defendants' contention that these transactions were not with the general public but only with the stockholders of the Chino Hills Oil Company. While the group solicited by defendants was comparatively small, it nevertheless constituted "the public" under the Corporate Securities Act. (Mary Pickford Co. v. Bayly Bros. Inc., 12 Cal.2d 501, 514, 86 P.2d 102.) The transaction in question did not fall within the provisions of section 25009, subdivision (c) of the Corporate Securities Law. Defendants violated the act when they gave the investors an option to buy stock in the corporation in consideration of their making purported loans to it. (People v. Boles, 35 Cal.App.2d 461, 463, 95 P.2d 949.)

Finally, defendants' proposition that the conviction under count 8 may not stand because "there is no charge that defendant Whelpton conspired with defendant Wilkins" is untenable.

[9] A conspiracy need not be pleaded in an information if the evidence actually shows the existence of one. (People v. Tanner, 3 Cal.2d 279, 299, 44 P.2d 324. People v. Weaver, 56 Cal.App.2d 732, 740 et seq., 133 P.2d 818; People v. Gregory, 12 Cal.App.2d 7, 15 et seq., 54 P.2d 770.) The evidence disclosed that Mrs. Hostettler had known both defendants since 1932; that she saw them at the well and in the office of the corporation many times, and was told by them that the receipts for the money she loaned could be turned in for stock in the corporation. In each of the other transactions defendant Wilkins solicited the money and defendant Whelpton issued the receipts therefor. In addition both defendants tried to obtain a loan of $30,000 from Messrs. Mettler and Kirscherman.

[10] The foregoing evidence is sufficient to support the trial court's implied finding that defendants conspired and agreed to undertake the performance of an unlawful act.

Judgments and orders are and each is affirmed.

SEARLES v. SEARLES.
Civ. 17801.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.
Oct. 17, 1950.

Vera Searles brought a divorce action against George Searles. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Arthur Crum, J., entered a decree granting the divorce and quieting title to a parcel of land in the parties as joint tenants, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that the trial court's finding that the parties were joint tenants in the ownership of the property was not inconsistent with its conclusion that the title thereto should be quieted in the names of both as joint tenants subject to the encumbrances of record and subject to a prior claim of $2,000 in favor of the plaintiff.

Affirmed.

1. Divorce ⇐253

Where trial court had found ultimate fact that wife made down payment of $2,000 on realty acquired during marriage out of her sole and separate property, there was no merit in husband's contention that trial court had made no finding as to portion of $2,000 that was paid out of wife's separate funds or was borrowed on strength of her personal credit.

2. Husband and wife ⇐249

Where wife uses her own property to borrow money, money so borrowed is hers in separate ownership.

3. Divorce ⇐249(1)

Where wife was granted divorce on grounds of extreme cruelty and nonsupport, trial court had power to quiet title against husband as to realty acquired during marriage, or to otherwise deprive him of his interest in property by reason of his inequitable conduct.

4. Divorce ⇐286

In divorce action, where decree entered quieted title to parcel of land in husband and wife as joint tenants, but failed to require wife to render accounting of her collection of rentals from said property, in absence of injustice done by wife's failure to account, such failure did not require reversal.

5. Divorce ⇐249(3)

Where disposition of separate property of either spouse is issue in divorce action, court has power to hear and determine such issue.

6. Divorce ⇐253

In divorce action, trial court's finding that parties were joint tenants in ownership of realty was not inconsistent with its conclusion that title thereto was quieted in names of both parties as joint tenants subject to encumbrances of record and subject to prior claim of $2,000 in favor of wife. Civ.Code, § 683.

7. Partnership ⇐305

Payment of debt of partnership to one of partners is not handicap to division of proceeds of sale of partnership property among partners, any more than is payment of mortgage due third party.

8. Divorce ⇐250

Where wife was initiator of transaction in acquiring realty during marriage, she was entitled under divorce decree to reimbursement of such sums as she advanced toward payment of purchase price before property could be owned in equal shares by husband and wife as joint tenants.

9. Appeal and error ⇐907(3)

In absence of transcript of evidence, presumptions are that findings of trial court were supported.

Earl C. Broady, Los Angeles, for appellant.

George E. Cannady, Los Angeles, for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

This appeal is on the judgment roll. Respondent was awarded a decree of divorce which quieted her title to a parcel of land in both herself and appellant as joint tenants. The latter now demands a reversal on the grounds that (1) findings were not made as to all material issues; (2) the conclusions and judgment are inconsistent with the findings.

While the divorce was granted on the grounds of extreme cruelty and nonsupport, no attack is made upon that part of the judgment. It was decreed that the property be sold by the commissioner named in the judgment and from the proceeds of sale, after paying costs and commissioner's fee, $2,000 be paid to respondent to reimburse her for moneys paid out of her separate funds on the purchase.

As to the acquisition of the property respondent alleged that it was purchased by her at the price of $13,500, "and $2000.00 of that sum was paid in cash by plaintiff out of her separate property, and out of money borrowed by her and on the strength of her separate credit," and that she allowed title to be taken in the names of both as joint tenants upon the promise of apellant to pay at least one half of the unpaid balance; that he has not paid anything on the unpaid amount and while respondent has been required to make all monthly payments appellant frequently asserted that he would not "put a dime in the said property." The court found such allegations to be true and that it was necessary for respondent to employ an attorney to prosecute her action and that she was without funds to pay attorney's fees.

[1, 2] Appellant complains that there is no allegation or promise that respondent should be reimbursed the total of $2,000 and that there is no finding as to the portion of the $2,000 that was paid out of respondent's separate funds or was borrowed on the strength of her personal credit. The answer to such contention is that the court found the ultimate fact that respondent made the "down payment of $2000 out of her sole and separate property." If she used her own property to borrow the $2,000, the money so borrowed was hers in separate ownership. Estate of Ellis', 203 Cal. 414, 416, 264 P. 743; Hogevoll v. Hogevoll, 59 Cal.App.2d 188, 194, 138 P.2d 693.

[3-5] Appellant complains that the court refused to require respondent to render an accounting of her collections of the rentals from the property; that she received $260 per month as income and paid out $135 on the monthly installments of her indebtedness. It is true that no formal accounting appears in the judgment roll. But this action was primarily one for divorce. Since the court had power to quiet title against appellant or otherwise deprive him of his interest in the property by reason of his inequitable conduct and since no injustice was done by respondent's failure to account it cannot be said that such failure to require an accounting necessitates a reversal. Although appellant was convicted of extreme cruelty and failure to provide, no order was made for him to provide for his wife in any sum. Not only did he escape without contributing to her support while inflicting his cruelties upon her but no order requires him now to contribute any sum for her future support, while he receives a half interest in a valuable property without having passed the slightest consideration therefor. Under the facts of the divorce count, the court would have been acting within its equitable powers had it quieted respondent's title to the realty, leaving appellant no interest therein. Litt v. Litt, 75 Cal.App.2d 242, 245, 170 P.2d 684. Where in a divorce action the disposition of separate property of either spouse is in issue, the court has power to hear and determine such issue. Roy v. Roy, 29 Cal.App.2d 596, 603, 85 P.2d 223.

[6-8] Appellant contends that since the court found that the parties are joint tenants in the ownership of the property, it was error to conclude that the title thereto is "quieted in the names of both * * * as joint tenants subject to the encumbrances of record and subject to a prior claim of $2,000 in favor of the plaintiff." His theory is that since a joint interest is one owned in equal shares, Civ.Code, sec. 683, and since a joint tenancy requires a unity of interest, Siberell v. Siberell, 214 Cal. 767, 7 P.2d 1003, the court's conclusion is inconsistent with the findings in that it gives respondent a greater interest than that of appellant. Such logic is inconsistent with common sense. Payment of the debt of a partnership to one of the partners is not a handicap to the division of the proceeds of sale of a partnership property among the partners any more than is the payment of a mortgage due a third party. As the initiator of the transaction in acquiring the property involved respondent is entitled to reimbursement of such sums as she advanced toward payment of the purchase price before the property can be owned in equal shares by joint tenants. Jamison v. Cotton, 136 Cal.App. 127, 130, 28 P.2d 39. By subjecting the entire property to the debt of $2,000 due respondent the joint tenancy estates will in effect share equally the burdens and benefits of the partition.

[9] In the absence of a transcript of the evidence the presumptions are that the findings were supported.

Judgment affirmed.

OPPENHEIMER v. ARNOLD et al.

Civ. 17835.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Oct. 17, 1950.

Action by John G. Oppenheimer against C. E. Arnold and another, for causing the discharge of plaintiff from his employment as engineering aid in the Department of County Engineer and Surveyor. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, William B. McKesson, J., issued order sustaining the demurrer to the complaint, and entered an adverse judgment upon such order, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that the complaint did not allege a cause of action.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and error ⇐102

Order sustaining demurrer to complaint is non-appealable.

2. Appeal and error ⇐113(1)

Order denying motion to vacate judgment is non-appealable.

3. Torts ⇐13

Complaint alleging that county engineer and his assistant chief deputy terminated services of engineering aid before his six months' probationary period had expired, and that they presented false evidence to county civil service commission without knowledge of engineering aid in order to gain approval of the discharge, did not allege cause of action.

4. Malicious prosecution ⇐37

Complaint for malicious prosecution by discharged civil service employee against department head for causing employee to be discharged is insufficient in that it is collateral attack on commission's order discharging employee.

5. Officers ⇐72(2)

In order to successfully attack a discharge of probationary civil service employee ordered by department head with consent of civil service commission, complaint must allege extrinsic fraud employed by department head procuring such consent.

6. Officers ⇐69.6

Reasons for discharge of an engineering aid during his probationary service are not required.

7. Counties ⇐88, 93

County engineer and his assistant chief deputy are immune against judgment for their orders as heads of Department of Engineering and Surveying, and such immunity is absolute and extends to all their acts, including discharge of probationary employee.

John C. Oppenheimer in pro. per.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, Andrew O. Porter, Deputy County Counsel, John B. Anson, Deputy County Counsel, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

[1, 2] From the order sustaining demurrer to his complaint, from the adverse judgment entered upon such order, and from the order denying his motion to vacate that judgment, plaintiff has appealed. Since both orders are nonappealable the ensuing discussion pertains only to the validity of the decree.

Appellant alleged that defendant Arnold was the county engineer and Pore was his assistant chief deputy; that he was employed by Los Angeles county as an engineering aid I in the department of county engineer and surveyor; that he was appointed to a permanent position from a civil service eligible list May 11, 1949, and was serving the usual six months' probationary period; that on September 1, 1949, respondents suspended him without pay and on the twelfth they terminated his services as of the thirteenth; that in order to gain the approval of the discharge by the county civil service commission respondents presented false evidence to the commission without the knowledge of appellant. The complaint alleges damages in the sum of $566.49 for lost wages, for "5 per cent a year special damages" and exemplary damages in the sum of $10,000.

[3-6] No cause of action is alleged. [Section 34(7) of the Los Angeles County Charter provides: "The rules shall provide * * * for a period of probation not to exceed six months, during which period a probationer may be discharged or reduced with the consent of the Commission."] The complaint for malicious prosecution by a discharged civil service employee against the department head for causing plaintiff to be discharged is insufficient in that it is a collateral attack on the commission's order discharging plaintiff. Moreover, in order successfully to attack a discharge ordered with the consent of the commission a complaint must allege extrinsic fraud employed in procuring such consent. Caraker v. Webster, 24 Cal.App.2d 300, 301, 74 P.2d 1048. Neither a request of the civil service commission for a hearing nor extrinsic fraud committed upon it by respondents nor a demand that the discharge be revoked is alleged. Section 34(7) says nothing about charges, or trial, or opportunity to be heard. Reasons for the discharge of an engineering aid during his probationary service are not required. Neuwald v. Brock, 12 Cal.2d 662, 669, 86 P.2d 1047; Snelling v. Civil Service Board, 90 Cal. App.2d 865, 867, 204 P.2d 358.

[7] In discharging appellant respondents acted in their official capacity. They are therefore immune against judgment for their orders as heads of the Department of Engineering and Surveying. Such immunity is absolute and extends to all their acts. It protects them in their exercise of judgment and discretion in the discharge of their duties. White v. Brinkman, 23 Cal.App.2d 307, 317, 73 P.2d 254; Spalding v. Vilas, 161 U.S. 483, 498, 16 S.Ct. 631, 40 L.Ed. 780.

LONDON et al. v. MORRISON et al.

Civ. 17874.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Oct. 17, 1950.

William A. London and another brought an action against Wilton M. Morrison and another. From judgments or orders of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, William B. McKesson, J., setting aside the court clerk's dismissal of the action on plaintiffs' motion, granting defendants' motion to dismiss, and ordering plaintiffs' motion off the calendar, plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore P. J., held that plaintiffs were not entitled to entry of an order of voluntary dismissal by the clerk, but that defendants were entitled to a mandatory order of dismissal by the Superior Court after the lapse of one year following entry of its order transferring the case to the Superior Court of San Diego County for trial, where the costs and fees for making up the transcript for transmission to such court had not been paid.

Orders affirmed.

1. Courts ⇐488(1)

Though plaintiffs failed to deposit with clerk of Superior Court, wherein action was commenced, amount of costs and fees for transfer of case to Superior Court of another county for trial, order of transfer divested transferor court of jurisdiction to take any other step in action except to dismiss it after lapse of one year following entry of order without payment of such costs and fees. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 399, 581b.

2. Courts ⇐488(1)

A court, to which action is transferred from another court for trial, has same jurisdiction over action as transferee court would have had if action had been originally commenced therein, but does not acquire jurisdiction until transfer fee is paid and papers filed therein. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 399, 581b.

3. Courts ⇐488(1)
Dismissal and nonsuit ⇐27

Where plaintiffs did not pay fees and costs for transfer of action from superior court wherein it was commenced to superior court of another county for trial during year after entry of transfer order, transferee court did not acquire jurisdiction of case, and since transferor court had no jurisdiction thereof, plaintiffs were not entitled to entry of order of voluntary dismissal by clerk of such court. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 399, 581b.

4. Courts ⇐488(1)
Dismissal and nonsuit ⇐21

The statute providing that action transferred by court wherein it was commenced to another court must be dismissed by transferor court, where costs and fees for making up transcript or transmitting it to transferee court are not paid within year after entry of transfer order, is not permissive, but mandatory, and deprives plaintiffs, failing to pay such costs and fees within prescribed time, of their right under another statute to dismiss action voluntarily before commencement of trial. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 399, 581, 581b

5. Dismissal and nonsuit ⇐59

An action transferred from one court to court of another county must be dismissed by court wherein it was commenced, where costs and fees for making up transcript for transmission to transferee court are not paid within year after entry of transfer order. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 399, 581b.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiffs appeal from (1) "the judgment or order" entered on January 25, 1950, setting aside the dismissal of the action entered by the clerk on plaintiffs' request; (2) the judgment or order entered on February 15, 1950, granting defendants' motion to dismiss the action and ordering plaintiffs' motion to dismiss off calendar. Inasmuch as the appeal involves technical procedural questions, a chronology of events from and after the filing of the complaint are essential to a consideration of the points discussed. They follow.

February 18, 1948, action filed.

September 25, 1948, demurrer and Notice of Motion for change of place of trial filed.

November 9, 1948, order entered changing place of trial to San Diego.

November 10, 1949, defendants file notice of motion to dismiss action under section 581b [1].

December 15, 1949, plaintiffs file their Request for Entry of voluntary Dismissal.

December 19, 1949, defendants' motion to dismiss the action is ordered off calendar.

1. All section numbers refer to the Code of Civil Procedure.

January 4, 1950, defendants file Notice of Motions (1) to set aside plaintiff's voluntary dismissal and (2) to restore defendants' motion for dismissal to the calendar.

January 11, 1950, plaintiffs file their opposition to defendants' motion.

January 25, 1950, defendants' motion to set aside plaintiffs' voluntary dismissal is granted and defendants' motion to restore to the calendar their motion to dismiss the action is granted.

February 8, 1950, plaintiffs file notice of motion for permission to dismiss the action without prejudice.

February 15, 1950, Order entered dismissing the action on defendants' motion under 581b and defendants are awarded judgment against plaintiffs for their costs.

Appellants' contentions are: (1) section 581 [2] authorizes any plaintiff to dismiss his action at any time prior to submission and such privilege is not discounted by section 581b [3]; (2) section 581b authorizes the original court to dismiss, on the motion of either party, after the lapse of a year from

2. Section 581. An action may be dismissed in the following cases:

"1. By plaintiff, by written request to the clerk, filed with the papers in the case, or by oral or written request to the justice where there is no clerk, at any time before the actual commencement of trial, upon payment of the costs of the clerk or justice; provided that a counterclaim has not been set up, or affirmative relief sought by the cross-complaint or answer of the defendant. If a provisional remedy has been allowed, the undertaking shall upon such dismissal be delivered by the clerk or justice of the peace to the defendant who may have his action thereon. A trial shall be deemed to be actually commenced at the beginning of the opening statement of the plaintiff or his counsel, and if there shall be no opening statement, then at the time of the administering of the oath or affirmation to the first witness, or the introduction of any evidence.

"2. By either party, upon the written consent of the other. No dismissal mentioned in subdivisions 1 and 2 of this section shall be granted unless upon the written consent of the attorney of record of the party or parties applying therefor, or if such consent is not obtained upon order of the court after notice to such attorney.

"3. By the court, when either party fails to appear on the trial, and the other party appears and asks for the dismissal, or when, after a demurrer to the complaint has been sustained, the plaintiff fails to amend it within the time allowed by the court, and the defendant moves for such dismissal.

"4. By the court, with prejudice to the cause, when upon the trial and before the final submission of the case, the plaintiff abandons it.

"5. [Dismissal with or without prejudice.] The provisions of subdivision 1, of this section, shall not prohibit a party from dismissing with prejudice, either by written request to the clerk or oral or written request to the justice, as the case may be, any cause of action at any time before decision rendered by the court. Provided, however, that no such dismissal with prejudice shall have the effect of dismissing a counterclaim or cross-complaint filed in said action or of depriving the defendant of affirmative relief sought by his answer therein. Dismissals without prejudice may be had in either of the manners provided for in subdivision 1 of this section, after actual commencement of the trial, either by consent of all of the parties to the trial or by order of court on showing of just cause therefor."

3. Section 581b. "No action heretofore or hereafter commenced, where the same was not originally commenced in the proper court, and which has been ordered transferred to the proper court, shall be further prosecuted, and no further proceedings shall be had therein, until the fees and costs of the transfer thereof and of filing the papers in the court to which transferred have been paid, as provided in Section 399 of this code; and all such actions heretofore or hereafter commenced must be dismissed by the court in which the action or proceeding was originally commenced, on its own motion, or on the motion of any party interested therein, whether named in the complaint as a party or not, where the costs and fees of making up the transcript or papers or for transmission of the same to the clerk or justice of the court to which it is ordered transferred, or of filing the papers anew, have not been so paid for one year after the entry of the order for transfer."

the date of the order changing place of trial; (3) no hearing having taken place on defendants' motion for dismissal under section 581b, in the absence of an affirmative defense it was a statutory right of plaintiffs to order a dismissal; (4) defendants' motion having been filed first and both motions having been submitted together, plaintiffs' motion should have been granted; (5) jurisdiction to dismiss an action is retained by the original court; (6) the court had no authority to set aside the clerk's order of dismissal.

In support of such contentions appellants cite both sections 581 and 581b, also Simpson v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County (1945), 68 Cal.App.2d 821, 158 P.2d 46; Sullivan v. Compton (1943), 61 Cal.App.2d 500, 143 P.2d 357; Cook v. Stewart McKee & Co. (1945), 68 Cal.App.2d 758, 157 P.2d 868; McDonald v. California Timber Co. 2 Cal.App. 165, 83 P. 172. Appellants' arguments ignore legal logic and the cited authorities shoot wide of the mark.

[1-3] From the chronology it is to be observed that the case was ordered to be transferred to the San Diego court for trial. Appellants were required to deposit with the clerk the costs and fees for the transfer before such transfer should be made. Section 399. Although such deposit was not made the order of transfer had divested the Los Angeles court of jurisdiction to take any other step in the action except one, namely, it was required to dismiss the action after one year had elapsed within which the costs and fees for making up the transcript "have not been so paid". Section 581b.

The court to which an action has been transferred shall have and exercise over it the same jurisdiction it would have had if it had been originally commenced therein. But such court does not acquire jurisdiction until the transfer fee has been paid and the papers filed in that court. The San Diego court never acquired jurisdiction of the case and since the Los Angeles court had none, it was an idle act for appellants to order a voluntary dismissal or for the clerk of the court to accept it. Had they paid the fees to and filed a voluntary dismissal in the San Diego court, appellants would now be on solid ground. But their act in ignoring the order of change of place of trial renders their position untenable.

By filing the voluntary dismissal, they undertook to defeat respondents of such rights as might attach to a judgment of dismissal. They knew that a year had elapsed after entry of the order of transfer and that respondents had already filed their motion for a dismissal of the action under the provisions of section 581b. In filing the voluntary dismissal they were in no better position than is the plaintiff who files a dismissal after a cause has been fully tried or a demurrer sustained without leave to amend. Whenever such action has been attempted it ended disastrously for the moving party. Goldtree v. Spreckels, 135 Cal. 666, 67 P. 1091; Provencher v. City of Los Angeles, 10 Cal.App.2d 730, 52 P.2d 983; Hancock Ditch Co. v. Bradford, 13 Cal. 637; Spellacy v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, 23 Cal.App.2d 142, 72 P.2d 262.

[4, 5] Appellants contend that under section 581 they had a distinct authorization to dismiss at any time prior to a submission and that such right is not impaired by 581b. By such contention they disregard the doctrine that when a statutory exception exists with reference to an asserted right a litigant must bring himself within the exception. Section 581b is a separate statute of equal authority with that of 581. Also, since respondents obtained the order for transfer and a year having expired, they gained a definite, substantial right under 581b for a mandatory order of dismissal. No reasonable construction of 581 can override 581b. The latter is not a permissive statute, but is positive and mandatory. Such action must be dismissed by the court wherein it was commenced where the costs and fees of making up the transcript for transmission to the transferee court have not been so paid for one year after the order of transfer. McDonald v. California Timber Co., 2 Cal.App. 165, 83 P. 172, is not pertinent. The plaintiff there dismissed the action prior to a hearing of the motion for change of place of trial.

In view of the foregoing it would be useless to discuss other points raised by appellants.

Both orders are affirmed.

TOSSMAN v. NEWMAN.
Civ. 17706.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Oct. 18, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 6, 1950.

Hearing Granted Dec. 14, 1950.*

Action by Max Tossman against Alfred Newman for injuries received by plaintiff in a collision between defendant's automobile and a motorcycle upon which plaintiff was riding. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Caryl M. Sheldon, J., entered judgment upon the verdict for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McComb, J., held that the evidence supported the verdict for defendant.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and error ⇐1067

In action for injuries received by motorcyclist in collision with automobile traveling in opposite direction when automobile driver was making left turn from highway into his private driveway, refusal of motorcyclist's requested instructions dealing with correct method for vehicle driver to make left turn at intersection, was not prejudicial error. Vehicle Code, §§ 81, 86, 540.

2. Automobiles ⇐244(47)

In action for injuries to motorcyclist, where east-bound motorcyclist's view of west-bound automobile driver making left turn from highway into his private driveway was unobstructed for more than 300 feet, but he did not see automobile until he was about 35 feet from point of impact, and he then turned to right, speeded up his motorcycle and passed in front of automobile, evidence supported verdict for automobile driver.

3. Appeal and error ⇐996

Where conflicting inferences and conclusions may be drawn from the evidence, an appellate court is bound by findings of trial jury.

4. Appeal and error ⇐205

Where a question to which an objection is sustained does not in itself indicate that the answer to it will be favorable to party seeking to introduce the testimony, before ruling will be reviewed on appeal an offer of what is proposed to be proven must first be made to trial court so that reviewing court can determine whether proposed evidence would have been material and beneficial to party offering it.

5. Appeal and error ⇐205

Where questions asked defendant on cross-examination did not indicate that the answers would be either material or beneficial to plaintiff nor was any offer of proof made as to what answers the witness would give to the questions, appellate court would not consider whether trial court properly sustained objections.

Alvin G. Greenwald, Los Angeles, and Leonard G. Ratner, Beverly Hills for appellant.

Roger E. Kelly and Bauder, Gilbert, Thompson, Kelly & Veatch, Los Angeles, for respondent.

McCOMB, Justice.

From a judgment in favor of defendant after trial before a jury in an action to recover damages for injuries received by plaintiff in a collision between defendant's automobile and a motorcycle upon which plaintiff was riding, plaintiff appeals.

Facts: The evidence being viewed in the light most favorable to respondent (defendant), it appears that on May 3, 1948, defendant was driving his automobile in a westerly direction on Sunset Boulevard at about 35 miles per hour, and after giving a hand signal for more than 60 feet indicating that he intended to make a left turn, he started to make a turn into a private driveway. He slowed down to about 5 miles per hour, and as he did so he observed plaintiff approaching in an easterly direction in the south lane of the boulevard on a motorcycle, traveling at approximately 35 miles per hour and about 35 feet away. At the same time plaintiff observed defendant and in an effort to prevent a collision turned to the right, increased the speed of his motorcycle and drove in front of defendant's car. The left front fender of defendant's automobile struck the left side of plaintiff's motorcycle with resulting injuries to him. The view of each party was unobstructed for over 300 feet, except for other traffic which may have been on the road.

Questions: First: Did the trial court commit prejudicial error in refusing at plaintiff's request to give the jury the following instructions?

"Section 81 of the Vehicle Code provides: 'Street' or 'highway' is a way or place of whatever nature, publicly maintained and open to the use of the public for purposes of vehicular travel.

"Section 86 of the Vehicle Code provides: 'Intersection' is the area embraced within the prolongation of the lateral curb lines, or, if none, then the lateral boundary lines of the roadways, of two highways which join one another at approximately right angles or the area within which vehicles traveling upon different highways joining at any other angle may come in conflict.

"Section 540 of the Vehicle Code provides: The driver of a vehicle intending to turn left at an intersection shall approach in that portion of the right half of the roadway nearest the center line thereof and after entering the intersection, the left turn shall be made so as to leave the intersection to the right of the center line of the roadway being entered unless otherwise directed by markers, buttons, or signs."

[1] This question must be answered in the negative. In the present case the evidence disclosed that the road in question was not a highway but a private driveway. Hence the foregoing instructions were not applicable since they would be applicable only where the facts involve an intersection as defined under sections 81 and 86 of the Vehicle Code. The area where the accident occurred in this case did not fall within the definitions prescribed by the Vehicle Code.

The trial court, however, properly instructed the jury as to defendant's duty of care while turning to the left at his private driveway. Section 544 of the Vehicle Code was read to the jury.

[2, 3] Second: Was the verdict for defendant supported by the evidence?

This question must be answered in the affirmative. From the evidence set forth above the jury was justified in believing that plaintiff was contributorily negligent since his view was unobstructed for more than 300 feet, and he did not see defendant's automobile until he was about 35 feet from the point of impact. Also the jury may have believed that plaintiff was contributorily negligent in turning to the right, speeding up his motorcycle and passing in front of defendant's automobile. Where, as in the present case, conflicting inferences and conclusions may be drawn from the evidence an appellate court is bound by the findings of the trial jury.

Third: Did the trial court commit prejudicial error in sustaining objections to questions asked defendant by plaintiff on cross-examination?

This question must be answered in the negative. Prior to the trial of the action plaintiff took the deposition of defendant. At the trial plaintiff read the deposition into evidence. When plaintiff rested his case defendant's counsel adopted the testimony of defendant introduced through his deposition and then asked him a few additional questions, whereupon the following questions were asked by plaintiff's counsel, to which objections were made and the court sustained the objections:

"Q. Just a minute. Mr. Newman, you stated, it is a fact, is it not, that you arrived at the studio at 11:30 on this day? A. Approximately, yes.

"Mr. Kelly: Asked and answered. It has been read, the complete testimony was read this morning.

"The Court: Sustained.

"Mr. Greenwald: Your Honor, I am cross-examining at this time.

"The Court: Nothing to cross-examine, he just asked a couple of questions." * * *

"Q. Did you when you were at either N-3 or N-1 look westerly on Sunset to see if there were any vehicles approaching? A. Indeed I did.

"Q. And what did you see? A. I saw nothing at all, no vehicle of any sort.

"Q. And was it after you had looked or during the time that you were looking that you made, started to execute your turn? A. Would you ask that question again, please?

"Mr. Greenwald: Mr. Reporter?

"Mr. Kelly: Your Honor, in the interest of saving time I am going to object to this line of questioning as improper cross-examination, having been asked and answered, went into thoroughly at the deposition that was read this morning. We are just going over the same thing.

"The Court: Sustained.

"Mr. Greenwald: Well, your Honor, as I understand it, counsel has made a deposition a part of his direct testimony. Now I believe that it is my right to cross-examine with reference to the statements that were made and to show that the witness' statements are not correct but in fact are improper as I believe there are contrary statements in the deposition.

"Mr. Kelly: You asked all the questions at the time of the deposition, counsel.

"The Court: Sustained."

[4, 5] The law is established in California that where a question to which an objection is sustained does not in itself indicate that the answer to it will be favorable to the party seeking to introduce the testimony, before the ruling will be reviewed on appeal an offer of what is proposed to be proven must first be made to the trial court so that the reviewing court can determine whether the proposed evidence would have been material and beneficial to the party offering it. (Heinz v. Heinz, 73 Cal.App.2d 61, 66, 165 P.2d 967; Price v. Price, 71 Cal.App.2d 734, 738, 163 P.2d 501.) In the instant case the questions to which objections were made did not indicate that the answers would be either material or beneficial to plaintiff, nor was any offer of proof made as to what answers the witness would give to the questions. Hence the foregoing rule is applicable and we will not consider whether the trial court properly sustained objections to the questions or not.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE ex rel. SMITH v. CITY OF SAN JOSE, et al.

Civ. 14545.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Oct. 20, 1950.

Proceeding in quo warranto brought by the People of the State of California upon the relation of Ralph Smith, against the City of San Jose, a municipal corporation, City Council of City of San Jose and others to test the validity of annexation of two inhabited parcels of land to city. The Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Santa Clara, M. G. Del Mutolo, J., heard cause as agreed statement of facts and without additional evidence gave judgment for defendants and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, P. J., held that failure of city to divide annexation of two noncontiguous parcels into two separate questions at election invalidated the annexation.

Reversed with directions to enter judgment for plaintiffs.

1. Appeal and error ⇐1008(1)

In quo warranto proceeding to determine validity of annexation of two parcels contiguous to city, where finding, if interpreted to mean that two parcels were contiguous to each other, was not supported by agreed statement of facts and no additional evidence was taken, finding would be disregarded on appeal. Gen. Laws, Act 5159, § 6.

2. Quo warranto ⇐55

In quo warranto proceedings, where the complaint alleges invalidity of annexation, the burden is on defendant to prove the proceedings are valid. Gen. Laws, Act 5159, § 6.

3. Quo warranto ⇐47, 55

In both common-law writ of quo warranto and information in nature of quo warranto, the ordinary rules of pleading were reversed and state is bound to show nothing.

4. Quo warranto ⇐55

Where, in quo warranto proceeding to question validity of annexation of land to city, the complaint alleged the two parcels were not contiguous and answer denied this but no proof was offered, and stipulation of facts and findings conceded parcels not contiguous, the parcels are shown conclusively not to be contiguous. Gen. Laws, Act 5159, § 6.

5. Municipal corporations ⇐34

Where two parcels of land, both contiguous to city but not contiguous to each other, were sought to be annexed in single election as one proposition, there was improper election, as electors of each parcel were entitled to vote on proposition of annexation of that parcel separately. Gen. Laws, Act 5159, § 6

Martin S. Walsh, George H. Barnett, San Jose, for plaintiffs and appellants.

Robert E. Cassin, City Atty., Eugene L. Rendler, Asst. City Atty., San Jose, for defendants and respondents.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

In these proceedings in quo warranto to test the validity of the annexation of inhabited territory to the City of San Jose the defendants had judgment. The cause was tried on an agreed statement of facts and without any additional evidence. Findings of fact were made. They add nothing to the judgment as will appear hereafter. Accordingly the appeal presents questions of law alone and we may confine our discussion to two of these as they control the judgment.

The proceedings are taken under the Annexation Act of 1913, Deering's Gen. Laws, Act 5159, Statutes 1913, p. 587, prior to its repeal in 1949. Section 6 of that act as amended, Statutes 1915, p. 307, reads as follows: "* * * Whenever, upon proceedings had and taken and at elections called and held in accordance with the provisions of this act, the electors of each of two or more such bodies of outside territory have voted in favor of the annexation thereof to the same municipal corporation, the legislative body of such municipal corporation must submit to the electors thereof, as separate propositions, each to be voted upon separately and without regard to the others, the question whether each [of] such bodies of new territory shall be annexed to, incorporated in and made a part of such municipal corporation." (Emphasis ours.)

The complaint alleged that the two parcels were two separate and entirely severable properties and did not adjoin each other in any particular.

[1] (1) The trial court found that both parcels were contiguous to the boundaries of the City of San Jose but there was no agreement and no finding that they were contiguous to each other. But even if that finding could be effective here it must be disregarded because there was no evidence disclosing that the two parcels were contiguous to each other. On the other hand it is frankly conceded that they were not.

It is this finding which forms the basis for respondents' main argument that the judgment must be affirmed. But if we were to accept respondents' interpretation of the finding it is not supported in that respect by the agreed statement of facts and, since no additional evidence was taken, the finding will be disregarded on appeal. Crawford v. Imperial Irrigation Dist., 200 Cal. 318, 335, 253 P. 726; Baer v. Lorimer, 219 Cal. 677, 679, 28 P.2d 909; Los Angeles Athletic Club v. Board of Harbor Commissioners, 130 Cal.App. 376, 394, 20 P.2d 130. See also Larkin v. Bank of America, 93 Cal.App.2d 594, 603, 209 P.2d 801; Taylor v. George, 34 Cal.2d 552, 556, 212 P.2d 505.

[2] (2) In quo warranto proceedings of this nature wherein the complaint alleges the invalidity of the annexation proceedings the burden is upon the defendants to prove that such proceedings were valid. The precise question was decided by this court in People v. Town of Corte Madera, 97 Cal.App.2d 726, 218 P.2d 810, 811, where we said: "This court had occasion in People ex rel. Stephenson v. Hayden, 9 Cal.App.2d 312, 49 P.2d 314, 315, to consider the question of pleading in quo warranto cases. We held there that a complaint which pleaded in general terms that defendant was 'usurping, intruding into, and unlawfully holding and exercising the office of Supervisor * * *' was sufficient.

[3, 4] "'It was a peculiarity of both the common-law writ of quo warranto and information in the nature of quo warranto that the ordinary rules of pleading were reversed and the state was bound to show nothing'. 22 Cal.Jur. p. 220." See also 44 Am.Jur. p. 167. The application of the rule to this case is clear. The complaint alleged: "That the said two precincts are two separate, distinct and entirely severable properties and do not adjoin each other in any particular whatsoever; and the said precincts are separated by land that is not a road, stream, railroad, or other natural or artificial barrier or right-of-way; that at only one point are the two precincts less than 100 feet apart; that all other points, which comprise 99% of said territory, in the two precincts are separated by an area greater than 100 feet, and in a large portion of the area the two precincts are separated by territory equal to three (3) city blocks of uninhabited area which was annexed to the City of San Jose in 1947." The answer denied this in general terms, but no proof was offered in support of the denial. The stipulation of facts stated that the two parcels were contiguous to the City of San Jose. The trial court found: "The territory annexed to the City of San Jose is and at all times herein mentioned was contiguous thereto." We may assume that both the stipulation of facts and the findings conceded that the parcels were not contiguous to each other, particularly as the complaint contained a metes and bounds description of the entire tract of land and of the territory separating them which was excepted from the proceedings. These allegations were not denied in the answer. They show conclusively that the two parcels were not contiguous to each other.

[5] We have this simple case. Two parcels of land, both contiguous to the boundaries of the city but both noncontiguous to each other, were both sought to be annexed in a single election presented to the electors as one proposition. A clear example of the wisdom of the statute is found in the result. The two separate parcels were designated as precinct No. 1 and precinct No. 2 respectively. The vote in precinct No. 1 (for annexation of both parcels) was 80 for annexation to 40 against; the vote in precinct No. 2 (on the same proposition) was 48 for annexation and 74 against. It is conceivable that the electors in precinct No. 2 might have favored the annexation of that parcel but objected to the annexation of the other parcel. It is also conceivable that the electors in precinct No. 1 favored the proposition only because it included parcel 2. But aside from any speculation as to the intentions of the electors, we hold that the election was improperly held and that the electors of each parcel were entitled to vote on the proposition of the annexation of that parcel separately.

The judgment is reversed with direction to enter judgment for the plaintiffs.

DALY v. WHITE.

No. 14520.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Oct. 18, 1950.

William White filed an application for a preliminary injunction to restrain James Daly from prosecuting an action for damages arising out of an automobile collision. The Superior Court in and for the County of Santa Clara, Byrl R. Salsman, J., denied application and White appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that where both actions were between the same parties arising out of the same transaction, and filed in the same county, but plaintiff in action second filed secured service first over the plaintiff in action first filed, trial court had jurisdiction of both actions, and in its discretion could order the consolidation of both cases for trial, and deny an application by plaintiff in action second filed to enjoin plaintiff in action first filed but second served from prosecuting action.

Affirmed.

1. Abatement and revival ⇐6

There is no priority of jurisdiction between cases filed in same court and in same county, nor is there any conflict of jurisdiction between them.

2. Injunction ⇐1

The granting of an injunction is a matter discretionary with trial court.

3. Action ⇐57(1)
Injunction ⇐137(1)

Where two actions were between the same parties, arising out of same transaction, and were filed in same county, but plaintiff in action second filed secured the first service over plaintiff in action first filed, trial court had jurisdiction of both cases and in its discretion could order consolidation of both cases for trial and deny a temporary injunction by plaintiff in action second filed to enjoin plaintiff in action first filed but second served from prosecuting action.

4. Abatement and revival ⇐9

Abatement lies only where not only subject matter of two actions is same and parties are same, but where parties plaintiff and parties defendant are identical, and it does not lie with respect to cross suits pending in same court where relationship of parties to suits is reversed.

Lee T. Strine, Sunnyvale, for appellant.

John H. Machado, San Jose, for respondent.

BRAY, Justice.

The superior court denied an application by defendant and appellant White for a preliminary injunction to restrain plaintiff and respondent Daly from prosecuting this action. Defendant appealed.

Question Presented.

Can the plaintiff in an action second filed but first served enjoin the plaintiff in an action first filed but second served from prosecuting that action, where both actions are between the same parties, arise out of the same transaction, and are filed in the same county?

Facts.

On July 11, 1948, appellant and respondent were operating automobiles which collided with each other. On June 22, 1949, respondent filed suit against appellant in the superior court of Santa Clara County for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been received in the accident. On July 8 appellant filed a suit against respondent in the same county for damages for the injuries which he claimed to have received in the accident. On July 11 summons and complaint in the second suit were served upon respondent, who, on August 29, filed an answer but no cross-complaint. This second suit was placed upon the setting calendar. Thereafter, on October 1, appellant was served with summons and complaint in the first suit. Appellant then applied for a preliminary injunction to restrain respondent from proceeding in the second suit. After hearing, this application was denied.

Will Injunction Lie?

Appellant contends that injunction is proper to restrain a multiplicity of proceedings, citing section 526 of the Code of Civil Procedure: "An injunction may be granted in the following cases: * * * 6. Where the restraint is necessary to prevent a multiplicity of judicial proceedings". To the same effect, Civil Code, § 3422. He also cites Lincoln v. Superior Court, 51 Cal.App. 2d 61, 124 P.2d 179, and Gorman v. Superior Court, 23 Cal.App.2d 173, 72 P.2d 774. In the Lincoln case the Madera County superior court in an action to dissolve a partnership conducted through the device of four Massachusetts trusts, restrained the prosecution of four other actions brought in Los Angeles county superior and municipal courts, allegedly for the purpose of harassing the partners, the subject matter of which actions was included in the Madera County action. The appellate court upheld the restraint on the ground that a multiplicity of proceedings was involved. The Gorman case involved actions arising out of a collision between two trucks. The first action was filed in Merced County. The day the defendants in that action were served, they filed in Fresno County an action against the plaintiffs in the Merced County action. Service in this action was made later the same day. The plaintiffs in the Merced County action (the first filed and served) applied to the appellate court for a writ of prohibition to restrain the plaintiffs in the Fresno County action from proceeding. The court held, 23 Cal.App.2d at page 177, 72 P.2d at page 776: "The superior court of Merced county not only had concurrent jurisdiction, but acquired jurisdiction over the whole litigation with full power to bring in all necessary parties and make a complete adjudication of the entire controversy through the fact that process of that court was first served." In both the Lincoln and Gorman cases the courts were considering the question of jurisdiction between courts of different counties. But the rule is different where the actions are brought in the same court in the same county. This is established by Hamm v. San Joaquin & Kings River Canal Co., 44 Cal.App.2d 47, 111 P.2d 940. There two suits between the same parties arising out of the same automobile accident were filed. The defendants in the first suit filed were the plaintiffs in the second suit. As in our case, first service was made in the second suit. The plaintiff in the second suit moved the court to dismiss the first suit for lack of jurisdiction because summons was served in his suit first. That motion was denied; and the cases were consolidated and tried together. In both actions cross-complaints were filed which were later stricken by the court. The plaintiff in the first suit obtained a $20,000 judgment, and in the second suit in which he was defendant judgment went for him, too. On appeal appellant claimed that the $20,000 judgment against him was void for the reason that the court lacked jurisdiction to try the cause since the court first acquired jurisdiction in the second cause because it was the one in which summons was first served. Concerning this contention the court said (Hamm was the plaintiff in the suit first filed, but second served) in 44 Cal.App.2d at pages 54–55, 111 P.2d at page 945:

"In support of their contention that the judgment for the respondent Hamm is void for lack of jurisdiction the appellants rely on section 416 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides in part:

" 'From the time of the service of the summons and of a copy of the complaint in a civil action, * * * the court is deemed to have acquired jurisdiction of the parties, and to have control of all the subsequent proceedings.'

"There is nothing in the language of that section in conflict with the theory that the Merced superior court did not also acquire jurisdiction of the same parties, and retain control of all the subsequent proceedings in both cross suits involving the same automobile casualty, which were instituted and consolidated for trial in that same court. There was no conflict of jurisdiction between different courts. The same jury and judge tried and determined all issues of both cases at the same time. It is true that the court is deemed to acquire jurisdiction of the parties at the time of the service of the summons and complaint. That does not mean the same court may not subsequently acquire jurisdiction of the same parties in a cross suit involving the identical issues so as to consolidate the cases and determine the issues at one time."

The court then stated that the Gorman case, supra, is not in conflict, pointing out that in that case the actions were filed in different counties and that the reason assigned for the ruling that the court in which the summons was first served was entitled to control all subsequent proceedings in the litigation, was "that 'this will work no injustice to them while to permit them to proceed in an independent action [in another county] will lead to unnecessary duplication and confusion, with resulting injustice to some of the parties'." It then stated: "That situation does not exist in the present case where both actions are pending in the same court, and they are consolidated for trial and the court retains, not only the jurisdiction, but the control of all proceedings in both cases. The last-mentioned procedure is not in violation of section 416 of the Code of Civil Procedure." 44 Cal.App.2d at pages 55–56, 111 P.2d at page 945. See also Myers v. Superior Court, 75 Cal.App.2d 925, 172 P.2d 84, where the court approved that portion of the Hamm opinion which held that the rule of jurisdiction between courts in separate counties did not apply to the same court in the same county.

[1] We held in Kromm v. Kromm, 84 Cal.App.2d 523, 191 P.2d 115, that there is no priority of jurisdiction between cases filed in the same court in the same county, nor is there any conflict of jurisdiction between them. See also Brown v. Campbell, 110 Cal. 644, 43 P.12.

At first blush Hilton v. Reed, 46 Cal.App. 2d 449, 116 P.2d 98, cited by appellant, seems to be opposed to this view. However, on analysis it clearly appears that the court did not consider the fact that the two actions were there pending in the same county, nor decide anything except the uncertainty of the allegations of the complaint. While the court states that the rule is well settled in California that the pendency of a prior action based on the same cause, contested by the same parties, and commenced in the same jurisdiction, is ground for the abatement of the second action, it did not apply that rule, nor did it discuss either the Hamm or the Myers case. The decision actually was that the allegations of the complaint were so uncertain that the court erred in overruling appellant's demurrer as to uncertainty. Hence, the case is of no value on the question being considered here.

[2, 3] The granting of an injunction, of course, is a matter discretionary with the trial court. 14 Cal.Jur. 180; Riviello v. Journeyman Barbers, etc., Union, 88 Cal. App.2d 499, 199 P.2d 400. As we have shown, the actions being pending in the same court in the same county, the court had jurisdiction of both, and therefore there exists no right of priority to have the proceedings in either action postponed to await the trial of the other. In its discretion, in order to avoid the necessity of two trials, the trial court may order the consolidation of both cases for trial. In case of such consolidation the court can give the parties full opportunity to present every issue upon which they rely in both cases, and can protect the rights of the parties. For example, it can give the appellant, the party whose summons was first served, the benefits of proceeding as plaintiff, as was done in the Hamm case.

Abatement.

[4] Both parties in their briefs discuss the question of abatement. Appellant contends that the injunction should have been issued as the first action should be abated. The position of respondent is not quite clear in his brief. It is either that the injunction was properly denied because he contends that appellant had an adequate remedy, to wit, motion in abatement; or that abatement will not lie in any event. Although only a second action is abated by pendency of a prior action, and we have concluded there is no priority here, abatement could not lie in this case, as it lies only where not only the subject matter of two actions is the same and the parties are the same, but where the parties plaintiff and the parties defendant are identical. "* * * the parties in the second suit must stand in the same relative position as plaintiff and defendant." 1 Am.Jur. 33. "It has been held that abatement will not lie unless the suits are founded on the same issues and the plaintiffs are the same in both actions. [Citations.] Abatement does not lie with respect to cross suits pending in the same court where the relationship of the parties to the suits is reversed." Hamm v. San Joaquin, etc., Canal Co., supra, 44 Cal.App. 2d at page 56, 111 P.2d at page 945. See also National Auto. Ins. Co. v. Winter, 58 Cal.App.2d 11, 136 P.2d 22.

McWILLIAMS v. LOS ANGELES TRANSIT LINES.

Civ. 17789.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Oct. 18, 1950.

Lester W. McWilliams brought action against the Los Angeles Transit Lines to recover damages for personal injuries received in a collision between a streetcar and an automobile. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Harold B. Jeffery, J., gave judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McComb, J., held that an affidavit of an attorney to the effect that the jury's foreman made research into technical matters dealing with the issues before the jury could not be received to impeach the verdict since the attorney's knowledge could only be obtained by hearsay.

Affirmed.

3. New trial ⇦145

Affidavit of attorney in automobile and streetcar accident case that jury's foreman, an engineer, looked up technical data at his home about cohesive power of streetcar wheels and rails and reached his own conclusions of space required to stop at given speeds, and without mentioning his research expressed his opinions to the jury which in a degree he was unable to estimate influenced their thinking, could not be received to impeach the verdict, since the attorney's knowledge could only be hearsay. McCOMB, Justice.

From a judgment in favor of defendant after trial before a jury in an action to recover damages for personal injuries received in a collision between a streetcar and an automobile, plaintiff appeals.

Facts: After the jury had been empaneled to try an action for damages resulting from the alleged negligence of defendant, whose streetcar collided with an automobile in which plaintiff was riding, the foreman of the jury, Mr. Kroesche, read certain books on the subject of engineering which he had in his own private library. The information which he obtained therefrom, relative to the cohesive force between steel wheels on a streetcar and the tracks upon which it ran, he used in his consideration of the case when it was submitted to the jury. These facts were brought to the attention of the trial court on a motion for a new trial through the affidavit of Arthur Strock, attorney of record for plaintiff, wherein he said in part:

"Herold J. Kroesche was foreman of that jury and as a juror voted for the defendant; said Mr. Kroesche is a Chemical Engineer and has been a Chemical Engineer since 1924. During the trial of the action, in open court, he asked of the Judge Presiding, Honorable Harold B. Jeffery, and of counsel for plaintiff and of counsel for answering defendant [Los Angeles Transit Lines, a corporation] what the weight of the streetcar involved in the accident was. He was then and there, in open court, given the answer that the streetcar weighed 43,500 lbs. not loaded.

"Said Mr. Kroesche owns and has in his private library certain books on the subject of Engineering; among them are Kent's Engineering Handbook, 1923 Edition, and Duff's Physics. During the course of the trial and before the case was submitted to the jury, at night in his home between sessions of court, and not during the actual course of the trial in court, said Mr. Kroesche examined said books for the purpose of determining, among other things, data re the cohesive force between the steel wheels of the subject streetcar and the steel tracks upon which it ran at and before the time of the subject accident, when the streetcar brakes are locked and its wheels are sliding. From his reading and calculations at that time, he reached the conclusion that if the streetcar involved in the accident is traveling at a speed of 20 miles per hour at a time when the brakes were first applied, and if the wheels became locked and sliding without interruption down to the time the streetcar stopped, that would cause the streetcar, with the wheels starting to slide at said speed of 20 miles per hour, to come to a stop 122 feet following the time when the wheels first began to slide. For the purpose of this computation, he assumed that the average velocity, from the time the streetcar first began to slide until the streetcar came to a stop, was 10 miles per hour. He used as a basis for his computation the cohesive force of steel streetcar wheels on steel streetcar tracks as he determined that cohesive force to be by reason of his said examination at home of the aforementioned books. At no time during the trial, in evidence in open court, was there any testimony as to said cohesive force or the effect it would have in bringing the streetcar to a stop. His examination of said books and his determination therefrom of said cohesive force was a matter which he considered as a material factor, among other factors, in reaching his decision in the lawsuit.

"Said Mr. Kroesche did not mention to any of the other jurors in the case at that time that he had read the books as aforementioned, but in his discussions with jurors of the facts of this case, both as a juror and as a foreman of the jury he expressed opinions which were in a material degree, to what extent he cannot estimate, influenced, guided, and directed by his reading of the books as aforesaid."

Question: Was the trial court correct in refusing to grant a motion for a new trial predicated on the statements in the affidavit of Attorney Strock?

This question must be answered in the affirmative and is governed by these rules:

[1] 1. A juror cannot impeach his own or his fellow juror's verdict by an affidavit unless the verdict was reached by chance. (Section 657, subsec. 2, Code of Civ.Proc.)

[2] 2. Hearsay statements in affidavits are not admissible to impeach the verdict of a jury. (Woods v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 91 Cal.App.2d 572, 577, 205 P.2d 738; Noble v. Key System, Ltd., 10 Cal.App.2d 132, 143, 51 P.2d 887; People v. Willis, 70 Cal.App. 465, 475, 233 P. 812; Snoffer v. City of Los Angeles, 6 Cal.App.2d 14, 16, 43 P.2d 852).

Applying the foregoing rules to the facts in the present case it is evident that most of the statements contained in the affidavit could not have been predicated on anything other than hearsay evidence, for example that Mr. Kroesche examined books for the purpose of determining:

a. "Data re the cohesive force between the steel wheels of the subject streetcar and the steel tracks upon which it ran at and before the time of the subject accident, when the stretecar brakes are locked and its wheels are sliding."

b. That "from his reading and calculations at that time, he reached the conclusion that if the streetcar involved in the accident is traveling at a speed of 20 miles per hour at a time when the brakes were first applied, and if the wheels became locked and sliding without interruption down to the time the streetcar stopped, that would cause the streetcar, with the wheels starting to slide at said speed of 20 miles per hour, to come to a stop 122 feet following the time when the wheels first began to slide."

c. That "for the purpose of this computation, he assumed that the average velocity, from the time the streetcar first began to slide until the streetcar came to a stop, was 10 miles per hour."

d. That "he used as a basis for his computation the cohesive force of steel streetcar wheels on steel streetcar tracks as he determined that cohesive force to be by reason of his examination at home of the aforementioned books."

e. That "his examination of said books and his determination therefrom of said cohesive force was a matter which he considered as a material factor, among other factors, in reaching his decision in the lawsuit."

f. That he "did not mention to any of the other jurors in the case at that time that he had read the books as aforementioned, but in his discussions with jurors of the facts in this case, both as a juror and as a foreman of the jury he expressed opinions which were in a material degree, to what extent he cannot estimate influenced, guided, and directed by his reading of the books."

[3] Clearly Mr. Strock could only learn Mr. Kroesche's purpose in examining the books from statements made to him by Mr. Kroesche. Likewise he could only know the conclusions which Mr. Kroesche reached as a result of statements to him by Mr. Kroesche. In addition he could only know that Mr. Kroesche assumed certain facts in his calculations by being told what facts had been assumed. Nor would it be possible for the affiant to know what went on in the jury room but from statements made either by Mr. Kroesche or other members of the jury. Finally, the only way that the maker of the affidavit could know that Mr. Kroesche was influenced in his discussions with the jurors by what he had read, and that Mr. Kroesche did not know to what extent he had been influenced, was by statements by Mr. Kroesche to him, which constituted hearsay evidence.

The trial judge was correct in declining to grant a motion for a new trial upon such hearsay evidence.

The foregoing reasoning is not inconsistent with the rule announced in Pacific Solvents Co. v. Superior Court, in and for Los Angeles County, 88 Cal.App.2d 953, 199 P.2d 740. Such case dealt with the requirements for the issuance of a subpoena duces tecum which involved section 1985 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads: "Subpoena duces tecum. All applications before trial for subpoenas duces tecum shall be accompanied by an affidavit specifying the exact matters or things desired to be produced, and setting forth in full detail the materiality thereof to the issues involved in the case, and stating that the witness has the desired matters or things in his possession or under his control."

This section requires setting forth in full detail the full materiality of the papers which it is sought to have produced to the issues involved in the case. There is nothing in section 1985 of the Code of Civil Procedure which prohibits the issuance of a subpoena duces tecum predicated upon an affidavit which states facts which have been ascertained from hearsay. The case has no application to the prohibition in section 657, subsection 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which prohibits a juror from impeaching his own verdict except where the verdict has been determined by chance.

SAPHIRE v. LOS ANGELES TRANSIT LINES.

Civ. 17882.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.
Oct. 17, 1950.

Action by Florence Saphire against Los Angeles Transit Lines, a corporation, for injuries sustained by plaintiff in a collision at an intersection between the streetcar of defendant and the automobile in which plaintiff was riding as a passenger. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, William J. Palmer, J., entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that the streetcar motorman's negligence, although slight, was the proximate cause of the collision and contributed to the plaintiff's injuries.

Affirmed.

1. Street railroads ⇐102(1)

Where westbound streetcar motorman's vision was obscured by southbound streetcar standing at intersection, but motorman drove his streetcar too fast across intersection and collided with southbound automobile, which was passing the standing streetcar, causing injury to automobile passenger, motorman's negligence, although slight, was proximate cause of collision and contributed to automobile passenger's injuries.

2. Negligence ⇐93(14)

Where passenger of automobile was injured in collision between automobile and streetcar at intersection, passenger was not chargeable with negligence of driver of automobile.

3. Negligence ⇐22

Amount of ordinary care exercised by driver of any power propelled conveyance should be measured by the probable perils to be encountered.

4. Street railroads ⇐81(4)

Streetcar operator has obligation to be constantly on look out when crossing traffic congested intersection and to use such reasonable precautions as circumstances require, and his failure to do so is culpable negligence.

5. Street railroads ⇐90(2), 99(1)

The duties of streetcar motorman and chauffeur are reciprocal, and each is required to approach street intersection with due regard for right of other.

6. Street railroads ⇐85(4)

Streetcars do not have an absolute or pre-eminent right of way over intersections, merely for reason that a streetcar runs on steel rails.

7. Street railroads ⇐90(3)

Where westbound streetcar motorman's vision was obscured by southbound streetcar, standing at intersection on traffic-congested avenue, failure of motorman to give any warning of his approach nor to give one at such reasonable time prior to his arrival at west rail of southbound tracks as to forewarn driver of southbound automobile, which was passing standing streetcar, was negligence creating liability for resulting collision.

8. Appeal and error ⇐996

Where the facts have been determined by trial court, they are not open to question on appeal if reasonable inferences drawn from evidence constitute sufficient proof to establish the issue.

9. Evidence ⇐597

Any substantial testimony is sufficient support for a finding.

10. Appeal and error ⇐717

The opinion of trial judge and his remarks in course of trial can not impeach findings of court.

Harry B. Dowsing, Los Angeles, for appellant.

A. J. Blackman, Los Angeles, for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Defendant has appealed from a judgment entered against it on a finding that the negligent operation of its westbound "9" street car on its private right of way caused injury to respondent. Contemporaneously with the arrival of the "9" car at the easterly curb of Vermont avenue, appellants' "F" car moving south on Vermont arrived at the loading zone a short distance north of the private right of way. The "9" car was operated by motorman Hazelton; the "F" car was in charge of one Sholander. As Hazelton waited on the east curb, his view of the vehicular traffic going south on Vermont was obscured by the standing "F" car. Because his view was so obstructed he waited where he stood to be reassured by Sholander that the "F" car would remain in its position while the "9" car crossed the avenue. Having been signalled by the latter, Hazelton proceeded across Vermont at about four or five miles an hour. As he could not clearly observe the traffic on the west side of Vermont, so also, a motorist proceeding southward on that avenue could not, at the moment of passing the "F" car, see the "9" car as it moved across the avenue. Thus when Hazelton arrived at the lane of traffic west of the standing "F" car he was suddenly confronted with the Solomon automobile going about ten miles an hour as it approached the oncoming westbound "9" car. The "9" car struck the sedan nine feet east of the west curb of Vermont and pushed it about six feet along the tracks.

From the facts established the court below found that both Hazelton and the operator of the Solomon sedan were negligent. Both blindly drove engines of destruction into an area where they knew they were likely to encounter perils. Two facts are outstanding: (1) the "9" car struck the sedan; (2) the former had the right of way. While, as the trial judge said, Hazelton "had the right to assume that the driver of the automobile would exercise ordinary care and would yield the right of way" yet he knew that he was approaching a dangerous situation: a traffic-congested portion of a popular avenue concealed from his view by street car "F". He could not see the motorcars coming toward the westbound tracks until he was practically at the lane of travel. Although his behavior might have been free from negligence in rural or suburban communities he knew that near the intersection of Vermont and the private right of way he might meet a southbound motorcar at any moment of a summer's day as he was crossing Vermont avenue. Therefore he should have proceeded at a speed at which he could bring the car to a standstill within such time as he might be sure of avoiding a collision. Instead of his making a sudden stop, notwithstanding his prompt effort to do so, he drove on, to the damage of the innocent passenger in the colliding vehicle.

[1-6] While the negligence of Hazelton was slight, still it was a proximate cause of the collision and contributed to respondent's injuries. As a passenger she had nothing to do with the operation of the sedan. Therefore she is not chargeable with the negligence of its driver. By the exercise of a modicum of his ordinary care Hazelton would not have struck the automobile. His speed under the circumstances was greater than reasonable care warranted. The amount of ordinary care exercised by the driver of any power propelled conveyance should be measured by the probable perils to be encountered. A traffic-congested avenue in a highly developed area with a standing street car obscuring the view of the operator of a conveyance crossing such avenue is a place fraught with such perils. Such an area imposes upon the operator the obligation to be constantly on the lookout and to use such reasonable precautions as the circumstances require. His failure to do so is culpable negligence. Taylor v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 172 Cal. 638, 646, 158 P. 119. On arriving at a street intersection the duties of the motorman and the chauffeur are reciprocal. Each is required to approach it with due regard for the right of the other, "and in such a manner as not unreasonably to infringe upon the rights of the other." Merely because a street car runs on steel rails, it has not for that reason an "absolute or pre-eminent right of way over intersections". Primm v. Market Street Ry. Co., 56 Cal.App.2d 480, 486, 132 P.2d 842, 845; Wright v. Los Angeles Ry. Corporation, 14 Cal.2d 168, 173, 93 P.2d 135; O'Connor v. United Railroads, 168 Cal. 43, 48, 141 P. 809. Instead of watching out for the traffic concealed by the "F" car, Hazelton was watching that car. This was negligent inattention to potential perils. Collier v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 60 Cal.App. 2d 169, 175, 140 P.2d 206.

[7-9] Moreover, in view of the findings, Hazelton did not give any warning of his approach nor give one at such reasonable time prior to his arrival at the west rail of the southbound tracks as to forewarn the driver of the approaching automobile. Such failure was negligence and the question of his culpability is an issue for the trial court's determination. Lund v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 25 Cal.2d 287, 298, 153 P.2d 705; White v. Los Angeles Ry. Corporation, 73 Cal.App.2d 720, 727, 167 P.2d 530; Scott v. City & County of San Francisco, 91 Cal.App.2d 887, 889, 206 P.2d 45; Charves v. San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Rys., 44 Cal.App. 221, 224, 186 P. 154. Respondent testified that no bell was sounded and that is sufficient. Simonet v. Frank Pellissier & Sons, 61 Cal.App.2d 41, 45, 141 P.2d 922; Thompson v. Los Angeles Ry., 165 Cal. 748, 752, 134 P. 709; Charves v. San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Railways, supra. The facts having been determined by the trial court are not open to question on appeal if the reasonable inferences drawn from such testimony constitute sufficient proof to establish the issue. Brice v. Evans, 97 Cal. App.2d 412, 217 P.2d 738; Erreca v. Western States Life Ins. Co., 19 Cal.2d 388, 397, 121 P.2d 689, 141 A.L.R. 68; In re Estate of Bristol, 23 Cal.2d 221, 223, 143 P.2d 689. Any substantial testimony is sufficient support for a finding.

[10] Appellant's attack upon the reasoning of the trial judge in deriving his decision is in vain. It has long been established that neither the opinion of a trial judge nor his remarks in the course of trial can impeach the findings of the court. Stone v. Los Angeles County Flood Control District, 81 Cal.App.2d 902, 907, 185 P.2d 396; Redsted v. Weiss, 73 Cal.App.2d 889, 891, 167 P.2d 735.

The District Court of Appeal, McComb, J., held that no fraud was perpetrated on the defendants, that the contract was not uncertain as to dates and amounts of payments due under it, and that defendants were in default at time the action was filed and defendants were not entitled to recover amounts paid under terms of the contract.

McCOMB, Justice.

This is an action to quiet title to certain real property. Defendants (1) appeal from the judgment in favor of plaintiffs, (2) purportedly appeal from (a) the order denying a jury trial and (b) the order denying a motion for a new trial.

Facts: In July, 1945, plaintiffs owned a 17-acre citrus grove located in the county of Los Angeles just east of Glendora. At such time Mr. Snidow and Mr. Hill were general partners in a business known as the L. A. Trailer Service. About the 27th of June, 1945, they had a conversation culminating in an oral agreement for the purchase and sale of the citrus grove owned by plaintiffs. Under the terms of their agreement the price of the property was $55,000 including the fruit on the trees which was either picked or was in the process of being picked. Mr. Hill undertook and agreed to sell a home and a boat which he owned and to apply the proceeds toward the down payment on the grove. It was agreed that Mr. Snidow might take as much money as was or should become available out of the L. A. Trailer Service during the ensuing months and the portion of the proceeds thereof would apply toward the down payment on the grove. In addition defendants agreed to pay $3,000 on January 1 and July 1 of each year.

Pursuant to this agreement defendants entered into possession of the property. Prior to March 15, 1946, defendants had paid plaintiffs $1,000 in cash and also other monies which were applied toward the purchase price. On March 16, 1946, Mr. Snidow and Mr. Hill agreed as to the balance due on the purchase price and in May, 1946, the oral agreement between the parties was reduced to writing.[1]

1. This agreement reads as follows:
"This agreement made and entered into by and between Houston A. Snidow and Mildred K. Snidow, hereinafter sometimes referred to as the seller, and Hayden Hill and Alice Hill, hereinafter sometimes referred to as the purchaser, of and concerning that certain real property consist-

The $3,000 payment due July 1, 1946, was paid on September 30, 1946. No other payments were made during 1946 except receipts from the fruit sold from the grove which were received by plaintiffs and applied toward the purchase price. Plaintiffs made demand on defendants for the $3,000 payment due January 1, 1947, and defendants made a partial payment thereon of $412 on January 27, 1947, and $600 on February 17, 1947. Finally on April 20, 1947, plaintiffs demanded the payment of the balance of the $3,000 due and were told that it was not going to be paid. On April 24, 1947, the present action to quiet title was filed. Defendants filed an answer praying for a judgment that they were the equitable owners of the property, and that plaintiffs be compelled to execute a conveyance and requested an accounting.

The case was tried and a judgment entered in favor of plaintiffs. This judgment was reversed on appeal. (Snidow v. Hill, 87 Cal.App.2d 803, 197 P.2d 801.) Thereafter on March 1, 1949, defendants made a motion for a jury trial which was denied. At the same time the trial judge permitted defendants to file an amended and supplemental answer. By this pleading defendants attempted to allege fraud upon the part of plaintiffs which induced defendants to enter into the contract. Upon the retrial judgment was again entered in favor of plaintiffs and the present appeals have ensued.

[1] Questions: First: Did plaintiff Houston A. Snidow perpetrate a fraud upon defendants or either of them?

This question must be answered in the negative. The trial court expressly found that defendants' allegations of fraud were untrue. Defendants do not attack the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain such finding. Therefore the finding is binding upon appeal.

"Purchasers agree to pay not less than $3,000.00 on the first day of January and the first day of June of each year.

"Should the sellers hereunder advance any money in connection with the care, operation or maintenance of said property, said sum shall be reimbursed by the purchasers out of the first moneys received by the sellers in connection with said transaction.

"Interest on the deferred balance is to be figured on the average unpaid balance as of the 5th day of January and the 5th day of July of each year and is to be added to the principal on said dates.

"This agreement is not assignable or transferable and shall not be filed for record in the Office of the County Recorder.

"It is understood that this property is now subject to Deed of Trust in favor of Anson Lisk, et ux, and the terms of this agreement are subject to the terms of said Deed of Trust in addition to the terms herein, said Deed of Trust to be recorded in the Office of the County Recorder of Los Angeles County, reference to which is hereby made for particulars.

"It is understood and agreed that moneys withdrawn from L. A. Trailer Service by either Houston A. Snidow or Hayden Hill may be credited against the amount due hereunder, as their interest may appear.

[2] Second: Was the contract uncertain as to the dates and amounts of payments due under it?

This question must also be answered in the negative. The contract provided, "Purchasers agree to pay not less than $3,000.00 on the 1st day of January and the 1st day of June of each year." This language is clear and unambiguous. The exact dates of payment as well as the minimum amount thereof is clearly stated in the quoted provision of the contract.

[3] Third: Were the payments of $3,000 twice a year contingent on receipt of monies from the L. A. Trailer Service or the sale of crops?

This question must likewise be answered in the negative. The contract provided, "Sellers hereunder shall have the right to all proceeds from the fruit or other rents, issues, and profits therefrom, until said obligation is paid." Clearly such provision was for payments to be made in addition to the minimum requirement of $6,000 a year as provided elsewhere in the contract where it said, "It is understood and agreed that moneys withdrawn from L. A. Trailer Service by either Houston A. Snidow or Hayden Hill may be credited against the amount due hereunder, as their interest may appear."

[4] Fourth: Were defendants in default at the time the present action was filed?

This question must be answered in the affirmative. The trial court found that defendants were in default at the time the present action was commenced and defendants do not attack the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain such finding. Therefore it is binding upon appeal.

[5] Fifth: Was there a contract between the parties?

This question must also be answered in the affirmative. The trial court found that the parties entered into the agreement hereinabove mentioned. The sufficiency of the evidence to sustain this finding is not questioned. Hence it is binding upon this court.

[6] Sixth: Were defendants entitled to recover the amount paid under the terms of the contract?

This question must be answered in the negative. Defendants' pleadings are entirely devoid of the necessary allegations upon which to predicate a rescission of their contract with plaintiffs. Neither do they in their answer or amended and supplemental answer seek a rescission. On the contrary, in the prayer of their original answer they ask that the court declare them to be the equitable owners of the property in question and compel plaintiffs to execute a valid conveyance thereof to them, while in the prayer to the amended and supplemental answer they ask that plaintiffs take nothing by their suit, but be required to account for all monies received from the grove. Clearly such relief is entirely inconsistent with that which defendants now seek, to wit, a rescission. (Evans v. Duke, 140 Cal. 22, 26, 73 P. 732; Carpenter v. First Trust etc. Bank, 11 Cal.App.2d 668, 672, 54 P.2d 495.)

[7] Seventh: Did the court properly deny defendants' motion for a jury trial?

This point is not available to defendants on this appeal for the reason that no exception was taken or noted by them to the ruling denying a jury trial. Where no exception is taken or noted to the ruling of the trial court in accordance with the provisions of section 646 of the Code of Civil Procedure when a jury trial is denied, such order, not being within the list of orders which are deemed to have been excepted to under the provisions of section 647 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is not reviewable on appeal from the judgment. (In re Estate of Magerl, 201 Cal. 162, 167, 256 P. 204.)

[8] 1. The judgment is affirmed. 2. Since (a) an order denying a motion for a new trial, and (b) an order denying a jury trial are reviewable upon appeal from the judgment but are not appealable orders, the purported appeals from such orders are and each is dismissed.

Hearing Denied Dec. 14, 1950.

Action by Hayden Hill and Alice K. Hill against Houston A. Snidow and Mildred K. Snidow to recover monies alleged due plaintiffs as result of a transaction entered into between parties relative to the purchase by plaintiffs of certain realty. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, William P. Haughton, J., entered judgment in favor of defendants and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McComb, J., held that where defendants as an affirmative defense to the action pleaded that there had theretofore been another action between the same parties arising out of the same transaction and that in such action plaintiffs had omitted to set forth facts in the complaint which facts arose out of the transaction set forth in previous complaint, plaintiffs were barred from now alleging a grievance arising out of the transaction.

Judgment affirmed and purported appeal from order denying motion for new trial dismissed and no motion for jury trial having been made purported appeal from nonexistent order dismissed.

Where plaintiffs brought action to recover monies allegedly due them as result of a transaction entered into between parties relative to purchase of certain realty and defendants as an affirmative defense pleaded that there had been another action by and between same parties arising out of same transaction and that in previous action plaintiffs omitted to set forth facts which arose out of transaction set forth in complaint and plaintiffs could have obtained all relief which they sought by way of counterclaim or cross-complaint in previous action, plaintiffs were barred from alleging a grievance arising out of such transaction. McCOMB, Justice.

Plaintiffs appeal from a judgment in favor of defendants in an action to recover monies allegedly due plaintiffs as the result of a transaction entered into between the parties relative to a 17-acre citrus grove which is the subject of litigation between the same parties in Snidow v. Hill, Cal.App., 222 P.2d 958. There are also purported appeals from the order denying their motion for a new trial and from an order denying a motion for a jury trial.

Facts: In June, 1945, Mr. Snidow and Mr. Hill entered into an agreement relative to the purchase and sale of a 17-acre citrus grove owned by defendants. A dispute having arisen relative to the contract between the parties, Mr. Snidow and his wife on April 24, 1947, filed an action to quiet title to the property. In such action Mr. Hill and his wife were named as defendants. On the same date Mr. Hill and his wife filed an action in the superior court entitled, "Complaint for Reformation of Contract, Money Had and Received, and an Accounting," wherein Mr. Snidow and his wife were named as defendants. This action was predicated upon the agreement of the parties relative to the citrus grove which was the subject of the quiet title action filed by the Snidows. Thereafter Mr. Hill and his wife dismissed the suit which they had filed on April 24, 1947. The Hills filed an answer and an amended and supplemental answer to the quiet title action instituted by Mr. and Mrs. Snidow. The case was tried, and judgment was entered in favor of plaintiffs Snidow and reversed on appeal. (See Snidow v. Hill, 87 Cal.App.2d 803, 197 P. 2d 801.)

On December 16, 1948, plaintiffs filed the present action in the superior court. Defendants as an affirmative defense to this action pleaded, "That there has heretofore been another action by and between the same parties arising out of the same transaction which said action is referred to in plaintiffs' complaint in paragraph XIV thereof and that in said action the plaintiffs herein omit to set forth the facts in the complaint, which facts in truth and in fact arise out of the transaction set forth in the complaint referred to and said plaintiffs are barred from now alleging a grievance arising out of said transaction."

The trial court found that the allegations in the affirmative defense above set forth were true and gave judgment in favor of defendants in the case at bar.

[1] Questions: First: Was the trial court's ruling correct?

This question must be answered in the affirmative. Section 439 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads as follows: "If the defendant omits to set up a counter-claim upon a cause arising out of the transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, neither he nor his assignee can afterwards maintain an action against the plaintiff therefor."

[2] This rule is well expressed by Mr. Presiding Justice Moore in Brunswig Drug Co. v. Springer, 55 Cal.App.2d 444, 449, 130 P.2d 758, where it is said, "A party cannot by negligence or design withhold issues and litigate them in separate actions * * *. He may not split his demands or his defenses. * * * Equity will not deal with a case by piece-meal."

In the present case plaintiffs could have obtained all the relief which they now seek by way of a counterclaim or cross-complaint filed in the action to quiet title instituted by Mr. and Mrs. Snidow (defendants herein).

[3] Second: Should plaintiffs have been permitted a jury trial in the instant case?

This question must be answered in the negative. The record fails to disclose that plaintiffs ever demanded a jury trial in this action though they did make a motion in the quiet title action for a jury trial which was denied.

[4] 1. The judgment is affirmed. 2. Since the order denying the motion for a new trial is nonappealable, the purported appeal therefrom is dismissed, and (3) no motion for a jury trial having been made in the instant case the purported appeal from the nonexistant order is also dismissed.

HOOVER et al. v. STRIEGEL et al.
Civ. 17444.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.
Oct. 16, 1950.

Thomas Fred Hoover and Barbara Marshall, an infant, by Pauline Houston, her guardian ad litem, sued Robert E. Striegel and Cora E. Striegel for injuries resulting when defendant Robert E. Striegel stopped his automobile at intersection and then made left turn and collided with a motorcycle driven by plaintiff Thomas Fred Hoover, which was coming through intersection from direction opposite to that in which automobile was traveling before automobile made left turn. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Otto J. Emme, J., entered judgments for the defendants, and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that a given instruction to effect that as a matter of law the driver of a vehicle which has been brought to a stop before entering an intersection where a left turn is to be made need not, under any circumstances, signify his intentions so to do, was error prejudicial to plaintiffs.

Judgments reversed.

1. Automobiles ⇐171(9, 12)

A motorist may turn to left at intersection only after giving an appropriate signal in event any other vehicle may be affected by such movement, and turning to left in intersection, without warning, and cutting corner to go into intersecting street in front of a vehicle coming in opposite direction, may constitute negligence. Vehicle Code, §§ 544–546.

2. Automobiles ⇐171(9)

A driver of a motor vehicle which has been brought to a stop before entering into an intersection where a left-hand turn is to be made cannot, as a matter of law, proceed after stopping without signifying his intention to turn. Vehicle Code, §§ 544–546.

3. Automobiles ⇐245(16)

In action for injuries resulting when defendant stopped automobile at intersection and then made left turn and collided with plaintiff's motorcycle, which was coming through intersection from direction opposite to that in which defendant was traveling before defendant made left turn, whether motorcycle would be affected by defendant's turning to left, and so whether in exercise of ordinary care defendant should have given appropriate signal to indicate intention to turn left, were for jury. Vehicle Code, §§ 544–546.

4. Automobiles ⇐245(82)
Negligence ⇐93(5)

The mere fact that motorcycle which collided with automobile in intersection was being operated more than half an hour after sundown and that an ordinarily prudent person, placed in position of plaintiff passenger on motorcycle, would or should have known such fact, did not impute to such passenger the negligence of operator of motorcycle and did not constitute negligence on part of passenger as a matter of law.

5. Negligence ⇐93(1)

Negligence of driver of a vehicle in operating vehicle cannot be imputed to a guest who has no control over driver, or supervision or direction as to manner in which vehicle should be operated.

6. Negligence ⇐117

In action for injuries resulting when defendant stopped automobile at intersection and then made left turn and collided with plaintiff's motorcycle which was coming through intersection from direction opposite to that in which defendant was traveling before defendant made left turn, answer alleging in general terms that plaintiff motorcycle operator and his plaintiff passenger were guilty of contributory negligence did not include the defense of imputed negligence as to plaintiff passenger.

Automobiles ⇐246(10)

In action for injuries resulting when defendant stopped automobile at intersection and then made left turn and collided with plaintiff's motorcycle which was coming through intersection from direction opposite to that in which defendant was traveling before defendant made left turn, given instruction to effect that as a matter of law driver of vehicle which has been brought to a stop before entering an intersection where left turn is to be made need not, under any circumstances, signify intention so to do, was error prejudicial to plaintiff where probability was that jury found for defendant as instructed after first determining, because of such erroneous instruction, that defendant was not negligent. Jones, Thompson & Kelly, Reginald I. Bauder, Henry F. Walker, Los Angeles, for respondents.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal by plaintiffs from judgments for defendants entered on verdicts of a jury in an action for damages for personal injuries.

The accident occurred about 8:00 p. m. on June 25, 1946, at the intersection of Ferndale Avenue and Black Oak Drive in Los Angeles. The sun set at 7:08 p. m. that day. Plaintiff Hoover was driving his motorcycle south on Ferndale Avenue. Plaintiff Marshall was his guest-passenger. Defendant Robert Striegel was driving an automobile with lighted headlights north on Ferndale Avenue. He intended to make a left turn into Black Oak Drive. As he approached the intersection an automobile with lighted headlights was approaching from the north. After this car passed, without giving any signal he made a left turn, straddling the button as he did so. Striegel testified that he did not put out his hand for a left turn but just for a stop. He stopped at the intersection to allow the vehicle from the north to pass through. As Striegel was making the turn, plaintiffs on the motorcycle, without the headlight lighted, came into the intersection. The Striegel car collided with the motorcycle. When the vehicles came to rest, both wheels of the motorcycle were under the front bumper of the automobile.

Hoover testified he first saw the Striegel car when he was about 40 feet north of the north end of the intersection and at that time the car was about 80 feet from the south end of the intersection; that Striegel did not give any indication he was going to make a left turn. A police officer testified the accident occurred at 7:45 p. m. Two officers testified that when they arrived at the scene at 8:05 p. m., it was "near dark" —"in the late evening dusk state."

Appellants' assignments of error are that the court erred in giving two instructions, which we call A and B, and in refusing to give an instruction which we call C. The instructions read:

A. "You are instructed that the provisions of law requiring a motorist who is turning to the left to signify his intention to do so by giving an appropriate signal for a distance of fifty feet, do not apply to a vehicle which has been brought to a stop immediately before entering the intersection where the left turn is made." ("Requested by defendant.")

B. "You are instructed that while ordinarily the negligence of the operator of a vehicle is not imputed to a passenger on or in such vehicle, however, this rule is subject to the exception that should you find from the evidence that the motorcycle in question was being operated on the public highway one-half hour after sundown and one-half hour before sunup without a lighted headlight, and if you further find that an ordinarily prudent person, placed in the same position that Barbara Marshall was as a passenger on the motorcycle, in the light of all the surrounding circumstances would or should have known that the motorcycle was traveling on the public highway without a lighted headlight, and if you further find that the failure to have the lighted headlight contributed to the happening of the accident in any manner, however slight, then, unless you further find that any unusual circumstances were shown in evidence which excused her from negligence, if she was negligent, then neither the operator nor the passenger may recover from the defendants." (The instruction bears the notation "Requested by Judge.")

C. "You are reminded of the fact that the vehicle in which plaintiffs were riding at the time of the accident in question was then being operated by the plaintiff Thomas Fred Hoover. You are instructed that the driver's negligence, if any, may not be imputed to the other plaintiff and that, therefore, you should find that there was no contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff Barbara Marshall, unless you should find that there was personal negligence on her part—that is, some negligent conduct of her own—which contributed as a proximate cause to her injury." ("Requested by plaintiffs".)

After the jury had deliberated about an hour, they returned to the courtroom. The foreman indicated they desired some instructions reread. The court asked which ones. "The Foreman: Someone stated where there is a left hand turn, the stopping signal was made, that you said it wasn't necessary to make the left hand signal. That is one." The court then read section 544 of the Vehicle Code to the jury, the instructions set forth in the footnote,[1] and reread instruction A. The following then occurred: "The Foreman: That covers all of that. It also covers part of another question that was asked as to the legality of the motorcycle coming through without the light. I think you instructed us to regard the law in that last there.

"Mr. Bauder: I think Mrs. Anderson has a question.

"Mrs. Anderson: (A juror) if I may ask the Judge this question: That was just the point, that very last statement you made, Judge Emme. When we come to a stop our hand goes down naturally to give the signal. Then when we proceed and we are going to make a left hand turn we do make a signal to signify that we are turning left at that point; even though we have stopped and given the signal our hand goes down; then we do turn and the law says we make a signal this way to make a left turn.

"The Court: All I can do is read you the instructions and the provisions of the law which I have. I think the law I have read to you answers your questions. * * *

"A juror: Is this the law? If I am coming up to an intersection, I have made my stopsign, how does anybody know I am going to turn left unless when I proceed I put my hand out that I am going to turn left?

1. "You are instructed that the failure of a motorist to signal his left turn at an intersection and making such a turn when a motorist approaching from the opposite direction is so close as to constitute an immediate hazard, is negligence per se.

"The driver of a vehicle within an intersection intending to turn to the left should yield the right of way to any vehicle approaching from the opposite direction which is within the intersection or so close thereto as to constitute an immediate hazard.

"Said driver turning left having so yielded and having given a signal when and as required by this code may make such left turn and the drivers of all other vehicles approaching the intersection from said opposite direction shall yield the right of way to the driver making the left turn.

"Both the approach for a right turn and a right turn shall be made from that portion of the roadway as close as practicable to the right-hand curb or edge of the highway.

"(b) Approach for a left turn shall be made in that portion of the right half of the roadway nearest the center line thereof and after entering the intersection the left turn shall be made so as to leave the intersection to the right of the center line of the roadway being entered, unless otherwise directed by markers, buttons or signs.

"(c) Local authorities in their respective jurisdiction may, by placing markers, buttons or signs within or adjacent to intersections, require and direct that a different course from that prescribed in this section be traveled by vehicles turning, and when markers, buttons or signs are so placed no driver of a vehicle shall make a turn other than as directed and required by such markers, buttons or signs.

"The words just quoted from the Vehicle Code namely, that 'no person shall turn a vehicle from a direct course or move right or left upon a roadway unless and until such movement can be made with reasonable safety,' do not mean that the driver of a motor vehicle, before making such a turn, must know that there is absolutely no possibility of accident.

"They mean that before starting to turn a vehicle on a public highway, and while making the turn, the driver of the vehicle must use such precaution as would satisfy a reasonably prudent person, acting under similar circumstances, that the turn can be made safely.

"You are instructed that Sections 618, 619 and 620 of the California Vehicle Cole in full force and effect at the time of the happening of this accident provided that every vehicle, including motorcycles, during the period from one-half hour after sunset to one-half hour before sunrise, was required to be equipped with at least one, and not more than two, lighted head lamps while operated upon any public highway.

"In that connection you are further instructed that if you find from the evidence here that the motorcycle operated by the plaintiff Hoover was being operated in violation of this requirement, such conduct constitutes negligence in and of itself and, if such negligence proximately contributed to the happening of the accident, plaintiff Hoover is not entitled to recover and your verdict must be in favor of defendants."

"The Court: I have given you the law on that."

Later the jury again returned to the courtroom and the following occurred:

"The Court: Mr. Foreman, have you arrived at a verdict?

"The Foreman: Your Honor, they still differ on your instructions. I mean, they don't interpret them the same. We would like to have read over the four points of negligence and the last part that you read before in regard to the negligence of the boy running without lights.

"The Court: You mean the issues to be determined, the various forms of issues to be determined?

"The Foreman: The issues to be determined, yes."

The court then read California Jury Instruction Civil No. 113, issues to be determined, and asked: "What was the other question?

"The Foreman: The last part of the question—I mean the last part of what you read to us before about the boy running on a motorcycle without lights."

The court then reread instruction B on the question of imputed negligence.

Vehicle Code section 544, in part, reads: "No person shall turn a vehicle [from a direct course or move right or left upon a roadway] unless and until such movement can be made with reasonable safety and then only after the giving of an appropriate signal in the manner provided herein in the event any other vehicle may be affected by such movement." Section 545, in part, reads: "The signals herein required shall be given either by means of the hand and arm or by a signal lamp or mechanical signal device of a type approved by the department". Section 546, in part, reads: "All signals herein required given by hand and arm shall be given from the left side of a vehicle in the following manner and such signals shall indicate as follows: (a) Left turn—hand and arm extended horizontally beyond the side of the vehicle."

[1-3] We are of the opinion that instruction A is manifestly not a correct statement of the law. A turn to the left can be made "only after the giving of an appropriate signal in the manner provided herein [hand and arm extended horizontally beyond the side of the vehicle] in the event any other vehicle may be affected by such movement." Turning to the left in an intersection, without warning, and cutting the corner to go into the intersecting street in front of a vehicle coming in the opposite direction may constitute negligence. Poncino v. Reid-Murdock & Co., 136 Cal.App. 223, 28 P.2d 932. The effect of the instruction was to tell the jury that, as a matter of law, the driver of a vehicle which has been brought to a stop before entering an intersection where a left turn is to be made, need not, under any circumstances, signify his intention so to do. Whether the motorcycle would be affected by defendant's turning to the left, and hence whether, in the exercise of ordinary care, he should have given the appropriate signal to indicate his intention to make the left turn were questions of fact for the jury. McDevitt v. Rogers, 58 Cal. App.2d 307, 308, 136 P.2d 323; Day v. General Petroleum Corp., 32 Cal.App.2d 220, 89 P.2d 718.

[4] The court erred in giving instruction B. This instruction told the jury that, as a matter of law, the negligence of the operator of the motorcycle was imputed to plaintiff Marshall if the motorcycle was being operated a half hour after sundown, without a lighted headlight, and if an ordinarily prudent person, placed in the position of plaintiff Marshall, "would or should have known that the motorcycle was traveling on the public highway without a lighted headlight," and if the failure to have the lighted headlight contributed to the accident; and that unless some unusual circumstances were shown which excused her from negligence, if she was negligent, neither she nor the operator could recover. The instruction is complex, confusing, and a wholly incorrect statement of the law. The law does not recognize any such exception to the general rule of imputed negligence as stated in the instruction. The mere fact that the motorcycle was being operated more than half an hour after sundown and that an ordinarily prudent person, placed in the position of plaintiff Marshall, would or should have known such fact, did not impute to her the negligence, if any, of the operator; neither did it constitute negligence on her part as a matter of law. The instruction is a formula instruction and it completely ignores the question of proximate cause.

[5] Negligence of the driver of a vehicle in operating the machine cannot be imputed to a guest on the ride who has no control over him, or supervision or direction as to the manner in which the vehicle should be operated. In Edwards v. Freeman, 34 Cal.2d 589, at page 592, 212 P. 2d 883, at page 884, the rule is stated thus: "In the absence of the essential characteristic of the right of control, there is no true agency and, therefore, no 'imputation' of the driver's negligence to the passenger. [Citations.] * * * And, as said in the Marchetti v. Southern Pac. Co. case, supra (204 Cal. at page 681, 269 P. at page 530): 'The negligence of the driver of a machine * * * cannot be imputed to a passenger therein, in the absence of any evidence showing that the latter exercised some control over the driver or that he possessed the power to supervise or direct the manner in which the automobile should be operated. * * *'" There was no evidence of any relationship between plaintiffs Hoover and Marshall other than that of host and guest. There was no evidence that Marshall had any control over Hoover or any supervision or direction as to the manner in which the motorcycle should be operated. The mere fact that an ordinarily prudent person, placed in the position of Marshall, would or should have known that the motorcycle was being operated without a headlight, did not impute Hoover's negligence, if any, to her. The only evidence on the subject was that she did not know whether the headlight was lighted.

Instruction C is a standard form of instruction (California Jury Instruction Civil No. 210-C), a correct statement of the law applicable to the facts of this case, and upon the record should have been given. There being no evidence that plaintiff Marshall had any control over Hoover or supervision or direction as to the manner in which the motorcycle should be operated, the jury was required to find that there was no contributory negligence on her part unless it found there was negligent conduct of her own which contributed as a proximate cause to her injury.

[6] Further, the answer did not include the defense of imputed negligence. In general terms it was alleged that plaintiffs were guilty of contributory negligence. "Such a plea is not sufficient for one who seeks to charge a person with the negligence of another in the operation of an automobile; a defendant must assert that the injured person controlled, or had the right to control, the vehicle in which he was riding." Campagna v. Market St. Ry. Co., 24 Cal.2d 304, 307, 149 P.2d 281, 283.

[7] The evidence would support a determination that plaintiff Hoover's injuries were proximately caused by the negligence of defendant, or by his own negligence, or by the simultaneous negligence of both defendant and plaintiff Hoover. It would appear from the testimony of Robert Striegel that the jury could have readily found that he was negligent and that his negligence was a proximate cause of the accident. The evidence would support a finding that if he had given a signal for a left turn the accident would not have happened. It is apparent from the questions of the jurors that the jury placed great emphasis on instruction A. It was reread and emphasized. The verdict for defendant and against Hoover may have resulted from the tenable view of the evidence that although Hoover was not negligent he could not recover because under the erroneous view of the law, stated in instruction A, defendant was not negligent. The probability is that the jury did not decide whether Hoover was negligent, for if they followed the instruction as to the issues to be determined (which was reread), and we must presume they did, they first determined whether defendant was negligent, and having determined, because of instruction A, that he was not, they then found, as instructed to do, for defendant. On the evidence, the effect of instruction A was to direct a verdict for defendant. The error was clearly prejudicial. Edwards v. Freeman, 34 Cal.2d 589, 594, 212 P.2d 883; Huebotter v. Follett, 27 Cal.2d 765, 770, 167 P.2d 193.

All three instructions applied to the case of plaintiff Marshall. Instruction B was not only reread and emphasized, but reread without any request therefor and out of context. If Hoover was negligent, his negligence did not excuse the negligence of Striegel as to plaintiff Marshall. It is doubtful whether the jury would have found against Marshall if erroneous instructions A and B had not been given and instruction C had been given. Everything we have said with respect to the prejudicial character of instruction A as to Hoover, applies to Marshall. It is apparent she suffered serious prejudice. We cannot say that had the errors not occurred, a different result would not have ensued. Plaintiffs are entitled to have their case retried under proper instructions.

The judgments are reversed.

PEOPLE v. HOWES.
Cr. 2667.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Oct. 16, 1950.

Vernon LeRoy Howes was convicted in the Superior Court, Santa Cruz County, James L. Atteridge, J., for grand theft, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that the information properly charged grand theft and that the evidence established defendant's guilt of a single offense of grand theft of money by larceny, not by embezzlement.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Larceny ⇐28(4)

An information based on series of thefts, but charging single offense of grand theft, need not specifically allege date and amount of each theft. Pen. Code, §§ 487, 952.

2. Indictment and information ⇐71

The sufficiency of indictment or information depends on whether it gives accused notice of offense charged. Pen. Code, § 952.

3. Indictment and Information ⇐110(3)

An indictment or information in words of statute defining offense charged is sufficient.

4. Criminal law ⇐1186(4)

Even a defective information or indictment will not result in reversal of conviction, unless a substantial right of defendant on merits is adversely affected. Pen. Code, § 960.

5. Larceny ⇐28(4)

An amended information, charging that defendant, on or about and between specified dates, in named city and county, wilfully and feloniously took more than $200 in money and of personal property of named partners, properly charged grand theft, though exact amount and precise dates of alleged misappropriations were not stated. Pen. Code, § 487.

6. Larceny ⇐60, 65

Evidence that defendant charged with grand theft of money of partnership operating garage with tire department headed by defendant at time of theft, took tires belonging to firm with intent to sell them for himself and keep proceeds, and that he sold tires and received money therefor with intent to keep it, which he did, established his guilt of grand theft of money, not tires, by larceny, not by embezzlement, as he was not in lawful possession of tires. Pen. Code, §§ 487, 503.

7. Trusts ⇐354

The owner of stolen property may impose constructive trust on proceeds of thief's sale thereof, as such proceeds belong to owner of property.

8. Larceny ⇐55

In prosecution for grand theft of money, evidence showed defendant's theft of money received by him as proceeds of his sale of his employer's automobile tires, so as to sustain conviction, regardless of whether evidence also showed theft of tires by defendant. Pen. Code, § 487.

9. Criminal law ⇐29

Where theft is accomplished by false representations, each receipt of stolen money or property by thief is usually held to constitute separate offense though false representations were made but once. Pen. Code, § 487.

10. Criminal law ⇐29

Where several deliveries of stolen goods are made by thief to seller thereof as parts of same general transaction, there is but one offense of larceny. Pen. Code, § 487.

11. Criminal law ⇐29

A series of thefts by employee from same employer as parts of general plan constitutes but one offense. Pen. Code, § 487.

12. Criminal law ⇐29

A series of thefts from same owner by same person with but one general intention or impulse and pursuant to one plan constitutes but one offense, whether accomplished by larceny or embezzlement. Pen. Code, §§ 487, 503.

13. Criminal law ⇐29

A series of thefts of automobile tires and proceeds of sales thereof from dealers by employee thereof, who was motivated generally by one design, purpose and impulse arising from a grievance because of dealers' failure to pay him commissions promised on tire sales, constituted but one offense, as there was but one general intent. Pen.Code, § 487.

14. Criminal law ⇐1170½(1)

Error, if any, in trial court's overruling of defendant's objection to question, asked state's witness on redirect examination by district attorney, concerning subject opened by defendant's counsel on cross-examination of witness, was not prejudicial to defendant.

15. Criminal law ⇐1166½(12)

The trial court's error remarking that defendant's counsel, whose objection to question asked state's witness on redirect examination was made after witness answered, was supposed to speak up loudly and could hear what was said, unless he needed a Sonotone like one of jurors, was rendered nonprejudicial to defendant by judge's apology therefor and statement that he meant no criticism of defendant's counsel.

In prosecution for grand theft of money received and kept by defendant as proceeds of his sales of automobile tires belonging to his employers while he was in charge of their tire department, defendant's counsel's interrogation of one of employers as witness concerning shortage in another department of employers' business was improper as involving collateral issue. Pen. Code, § 487.

17. Witnesses ⇐383, 392(1)

In prosecution for grand theft of money, received by defendant as proceeds of his sales of his employers' automobile tires as his own while he was in charge of tire department of employers' garage business, a bill, offered in evidence on defendant's cross-examination of state's witness, to rebut his testimony that tire retread shop operated by him did no cash business, was properly excluded as involving collateral matter on which witness could not be impeached, where date of bill was outside time covered by information. Pen.Code, § 487.

18. Witnesses ⇐291

The trial court's refusal to permit further interrogation of prosecution witness by defendant, on recross-examination, as to matters already discussed at length on cross-examination of witness, was not error.

19. Larceny ⇐65

Evidence sustained conviction of grand theft of money received by defendant as proceeds of his sales of his employers' automobile tires. Pen.Code, § 487.

I. B. Padway, San Jose, John R. Golden, San Francisco, of counsel, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, David K. Lener, Deputy Attorney General, June D. Borina, District Attorney, Santa Cruz County, Santa Cruz, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Appellant, Vernon LeRoy Howes, was found guilty of grand theft. From the judgment of conviction and from the order denying his motion for a new trial this appeal is prosecuted. Appellant contends that the information was insufficient, that the evidence, at most, shows a series of petty thefts and not grand theft, and that prejudicial error was committed by the trial court in its rulings, instructions and comments. There is no merit in any of these contentions.

Facts.

Crowley and Traulsen, a partnership, operate a general garage business in Watsonville. The garage operated a tire department which was the exclusive distributor of Firestone tires in the area. For three years prior to July of 1949, when his employment was terminated, appellant had been employed in the tire department of the garage, and for a year prior to that date had been in charge of that department. As head of that department he was responsible for the purchase and sale of all tires by the garage. He spent part of his working hours in the country soliciting business and making deliveries, and part of his time at the garage. He was paid for his services on an hourly basis, and also was promised by the partners a commission, but whether on net or gross profits is in dispute. Admittedly, no commissions were ever paid, and this fact was a source of friction between the parties.

The books of the garage were kept by a bookkeeper employed by the partnership. The accounts receivable ledgers showed accounts in the names of James Cantrell, Byers Garage, Charles Manfre, Richard Barnes, Tony Simas and Lloyd Mitchell. The evidence shows that appellant sold to the company and persons above mentioned, and to others, tires belonging to his employers, and pocketed the proceeds. In practically each case he represented to the persons he dealt with that he was engaged in business for himself as well as for his employer, and that the tires, which he sold for less than the usual price, were his tires.

The modus operandi of appellant can best be explained by a reference to the testimony of some of the witnesses. Cantrell testified that he operated a fleet of trucks in his produce and hay business; that he bought tires from appellant because he could get them cheaper than elsewhere; that when he first dealt with appellant he did not know that appellant was employed by Crowley and Traulsen; that appellant told him that he was buying tires in Salinas and Los Angeles and selling them for himself; that he made several purchases from appellant; that he paid appellant by checks made out to appellant or to cash; that the checks were for $88.65, $77 and $54; that a couple of months after he had paid for the tires he received a bill from the garage for the same tires; that he immediately went to the garage and talked to appellant who told him: "Don't worry about it, it is just a mistake; it will be all fixed up, cleared up"; that this occurred in June or July of 1949; that during the next month he made another purchase from appellant, and, at the end of that month, received another statement from the garage billing him for all of the tires he had purchased; that he did not know that these tires belonged to the garage.

Byers testified that he operates a garage; that in June or early in July, 1949, he bought two tires from appellant, giving appellant $56.64 in cash; that several weeks later he received a bill from the garage for $476.16, which billed him for the tires he had purchased and for many others that he had not purchased or ordered; that he asked appellant what the bill meant, and was told "it was just more or less routine"; that at his request appellant wrote on the bill "paid Roy."

Mitchell testified that he operates a tire shop; that in September, 1949, he was billed by the garage for $279.71; that included in the bill was a charge of $158.40 for tires and tubes which he had neither ordered nor received; that the spurious charge was on an invoice dated July 26, 1949; that he telephoned to the office girl at the garage and did not pay the $158.40.

Golarte is a truck driver and lettuce loader. He testified that in May, 1949, appellant brought three tires to his home and asked him to deliver them to one Manfre who had purchased them, and to collect $120 from Manfre; that he delivered the tires to Manfre who gave him a check made out to cash for $120; that upon appellant's direction, and in his presence, he cashed the check at a bar and appellant picked up and pocketed the money; that appellant then bought him a drink and left some money at the bar for Golarte to purchase drinks.

Manfre testified that a day or two before Golarte delivered the three tires he had discussed the purchase of tires with appellant; that appellant told him that Golarte had three tires for sale; that when Golarte delivered the tires he believed that the tires belonged to Golarte, and gave him the $120 check.

Simas testified that he made several purchases of tires from appellant and paid for them by checks made out to cash and delivered to appellant, or by checks made out to his employee Pini, who endorsed them to appellant; that he was billed by the garage for $102.23; that after appellant was arrested he discussed this bill with appellant; that appellant gave him a check for $100 on the morning of his preliminary examination; that the witness then called the police in appellant's presence and told them that appellant had paid him and that he was going to take the check to the garage; that the check was not honored by the bank on which it was drawn, appellant having no account there; that he thought appellant owned and operated the tire shop in the garage, and that the garage allowed him to use their billheads.

Pini, an employee of Simas, testified that he bought tires from appellant at the garage and paid for them with checks made out by Simas to himself or to appellant; that one check was for $25, and another for $30.

Barnes, who lived in Hollister and was a general trucker, testified that he purchased six tires from appellant at the garage; that for these he gave appellant two checks payable to cash, one for $112.47 and one for $100, and another check payable to appellant for $162; that later he was billed for these tires by the garage; that the tires were all Firestones and delivery was made in Pajaro.

The Salinas store manager for the Firestone Company, one Fagan by name, was shown a statement on Crowley and Traulsen's billhead dated May 27, 1949, which indicated that the Salinas store had borrowed twelve truck tires from appellant's garage, and testified that the cost of such tires would have been over $900; that he had never received the tires and had never heard of the merchandise invoiced therein; that appellant had never personally bought tires from the Salinas store.

The garage bookkeeper testified that most of the sales tags for the tire department of the garage were made out by appellant, and she identified many such tags as being in the handwriting of appellant. These were the tags that were used as the basis for sending bills to Cantrell and the others.

Crowley, one of the partners, testified that after he discovered that Manfre had three Firestone tires he checked the inventory and found no shortages, because entries had been made to cover up the shortages.

Jacobson, a Watsonville police officer, talked to appellant on July 29, 1949, in the police station. He testified that he confronted appellant with certain canceled checks and asked him to explain them; that appellant stated that he was selling tires on his own, that is, that he would sell "on the side to somebody, make a couple of dollars on it, then I would replace the tires in stock"; that he would keep the inventory straight by buying tires from brokers and thus replace those he had taken; that appellant, at that time, signed a statement, which, in part, stated: "About six months ago I started to sell some new tires at a small margin of profit. I used the money to replace the tires and kept the profit I made on the sale. As near as I can remember, I made about 30 sales in this period of time which netted me approximately $200. I'm sure it was not over this amount. This is all I ever took from the garage."

Another Watsonville police officer, Dicks by name, testified that on August 5, 1949, appellant was re-arrested when it appeared that the shortage was greater than at first thought, and at that time appellant made to him substantially the same statements made to Jacobson.

Appellant took the stand in his own defense and told a story that was contradicted by other witnesses in almost every respect. He testified that after the garage failed to give him a commission on tire sales, he started to buy and sell tires on his own account. Some of these tires, he said, he purchased for cash at the Salinas Firestone store, that store billing them to a Salinas service station. Fagan, the Salinas manager, positively denied this. Appellant also said that some of the tires were purchased from the Firestone San Jose store. This was denied by the operators of that store. Appellant denied ever selling tires belonging to the garage. He purported to explain the Golarte-Manfre transaction by testifying that the tires belonged to Golarte and that he, the appellant merely told Manfre about Golarte. He denied making one cent on the transaction. This story was directly denied by Golarte. Some of the checks cashed by him he identified as being given by him for tires which he had sold personally to Simas and Cantrell. He admitted making out the memorandum slip indicating that the Salinas store had taken twelve tires. This was denied. He denied receiving any money from Byers, claiming that Byers had dealt with the garage. He denied writing "paid Roy" on Byers' bill. He wrote "Paid in full, Roy" nine times on a sheet of paper. He explained his admissions to the police officers as being simply admissions that he was selling tires for himself, and that his statement that he owed the garage $200 merely meant that was the profit he made on the private sales, and the police officers had told him such profits belonged to the garage. He testified that the Salinas tire purchases were made from Fagan or from Rawley, and the San Jose purchases from Leo Cain or his successor.

O. E. Heinrich, as a handwriting expert, testified that the words "paid Roy" were written by appellant. Also in rebuttal, Ehlert, who runs the retread shop for Firestone in San Jose, and who succeeded Leo Cain, testified that appellant had never been in his San Jose store between January 1 and August 1, 1949; that on August 1, 1949, appellant tried to buy some recapped tires from him, and he told appellant that his store only processed tires and did not sell them or handle money; that appellant asked him to sign a statement certifying that appellant had purchased tires from the retread shop, but he refused to do so; that his shop would pick up, process and return tires to Crowley and Traulsen; that the records of his store show that appellant purchased no tires from that store between January 1 and August 1, 1949. Leo Cain, predecessor of Ehlert, testified that he had had no dealings with appellant personally, and positively denied selling any tires to appellant.

Alston, in charge of the retread shop for Firestone in Salinas, testified that he and Fagan picked up and delivered retreads to Crowley and Traulsen's during the period here involved, and that he had never sold any tires to appellant; that between August 15 and September 1, 1949, appellant asked him to sign a statement that he had sold appellant new tires; that he refused to sign the statement because it was not true; that appellant asked him to get the store manager to sign it; that the witness left the paper on the desk of the manager who was then on vacation; that he knew nothing about the twelve tires charged to the Salinas store; that he had never received them. Fagan likewise denied receiving the tires, and testified that his records showed no such transaction. He denied ever selling tires to appellant personally, and denied that he had covered up such sales by charging the transaction to service stations.

The jury, after fifteen minutes deliberation, found appellant guilty of grand theft as charged.

[1-5] The first contention of appellant is that the amended information is fatally defective. The amended information accuses appellant of a felony, namely: "Violation of Section 487 of the Penal Code of the State of California in that on, or about and between the 14th day of May, 1949, and July 26, 1949 in the City of Watsonville, County of Santa Cruz, State of California, said defendant did wilfully, unlawfully and feloniously take more than $200.-00, in money, lawful money of the United States, and of the personal property of Crowley & Traulsen." It is the thought of appellant that such an information is defective because the exact amount of the defalcation is not stated, nor is the precise date of the misappropriation or misappropriations set forth. He also argues that, since the offense is charged as having occurred between May 14, 1949, and July 26, 1949, it cannot be ascertained whether one theft of "more than" $200 occurred, or a series of thefts totalling "more than" $200 is charged, and that if less than $200 was taken each day, even though the total exceeded $200, he would be guilty of only a series of petty thefts and not of grand theft. It seems to be the thought of appellant that when an information is based on a series of thefts, although but one offense is charged, the date and amount of each theft must be specifically alleged. Undoubtedly, prior to the 1927 amendments to section 952 of the Penal Code, Stats. of 1927, Chap. 612, p. 1043, the contention of appellant would have been sound. The case of People v. Barnard, 63 Cal.App. 562, 219 P. 756, cited by him, and others that could be cited, so held. But many of the old technical rules of pleading in criminal cases, including the rule contended for, were eliminated by the 1927 amendment, and since that time the Barnard case has been specifically overruled. In People v. Chait, 69 Cal.App.2d 503, 512, 159 P.2d 445, 451, the court directly held that the Barnard case was no longer the law because it "was decided before the Legislature in 1927 amended the Penal Code to eliminate many of the frivolous technicalities found in the decisions relating to criminal procedure." After discussing the 1927 amendment the court stated, 69 Cal.App.2d at page 513, 159 P.2d at page 451, that the present rule is that, "the indictment is to be tested in the view of section 952 of the Penal Code—whether it is sufficient to give the accused notice of the offense of which he is charged. * * under that section it is sufficient to charge the accused 'in the words of the enactment describing the offense.'" The rule is now well settled that an indictment or information is sufficient if it follows the wording of the statute defining the offense. It is also the law that even a defective information or indictment will not result in a reversal unless a substantial right of the defendant on the merits is adversely affected. Section 960, Penal Code; People v. Codina, 30 Cal.2d 356, 359, 181 P.2d 881; People v. Schoeller, 96 Cal.App.2d 61, 214 P.2d 565; People v. Macias, 77 Cal.App.2d 71, 78, 174 P.2d 895; People v. Benenato, 77 Cal.App.2d 350, 362, 175 P.2d 296; People v. Gelardi, 77 Cal.App.2d 467, 472, 175 P.2d 855; People v. Israel, 91 Cal.App.2d 773, 778, 206 P.2d 62; People v. Tullos, 57 Cal. App.2d 233, 238, 134 P.2d 280. Tested by these standards, the amended information properly charges grand theft.

Appellant does not seriously attack the sufficiency of the evidence to show that he committed a series of crimes, but contends that the evidence shows that he stole tires and not money, and that, at most, the evidance shows a series of petty thefts and no single theft of over $200 as required by section 487 of the Penal Code to constitute grand theft.

[6] It is the contention of appellant that because he was charged with taking money and not with stealing the tires, it must have been the theory of the prosecution that appellant was lawfully in possession of the tires, but stole the proceeds received on the various sales, and thus committed embezzlement and not larceny. But in either event, so he claims, there were only a series of petty thefts each of less than $200. A proper analysis of the facts and the law demonstrates that these arguments are unsound. Whether or not appellant was in lawful possession of the particular tires is a difficult question to answer, but whether he was or not he was guilty of the theft of money, although he may also have been guilty of the theft of the tires. It could be argued that, although appellant was in charge of the tire department, and therefore in lawful possession of the tires as agent of the garage, he did not sell the tires as agent and such sales were not made of tires entrusted to him for the purpose of selling them for the garage, but were sales of tires he claimed to own on his own account. Thus, the case is not necessarily one where the trusted agent sells his principal's property and unlawfully pockets the proceeds, but may be one where appellant, intending to sell the tires for himself and to keep the proceeds, took the tires, sold them for a cheap price, and pocketed the proceeds. Thus, after he took the tires with such intent he was not in lawful possession of them, and when he took the money he had a felonious intent. This would constitute larceny and not embezzlement. See discussion 10 Cal. Jur. p. 240, § 4. There can be no doubt that the evidence shows that at the very time he received the money from the purchasers, appellant intended to keep it. The cash paid was paid to and kept by him; some of the checks were made to him or to cash, and cashed by him, and the proceeds retained. All of the evidence indicates that from the time appellant first approached the purchasers he intended to keep the proceeds of such sales for himself. Thus, since the felonious intent existed at the very time the money was taken, the crime is grand theft by larceny and not grand theft by embezzlement.

[7, 8] But, says appellant, such argument proves that he stole tires and not money, and therefore his conviction of stealing money cannot stand. While the evidence may show a theft of the tires, it also shows a theft of the money. A thief does not become the owner of the property that he steals. He gets no title to it, and can pass no title to it. But when he sells stolen property, the owner of the property may impose a constructive trust on the proceeds. Why? Because the proceeds belong to the owner of the property. Where the thief disposes of the proceeds for his own benefit, he has stolen money of the owner of the property. These principles are well settled. See discussion 3 Scott on Trusts, §§ 508, 508.1 and 508.2, pages 2432-2438; 3 Bogert on Trusts and Trustees, (Part 1), § 476, p. 31; see, also, Brodie v. Barnes, 56 Cal.App.2d 315, 322, 132 P.2d 595. Thus, the argument that the evidence may show a theft of the tires, even if sound, does not demonstrate that the evidence does not show a theft of the money. A theft of money was clearly shown by the evidence, and whether the evidence also shows a theft of the tires is a false factor.

But, argues appellant, the evidence demonstrates that although the total value of the tires and the total value of the proceeds of the sales of such tires far exceeded $200, each sale was made to a separate purchaser, and each sale was for less than $200. Based on this premise, which is in accordance with the evidence, appellant claims that he is guilty only of a series of petty thefts and not of grand theft.

[9] This raises a somewhat difficult problem. There are many cases discussing the problem of whether a series of thefts constitute one offense or a series of offenses, and they are not all consistent. The following general rules, however, would seem to be established:

1. Where the theft is accomplished by means of false representations, each receipt of money or property is usually held to constitute a separate offense, although the false representations were made but once. People v. Ellison, 26 Cal.App.2d 496, 79 P.2d 732; People v. Miles, 37 Cal.App.2d 373, 99 P.2d 551; People v. Rabe, 202 Cal. 409, 261 P. 303; People v. Coyle, 134 Cal.App. 612, 25 P.2d 991; People v. Serna, 43 Cal.App.2d 106, 110 P.2d 492.

[10, 11] 2. In larceny cases, where there are several deliveries by the thief to the seller of stolen goods, all part of the same general transaction, it has been held that there is but one offense. People v. Dillon, 1 Cal.App.2d 224, 36 P.2d 416; People v. Mills Sing, 42 Cal.App. 385, 183 P. 865. Likewise, a series of thefts from the same employer by an employee, all part of a general plan, constitutes but one offense. People v. Yachimowicz, 57 Cal. App.2d 375, 134 P.2d 271.

[12] 3. Theft by way of embezzlement has given rise to some difficulties. It has been held that a series of embezzlements from the same owner constitutes separate offenses. People v. McCann, 96 Cal.App. 664, 274 P. 621; People v. Hatch, 13 Cal.App. 521, 109 P. 1097; People v. Bartnett, 15 Cal.App. 89, 113 P. 879; People v. Stanford, 16 Cal.2d 247, 105 P.2d 969. But it has been held also that where the defrauded person makes a series of payments to the embezzler in connection with the same transaction, each payment is not a separate offense, and there is but one offense. People v. Bratton, 125 Cal. App. 337, 14 P.2d 125; People v. Fleming, 220 Cal. 601, 32 P.2d 593.

From these cases, and others that could be cited, it can be said that the general test as to whether there are separate offenses or one offense is whether the evidence discloses one general intent or discloses separate and distinct intents. The particular facts and circumstances of each case determine this question. If there is but one intention, one general impulse, and one plan, even though there is a series of transactions, there is but one offense, and this is so whether the theft is accomplished by larceny or embezzlement.

Appellant, in his attempt to demonstrate that here there were separate offenses, places his main reliance on People v. Stanford, 16 Cal.2d 247, 105 P.2d 969. In that case an attorney embezzled trust funds belonging to his client. He was indicted on three counts, the first charging that he took $500 from the fund on a certain day; the second that he later took the balance of the fund amounting to over $7,000; and the third, that still later he took over $2,000 that subsequently came into the trust fund. It was held that the defendant's conviction on the three counts of embezzlement should be affirmed. In reaching this result the court, 16 Cal.2d at page 251, 105 P. at page 971, stated:

"* * * The question of whether a series of wrongful acts constitutes a single or multiple offense must in the last analysis be determined by the peculiar facts and circumstances of each individual case. In the present case the evidence showed that the thefts referred to in the first three counts of the indictment were separate and distinct transactions, which occurred on different dates, and involved the taking of different sums of money. Such separate transactions constituted separate offenses. [Citing cases.]

"While transactions in series have frequently been held to constitute but parts of one continuous proceeding, and hence but one offense, this result is more commonly reached in cases of larceny than in those of embezzlement. This follows from the fact that in the crime of larceny the defendant has obtained possession of his victim's property by wrongful means, and completion of the offense is not dependent upon whether he thereafter appropriates the fruits of his theft by a single act or at successive intervals. On the other hand, in the case of an embezzlement, the property is already in the rightful possession of the defendant, and his subsequent fraudulent appropriation is of the essence of the crime. (Pen. Code, sec. 503.) Thus in each of the cases relied upon by appellants [citing such cases], the particular facts and circumstances showed that the exact time of completion of the misappropriation was not controlling and for this reason the court was justified in concluding that the several transactions involved constituted one offense. In the present case, the evidence, as already stated, established clearly the commission of separate offenses by distinct appropriations of different sums of money on separate occasions."

As already pointed out, the present crime is grand theft committed by way of larceny and not by way of embezzlement. The case mainly relied upon by the People to show that here there was but one offense, and the case which, in our opinion, is controlling, is People v. Yachimowicz, 57 Cal. App.2d 375, 134 P.2d 271. There, as here, the defendant was convicted of grand theft. He had been demoted by his employer, who operated a hardware store, and felt that he had been unfairly treated. In the instant case the appellant felt that he had been unfairly treated because the partners failed to pay him the commission he contended had been promised. It is a reasonable inference from the evidence that appellant was motivated in stealing the money by this grudge in reference to the commissions. In the Yachimowicz case the defendant had been demoted to night watchman. He drove his automobile to work and loaded it with store equipment which he transported to his home. When finally apprehended, he had removed company property, over a considerable length of time, and, of course, on many different occasions, of the total value of $15,000. The information charged him with the theft of five guns of the total value of over $200, but failed to disclose whether the guns were all taken at once or taken on separate days. In reference to this problem the court stated, 57 Cal.App.2d at page 381, 134 P.2d at page 274: "On the point that the evidence in the case is insufficient to sustain the judgment of conviction, it appears that the only matter warranting comment relates to the value of the property which the appellant was convicted of stealing. He argues that if each gun were taken on a separate day there would be no grand theft under any theory known to the law. It must be conceded that there was no direct evidence that all five guns, of the value of more than $200 were taken by the appellant at the same time, nor was there any direct evidence that they were taken one by one at different times. However, it is apparent that the entire plan of stealing resorted to by appellant was in furtherance of his design to secure personal and monetary satisfaction for his treatment at the hands of his employers. Upon the evidence received by the trial court and under the reasoning of People v. Mills Sing, 1919, 42 Cal.App. 385, 183 P. 865, we feel that the defendant was justly convicted of the crime of grand theft. We quote from the language in that opinion, 42 Cal.App. at page 396, 183 P. at page 869, as follows: 'The law is that, if the different asportations from the same owner are prompted by one design, one purpose, one impulse, they are a single act, without regard to time.'" See, also, People v. Dillon, 1 Cal.App.2d 224, 229, 36 P.2d 416; People v. Fleming, 220 Cal. 601, 611, 32 P.2d 593.

[13] In the instant case, it is our opinion that the evidence shows that the various acts of appellant were all motivated, generally, "by one design, one purpose, [and] one impulse," i. e.—the grievance against the partners for failure to pay him the commissions which he contended had been promised. Thus, as in the Yachimowicz case, the appellant was pursuing a general plan of taking property from his employer whom he felt had mistreated him. There was one general impulse, and one general plan that motivated all of the challenged acts. There was but one general intent, and therefore, but one offense.

Appellant objects to certain rulings, comments and instructions of the court. One such objection is that the trial court committed error in its rulings in reference to the amount of the claimed shortage. No inventory was produced. Crowley, one of the partners, testified as a prosecution witness. On cross-examination the defense was apparently trying to show that the garage books were kept in a slipshod manner. Crowley was asked if an inventory had not been taken just before appellant assumed control of the tire department. He replied that such had been done. Then Crowley was asked if appellant had not shown him a $1,500 error in the inventory. He responded that he could recall no such conversation. On redirect he testified that an inventory had been taken before appellant took over the tire shop, and another after the employment of appellant had terminated. As to this last inventory, which he had not taken personally, he testified that it was short $2,500. It took three or four questions to develop this answer, and no objection was made to any of these questions. After the answer had been given, appellant objected on the ground that "this witness not being competent to testify"—apparently because he had not taken the inventory himself. The trial court overruled the objection because it was made too late —after the answer was in.

[14, 15] Under later cross-examination, Crowley testified that Manfre telephoned him and told him that he had three Firestone tires, whereupon the witness conferred with appellant to see if any tires were missing. No missing tires were found so far as the inventory was concerned, but the witness stated that entries had been made to cover up the shortage. On redirect the prosecution asked the witness if the reason why no shortage was discovered was because he gave credit to appellant for sales and deliveries that had not been made. The witness answered that such was the fact, whereupon appellant's counsel objected that the question was leading. The court then stated: "The question has been asked and answered * * * You are supposed to speak up loudly; you can hear what is being said, unless you need one of those Sonotones like one of the members of the jury * * *." A colloquy ensued and the court apologized for its facetious remark and specifically stated that it had meant no criticism of appellant's counsel. It is quite clear that, even if the objection were timely and should have been sustained to this line of questioning, which is doubtful, the error could not have been prejudicial inasmuch as appellant's counsel had opened the subject on cross-examination and examined the witness at some length. The heavy humor of the court was out of place, but the timely admonition rendered this error non-prejudicial.

[16] After these occurrences a very confused colloquy took place between appellant's counsel, the court and the witness Crowley. Apparently appellant's counsel was trying to extract from Crowley an explanation favorable to his client of the claimed shortages. It is apparent that all concerned were confused between a $400 shortage in another department and the claimed $2,500 shortage in the tire department during the time appellant was in charge. Appellant's counsel kept asking about the $400 shortage, and the court properly refused to permit the interrogation because it involved a collateral issue. The confusion that obviously existed was largely caused by appellant's counsel. If he desired to pursue this inquiry, he should have more clearly indicated the subject matter involved.

[17] Appellant also objects to the refusal of the court to permit the defense to impeach the prosecution witness Ehlert. This witness operated the Firestone retread shop in San Jose. He testified on direct that his retread shop did no cash business at all. On cross-examination the defense sought to introduce a bill made out to a particular company in order to show that the store did occasionally sell for cash. The trial court sustained an objection to the introduction of this bill on general grounds and on the specific ground that the offered bill was dated August 22, 1949, and was therefore outside the time covered by the information. It would appear that the transaction involved a collateral matter upon which the witness could not be impeached. People v. McDaniel, 59 Cal.App. 2d 672, 140 P.2d 88; People v. Pollock, 31 Cal.App.2d 747, 89 P.2d 128. Moreover, later the court did admit the exhibit for the limited purpose of rebutting the testimony that the Firestone Company did not sell at wholesale to any company other than to a Firestone dealer.

[18] Objection is made to the limitation placed by the court on the recross-examination of the prosecution witness Wright. An examination of the record discloses that the questions asked had already been discussed at length on cross-examination. It was not error to refuse to permit further interrogation on the point.

[19] Appellant makes several technical objections to several of the instructions, and to many of the comments of the court. We have examined each such assignment and find that no instruction was erroneous, far less prejudicial. The jury was fairly and correctly instructed. As to the challenged comments, appellant's main objection seems to be that the trial judge was unnecessarily curt, sarcastic and impatient with counsel for appellant, and that, while no one incident alone would cause a reversal, the cumulative effect was to prejudice appellant's defense. It would unduly prolong this already lengthy opinion to consider these numerous assignments in detail. We have read the record. We think that the evidence overwhelmingly demonstrates appellant's guilt. While the trial judge was occasionally unnecessarily curt and sarcastic, and while some of his rulings were unduly strict against appellant, the record demonstrates, on the whole, that appellant had a fair trial. Certainly the record demonstrates that appellant's conviction has not resulted in a miscarriage of justice. No prejudicial error occurred.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.
